CHICAGO, Nov. 23.—Editor Camera!—Who is this Guy—Price? And what is he trying to do—pull a press agent stunt for the Hollywood Publishing company? The "short-lived but famous brochure"—"The Sins of Hollywood"—has been on sale in Chicago for months, and nobody got wildly excited about it. Its sale has been confined mostly to morons, "wise-crackers" (the boys who like to step into a smoking room, or a parlor, and tell the world how much they know about actors and actresses) and a few really honest motion picture fans who wanted to learn how vile and despicable an ex-motion picture scribe could become.

But now comes this bird, Price, to tell Chicagoans that Hollywood is wildly agitated over the forbidden (in Hollywood) volume; and the chances are good that the book will have a considerable sale here.

What is the big idea with the Hearst people anyhow? Are they trying to pull down enough screen idols to make easier sailing for the dumbbell favorite of Lord Didmore? In the history of motion pictures, nothing has ever approached the brazen efforts of the Hearst clan to buy the highest screen honors for a young woman whom Mae Tinee calls "the wooden Miss Davies." In Chicago, money has been spent like water to put "Knighthood" over. "The Prisoner of Zenda" was "bought" out of the Roosevelt theater; renters of hundreds of billboards were generously compensated in return for the giving up of their leases for a time; and every writer on the staffs of the Hearst Chicago dailies was pressed into service, and compelled to give his—or her—department over to the gushy boosting of the impossible Marion. And along comes Mr. Guy Price with his sly little quip about "The Sins of Hollywood!"

Today a new publication made its appearance on our news stands; "Hollywood Confessions"—a nasty mess of salacious junk, naming no one in particular, and making no effort to be anything except a dirty attack on the morality of motion picture people in general. It is from the Hollywood Publishing company, 428 Wall street, Los Angeles. Unless I miss my guess, the man behind the gun was at one time connected with a short-lived Los Angeles motion picture publication.

Have you read Cinea, the leading French motion picture magazine? In the November 3 number, Louis Delluc—the foremost European screen authority—names the greatest stars of the screen. His American screen choices are Hayakawa, Hart, Fairbanks, Ray, Chaplin, Nazimova, Mabel Normand, Priscilla Dean, Mary Pickford, Lillian Gish, Norma Talmadge, and Pauline Frederick. In France, Delluc is considered the oracle supreme.

Wouldn't it be nice if some of the movie knockers told us about "The Producer Who Once Carried a Spear!" I'm getting awfully tired of reading that statement.

ASSEMBLE INDEPENDENTS

Plans of independent producers on the west coast for a protective association of their own, announced exclusively in Camera! last week, are progressing toward fruition.

The preliminary organization meeting will be held at Fine Arts studio, December 14 (Thursday) at 7 p. m. Every independent producer in the southland has been invited to participate.

Producers already enlisted for the cause include Doubleday Productions, G. M. Anderson Productions, Chester Bennett Productions, Halperin Productions, Charles Seeling Productions, Jess Robbins Productions and Al Rogell Productions.

Along the Rialto

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Rodolph Valentino appeared in supreme court today to appeal from the injunction restraining him from working for anyone but Famous Players-Lasky corporation. His attorney described him as a "young man who was unable to speak English when he arrived here eight months prior to making the present contract," and "wholly unfamiliar with the salaries paid to motion picture stars." Louise Marshall, Lasky attorney, stated that Valentino's contract called for $325,000 in three years.

George Auger, circus giant signed by Harold Lloyd for his next comedy, died in Bridgeport, Conn., last week. Auger was 8 feet, 7½ inches tall, and was 36 years old. He was with Ringling Brothers' circus.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is being revived at Selwyn theater for a week, as part of Griffith's annual repertory season. "Intolerance" will follow.

Where to Find People You Know

"Curley" Dresden has deserted the movies for a stock selling proposition.

A. George Volck has been advanced to the position of vice-president of the Selznick Pictures corporation. Mr. Volck will continue as personal aide to Myron Selznick.

Rankin plays one of the principal roles in "The Knight in Gale," the second of H. C. Whitwer's "Fighting Blood" stories which Mal St. Clair is producing for F. B. O. release.

Warner Baxter has been signed on a long-term contract by the R-C pictures corporation as co-star or featured player in future F. B. O. productions. He will begin work shortly in his first vehicle under the new arrangement.

Otto Lederer will be seen in the role of an artist in "Your Friend and Mine," the Metro-S-L film adaptation of Willard Mack's vaudeville sketch which Clarence G. Badger is directing.

Jack Donovan, hero of the Allen Holubar production "Hurricane's Gal," is filling an engagement with the Sandford productions featuring Pete Morrison.

Wheeler Dryden is playing in and producing his own stage play, of which he is co-author, at Egan's Little theater, beginning Monday, December 11. The play is titled "Under Suspicion" and includes many actors in the picture profession.

Little Jackie Parker, child actor, has been doing a good part with Mabel Ballin in "Vanity Fair," at Goldwyn.

George Hackathorne is playing the role of the hunchback in Universal's special "The Merry-go-round."

Jack Earle, seven feet, five inches in height, has been placed under contract by Century Comedies.

Selection of players to support Lon Chaney in the forthcoming Universal-Jewel dramatization of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," progresses slowly. Raymond Hatton is the latest player to be selected. He will play the role of the poet, Gringoire. Patsy Ruth Miller will play Esmeralda. Wallace Worsley is to direct the production from the screen adaptation of Perley Poore Sheehan and Edwin T. Lowe, Jr.

Allan Dwan, director of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," is to direct a Famous Players production, "Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton.

This little dramatic actress, Baby Muriel McCormac, likes to "play dead" in a picture, and she likes to play with dolls, too!

Charles Seeling has arranged with Aywon, New York, for the release of four special and six short reel productions to be made at the Fine Arts studios.

Jack Mulhall will be Norma Talmadge's leading man in the forthcoming Schenck production of "Within the Law." In this pleasant capacity, Mr. Mulhall succeeds Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle as the brilliant Norma's heroic lead.

Carmel Myers is finishing a part in "McFee's Sensational Rest," a Saturday Evening Post story.

Lewis Dayton, a young English actor, will support Dorothy Phillips in her new production, "The White Frontier."

Warner Baxter has signed a contract to play leads with Pat Powers of the Robertson-Cole studio.

Corinne Griffith has arrived in California, and will shortly commence production.

Harry Beaumont has been signed to screen "Main Street," the last of the Warner Bros. seven screen classics for 1922. Actual camera work will not commence until after the new year, and it will take from six to ten weeks to produce.

Fred Stanton has been added to the all-star cast of "The Little Church Around the Corner," which Wm. A. Seiter is directing from Olga Printzlau's story, at Warner's.

Baby Bruce Guerin is the latest addition to Harry Rapf's all-star cast for "Brass."

Frank Cavender has been made assistant to the president of the Anchor Film distributors, Morris R. Schlank.

William H. Clifford, scenarist, directed "The Law of the Sea," featuring Hobart Bosworth, now being released on the independent market through the Anchor Film distributors. Clarence Badger wrote the continuity.

J. Herbert Frank has been engaged to portray the role of the artist "friend" in "Your Friend and Mine," which Clarence G. Badger is directing at Metro. Mr. Frank recently completed a role in "Jazzmania," a Tiffany production for Metro starring Mae Murray.

Sidney Ullman is in charge of a staff which will build the cathedral under the supervision of Elmer Sheeley, art director.

Mary McClintock, of the staff of the Photo Dramatist, is a new member of the Studio club.

Emma Lou Harrison of the Palmer Photo-Play, has left the Studio club to live with her aunt, who came recently to California.

Joe Murphy has been assigned a part in support of Fatty Karr in the comedian's latest picture, "Long Skirts," which Bruce Mitchell is directing.

"Tiny" Sandford will no longer appear as heavy for Fatty Karr. He will henceforth act as assistant director to Bruce Mitchell and Clarence Bricker.

Hal C. Norfleet, former Southern states exhibitor and producer of short subjects, has joined the Anchor Film distributors, Incorporated, as general sales manager.

Jack Okey, art and technical director, is back at the United lot after six months with the Miami studios in Florida.

Dorothy Giraci, who played opposite Beban in "The Sign of the Rose," has been selected for a part in the Maurice Tourneur production of "The Isle of Dead Ships."

Current Reviews

"Trifling Women"

ONE admires Rex Ingram because he is not a one-idea director. He is continually receptive, reaching out for this and that and taking only the best of what he sees. However, his contemporaries may resent this—unless they deem it tribute to them them—it is a way to achieve greatness. Thus Shakespeare climbed.

"Trifling Women" is a working chart of Ingram's state of mind.

Imagine a motion picture in which are incorporated a dash of the continental frankness of Von Stroheim, symbolic motif a la Griffith in flashes of a white Persian cat pawing for gold fish, the slapstick relief we expect from Mack Sennett, a castle that vies with Robin Hood's, a suggestion of Dr. Caligari, with an undercurrent of inexplicable, relentless horror.

Imagine then tacking on the apology that it is only the manuscript of a novelist! This may have been the necessary sop to the censors. But better far to let the fascinatingly unreal tale go unexplained.

Incidentally "Trifling Women" is a poor substitute for "Black Orchids." Presumably Universal would not release Ingram's original title for Metro's use.

In entertainment appeal "Trifling Women" is an improvement over the romantic mush of "The Prisoner of Zenda" and the home-and-mother hokum of "Turn to the Right."

Lewis Stone as the suave, avenging husband had best opportunities and made the most of them.

Joe Martin's shaggy figure haunts the first half of the picture, and lays uncanny, effective foundation for the weird story, together with the presence of John George, Jesse Weldon and Hyman Binunsky as the dwarf servants of the clairvoyant.

Barbara La Marr is the only woman in the cast, and hers is the major role. She is piquantly intriguing as the vamping clairvoyant, and ingenious enough as the girl of the pro-and epilog.

Ramon Novarro—for whose discovery Ingram must thank Ferdinand Earle—has not found his acting stride. Perhaps he has not yet been given the role to bring it out.

Edward Connelly gives an amusing exaggeration of the old foppish suitor that tunes in with the weird note of unreality.

Hughie Mack and Joe Murphy, ridiculous in themselves, became picturesque under Ingram's masterly lighting.

"Kick In"

IF you desire to see good, old melodrama which is far from its best, and Betty Compson, with Bert Lytell at their best, go and see "Kick In."

Lovers of rapid-fire hokum, such as that which is confidently expected by Pomona audiences, should be pleased with this Paramount production. No Main street audience will fail to greet it heartily. At that some of the select will be secretly pleased. Most folks love speeding.

George Fitzmaurice directed this somewhat amazing mixture of underworld plot, regeneration, and pretentious sets in a manner which does him no discredit whatever. At least he snaps up the material at hand in a way highly satisfactory to any audience.

May McAvoy, Garreth Hughes, Kathleen Clifford and Walter Long aid in keeping up your interest in this mixture, and the remainder of the cast is impressive.

"Kick In" will not disappoint you, but it will not leave you with long-lived impressions.

"East is West"

"EAST is West" does not quite satisfy our expectations although it provides a very pleasing and happy entertainment. At all times we are aware of witnessing a picture which runs along smoothly, but fails to grip or enthrall. Sidney Franklin has done some admirable directing and made a delightful picture in spite of a few inconsistencies in the story.

The settings and photography are striking and beautiful.

Constance Talmadge is a charming, happy little heroine although not consistently Chinese. At times she is having so much fun that she forgets she is an Oriental and loses herself in mannerisms typically "Constance." But that can be forgiven because Constance has that rare gift of enjoying her work so thoroughly that her happy personality radiates over the audience, and no one can fail to enjoy himself with her.

The outstanding characterization of the piece is that of Lo San Kee in the person of E. A. Warren. We refuse to say "played by" as he is so natural that it is difficult to imagine him other than the old Chinese merchant.

Warner Oland's work as Charlie Yong is individual and good, but it bordered on becoming rather tiresome.

Frank Lanning is a great success as the irate Chinese father.

Edward Burns as the leading man and Nigel Barrie as his friend are both highly satisfying and attractive. We would like to see Nigel Barrie in a more deserving role.

It was good to see Winter Hall with his usual courtliness.

Lillian Lawrence looked her part, but seemed to be conscious of her chances to do a bit.

Nick de Ruiz gives an interesting and realistic performance. He has good atmosphere.

Altogether, "East is West" has the makings of a great picture. We are sorry it is not.

"Hungry Hearts"

A dreadfully tedious production splendidly acted—that is the one conclusion which thrusts itself upon the spectators of "Hungry Hearts." It is obviously a propaganda picture, saved only by the truly exceptional work of the cast under the able direction of E. Mason Hopper.

We grant that the author, Anzia Yezierska, has an extremely keen insight into the inner feelings and characteristics of the Semitic race. The producers and directors evidently concentrated their work along this line in an effort to make the production as homey, natural and crudely true to life as possible.

Here's where it fails. Everything and everyone is so unbeautiful, so persistently drab and unattractive, that the audience derives no pleasure from looking at it. Of course this may be art, but we do sometimes crave a little spark of beauty, or uplift, to lighten it up.

As for the players—we have in Rosa Rosanova a "greater than" Vera Gordon. She is superb in her sincerity and detail. It is a great triumph for her to uphold the reputation of this production through a character forced into many unnecessary bits of acting.

We have the unsurpassable character actor, E. A. Warren, with us again, this time a Hebrew. He is so pathetic and lovable in his hopeless attempts at earning money for his family that we feel genuinely sorry for him.

Helen Ferguson is natural throughout and has done a great piece of work in spite of many trying close-ups.

Our inimitable actor, Otto Lederer, has a splendid chance to overact, but never once does he overstep his bounds.

A. Budin makes a fair rival to Otto Lederer.

Bryant Washburn is an acceptable lover although rather colorless. We would like a little fire and vim in his characterization.

Edward B. Tilton as the judge is fine!

George Seigmann probably did good work, but he was so repulsive that we didn't care to watch it.

The rest of the cast, even to the children, were faultless.

"The Top of the Morning"

GRANDFATHER was chuckling as we left the Hillstreet theater. We presumed that the expression of deep satisfaction was because of the many corking vaudeville skits, but the guess was all wrong.

Grandad was hugging up old memories aroused by the Universal picture, "The Top of the Morning." Inquiry brought about the explanation. Our aged ancestor had been a constant attendant upon the stage sob stuff in his youth and, it seems, he had just met up with an old friend.

It was a story dear to his heart, that of the step-daughter treated cruelly by the new step-mother. The manner in which convenient circumstances outwitted fate and said step-mother, caused grandad to chuckle all the way home.

Well, period plays are the thing at present. Therefore the Universal feature should be right in line.

In order to be genuinely fair we must state that Gladys Walton, and the remainder of the very good cast, save the ancient tale from rude laughter on the part of the elders in the audience. We saw Miss Walton in one of her earliest film productions. She revealed signs of talent. In the present feature Miss Walton may claim all of the merry press agent's revelations as regards a true star of the screen.

Despite the fact that the picture seems to have been directed by "props," Miss Walton reveals her true worthiness as a film star. She has youth, charm and a true sense of dramatic values. She does not over-act.

Harry Myers is the Prince Charming. Advancing age has not left this young man in the juvenile class but, to be very fair, Mr. Myers was another brace for the ancient tale. He is an actor of merit.

Ralph McCullough, playing as a brother of the heroine, contributed additional strength to the production. Other members of the cast were adequate.

The Screen Writers' Page - Conducted by William E. Wing

Uneasy Lies the Head

THERE is no more dangerous ground in commerce than that of knowing more about the other fellow's business than he himself. One does not have to travel the back trail far to stumble over sad demonstrations.

This is the character of wisdom which, despite a certain amount of success, eventually brings about very sad results for the Solomons.

Yet this is one of the ailments which has fastened itself to the studio and the film industry. Every writer who has wasted much of his time to accomplish moderate results in the line of photoplay construction, has been aware of the menace for years.

Since pictures were as novel as they were brief, studio managers, actors and many directors whose literary judgment was very good as regards food, but quite shy as pertaining to books and stories; all of these were very superior to scenario writers when it came to the mere matter of selecting worthy tales for the screen.

It made no difference that the coterie often judged the merits of professional writers, the latter were utterly outclassed in matter of judgment as to all things literary or artistic.

To a great extent, this same condition exists today, and with it is a somewhat utter disregard for the rights of writers, or the respect due their efforts.

Since a certain letter was published in Camera! six weeks ago, this publication has received a flood of letters confirming the already-known fact that some scenarios are never returned, while others are held for months and then sent back to the owners with no apologies or explanations whatever.

Yet these same studios not only need scenarios, but advertise for them.

Once upon a time the whole membership of the Authors' League of America fairly frothed at the mouth, because of disgraceful treatment from studios. Many very famous authors advised all writers to keep their wares from film people.

Many of the conditions complained of then, still remain. Some of them hint at a contempt for the original writer. But conditions are threatened with changes by the several organizations behind various groups of writers, and the pot once more is boiling.

Will unwise studios change their tactics before much needed talent again is turned from market channels?

Heart Interest

GOOD effort must be repeated to have results, so some very wise philosopher has said. Therefore if mediocre writers repeat now and then, it is a matter of following a good rule.

Therefore we will say it again. Writers who hope to strike a popular chord in the heart of the studio editor, as well as the heart of the public, will do well to stick by their guns and write—for one subject—heart-interest stories.

This has been brought home to us very impressively recently by reviewing "Robin Hood," and, immediately thereafter, "Timothy's Quest."

The one was a gorgeous spectacle; the other a gripping appeal to everyone who is genuinely human as to childhood.

The fact that we had witnessed the really big Fairbanks' super-special did not inject itself in any manner when we sat in the theater and lived with the children of "Timothy's Quest."

One was as absorbing as the other to the genuine human, despite the little matter of nearly a million dollars which divided—in a commercial way—one from the other.

Those who saw both pictures will remember "Robin Hood" for a long period. But, many who witnessed "Timothy's Quest" never will forget it.

A lesson, brothers of the pen and type-writer, but a straw which truly reveals the direction in which the wind is blowing in these days of uncertainty as to "what character of story goes?"

Shadows

PURSUING shadows is quite as dangerous in the picture game as in any other line of business, where the ring of cash register means so much to the men behind the money-bags.

We referred to this fact last week in an article, modestly endeavoring to air the troubles of writer and studio. Now comes support from an authoritative editor of a certain well-known publication which carries conviction with his words. Read it:

"There is nothing in mere persistence to admire. It may shadow forth vicious intent. It may be the expression of a blind and blundering folly. When a man is engaged in a hopeless task, and declines to realize the hopelessness of it, continuing to batter his pate against the wall that fate has erected across his path, he may merit pity, for that he lacks brains; he may deserve advice, because of some other quality he possesses. No admiration is due. Persistence is without color of morals. It may be good and it may be evil. Certainly it is not good when it causes the waste of time, energy and capital."

One word impresses us as we follow the reading of this essence of wisdom.

It is the world "folly."

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—Editor Camera!—On the 25th of August I sent a scenario to the Belasco Studio, 803 Market street., San Francisco, taking the address from a current number of Camera! I called it "The Bread and Butter Girls" and it had been criticised by Mrs. Corbaley and had been accepted for sale by the Photoplaywright's League. When the Screen

Writer's Forum took over the league I took it out and sent it out myself. I have never got it back from Belasco and two letters inquiring its fate have not been answered or returned. My address was written plainly on the outside of all the envelopes, also on the manuscript. Please advise me what I should do. It's a dandy comedy if I do say it as shouldn't!

Special Coins for "Expo"

Fifty-cent pieces of special design to commemorate the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition will be struck off by the United States mint, if a bill introduced in the senate this week by Senator Hiram Johnson of California is carried.

The bill would authorize the coining of 300,000 exposition half dollars to be delivered to the Los Angeles clearing house for circulation. The bill was referred to the committee on banking and currency.

Frank B. Davison, director-general of the exposition, and Mayor George Cryer of Los Angeles are in Washington to invite President Harding to attend, and to obtain congressional recognition of the project.

COMEDIANS AS PATRONS

The Hamilton-White company at United studio is the first company to report 100 per cent on the sale of patron certificates for the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition.

Every member of the company subscribed as a patron, paid cash, and sent in the request that their allotment be increased 100 per cent, according to E. F. VonYeast, director of sales.

James Young, who has returned to Los Angeles to direct "Trilby" for Richard Walton Tully, was taken seriously ill a few days ago. He is reported better but is still confined to his bed.

Edna Purviance, star in Charles Chaplin's direction, is ill with pleurisy at her home. She is expected at the studio in two weeks.

Larry Semon is ill with la grippe from playing golf in the rain.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association will hold its annual ball, February 17, at Hotel Alexandria.

Johnny Jones, the boy comedian of note, is enjoying his vacation seated beside his new radio outfit. He is trying for a message from Mars, according to his press agent.

With Toreador

Clara Phillips, convicted hammer murderer, escaped from Los Angeles county jail by sawing bars and walking ledge in bare feet.

Real life is getting too much like the movies.

It's a question who'll find Clara Phillips first, the detectives or the vaudeville managers. If the latter win, Houdini had better look to his handcuffs.

YOU'RE WELCOME, RADIO

"Radio is only in its infancy," says expert.

Hooray! The curse is off motion pictures at last.

With the P. A.s

Wallace W. Ham succeeds C. F. Hodge, resigned, as Vitagraph director of publicity in the east.

Exclusive photographs are desired by Eugene Swarzwald for the Pacific Press Syndicate, 440 Chamber of Commerce building. One New York paper has asked for a layout of 12 cars and stars—both with "class". Name of each to accompany photo, and negative to be delivered if possible. Swarzwald is also seeking informal poses of film folk about their homes and in every day life.

The Baltimore (Md.) Daily Post, Scripps-Howard evening tabloid, appeared November 20. It's the second tabloid in three weeks there. The Times was first.

Jack Cunningham has resigned as editor of the Script. The new editor is Al Cohn Bill Younger Wells Hastings Percy Heath Marion Lee, if you know him.

Elsie Jane Wilson (Mrs. Rupert Julian), formerly a director for Universal, is planning to again produce pictures.

Hays' Aide Here

Will Hays is to have an agent in Hollywood.

Thomas G. Patten, western representative of Will Hays, is organizing his office in Hollywood. He arrived Monday with Mrs. Patten and a cousin, Joseph Jefferson O'Neill, another of Hays' assistants, who will help Patten get started here.

On his arrival Patten began to visit the studios of members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and to meet the executives with whom he will deal.

Patten was postmaster of New York city while Hays was postmaster general of the United States.

INVENTS STEREOSCOPIC LENS

Joseph B. Walker, cinematographer and lens expert, has created a new motion picture lens designed to carry out certain stereoscopic effects on the screen, and will employ it in photographing "The Scarlet Shadow," produced by Frederick Reel, Jr.

Perley Poore Sheehan, who is engaged in adapting for the screen Victor Hugo's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," for Universal, starring Lon Chaney in a super production of that famous classic, has been solicited by Motion Picture News to be one of a jury of 100 to name twelve people who have done the most for the art and industry of motion pictures for their construction and real progress, announcements to be made December 30. Mr. Sheehan finds the task no easy one, his problem being to keep within the twelve for he feels so many in different ways are doing such wonderful things for the industry.

Sanford productions, starring Pete Morrison, has been working at the Fine Arts studios for the past two weeks filming scenes for "The College Rancher," a semi-western story.

Grace Darmond's latest starring vehicle, "The Wheel of Fortune," will be state-righted through the Anchor Film distributors.

Forty chorus girls have been engaged by Bruce Mitchell to support Fatty Karr in his latest comedy, "Long Skirts."

The law offices of Attorney Minor Blythe are now located at Suite 620 Pacific Finance Building. Telephone 134-88.

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO CAMERA!

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1922

No. 36

Greetings from the New Editor

Hello there! Here we are full of confidence that you are "there" ready to welcome a renewed Camera!

The fundamental purpose of the new editorial regime is to develop this weekly publication into "the digest of the motion picture industry" in fact as well as in name.

Incidentally, Camera! henceforth will do more than digest, too. It will seek to become a potential factor in the upbuilding of the motion picture industry through a thoroughly constructive policy replete with fairness to all and partiality to none.

As you will soon discover, it will not be possible to classify Camera! as either a trade paper or a "fan" periodical for the simple reason that it will be a composite of both. Every issue will be a serious attempt to bridge the gap between those in film-dom and those out of filmdom, interesting and informing all alike.

Our greatest concern is to completely cover the Southern California field so far as the picture-making business is concerned—to publish regularly ALL the news and gossip of interest to anyone and to be the medium through which countless news stories, by no other publication, may reach the reading public. In addition to the news, there will be plenty of special features pertinent to the times and the films.

In the retirement of the esteemed Ted Taylor, who has served capably as editor for some time, Camera! loses a tireless worker and a brilliant mind. He is retiring because of other interests demanding his time. However, he will retain his financial interest in this magazine. The question as to what Camera! gains through the acquisition of its new editor can be answered only by time and the people. The answer will be awaited eagerly of course.

It is scarcely necessary to call attention to the fact that beginning with this issue Camera! becomes not only a composite of the trade and the "fan" periodical, but a combination of a magazine and a newspaper. Hereafter it will be the rule to have this news section in the center of the book and to devote the other pages to features of magazine value. Illustrations will be increased gradually until such a time as the pictorial value approximates the reading worth.

Several prominent photoplay producers join in the enthusiastic prediction that 1923 is going to be the greatest of all years for the film industry, and it just occurs to us that one way in which these prophets can insure the fulfillment is to keep thoroughly industrious, since there isn't anything which helps an industry like industry.

According to a famous director, a moving picture theater audience possesses a composite soul. The average audience likewise possesses a pronounced ability for judging the merits of a photoplay. "Film spectators are like children," the director says. "They demand different and unexpected toys all the time." Explicitly, they demand the goods—new goods—constantly. Could not this demand be more adequately met if new blood were encouraged to a greater extent in all branches of the industry?

Someone raises a question as to the sincerity of the producers in their repeated declarations in favor of elevating the screen. Guess this someone doubts the ability of the average producer as an elevator. Still, if the same someone could only see some of said producers go up and down financially, we are sure they'd agree they were some elevators.

If they ever do succeed in inventing a machine that will shoot moving pictures all the way to Mars, what we want to know is who is going up there and collect the admission fees?

A fellow who was imitating Charlie Chaplin was recently run over by an automobile in Philadelphia. This is one more proof of the fact that it does not pay to imitate.

Practically all the film producers are constantly looking for new stars, but all too generally their astronomy is astoundingly bad.

Then Hollywood Would Have a Conservatory Just Like Paris

If the definite and interesting suggestion of Leon Bary, the celebrated French star of the drama and formerly Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's leading man, is acted upon by the powers that be in the motion picture industry, the day of haphazard, misguided aspiring among the unknown for screen honors will be ended and simultaneously the power of newspaper beauty contests to entice winners into hopeless invasions of the Hollywood film colony will wane immediately. Mr. Bary's remedy for the "ills" coincident with having a constant surfeit of the uninitiated striving desperately to gain recognition in this field of artistic intricacies is the establishing of an official conservatory, or clearing-house, through which all applicants for engagements of any importance whatsoever must pass successfully before being eligible to the consideration of those who select casts for photoplays. Even the present-day stars would have to pass an examination as a test of their dramatic ability and would have to be armed with a diploma before they would be considered for stellar roles.

Mr. Bary frankly admits that his plan is patterned after one long in vogue in his native Paris, where there is a Conservatory which provides the only sure channels for reaching legitimate stage productions. He claims that the outstanding result of the existence of this institution is that French actors and actresses are uniformly competent, because all prominent producers recognize the value of an artist first having his or her talents ascertained and established by the dramatic masters in charge of this "school of self-determination," as he terms it.

The most vital effect of a conservatory for moving picture performers of every type and ability would be, according to Mr. Bary, one of elimination of deluded persons and the addition of really capable people who seldom get any sort of opportunity under the present system. Another important effect would be the classifying of capable artists in their respective lines and keeping them there, thus removing a cause of much miscasting. In the final analysis it would be practically the same thing as is the case with the lawyer or the doctor. An actor would not be free to pursue his profession until he had been granted a proper certificate by this Conservatory.

Mr. Bary is of the opinion that Hollywood is the one ideal place to establish this Conservatory and he suggests as a method of procedure for all the leading producers to get together and organize to cooperate in the furthering of the movement to an extent which would exclude the possibility of there being enough loop-holes to allow a few incapable hangers-on from eking out an existence as parasites instead of doing what they should do by embracing trades or professions to which they happened to be more suited.

"I am not claiming much in the way of histrionic achievement myself, but I know that whatever I have been able to accomplish in characterizing I owe to the training given to me by the conservatory in Paris and the training I was forced to take before I could get any consideration at the hands of play producers," Mr. Bary declares. "I am confident hundreds of ambitious people would feel similarly indebted to a Hollywood cinema conservatory designed along the same lines and for the same purposes and this feeling of indebtedness would not be slow in coming. Above all it would facilitate the tasks of producers, saving them from having to take chances on new people, and would improve motion pictures through the increased artistry shown by the performers all of whom would fit into the pictures perfectly."

Mr. Bary is considered one of the best actors on the American screen. His next notable appearance will be in support of Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" and this will be followed by an unusual character portrayal in Betty Compson's "The White Flower."

How Aged Can Retain Youth Without Goat Glands

It is a secret and yet it is not. That is, it should not be a secret: everybody should know it naturally, but evidently few do, according to Forrest Robinson, just now prominently in the movie limelight because of two remarkable character portrayals he has given to the screen, one as Grandpa Hatburn in Richard Barthelmess' "Tol'able David," and the other as Daddy Skinner in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country." The secret is, how he keeps young and appears to be about forty years of age when as a matter of fact he is sixty-four years old and has been an actor for forty-seven years. In private life, Robinson is noted for his youth-like vivacity and no one would ever judge him to be as old as he is by a score of years.

How does he do it? Let him tell it himself.

"By avoiding as much as is respectful all aged persons and associating only with young folks—being one of them and just like them," Robinson divulges. "If because you are old in years, you take the accepted customary course of sitting down to mope it out with others of your advanced age, you will act, feel and appear old and decrepit. But, if you will get up on your feet and move around with youthful people at the youthful pace, the psychological effect, sure and inevitable, is, you'll impress everybody as being yet a colt, because you feel and look it."

Mr. Robinson adds that his idea of the worst thought any man or woman can have in this life is that he or she must yield to a relegating to the back-ground of the remote corner by the family fireside after turning the half-century mark. In lieu of this, each human being of this ripe age should turn all thoughts and fancies to juvenile proclivities. Thereby will the supply of sustaining buoyancy be maintained, according to his doctrine.

"There can be no doubt as to the influence environment has on humanity," he continues. "Hence there isn't anything far-fetched in asserting that an old man can keep himself young in spirit and feeling by simply taking pains to have the proper youthful environment incessantly. Anyway, old age is more a state of mind than anything else. You really are as old as you think you are. Therefore, if you'll think you're a mere forty when you're really seventy, everybody else will judge you to be forty and you will note a freedom from physical infirmities such as come with the passing of years if one is foolish enough to sigh at the said passing."

Friends agree that Mr. Robinson can keep up with the procession of the liveliest in any wholesome direction. He is the life of many a high-class party where he is the one guest with a tinge of gray in his hair. In fact, he is welcome at any social function given by the younger set and he attempts a great many of them.

"Keep moving to keep your energies in trim when you start getting on in years," he advises. "Keep away from old people, old things and old ideas. That's all. Try that on your longevity once. And forget about goat glands and the other tommyrot about any kind of glands with which surgeons are supposed to rejuvenate folks with so much ease."

Challenging the Attention of the Whole Wide World

By Garrett Graham

FOR the past hundred years the nations of the New World have enjoyed the security left them as a heritage by James Monroe, President of the United States a century ago. The proclamation that was little more than a statement of foreign policy on the part of a nation still considered an upstart among world powers, gradually came to be recognized as an inviolable tradition throughout the world. The year 1923 is the centennial of this historic pronouncement and the Motion Picture Industry has taken the lead in organizing a great international celebration, appropriately to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine.

Much has been said already about this coming event. Much remains to be said and much remains to be done. It is an undertaking to which every branch of the Motion Picture Industry has pledged its whole-hearted support, a project that has been assured the active assistance of the city, state, and national authorities, from Mayor George E. Cryer of Los Angeles to President Warren G. Harding at Washington. It is an event that has commanded the attention and co-operation of diplomatic representatives of all Central and South American countries. It is a great undertaking of which Southern California and the Motion Picture Industry may feel justly proud.

The Revue and Exposition will be held in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, and will dedicate the huge stadium now nearing completion there. The month of June has been selected as the most appropriate time. It is planned to show in pageantry the history of the New World, from the aboriginal life in North and South America before the coming of Europeans down through the discovery by Columbus and the settlement and the growth of the two continents, until the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine in 1823. It is also planned to film this story, giving it continuity by showing greater detail, and, through the magic of the screen, to give the world an adequate and an accurate conception of the history of the three Americas.

The artistic and dramatic possibilities of this are infinite. The good that such a Revue and such a picture can accomplish in a patriotic and an educational way is beyond estimation. There are millions of potential theatre-goers in the United States whose interest in the possibilities of the screen might be aroused anew by such a story told in films. Presidents of all the colleges and universities in Southern California have united in approval of the project. They are working with the Exposition management to select the high lights of history for portrayal in pageantry and for recording on the screen. These eminent educators have placed themselves and the institutions they represent completely at the command of the Exposition.

A Los Angeles delegation headed by Mayor Cryer has just returned from Washington where a personal invitation on behalf of Southern California was extended to President Harding to be present for the Exposition Premiere. The President declared himself in the greatest sympathy with the undertaking and indicated that only unforeseen complications in the affairs of the nation would prevent him from being here at that time. Those in close touch with the White House regard it as extremely likely that the President will visit Los Angeles for this event.

While in Washington the Los Angeles delegation gave a banquet for Latin-American diplomats at which their personal attendance at the Exposition Premiere and the participation of their countries was invited. These men showed the same high degree of interest with which the project has been met in every quarter and pledged their support. Photographs were taken of the original Monroe Doctrine and of other historical documents in the Government archives at Washington and brought back to Los Angeles for use in connection with the Revue and Exposition.

A bill introduced in Congress by Senator Hiram W. Johnson provides for the coinage of 300,000 half dollars commemorating the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. The early passage of this bill is expected and the coins will be distributed through the Los Angeles Clearing House Association as a part of the Exposition program.

The Exposition Premiere will be the greatest event of its kind ever attempted in Southern California. The tentative program of the Premiere is as follows:

From 9 to 10 P. M., official inspection of the Revue and Exposition with President Harding, the Governor, the Mayor, Stars, Queens, and other dignitaries participating.

From 10 P. M. to midnight, Stars' and Queens' ball.

At 12 o'clock, Midnight, the President will proclaim the official opening. This will be followed by a pyrotechnic display, the Queen of the Revue pressing the button to ignite the first flare bomb.

At 1 A. M., Exposition breakfast, the first event of its kind ever held.

At 2 A. M., all Stars' and Queens' reception and ball.

At sunrise, taps for the Premiere, followed by reveille for the public opening of the month's fiesta.

Attendance at the Premiere will be necessarily limited and only the holders of Patron Certificates will be admitted. Applications for these certificates are now being offered to the personnel of the Motion Picture Industry at $10 each, payable in installments. This is being done because it is the industry itself that is sponsoring this great event. The purchase of a Patron's Certificate means a saving of $2.50, for in addition to admittance to the Premiere, these will be accompanied by 10 tickets of admission to the Revue and Exposition grounds, 10 tickets to the grandstand, and 1000 vote coupons for Queen of the Revue and Exposition. The Motion Picture Industry will select the Queen of the event. It is essential that members of the industry send in their applications at once. As soon as the industry's allotment has been subscribed the certificates will be offered to the public. A great public demand for them is anticipated, on account of the novelty of the Premiere and the extra value in tickets which these certificates carry.

The art of music will be featured throughout the Exposition by one of the most complete, instructive, and entertaining programs ever planned. This program will present the evolution of music from the first savage tom toms of primitive man down to the elaborate symphonies of today. While in Washington the Los Angeles delegation opened negotiations for having the famous United States Marine Band come to Southern California for this event.

Another important feature of the Exposition program that augers well for its artistic success is the contest now on among the art directors of the industry in the design for the buildings of the Exposition. The industry unquestionably has among its numbers some of the foremost architectural and constructional artists of the world. The drawings in color already submitted are striking in their beauty and their originality of design. The general motif for the entire Exposition will be obtained from drawings submitted in this contest. It is hardly likely that any previous Exposition has had such a wealth of talent from which to draw for their preconstruction plans.

A novel idea has been worked out for presenting the exhibits to the public. It is planned to erect these on a huge turn-table and have them pass in review before the spectators in the stadium, instead of following the usual plan of having the spectators file past the individual exhibits. These successive floats will take the public into the Land of Make-Believe and give an intimate picture of the secrets of the film industry, as well as of the allied businesses dealing with motion pictures.

There will be a change of program every night with sufficient diversity to maintain unflagging interest throughout the month of the celebration. Like the evolution of music, the history of the dance will be presented, beginning with the reign of David, 1000 B. C., and carrying it down through the ages to the present day. To all of this will be added much entertainment in lighter vein.

The Exposition management is simply representing the whole of the Motion Picture Industry in carrying these plans to fruition. Without the moral and actual support of everyone the project can not be attended with the success which it deserves. The chief way in which the personnel of the industry can help now is by buying Patron Certificates. The advantage of this is mutual. The purchaser gets more than his money's worth in ticket values and assures himself of a place at the Exposition Premiere, an event none will want to miss when the time arrives. Through the sale of these certificates the Exposition gets the funds needed for financing its preliminary work. Department heads at any of the studios can give full particulars about this offer or further information may be obtained at Exposition headquarters, 1005 Hollingsworth Building, Los Angeles.

That Other Two-Fifty

By Bernard Hyman

Mr. Fiber Kipp of the Idle Hour Theatre, Podunk, Ill., tore another ticket from the roll, smiled a stock smile at a steady lady customer and deposited her gingerly proffered twenty-two cents in the till. Then he settled back in his high swivel chair to continue in his most aggravating half-interested manner with a perspiring salesman who had managed to squeeze into the stuffy box-office with him.

"Seven fifty," quoted Mr. Kipp with final-
ity. Most picture salesman swore Kipp couldn't think any higher than seven-fifty.
But this particular salesman was tenacious
—and an optimist.

"Look here, Mr. Kipp," he protested for-the-Lord-knows-how-many-times, "look here,
Mr. Kipp, you want these pictures, don't you?"

"Sure," said Kipp, "for seven-fifty."

"But man, don't you realize what these pictures cost to produce?"

"Producing ain't my business. All I got to realize is how many tickets I got to sell for seven-fifty." And Mr. Kipp leaned forward again with his usual customer smile, tore off another brace of duckets, made a careful mental deduction of forty-four cents from the dollar and passed the change on out.

The salesman tilted back his hat and scratched his head in a gesture of perplexity. He was a young salesman and he believed in his product. His boss, the Big Boss, back in New York had something of a reputation for talking "straight from the shoulder" and this salesman was pretty well sold on the firm he was working for.

"The trouble with you exhibitors," he declared, looking Kipp straight in the eye, "is that you don't encourage the producers to make better pictures. When we come around with good, honest, saleable box-office attractions, you try to beat us down in our price. You could make a profit on these pictures at ten dollars, yet you refuse to pay more than seven-fifty for them. If we had assumed the same attitude in making these pictures, if we had hired cheaper talent to act in them, if we had spent less money on exploitation, preparation and production, we could afford to sell them for two dollars and a half less. But what good would that do you? You'd be getting a cheaper inferior product. We are making better pictures and we've got to sell them on that basis.

Are you going to fall in line and help us give you better box-office values? Or shall I go back and tell my boss that the town of Podunk can't see good pictures because it won't pay for them? The price of these pictures is ten dollars. What do you say?"

"Seven-fifty."

Mr. Kipp stolidly watched the energetic young salesman stuff his "stills" and press books back into the much-battered portfolio.
The young man had been sincere in his arguments, and Mr. Kipp was only a victim of the callousing struggle. He didn't know much about diplomacy, but he was honest at heart.

"Wait a minute, young feller," he commenced as the other was about to leave,
"you talked to me pretty honest, and I know you believed what you was talking about.
Now I want to tell you somethin', somethin' for your own good."

The energetic young salesman paused, consulted his watch significantly and looked at Fiber Kipp, showman, with a sort of disdainful tolerance. But Mr. Kipp had made up his mind to talk, so he did.

"In the first place," proceeded Kipp, emphasizing his point with a not very delicate looking forefinger, "in the first place, whether I buy your pictures or not you're gonna keep on makin' better pictures,
'cause all the other firms is, and you gotta

Art Is Second Nature, But Business Is a Matter of System

Little Mary Pickford is an honorary captain of big business.

The big business here referred to is the Mary Pickford Company, a very large producing concern requiring an outlay of eight dollars a minute for its maintenance during production times. Miss Pickford bears the title of honorary captain because of the fact that Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, her mother, is the actual, active business manager, the famous Mary being too engrossed in her love of the cinema art and too much a youthful ingenue in all the term implies to be amenable to the rule of hard, cold commercialism such as obtains in the film-making industry the same as any other of grim necessity. Forsooth, this illustrious Mary is never reluctant in giving full credit to her maternal parent for the striking display of business acumen which distinguishes the actuating forces of her unusual organization.

However, despite the little star's aversion for being challenged by too many facts and figures commercial and also despite the fact that the mother is the undisputed titular head of all her film affairs, the latter insists upon holding frequent conferences in order to keep her posted on the general progress of the business side of her career.

It is doubtful whether any picture-making company is blessed with a more unique and more efficient system than that in operation in the Mary Pickford Company. And, it is interesting to note that the originator, promulgator and promoter of this system is Mrs. Pickford, who is perhaps one of the best business executives in her field. She is about as creative of sound business plans as her daughter is creative of fine art and therefore both are emulated widely—the one for the sake of dollars and cents, the other in the hope of attaining the exalted zenith of artistry which is so much her own.

In making "Tess of the Storm Country," her latest photoplay classic, Miss Pickford was obliged to go to a "location" thirty miles distant from her studios in order to get the right "atmosphere" and scenic surroundings for a fishermen's village in which locale the most of Grace Miller White's famous story is unfolded. She chose a spot on Chatsworth Lake, a very inaccessible, out-of-the-way place. The nearest telephone wire was twelve miles away and the very nature of the business of making moving pictures requires more despatch in communication than is possible with even motor car couriers. In this case, it was indispensable to the proper advancement of the star's best interests that she be within reach constantly. Mrs. Pickford had to be at the studios conducting the numerous details entering into the operation of this big business most of the hours of each day while Miss Pickford had to concentrate her efforts on characterizing the lovable Tess before the camera those thirty miles away. Mrs. Pickford, being thoroughly up-to-date in all her ideas and ideals, thought fast as she realized she was confronted by a problem. The quick result was the embracing of a new invention with a speedy subsequent installation of radiophones. Thus she provided the way of conferring with her distinguished daughter on a moment's notice and thereby saved thousands of dollars, a saving made possible by a commendable readiness to resort to mankind's ingeniousness for enhancing system. The upshot of it was, certain air waves were kept pretty busy transmitting the business words of a true business woman to the center of an activity she had to keep under her control constantly.

Within the confines of the general business offices of the Mary Pickford Company,

Mrs. Pickford has perfected a system which precludes the possibility of inefficiency. The basic principle she has instilled throughout the various departments is one prohibiting any dependance upon human memory and substituting an unalterable rule requiring written memorandum of even the smallest detail. Even the office boys must make "memo notes" of every item centering into their work which is to be remembered. Likewise must the highest executive in any department follow the same rule. Just to insure an unbroken adherence to this memorandum habit, she has supplied the force with especially attractive memorandum tablets, which must be kept in a prominent position on each desk and she rigidly enforces the rule of each employee referring to this "reminder" at regular intervals. As a result of the thorough-going manner in which she has put this memory system into practice, there is no such thing as forgetting any duty in the Pickford offices.

Mrs. Pickford is a film believer in a definite placing of personal responsibility with a clear mutual understanding as to exactly what constitutes that responsibility. She assigns each executive to the task of carrying out a certain part of the work and she will not permit him to proceed with it until after he has recited his understanding of it to her satisfactorily. Then she decrees that he place that understanding in memorandum form whereupon she is confident of one hundred per cent efficiency in performance.

"I am sure our co-workers are happier for the elimination of misunderstandings and they are encouraged by their own consciousness of a clear comprehension of what is expected of them," Mrs. Pickford says. "I am of the opinion it is a fundamental of business to obliterate its greatest bane first, and, I consider forgetfulness its worst bane."

An eloquent proof of the statement that employees are more contented when they thoroughly understand their duties and work under the reassurance of being as free from mistakes as is humanly possible, it need be only mentioned that the staff Mrs. Pickford organized when Miss Pickford first started producing her own pictures is still with her

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

Many times have we referred to the trite Shakespearean observation that "the play's the thing," and many more times would we like to impress it upon all producers of photoplays. The folly of parading so-called stars without stories has been patent these many moons. No one cares to waste a minute watching a star struggle through a deficient, uninteresting story it makes no difference how clever the star might be. First of all, the popular demand is for a plot that holds together and simultaneously holds the attention, and secondly, the characters who are used to make that plot cohesive must be portrayed adeptly by artists of comprehension and not of automatic mechanics. There is still hope for the arrival of the day when the story will transcend the star, but it has not yet arrived. However, occasionally there is the picture drama which is all story and no parade of a celebrity's fame. Now to have those cases in the majority. The two prime leaders among the stellar personalities of the screen, Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford, have continued to rule supreme because they usually demanded material to work with. If either had permitted egotism to lead them into presenting any kind of a story in the belief that the public simply wanted them under any circumstances, their finish as drawing-cards would have come long ago. Frequently Mr. Chaplin appears in a comedy of distinct merit—a comedy which would score a hit even without him, and Miss Pickford has even more frequently presented character studies in the midst of superior narratives which would command popularity if properly offered by anyone capable of "doing" such parts. Naturally the personality of each has helped matters along prodigiously in every story they have essayed, but no master or mistress of the histrionic art could be constantly saving bad stories by dint of his or her own particular ability. It is to be hoped that many other stars will learn this; it is also to be devoutly hoped that producers will see it and act accordingly. Unless the play is kept the thing and the star idea is relegated to the background, there is the danger of stagnation which comes from disgust on the part of the patrons. We recall having seen a splendid actor appear in two very bad photoplays in succession. Later he appeared in a most meritorious one, but it was a complete failure from the box-office standpoint. The people had had enough of him in unsatisfactory surroundings and could not be persuaded to come back a third time. Needless to add, it required several costly pictures to get that star back on his old footing again. He or someone erred to the extent of thinking the people would accept him in anything he chose to do. Now why will producers persist in ignoring the fact that the play is the thing?

Among the more interesting releases of the current moments is the Metro production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which has been received by most critics with rather unstinted acclaim. Motion Picture News calls this picture "thoroughly enjoyable" and predicts it "will surely find a place in the category of better things." Equally complimentary is Moving Picture World, which says "it is doubtful if there has ever been such a noteworthy cast assembled before for one picture." It is interesting to note in this connection that among the players in this cast there are nine who have

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

A marked trend towards the heavily dramatic theme is discernible in the prospectus of the near future in the movie world. Nevertheless, there is still ample indication that the majority of the fans prefer comedy drama.

Rev. Moses Breeze, of Columbus, secretary of the Presbyterian Movement in Ohio, advocates the installation of moving picture outfits in rural churches as an aid to promoting the cause of education and religious uplift. Here's a Breeze that's for everybody's good.

News weeklies are growing more popular with photoplay audiences and it is at once evident that no program is complete without animated scenes of the big events of the day. Every exhibitor owes it to the cause of public information to offer late news pictures at every performance.

Now it comes to pass that American photoplays are gaining a wide vogue in China, and it is evident that Mongolians have a marked preference for the Yankee variety. Perchance, after all, the Chinese are not so ires about the Shantung matter as some Republican senators would have us believe.

Period photoplays are back with a zest. Douglas Fairbanks started it with his "Robin Hood" and Marion Davies advanced it with her "When Knighthood Was in Flower." One of the succeeding notable examples in emulation of the tendency is Bennie Zeidman's "The Spider and the Rose," just completed, and which is a romance of the early Spanish days in Southern California.

The general inclination of producing firms to improve the quality of their animated products is reassuring and is accentuated by the everincreasing persistency with which Universal and other similar concerns are getting out of the idea of machine-made program pictures. Universal, by the way, is at present making twenty-five pictures simultaneously and among these are two which seem destined to cost nearly a million dollars each.

been starred. These include such popular celebrities as Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, Barbara LaMarr, Louise Fazenda, June Elvidge and John Bowers. The Exhibitors Trade Review is also deeply impressed by the personnel of the cast and adds that "the whole picture holds every needed requirement that goes to make up a thoroughly good box-office attraction." Nearly all of the reviewers wax enthusiastic as they vie with each other in dividing praise between especially Mr. Chaney, Miss Sweet, Miss La Marr and Mr. Bowers. Every indication points to Metro having a real winner in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and the whole achievement furnishes one more striking demonstration of the fact that much of the best screen material ever devised in all history was devised years before there was any such form of entertainment as the cinema.

We were particularly interested in the pre-view showing of Monty Banks' latest two-reel comedy to be released by Federated. This one is called "Six A. M.," and it is about as full of laughs as any two reels can be filled. The most important thing about it, however, is the fact that Mr. Banks goes farther towards proving he does possess a spark of real genius as a mimic than he ever has before. It is evident that he had little to work with—a small production and little help in the way of a cast or mechanical "props" such as many comedians depend on so extensively. Therefore, it is almost single-handed that the dapper Monty puts the picture across, his personality and clever clowning providing the entire attraction. Not so long ago we believe it was Edwin Schallert, who ventured the prediction that Monty Banks had all the qualities for bidding fair to head the ranks of screen fun-makers just as Rodolph Valentino climbed to the top rung of the ladder among the romantic actors. Both of these artists are Italians and both came to the United States without money and without the least semblance of fame.

"Broken Chains," the widely heralded $10,000 prize story which the Chicago Daily News selected and which Goldwyn produced with a great deal of care and expense, did not "take Los Angeles by storm" from the critics' standpoint although no one ventured to brand it a failure in any way. However, just as the Los Angeles Evening Express points out, this picture seems to have contained more of the elements of a rapid-fire serial than a mere seven-reel feature. One thing is certain, no one can complain over any lack of action, because there is no such lack. Action abounds in a vast majority of the numerous feet of film and those who like a story to move forward with dizzy rapidity will be fully satisfied with this picture. However, there is undoubtedly foundation for the opinions of several prominent critics to the effect that this photoplay is shy of quality—not in production or cast, but in story. The players do not achieve any unprecedented feats in character portrayals, but Ernest Torrence enhances his reputation as a great character delineator somewhat at least while Colleen Moore gives an excellent performance.

At a recent pre-view of Rupert Hughes' "Gimmie," it seems there was some division of opinion as to the worth of the production as a whole. Most of the experts who were privileged to pass first judgment upon it were prone to praise it, but not without taking a few exceptions here and there. "It is a better story than picture," is the way one described it. Gaston Glass and Helene Chadwick, the principal players in the cast, lend much charm to the production, it is said.

"Omar, the Tent-Maker" looks like a money-maker, too. As one quite erudite New York critic says: "there is distinct value to this production from the standpoint of its being a spectacle, but there is additional value in that it brings vividly to

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, DEC. 16, 1922.

WILL HAYS IS HERE WITH BIG IDEA

Will H. Hays, the czar of film-dom, is here in the role of Sir Knight Bountiful so far as his attitude towards Hollywood is concerned and if this noted statesman and organizer succeeds in accomplishing half of the plans he has promulgated, this already great film capitol will blossom forth as a veritable magic city with architecture surpassing that of ancient Athens and with more culture prevalent everywhere than could have been crowded into all Greece and Rome in their heyday.

There is every evidence of this energetic president of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America being serious in his announcements of a plan for spending something like two million dollars in remodeling Hollywood into a community of almost countless marvels, including fine parks, bejeweled illumination, amphitheatres and all manner of architectural achievements which would be the envy of every other American city. It seems that one of Mr. Hays' fundamental reasons in sending Thomas G. Patten as his personal representative to Southern California in advance of him was to start the ball to rolling in such a way as to get the whole motion picture industry back of the movement for some unprecedented civic enterprise. The results have been amazing—the whole populace was excited to the point of arising as one to co-operate to the maximum limit in aiding in the working of near-miracles.

Mr. Hays reiterated his intentions of improving Hollywood immediately to the extent of making it an ideal industrial community center, where all fine arts could flourish unhampered and where the scientific business of creating photoplays could proceed within environments which would tend to cause evil or objectionable forces to abscond instantaneously. His whole basic idea is to reach a climax in his campaign to "clean up films" by making their center creation center a community of such rare beauty and irreprehensible spirit that the last vestige of stigma may be removed from the escutcheon of the cinema.

'Sins' Author to be Tried Monday

Ed Roberts, alleged author of "The Sins of Hollywood," purported to be an expose of the inner lives of prominent photoplayers, but, said to be, in reality a scurrilous attack upon the characters of these artists, will appear before Judge Bledsoe next Monday morning to answer to a charge of misusing the United States as set forth in an indictment returned against him by the Grand Jury last week.

Roberts was released from custody under a $5,000 bail. His apprehension was the result of the activities of the publicity committee of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, which worthy organization is back of the prosecution on the theory that the center of film-making must be vindicated for such unjust and unfounded insults as this objectionable pamphlet contains.

CALIFORNIA LEADS IN FILM CENSUS OF UNCLE SAM

Uncle Sam has completed giving full recognition of the motion picture industry as a national project of the first magnitude by including the full statistics of it for the year of 1921 for the first time in history and the Department of Commerce at Washington made the facts and figures its executives have compiled public last Tuesday. The outstanding features of this enlightening portion of the manufacturers' census are the facts that Los Angeles produced during that year sixty percent of all the films made in the United States and that sixty-eight studios were operated in California alone. Other interesting figures are that 10,000 persons were directly engaged in the work during that twelve-month and the total payroll was more than $37,000,000. The total valuation of the product was almost $100,000,000.

The essentials of the census compilation are that there were 127 establishments engaged primarily in the production of motion pictures during 1921, with products valued at approximately $77,397,000, but this does not include concerns which reported production valued at less than $5,000 each. Of the 127 establishments, 83 have been classified as producers of motion pictures and forty-four as producers of projection films (positive), which classification includes the development of exposed films and other laboratory work.

The combined output of all establishments in California was given as approximately 65 percent of the maximum capacity. It is interesting to note in this connection that it has been estimated by local statisticians that this percentage has been advanced to at least 85 percent during the year of 1922.

KITCHEN PERSISTS IN MUSSING UP FILM PARLOR

Karl K. Kitchen, whose disparaging articles pertaining to Hollywood in general and the motion picture industry in general created a profound sensation a few months ago, has renewed his attacks. This time he levels his guns on film magnates and fires a few broadsides which seem destined to be followed by thunderous verbal detonations in several high quarters.

Following is an excerpt from Mr. Kitchen's latest effort to muss up the palatial parlor of those in supremacy just now:

"In the first place, the film industry in America, is controlled by a group of foreign-born speculators, the majority of whom are actually unable to speak the English language with any degree of correctness. Pants pressers, delicatessen dealers, furriers and penny showmen started in the picture business when it was in its infancy, and they are the type of 'magnates' who preside over its destinies today. * * *

"The whole industry is in the grip of men of this type—uncultured opportunists from Central Europe from whom, until they are retired from the motion picture business, the American public can never hope to see any real improvement in the photoplay. A few better pictures will be made, of course, but the great bulk of the product will be cheap, and without taste—like the men who make them. * * *

"Harsh words, you say. But it is necessary to point out this fundamental fault with the movies before setting forth the others. When a better class of producers make motion pictures there will be better pictures.

However, Kitchen believes "the situation is not hopeless"

FILM INDUSTRY TO AID CIVIC PROJECT

If the Los Angeles Park Commission acts favorably upon the voluntary offer of the motion picture industry, as every sign indicates it will, the problem of financing the construction of an outer Administration Building and a most attractive boulevard leading from it to the Los Angeles Stadium, the largest in the world, will be solved, because the public-spirited executives of the film world will defray all the expenses incurred in the project.

The plan, as proposed, is to construct a permanent entrance as an arcade through the Administration Building, which will be some distance from the Stadium and adjacent to Figueroa street. The architecture will be highly artistic and significant of the great cinema art. The idea is that it shall stand as a durable monument to the industry which has contributed so much to the development of the city of Los Angeles.

The boulevard leading from this entrance to the Stadium will be exceedingly wide, perfectly paved and curbed, and, will be lined on both sides by trees and flowers, arranged by an expert landscape gardener with the view of producing the most pleasing effects possible.

A shortage of funds at the immediate disposal of the Park Commission had made it necessary for the city to forego carrying out such an elaborate plan and it seems a foregone conclusion there will be no obstacles placed in the way of the film industry to thus demonstrate its loyalty to the cause of upbuilding and beautifying the center of photoplay-making.

This Stadium will be the scene of the great International Exposition to be given next June.

Globe-Trotting For "Info"

Robert G. Vignola, who directed the Cosmopolitan production of "When Knighthood Was In Flower," starring Marion Davies, has started a tour of the world in the interests of gathering intimate information of various countries in order to make future films he will direct for Cosmopolitan more authentic. This is said to be the first time a motion picture director has gone to the trouble of such extensive traveling to such far-flung lands merely for "direct inspiration."

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Film News of This Week You May Have Overlooked.

Billy Franey is recent addition to Century comedies.

Buddy Messinger is starting out on his starring career via the "Century" route.

Arthur Carew is with the Louis Gasnier all-star company in "Poor Men's Wives."

Edith Grant will play an ingenue role in a Century comedy to be directed by Harry Edwards.

Buddy Messinger, Century comedy star, has started work on his next picture for this company.

Marguerite Clayton is now doing her second successive lead with Harry Carey at Robertson-Cole.

Noah Beery has moved to the Ince studio where he is doing a characterization with Leah Baird.

Roy Stewart is being directed by Duke Worne in "Tales of the Old West," a series of two-reel dramas.

Lydia Knott was selected by Charley Chaplin to do the mother role in the initial Edna Purviance picture.

Betty Francisco is playing one of the principals in the Shulberg-Gasnier production, "Poor Men's Wives."

All the boys who played in Neilan's "Penrod" have been engaged to appear in a forthcoming Century comedy.

Michael Dark has been signed for a supporting role with Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law" at the Metro studios.

Kathleen Myers, on returning from Europe where she made several pictures, was signed to play lead to Larry Semon.

William S. Hart is in New York, making preliminary arrangements to stage his comeback to the screen after a year of idleness.

Mme. Nazimova has abandoned the screen temporarily at least. She will open in "Dagmar," a new stage play, in New York within the next fortnight.

Theda Bara is well on the way back to the screen. The vehicle is "The Easiest Way" and Ferdinand Pinney Earle has been selected as director.

"McTeague," by Frank Norris, has been selected as the first von Stroheim contribution to Goldwyn. No announcement is made as yet as to cast or other details.

Sol Cohen, violinist and composer, has written the musical score for "Michael O'Halloran," Gene Stratton-Porter's own production of her novel for the screen.

James Leo Meehan, who recently finished directing the Gene Stratton-Porter's own production, "Michael O'Halloran," will spend the Christmas holidays in New York.

Jane Mishkinin, eleven-year-old actress, has been chosen by Lois Weber to play the part of "Jewel" in the refilming of Clara Louise Burnham's novel at Universal.

Lloyd Hughes and May McAvoy and the other members of the cast appearing in Thomas H. Ince's latest special production are in Yuma, Arizona, filming exteriors.

D. W. Griffith has started another feature production back east. The working title is "The White Rose." Mae Marsh and Ivor Novello, the English actor, will play the leading roles.

Mary Jane Temple of Los Angeles won the Marion Davies Beauty Trophy in the contest conducted by the Cinderella Roof. Finn Haakon Frolich, noted sculptor, was the judge.

Gloria Swanson has purchased the famous Gillette home in Beverly Hills at a cost of $250,000. The famous Gloria has moved in already and she calls it the realization of a life ambition.

Harry Gribben, actor, has sued Bull Montana and Hunt Stromberg jointly for $1,400, which he claims is due him through a verbal contract to work for the defendants for a period of four weeks at a weekly salary of $350.

Buster Keaton, Baby Keaton and wife, nee Natalie Talmadge, are back in Hollywood after an extended visit in New York. Buster has gone back to work before the camera while Baby has gone back to growing a la Hollywood.

Wallace Beery has been cast in the role of Felix Bavu in the film adaptation of Earl Carroll's stage play, "The Attic of Felix Bavu." This play was a past season sensation on the New York stage and is now being filmed by Universal.

Although it is reported to be contrary to the star's judgment, Dorothy Gish was assigned the leading role opposite him in his newest picture instead of Nat-acha Rambova, who, according to the first reports, had the job.

Rupert Hughes started the actual filming of his "Souls For Sale" on the desert near Palm Springs, Calif., this week. It is expected that about fourteen days will be required for this "location" work after which the author-director will return to Goldwyn studios at Culver City to do the interiors.

Herbert Howe, well-known feature writer, has returned to New York from an extensive tour of Europe and is attached to the special editorial staff of Photoplay Magazine. Herb's brother, Harold, is making the Howe influence felt in Hollywood in creditable emulation.

Thomas Meighan and George Ade were guests of honor at a conference of governors of the United States held at White Sulphur Springs, Va., recently. Ade's "Back Home and Broke," in which Meighan is the star, was shown to the statesmen, this being its first public viewing.

Rupert Julian, who is finishing Von Stroheim's work on "The Merry-go-Round," is contemplating the purchase of the celebrated English stage play, "Peg Woffington." It is understood Mr. Julian very much desires to film this story upon the completion of "The Merry-go-Round."

Mae Busch has been added to the all-star cast enacting Rupert Hughes' production, "Souls For Sale," now being filmed. This is Miss Busch's third consecutive engagement on the Goldwyn "lot," she having starred in "The Christian," and enacting an important role in "Brothers Under the Skin."

Adam Hull Shirk, west coast publicity director for Paramount, has been re-elected president of the Los Angeles Society of Magicians. Mr. Shirk has the reputation of being a most adept exponent of the art of conjuring, but he manages to religiously abstain from incorporating any of his deceptive sleight-of-hand in his publicity, he being one of the most truly truthful press agents in the business.

Rex Ingram, with his company including Ethel Terry, Ramon Navarro and Harry Morey, is in Cuba this week after three months at Miami, Florida, where the major portion of his newest picture was filmed. There is little prospect of Mr. Ingram returning to Hollywood at an early date, mainly for the reason that he says he likes to direct in the east. Richard Barthelmess and his company are also working in Cuba for the present.

Mary Alden has completed "This Wife Business" at New York and this week started to play the featured role in "Something For Nothing." Her press agent is anxious to make the point that the latter title in no way refers to or reflects upon the former.

David Kesson, cameraman, and Frank Urson, associate director, have just returned from England where they photographed a number of scenes for Marshall Neilan's production of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," now under way at the Goldwyn studios. They report London doubly wet—rainy and well supplied with liquor.

Warner Brothers will build a theatre in which previews of their new releases will be shown to the public. These showings, however, will be made in the evening only, as the structure will be used as a projection room in the day time. A select orchestra will be engaged to accompany the shows and there will be a seating capacity of 450.

"Tansy," the first release of the Burr Nickle Production Company, after nine months' work, has been completed. This picture is a novelty, inasmuch as it is the first production where in none of the artists were permitted to use make-up.

Count Jacques Van Maurik de Beaufort, famous Belgian war hero who is equally famous for his adventures in love, has arrived in Los Angeles with the idea of winning more fame, but this time as a motion picture director. Besides his other accomplishments, the Count is the author of "Behind the German Veil," published in 1918, and which is in its fifteenth edition.

According to latest dispatches from New York, it now develops that Corliss Palmer, the Georgia beauty who won first place in a beauty contest Eugene V. Brewster, the millionaire publisher, conducted in one of his motion picture magazines, had a love affair in her native state before she became enamored of Brewster, who has publicly announced his intention of discharging his present wife, a second one, for this intended-to-be-third-one.

BRITISH MAJOR SUGGESTS BOON FOR "EXTRA" MAN

Several complaints from the ranks of "extras" have been made regarding the present system of receiving and cashing their daily vouchers. After receiving his voucher, the actor is obliged to make a trip to the bureau from which he obtained his work, and as these bureaus are usually closed by the time the vouchers are issued, he is forced to visit the bureau in the day time, thus losing a day's work. Maurice Talbot, formerly a major in the British Artillery, suggests that these vouchers be replaced by a check, minus the bureau's commission, on some bank that is open after regular working hours, so that the recipient may deposit the check to the credit of a bank account. He thinks this system would be just as convenient for the studios, and certainly would be a boon to the "extra" people.

A WEALTHY STAR

Irene Rich—rich not only in name, but in beauty and dramatic talent.

Fighting for Independence

The fight for film independence has been transferred from New York to Hollywood. The Anchor Film Distributors has dedicated its new Hollywood building to independent producers. The structure, which will be known as the Anchor building, has quarters for about forty film organizations. A large patio will afford adequate space for meetings and discussions. The Anchor building was built by the William Horsley Laboratories interests and promises to rival the New York film building as a clearing house for independent pictures.

Lincoln Plumer is playing "Cassidy" in "Within the Law," the Norma Talmadge production.

PICTURE OF ENID BENNETT IS MADE FOR PICTURE

Enid Bennett, who is appearing in the leading feminine role in "Your Friend and Mine" for Metro, began her work in this production two weeks before any of the other members of the cast. Clarence G. Badger, the director, had practically nothing to do with this episode of the picture.

Miss Bennett did not spend the two weeks working before the camera, but instead was posing for a painting which plays an important part in this screen adaptation of Willard Mack's sketch.

Ferdinand Basatini, whose paintings have won him coveted prizes in art exhibits the world over and who is now a resident of the artists' colony at Laguna Beach, California, was selected to do this painting of Miss Bennett for the picture.

During the filming of "Your Friend and Mine" this painting was placed under the care of a special property man who had instructions to personally guard it at all times. He was the only one who could move it and was responsible for it at all times.

The painting, which was life-sized, showed Miss Bennett dressed in the character of Lady Marian in "Robin Hood," in which production she appeared in support of Douglas Fairbanks.

Miss Storey to Get Story

Edith Storey, who a very few short years ago occupied a prominent position in the galaxy of Metro stars, but who has since been in retirement, has yielded to the lure of Come-Back and has just announced her intention of accepting a contract to star in a big independent production, the name of which she says cannot be divulged as yet. Miss Storey will be remembered best for her artistic performance in the original film version of Hall Caine's "The Christian."

FRISCO PRODUCER HERE

Max Graf, supervising director of Graf Productions, Incorporated, of San Francisco, arrived in Los Angeles Tuesday to collaborate with H. H. Van Loan in writing the continuity of William Dudley Pelley's novel, "The Fog," which will be filmed for Metro distribution in the immediate future.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Graf will complete the final arrangements for the filming of the story and then return to San Francisco to arrange for the building of the many settings required.

Director Val Paul and the entire Carey company have gone to the Carey ranch in the San Francisco canyon to film scenes in "Canyon of the Fools," Carey's fourth starring vehicle for F. B. O. release.

FRANK MAYO TO JOIN STARS MAKING OWN FILMS

Frank Mayo, who has completed a three-year contract with Universal, for whom he starred successfully, is now with Goldwyn for a feature role in the Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale." Richard Dix, Claire Windsor and Lew Cody have also been cast for this production. It is said Mr. Mayo will head his own producing unit as soon as he finishes this one Goldwyn picture.

Rudy Seems "In Rude"

The latest on the Rodolph Valentino situation is that he will probably go to Europe and appear either in vaudeville or in pictures, pictures which would be barred from the United States because of Paramount's contract, which a New York court sustains. Valentino's plea that he could not live on the salary of $1,250 this contract calls for did not make an impression upon the judge and under his ruling it will be impossible for the man who has made the word "sheik" so popular to accept any offer from Goldwyn to star in their proposed film version of "Ben Hur." Unless Valentino changes his mind and returns to his Paramount job, he will either be compelled to repair to Europe for a livelihood or else remain idle so far as acting is concerned in any part of America he might choose as his abiding place. Moreover, he will be obliged to continue to abide until his present contract expires nearly three years hence by which time—but why speculate on what the volatile American public will be interested in on a day so distant!

In Russian Extravaganza

An attractive feature of the Russian extravaganza, "Ivanoushka," the second production of the Co-operative Repertory Theatre association which is comprised of many in the motion picture industry, will be the ballet work under the supervision of Natty Frei. The famous continental dancer, Deirdre, will assist Mr. Frei in his own Peacock dance. Deirdre will also do a dance special in an enchanted forest scene in this fantasy which will take place the middle of January. Harl McInroy is directing the production.

Rights Purchased

By Paul Gerson to "The Man Behind" and twelve Saturday Evening Post stories by Peter B. Kyne to be directed by David Kirkland and Craig Hutchinson.

Dan L. Sharits, cinematographer, starts his third picture for Pathe this week with the Malobee productions featuring Leo Maloney. They are shooting at the Russell studio.

BABY MURIEL DANA TO APPEAR AT PANTAGES HERE

Muriel Frances Dana, four-year-old screen star extraordinary, will make personal appearances at the Pantages theatre of Los Angeles during the week beginning January 1st as an added attraction to the local premiere showing, "The Forgotten Law," the Max Graf picture in which she plays a principal role. Little Miss Dana will offer a regular little song-and-dance act such as she scored a big hit with recently in San Francisco. She knows and can execute adeptly thirty-four different dance steps, which is considered a remarkable terpsichorean repertoire for one of her tender years. Her next notable screen appearance will be in support of Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory."

Muriel Frances Dana

Extremely Thin Soles

Willard Mack, who has a leading role in the S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) production for Metro of his own play, "Your Friend and Mine," was telling other members of the cast of a soldier who complained to his sergeant that the soles of the shoes issued him were so thin as to make walking painful.

"Sergeant," said the private, "the soles of those shoes are so thin that if I stood on a dime I could tell if it was heads or tails."

"Bull" Takes Vacation

"Bull" Montana, Metro's comedian with the clock-stopping face, is taking a two weeks' vacation in San Francisco before starting on the next Hunt Stromberg comedy production, "They Call It Dancing."

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

If Hays Will, Hollywood!

Photoplay at its peak! That's a slogan.

Cooperation is one operation which does not cut things out for you.

If Camera! should fail to cut a wide swath, it is determined to cleave a straight course of usefulness in behalf of the motion picture industry.

The "wet" question simply will not dry up. Rum and rummies seem destined to keep the country in an upheaval for many years yet to come.

Holly time for Hollywood approaches in the midst of happy dreams of this community becoming a veritable Garden of Eden, thanks to Will Hays. Now for a prayer that we don't wake up and find it was all a dream!

Peace comes piece by piece between picture magnates and lay reformers. The day may yet come when all wide-flung opinions will be reconciled to a common theory that all enemies can become friends with comparative ease.

Los Angeles newspapers are the papers which should refrain from all inclinations to feature in box-car letters the misfortunes of motion picture people smacking of scandal. Envious newspapers of envious other cities will do enough of this.

One way to raise the standard of quality in pictures is to lower the claims too frequently advanced in advertising. It is an error to make the public expect too much; it is better to give them surprises in the form of the time-honored "more than they expect."

The biggest forthcoming event in Filmland is the International Exposition to be given in the largest stadium in the world in Los Angeles. A biggest event deserves a biggest effort on the part of everyone in any way interested in the promotion of the welfare of the cinema art.

If some of the young girls who show wilful tendencies to become involved in romances with screen idols would devote more time to learning how to sew buttons instead of devoting so much of it to sowing wild oats, they would contribute something towards improving the future home life of America.

SOMETHING For ANYTHING

Oh, how they jangle the tomtoms every time they buy the screen rights of some well-known author's latest work! And, then what a wonderfully disappointing picture they turn out later! Even the reputation of Shakespeare would not save the effort. Even the merest layman knows why, and many of the so-called erudite producers do not know why. So goes it and it does go so! Yes, it's a subject worth harping on. The fallacy of essaying to choke men's reputations down the public's throat is too flagrant to be ignored. Somehow, some producers must be forced to learn that their patrons want good pictures and not so much "big name." No one gives a continental cent if a corking good photoplay was written by John Doe, of Podunk, Arkansas, or a distinguished Long Islander. The thing desired is the good picture. The spirited rivalry among producers to grab the literary output of celebrities is more amusing than the output. No one endorses the short-sighted policy of giving something for just anything. Meanwhile the tall timbers of chilly oblivion are literally full of new material which would actually enrich screen literature. There are hundreds of amateur photoplaywrights in Unknown Land whose works would make some of the efforts of some professionals look decidedly amateurish. This material could be secured for less—it would encourage economy. The new blood would be a boon to pictures. It would entail so little extra trouble and it promises such a lot in the way of betterment. The producers who would make a specialty of exploring the regions inhabited by the aspirants to honors as screen writers would certainly be rewarded richly, and it would not be at all difficult to develop a big new school of photoplay builders and plot originators who would eclipse the attempts of all the present-day celebrities. The absurd notion of paying vast sums of money for the products of men and women of fame simply because reputation is back of them will never help the cinema in its forward march. The only thing that should count is merit, and if a celebrity writes an inferior work, it must be rejected and the habit of not reading manuscripts bearing names of unknown authors must be stamped out. If a producer pays something he must get something if he is to be justified in hoping to succeed. Let the so-called dark horse come into his own and the quality of photoplays will become higher.

If a rolling stone gathers no moss and a setting hen never gets fat, isn't it a good idea for mere man to divide his time between rolling forward and "setting steady?"

EACH of VERY HIGH WORTH

There is sound reason for asking the Government to treat the screen with the same consideration as it does the press. The sound reason is, the screen is pushing the press for high honors in the work of disseminating intelligence and leading people in the right direction. There was a time when the screen was merely an experiment as a factor in enlightening the public, but that day is gone. Now the movies can be depended upon to do an equal share towards spreading any propaganda in behalf of laudable causes. No single at-home agency performed a greater war service than film, and the war establishment leaned heavily upon it in crises. Distinguished public officials bestowed encomiums upon the whole industry and the masses applauded without stint. Yet at this very moment there is an underhanded movement to undermine the power and usefulness of the screen. Everywhere reformers are brazenly trying to harry the whole art and the press is not generous in its defense of a co-worker. As a matter of strict justice, every newspaper and magazine in the country should fight the battles of the screen persistently. The press is materially aided by the supplementary work of the screen, and the populace is innately benefited. We would like to see the fans conduct an irresistible and invulnerable campaign to let the whole world know that the photoplay art cannot be assailed with impunity, and we would like to see severe rebuke administered to those who presume the right to cast aspersions upon achievements of the camera as a public benefactor. If the press cannot comprehend the wisdom of defending and promoting its mighty aide, it will surely be pushed for honors more than ever.

"JOKE" ALMOST PUTS ACTOR IN JAIL

What started out to be a practical joke developed into a close call for Robert Agnew, the victim, last Tuesday, when out of a desire to be accommodating he hauled a mysterious case to his hotel apartment for a friend, a well-known screen star. Just as Mr. Agnew was driving away from the William Fox Studios with his "cargo," he was intercepted by two stalwarts wearing badges and who announced themselves to be federal prohibition officers. They demanded to search the car and upon discovering the suspicious case, took the young actor into custody.

However, when Agnew explained that "the goods" belonged to a friend, the officers relented somewhat by giving their permission for him to make the delivery as originally intended, but with the disconcerting supplementary statement of determination to confiscate the automobile.

Worry beset Agnew so overwhelmingly that in making the trip to his hotel, accompanied by the officers, he narrowly escaped colliding with most everything in the streets. But upon reaching his destination he had cause for augmented concern. The two accompanying officers also evinced marked proclivities for showing some extreme nervousness. It was all because a big, burly Prohibition officer met them as the car came to a standstill and indicated from the inception a total lack of inclination towards making any kind of concessions.

Then Agnew realized the two men in his car were not officers, but were only actors playing a practical joke at the instigation of his star friend. Simultaneously he likewise realized the man who awaited him at his hotel was a Prohibition officer bent on doing his share towards seeing to it that the Eighteenth Amendment is enforced. Worst of all, he wanted to take Agnew straight to jail without minute examination of the contents of his car. The make-believe officers in apprehension lest the guardian of Volstead's law would do that very thing and thus inconvenience the innocent Agnew, tore the lid off of the suspicious case and exposed to the eagle eye of the real officer a box full of—

What do you suppose?

Only a lot of broken glass and brick-bats.

"It was a good joke all right, but it almost got me in mighty 'bad'," Agnew commented afterwards.

WRITERS PLAN GAY PARTY FOR NEW YEAR'S EVE

There will be very special events at the Play Room of the Screen Writers' Guild New Year's Eve and the wielders of pens mightier than swords seem determined to eclipse several previous records in social achievements.

The reservations have been limited to 200 and after they are filled there will be nothing left for the late ones but attend watchnight services at The Little Church Around the Corner.

Inasmuch as New Year's Eve falls on Sunday this year Al Cohn's entertainment committee has had several ticklish situations to circumvent, so as to say.

After taking the executive board into conference, the decision was reached to have the program begin at 9 o'clock with dinner, etc., and dancing to begin promptly at midnight.

Aubrey Stauffer has charge of the musical part of the program and is lining up the club members who can sing, play musical instruments, etc., so that the best possible program can be arranged.

It will be the Play Room's initiation as a cabaret of the jazziest caliber.

Another feature will be the drawing for the Lorna Moon automobile which has finally been scheduled by Mary O'Connor's Welfare Committee.

Tourneur Films Scenes On Board Liner

Accompanied by twenty members of the company selected for "The Isle of Dead Ships," Maurice Tourneur, producer, and Anna Q. Nilsson, star, have left for San Francisco on the H. F. Alexander and they filmed scenes enroute for the new Tourneur production. The Alexander was used by Tourneur for the opening sequences of his story, through special permission of the officials of the Admiral Line. "The Isle of Dead Ships" deals with a palatial liner wrecked and caught in the entwining tendrils of the miles of kelp which form the Sargasso Sea, and drawn to the isle of dead ships.

Film Notables to Aid Indians

Monte Blue, Mrs. Rupert Hughes and Mrs. Raymond Hatton were selected by the Los Angeles Woman's Club to represent the motion picture industry in an endeavor to bring about the enfranchisement of the American Indians, and cause them to be made American citizens. Mr. Blue has prepared petitions and will circulate them among the members of the profession. He is said to be of Indian descent.

Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Denials of Nuptials Deluge

Dame Rumor has been exceedingly busy announcing all kinds of forthcoming unions in holy wedlock among motion picture notables and as a result almost countless denials are being issued. Charlie Chaplin and Pola Negri have both denied they would be married as reported and each has repeated the denial at least a dozen times. Wallace Beery denies he will wed the daughter of a Kansas supreme court judge as was published. Walter Emerson denies he was married secretly, as certain newspaper reports indicated. He points out that he has been sick in bed for a month and couldn't very well face a clergyman. Pauline Toler denies that she has plans of eloping to Old Mexico to have a matrimonial knot tied. George Rigas, who was erroneously reported among the more recent benedicts, says he is only engaged. Orlando Cortez issues an emphatic denial of the rumor that he had led beautiful Claire Windsor to an altar. Verily, it's a great 'taint-so season in Hollywood.

Helen's Great-Aunt

Did you know that there has been only one woman initiated into the Masonic Lodge since that order's foundation? Or, hadn't you heard there ever was a feminine Mason? Well, there was one quite a few years ago. Her name was Martha Hawthorne and she was taken into the organization at Glasgow, Scotland, as a matter of contingency, for in a moment of rather audacious curiosity she had climbed up on the roof of a building and peeped in on the secret ceremonies of an important Masonic assembly. Then the men had to make her one of them in order to insure the perpetuity of their secrecy. And, Martha Hawthorne has a direct descendant in Los Angeles, she being the great-aunt of Helen Kesler, popular motion picture actress who for a year was Jimmy Aubrey's leading lady in Vitagraph comedies and whose next screen appearance will be made in Rupert Hughes' "The Bitterness of Sweets." Miss Kesler's mother is Martha Hawthorne's own niece and resides at 4412 West Pico street, Los Angeles.

"Long Skirts," starring Fatty Karr, directed by Bruce Mitchell for East Coast Productions. Federal.

"The White Flower" starring Betty Compson; written and directed by Julia Crawford Ivers; Paramount.

"Racing Hearts," starring

Agnes Ayres; directed by Paul Powell; Paramount.

Sam Kaufman is with the G. M. Anderson company in the current production, "When Knights Were Cold," as wardrobe man, make-up supervisor, and actor.

Why Directors Play Favorites

There are many adverse and warped opinions as to why motion picture directors are so prone to play favorites in casting their pictures. Director Jimmie Horne arises to defend this proclivity of the members of his profession, declaring that in 99 out of 100 cases, it is the talent of the players which influences the man behind the megaphone. "Yep, talent and nothing else tells in a vast majority of selections," he impresses. As an example it is cited that when Mr. Horne was signed to direct Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory," now being filmed at the Robertson-Cole studios, the minute he learned there was a child part in the story, he decided to assign it to Muriel Frances Dana, because this four-year-old artiste extraordinary had demonstrated to him a grand array of dramatic talents such as he could not forget. He knew, because he had directed her in the Max Graf production of "The Forgotten Law" and also in "Sunshine Trail" in which Douglas McLean stars. Consequently, Baby Muriel is getting her share of the camera's attention with Miss Clayton. "Now let me hear someone repeat the old intimation about it being 'inside pull' that got this girl the job." Director Horne says.

Miss Holly Back For Holly Time!

Ruth Holly has just returned to Hollywood from an extensive visit in New York and other eastern cities and after enjoying a Christmas celebration will resume her motion picture work, becoming leading lady for Monty Banks in his Federated comedies. Miss Holly says she was detained in the east much longer than she had anticipated and the main worry of her last days there was that she would be prevented from being in Hollywood Christmas. "After enjoying balmy spring weather at Yuletide in Southern California once, I find one is given twice as much impetus to avoid ever seeing another snow-bound and ice-infested Santa Claus day," she says.

The "Fighting Blood" series of the R-C studio is on its fourth production, "Two Stones With One Bird." Malcolm St. Clair is directing.

M. M. M. and Paramount Part

Mary Miles Minter and Paramount will come to the parting of ways upon the completion of her current starring vehicle, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." It is a case of fulfilling a contract with neither party thereto agreeable to a renewal, according to report. Miss Minter probably will return to the stage.

Talmadges Busy With Beauty

Norma and Constance Talmadge have had a busy week of it since returning to Hollywood from Europe last Sunday. In the first place, each has been confronted by all the intricacies of preparation for their next screen productions and in the second place, much of their time has been monopolized by their voluntary initiation into filmdom's inner portals of one Margaret Leahy, England's prize-winning beauty, whom they escorted to this country. Miss Leahy is going to have her chance on the American screen in a second-lead role in the picturization of the famous stage play, "Within the Law," in which Norma will star and the production of which will be started soon under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Meanwhile, the Talmadge sisters' legions of friends have contributed their full share towards keeping them busy via the entertaining route.

To and From oGtham

To New York.—Dave Warner with the finished print of "The Beautiful and Damned," which Wm. A. Seiter directed for Warner Brothers. All of their screen classics will be shown at the Strand theatres in New York City, Brooklyn, Albany, Schenectady and Troy.

From New York.—Katharine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell to be personal assistants to June Mathis, editorial director at Goldwyn.

Robert Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," will reach the screen via Selznick, with Corine Griffith and Conway Tearle featured. Edward J. Montagne is adapting the novel. George Archainbaud will direct.

Yeggmen a la Bonehead

It is not so easy to crack a safe with a sledge-hammer as it is to commit a murder with a hammer. Three men tried to accomplish the first-named feat on the big safe in the cashier's office at Universal City some time before daylight last Monday morning, but the best they could do was to make a few dents and make a clean getaway without enriching themselves to the extent of even one penny for luck.

Dancer Finds Film Niche

Kathryn McGuire, who appears in support of Clara Kimball Young in "The Woman of Bronze," Harry Garson's latest production, started her career as a classical dancer. While she was dancing at the Maryland Hotel in Pasadena, she was seen by Thomas H. Ince who offered her an engagement as a solo dancer in one of his productions. This engagement was followed by many other parts as a solo dancer and soon she was promoted to parts in two-reel comedies with Mack Sennett. Later she was co-featured with Ben Turpin in several pictures and more recently, has supported such stars as Gladys Walton and Priscilla Dean. Miss McGuire has the distinction of being the only feminine player in "The Silent Call."

Russia Gets Progressive

Pedagogical associations in Russia have organized a motion picture company with which they will produce educational films to be shown in public schools as part of the regular daily routine.

Started Career in "Life"

Huntley Gordon has been signed for a leading part in "Your Friend and Mine," which Sawyer-Lubin is producing for Metro. Mr. Gordon is a newcomer to the Southern California motion picture field, having started his career in New York in a "bit" part of the William Brady production, "Life." Talent, patience and hard work finally won out for this young screen actor, who is at last, a featured player.

A Fog Made to Order

In order to photograph realistic fog scenes, while filming the Cosmopolitan production of "The Face in the Fog," Mr. Kelly, chief electrician, sprayed mineral oil about the studio set with the aid of air pressure and achieved, for the first time in picture annals, an effect that photographed on the screen as a real heavy London fog.

Hoxie to Become Producer

Jack Hoxie, cowboy star, is contemplating launching his own producing unit immediately upon the completion of his current contract with Sunset Productions. Marian Sais, in private life Mrs. Hoxie, will head the scenario department as well as play leads in her husband's photoplays.

Monte Moles, London comedian, has located in Hollywood to join the motion picture colony.

Famous Comedian Defends Women In Taking Issue with Famous Artist

As a direct upshot of Penrhyn Stanlaws, the famous artist, writing some uncompimentary remarks about women in general and some moving picture stars in particular, Monty Banks, the equally famous screen comedian, has gone on the war-path in a most militant and quite potential defense of milady, both from the physical standpoint and in regard to disposition.

"Surely it is at least ungallant to criticise women for physical defects over which they have no control and it is undoubtedly unjust to blame them for not measuring up to standards fixed by mere personal opinion," Mr. Banks says. "I am afraid Mr. Stanlaws has given vent to such mere personal opinion."

That it is all wrong to point out human faults at all for the sake of publicity is the attitude taken by Mr. Banks. In the second place, he brands any attack upon the gentler sex by the so-called stronger one as sufficiently ungracious and ill-tempered as to justify heaping unlimited condemnation upon the head of anyone daring to tread upon such thin ice.

"Whenever I read any sort of an attack upon women as women, the first one I always think about is the mother," he continues. "The idea of calling any mother defective or ridiculing her for any reason is always revolting to me. I grant that even a mother of men may have her own faults, but this does not justify any man in making a football of them before the public."

In referring to Mr. Stanlaws' direct fault-finding with prominent women of the motion picture field, Mr. Banks takes the stand that ninety per cent of the points made by the artist were either trivial or unfair.

"If the physical appearances of certain women stars clash with Mr. Stanlaws' ideas of beauty from his own artistic standpoint, he need not shout it from the house-tops and he probably would not if he paused to reflect upon the fact that perhaps many of the points he considered defects might be appraised as truly admirable by others as competent to judge as he is," the comedy star adds. "I know that I don't agree with him on more than one-half of one per cent of his whole tirade, practically all of which appeals to me as 'sour grapes' and nothing more important."

By way of concluding his defense of woman, Mr. Banks waxes eulogic, declaring, without equivocation, that the fair sex is superior to the masculine one in most all points, especially beauty and freedom from physical defects.

"My main regret is that my vocabulary does not permit me to fully express my admiration and respect of womanhood in general, including the feminine luminaries of the photoplay," the comedian declares. "According to my observation, the very vast majority of women are beyond serious reproach and to even criticise them for being a little less beautiful than another is sheer carping. The average woman, whether she is pretty or almost ugly of face or form, is naturally sweet of disposition and as a rule is blessed with the sort of mentality which proves inspiring to the right kind of a man. I do not know of even one woman star of the screen who is utterly devoid of good points as I am afraid many people will infer from Mr. Stanlaws' remarks. Every star I know possesses plenty of good points, both in looks and character. Every non-professional woman I know, and, I am quite widely acquainted, will measure up to a high standard in either case, too. Say, woman is one of the greatest glories of life and I don't care what Mr. Stanlaws says to the contrary, physical attractiveness is the rule rather than the exception—likewise is goodness of character the rule, among motion picture actresses as well as among housewives. Don't let anyone—even a great artist—tell you anything different, and, if you do let them thus express themselves, make 'em prove it, something they can't do!"

New York, Dec. 12.—Leatrice Joy is doing her Christmas shopping early. She will take no chances on getting her things in Cuba, where she will be during the holidays, with the George Melford company.

"Java Head" is finished. Some of the leading members of the cast are about to leave for Hollywood, and pictures they have already been cast in.

Alice Brady and her company of Paramount players have returned to the New York studio from Miami, Florida, where they have been making exterior scenes for "The Leopardess," adapted from Katherine Newlin Burt's novel of that name.

D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night"

What the Camera Sees and Does

The camera is the mystic instrument of perception, for it alone has 10,000 eyes which no living creature possesses. There is no visible object which it does not dissect from all angles. It actually records and transmits visible motion which is too quick for the vision of the eye, and it absorbs more than the naked eye could discern upon close study. It not only follows the heroes indoors and out, into lonely places or crowded streets, into peaceful privacy or public broil, but it carries with it the picturesque environments in which the characters maneuver. The reading of a book, no matter how interesting, merely unfolds the story, and a person with a scant degree of imaginative power does not combine the atmosphere or location about which the story is wound, hence the forcible impression of the author does not always impress the mind of the reader to the extreme. The camera combines all requisites and compactly unfolds a story so you can see it. It detects every minute detail, as, for example, when a pebble is thrown into a pool a number of circular ripples immediately take form, and, expanding in rings, finally flatten out and lose themselves in the still surface of the pool. The eye is pleased by these expanding ripples and by the endless multiplication of rings which rise mysteriously from the point where the pebble went down. Without the aid of the camera we would fail to appreciate these little points in nature.

The camera is the baton of sorcery; it performs tricks, it appeals to our sense of wonder, it stirs and quiets our emotions, it taxes our judgment, and it stimulates our imagination.

The camera serves as a conveyance in carrying the spectator with it to follow the characters and share their experiences wherever they go, and yet does not distract attention from the principal in the story.

It detects and records a much larger scope than the naked eye, and depicts what the spectator desires at a three-ring circus, namely, to absorb it all with one focus, which is impossible with the naked eye. The camera accomplishes this and reconveys it like a slowly-moving snapshot.

The laws of nature can be upset by the magical wonder of the camera, as brooks may be shown flowing merrily up-hill; people may be shown sitting down to dinner with their feet on the ceilings partaking of their meal, quite unaware that they are living upside down; a man may jump to the top of a high tower, or he may be flattened as thin as paper by a steam roller, only to rise again into erect plumpness and saunter away; a flower may mature into full bloom within a few minutes, and, in a blink of the eye, the flower may return to its original state; in fact, the camera is a wizard as a sorcerer.

"Church of the Healing Christ, and The Progressive Synagogue." The congregations attended in a body. The Theatre Club is attending the Thursday matinee, and the Century Theatre Club will follow suit later.

The dressing rooms in Keith's theatre, Cleveland, are named after prominent cities, thus enabling an artist to make up in New York, pass Los Angeles enroute, and appear ten minutes later in Cleveland.

Richard Barthelmess will star in the "Bright Shawl," another Hergeshimer story. The screen star will spend the next few

Within Filmland's Interesting Inner Portals

The big sensation of the week just ended so far as Filmland is concerned—Will Hays! The reason: he announced a marvelous plan for suddenly transforming Hollywood, the film capitol, into a great city of parks, amphitheatres and incomparable architecture as if by magic, and, he set foot right on the ground with a vim and energy quite significant, having arrived from New York in some haste, it seems. The sensation co-incident to his announcement had not even begun to subside when George Rigas, the famous Grecian actor and persistent exponent of the doctrine of reincarnation, came forward with the statement that the prospect of Will Hays working such wonders in converting this same Hollywood into a great city of unending marvels constitutes positive proof of his theory that this center of the cinema art is ancient Greece in its heyday of artistic triumphs and that all the leaders in the various fields of art now residing there are simply Socrates, Euripides, Democritus and a few other notables of yore back on earth again, continuing the very same work they started those many centuries ago. "And, you can depend on it, they are going to even excel their achievements of the past both in all the fine arts and city-building," Mr. Rigas says. "The name Will Hays is merely Caesar's modern 'phrase of identity' and this executive's methods are easily recognizable as of the original conception of his own ancient self." Ah, but—pshaw! it's too much brain work to try to figure out an argument against all this!

Dame Rumor and Danny Cupid have gone in cahoots to keep the tongues of Hollywood wags wagging. The Dame has gone to such an extreme as to cause it to be rumored that even screen celebrities who still have legal help-mates are about to wed again. Meanwhile Cupid seems to be having a lot of trouble accomplishing what Rumor predicts so confidently. Wallace Beery has just been married to a Texas girl, according to Rumor, but Beery denies it most emphatically. Only a week before he was announced as "all set" to wed a Kansas girl. "I think I'll wait and see what Arkansas has to offer before making any final decision," he says. For a while during the current week it looked as if Ora Carew was about to marry three different candidates for her favor. Of course such an absurd procedure was quite impossible under the law and hence the popular actress took pains to correct the impression to the extent of announcing that she might become the wife of one millionaire. And sure enough, she did face the clergyman with John C. Howard, son of the multi-millionaire salad dressing manufacturer of Haverhill, Mass. Mitchell Ingraham, actor, became the husband of Miss Grace McEllece of Prescott, Arizona. This came as the happy fruition of a romance started twenty years ago when both were children. Outside of these two cases, Cupid has been totally unable to keep up with Dame Rumor. Among those involved in reports of prospective nuptials and who entered denials were such leading lights as Charlie Chaplin, who, according to an alleged remark of Pola Negri, will wait a long time if he waits for her. "Do you know what I think all of this avalanche of rumors means?" asked Alan Hale, one of the screen's most popular actors. Nobody could answer, so he did. "I think it means that the foolish Dame Rumor is trying to persuade the kind-hearted Dan Cupid to lead the human race into the ways of polygamy," he said.

Muriel Frances Dana, the wonder child who was heralded as a true cinema star while she was still in her third year of life and who is only four now, will be a veritable sensation in "The Greater Glory," now being filmed at the Robertson-Cole Studios and in which Ethel Clayton has the stellar role. In the original story the child's part was comparatively small, but, according to report, little Muriel displayed so much adaptability to the character that Director Jimmie Horne, with the full approval of Miss Clayton, built it up until it is second in importance to only the star's characterization. The reason for citing this instance is that it offers one more proof of there being plenty of room on the motion picture screen for juvenile artists who are really talented. Jackie Coogan and Baby Peggy are two other notable examples.

Upon arriving at Yuma, Arizona, with May McAvoy and the other members of the company of players appearing in Thomas H. Ince's latest special production, Lloyd Hughes had the thrill of feeling like a Sherlock Holmes for a few minutes. At the railroad station he discovered a woman hiding behind a pile of freight on the platform. The actor thought he recognized the face of the woman as being none other than Clara Phillips, the convicted murderess who had escaped from the Los Angeles jail. In unabated excitement he notified the station agent, who ran out to take a look at the mysterious one. However, one look constituted a disillusionment for Hughes, because the agent recognized the woman as the wife of a section boss and he informed the actor that she often secreted herself around the station to watch her spouse, who had a weakness for flirting with incoming damsels.

There was a private pre-view showing of B. P. Schulberg's production of "The Hero," recently completed under the direction of Gasnier. It was the consensus of opinion that this feature is the best ever made under the Schulberg banner and that it would serve to bring recognition of the truly stellar proportions of the dramatic ability of Gaston Glass, who plays the title role. "I think all doubts as to Mr. Glass being an inspired actor will be dispelled when this picture is released," declared one famous director who was invited to pass judgment on it. Producer Schulberg demonstrated the impression the popular romantic actor made on him in "The Hero" by re-engaging him to play the hero in "The Girl Who Came Back," now in the course of production at the Mayer-Schulberg Studios.

Helen Kesler, who is now playing an important part in Rupert Hughes' picture version of "Souls For Sale," is the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer, and she does not have to display her histrionic talents for a livelihood, but she is a striking example of the model young woman of today. "Every girl, despite any affluence her father may boast, owes it to herself and posterity to become independent as early as possible by earning her own way," Miss Kesler declares. "The day of woman's utter dependence upon man has passed and I think it shows even an increased respect for the parents for a girl to cleave her own course at her own expense." It would be interesting to know the argument the old-fashioned girl, the girl of a couple of generations ago, would offer to combat this ultra-modern opinion.

Monty Banks is threatened with more work soon. His comedies are proving so popular with Federated exchanges that he has been asked to make two a month instead of only one. However, Monty says he entertains marked fears lest he would automatically drop his standard down a little in attempting to turn out fun films so rapidly and therefore he is demurring with all of his might. His latest comedy to be completed is entitled "Six A. M."

David Torrence, the never-to-be-forgotten Elias Graves in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country," is back at Universal City again, interpreting an important role in his third-in-a-row U feature. Mr. Torrence is one of the most sterling actors the screen has acquired from the stage for some time. Besides he is a gentleman and a scholar and—we don't know whether he is a good judge of whiskey or not. We do know he never imbibes.

When the roll was called in a recent beauty contest conducted merely as an entertaining feature of a certain social set of Hollywood, Dorothy Manners had first honors as the most comely among brunettes. But the judges could not decide who was the most attractive blonde in the film capitol. As a result they compromised by placing on record the decision that Miss Manners was "the most all-round beautiful girl entered in the test."

Truman Van Dyke is looking for his dog, too. It disappeared from his Hollywood home this week. It is a white bull-dog with a distinguished family tree. One of Alan Hale's costly police dogs also vanished in the port of missing canines. Sid Smith, the comedian, still has one dog missing from his extensive kennels. And, Mary Miles Minter is loser one dog. Apparently this situation has all the ear-marks (or is it dog-marks) of an epidemic of dog-stealing. Van Dyke, like the others, offers a generous reward for the return of his pet.

If present prospects indicate anything, they indicate that Murray Spencer, former Yale man and known in college circles as "Handsome Harry," is headed straight for exceptional prominence in the cinema limelight. Two noted directors have, within the current week, offered to "take this recruit under their wings for careful developing." Murray hasn't decided which kind offer he will accept, but in either case he will get a two-year contract, something entirely unusual in the case of a newcomer in the ranks of photoplayers, ranks always so well filled with well-equipped aspirants.

Billie Lord, the four-year-old Tennessee boy who won first prize in the Los Angeles Express baby contest and who made his debut in pictures several months ago, has just completed enacting a juvenile role in "Vanity Fair" at the Goldwyn studios. It was a small part, but it called for big emotions—tears big enough to be seen at the right moment—and, according to report, Billie accomplished the feat like a veteran.

Pauline Toler has been engaged to appear in Rupert Hughes' "Souls For Sale," beginning when the company returns from location at Palm Springs. This will be the second Hughes picture in which Miss Toler has played, the other one being "The Bitterness of Sweets."

It is not likely that Max Linder will return to Hollywood to make his next feature comedy after all. According to the latest reports, he is still in Paris and has completed all arrangements for making a production there.

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, Dec. 12.—The Producers' association of San Francisco, out to get the "fake" companies, and the schools here, consists of the following companies: Belasco, Fisher, Gerson, Golden Gate, Northern California Photoplays, Inc., and the West Coast Films corporation.

The Motion Picture Utility corporation has moved its offices from the Chronicle Building to the Gillette Building, 830 Market Street.

Anna Q. Nilsson is spending a few days in San Francisco.

George Fitzmaurice arrived in the city yesterday and joined his wife at the St. Francis.

Dug Pollard is planning to start Pollard City on the outskirts of Oakland, as the home of the Pollard comedies.

May Allison was in San Francisco for the week-end.

Creighton Hale was awarded $1500 by the court for his script used in "Simple Simon Simpkins," his salary as leading man, and in behalf of Frederick Thompson, director, and Louis Morrison, actor, who joined with him in the suit.

AGNES KERR CRAWFORD.

Attention Santa Claus

This being the time of the year when it is an unusual p.a. who does not make known the Christmas longings of these artists immediately within his realm, the following wants are listed in Santa's order book:

Rowland V. Lee, who has completed direction of "Alice Adams," wants a world that isn't so fast. No, no, he isn't seeking to launch another reform. He wants the world to move less rapidly around the sun. This will give more hours to the day, thereby contributing more hours in which Lee may work.

Johnny Jones wants a radio set which will receive messages "clear 'round the world."

Andre Peyre, aviatrix and Pathe player, wants an auto-aeroplane—one which will travel on downtown streets as well as in the city.

Shannon Day wants a discontinuation of parties which demand that she dance on the greensward in winter.

can handle them by boosting my admission price; but my customers can't stand that as a steady diet. I got to do a Ford business—quantity and good quality. I ain't trying to discourage you like you claim. Make me a price of seven-fifty which I know I can come out on, and I'll encourage you by buying all the pictures you got, because I believe they're good pictures—better than the other fellers'. Did you ever work in a studio? No! That's where you should begin fighting for that two dollars and a half you been arguin' with me about for the last two hours. If all them fellers out there would know how you're sweatin' for this extra two-fifty and remembered it every minute they was on the job, you wouldn't have to sweat—and we'd be better friends. They wouldn't have to make them faster or on a cheaper scale, but just watch those two-fifties and the cost sheets would take care of themselves."

The energetic young salesman extended his hand, smiling. "Good bye, Mr. Kipp," he said genially, "You're on the level, and if you can't buy my pictures on a live-and-let-live-basis, I don't want you to buy them at all. The firm I represent works on that principle. Just the same, I'm afraid you are losing sight of the fact that if you want silk it's poor policy to compromise on calico for a little less, especially when you're buying it to re-sell to customers who crave silk. That method isn't going to build up your town. I hate to lose out in Podunk on account of two dollars and a half, but—"

"You don't have to," interrupted Kipp. "but the only reason I'm gonna pay your price is because I always got my money's worth and a square deal from your people and I figure they are pretty darn sure these pictures are gonna pull more people into my show or they wouldn't hold out for that other two-fifty."

Fiber Kipp adjusted his gold-rimmed specs and signed on the dotted line indicated by the energetic young salesman. Fiber Kipp wrote laboriously, but there was nothing wrong with his showmanship or his merchandising education.

"Now," he said finally, as he handed over the signed contract, "you've gotten your price, and I'll most likely come out all right on it, too. But if the fellers who had a hand in makin' these pictures kept a little closer watch on those two-fifties your boss would be able to pay them a little better for makin' them and still let you sell 'em at my price."

The energetic young salesman pocketed the contract. Of course, his job was selling, and he had simply put in three hours stiff work fighting for that other two-fifty.

ART IS SECOND NATURE

most loyally, there having been no major changes in the personnel.

"We hear a great deal about the general subject of woman's place in business," Mrs. Pickford continues. "I think woman's place is exactly what she works to make it. There can be no doubt as to the possibility of woman being just as efficient in the conduct of business affairs as man nor do I hold that she has any especially superior advantages by nature. Of course, I realize there still remains a certain group of opponents to the so-called woman's suffrage, but I am sure there is no real animosity between sexes in their amicable striving for success in the business world. There is room for everybody in most any sphere in this big world and there is no reason for any jealous strife."

Mrs. Pickford is an exceedingly broad-minded, far-seeing woman of marked executive ability. She is unerringly considerate of the comfort and welfare of her every employe. It is her nature to be considerate, but she wisely makes this consideration a part of her system in business. The net result is, a quite general agreement among those who know best that Mary Pickford, the favorite star of millions of people all over this mundane sphere, has the best business manager in the film industry.

"I know I am very fortunate to have such a mother and had it not been for her I would have never had the opportunity to concentrate my mind so completely upon dramatic art, for I would have been forced to worry over the countless details of the business side of it all," Miss Pickford says. "Thanks to her, I have never had to develop as my first nature a business instinct and I have been given the greatest freedom to give vent to the impulses of my second nature, which is all of and for art."

Verily, what a boon is a systematic mother! Is not her methodical management the very keystone to the American home, the bulwark of our nation?

life the ancient and romantic Persian poet and philosopher, who fairly breathes again through the characterization delivered by Guy Bates Post as Omar Khayyam." No critic has "panned" this picture and it seems certain it will tend to further ingratiate the screen with the better classes of people who still hold aloof from it because of a conviction that photoplays, as a general rule, are too unworthy of intelligent attention. We do not agree with these "better classes," but this does not remove the fact that they do exist and need to be won over to the cinema as the great art it is in reality and the greater art it is sure to be in the early future.

and it is his belief that the "founders from Central Europe will be forced out of their high positions." He adds, "The days of alien domination of the American motion picture industry are numbered and nobody knows it better than the illiterate but crafty 'magnates' who are in control at the present time.

"When this change comes about there will be less of the 'favoritism' than now exists throughout the production end of the industry. Naturally, in any business in which beautiful women are employed there are bound to be instances of favoritism. But the number of untalented and entirely superfluous young women who are foisted on the public today will be considerably lessened."

Christmas Greetings and Last-of-the-year Afterthoughts

Cinema Christmas! The new order of things de film justifies the change in salutations. There are too many wonderfully new developments in the affairs of mankind to be trite about anything any more; there are certainly plenty of causes to rejoice over the momentous progress the Motion Picture Industry is about to make in several highly desirable directions, for glories approaching innovations seem to be the lot of this newest of the arts, this art which bids so fair to become the great medium for expressing American ideals in art. There is reason for film folks to regale themselves in the Yuletide joys with augmented zeal, because a contemplation of the future possibilities of the screen will resuscitate even the most confirmed victim of the lassitude born of trying uncertainties, which have beset all filmdom ever since this nation was plunged into the World War. It is that the Reconstruction Period has reached the point from which victory can be sighted. True, the complete elimination of woes is not yet at hand nor will it ever come, but all's better than 'twas and it's a pretty fine little mundane sphere we're treading on anyway.

The banner age for civilization seems on the verge of dawning. Fittingly may we felicitate therefore; decisively can we demonstrate our faith in the rejuvenation of the brotherhood of man despite the inexplicable difficulty with which Europe is struggling to get out of the shadows of more war clouds. We can regard our recent sacrifices and privations in the light of useful service to posterity—we can have the satisfaction of knowing the Christmas spirit shall ever glow brighter and its blessings shall increase with the roll of time. We can relegate world problems and domestic politics for the nonce and concentrate all our energies on making this Holiday Season the joy-infusing climax of a series of stupendous events and transitions not the least of which is the actual uplift in the quality of motion pictures to the extent of inspiring President Harding to write his commendations.

In such a tempestuous era as the last eight years has been, the whole minds of men and women were needed for a concerted action against the onslaughts of ruthless and volatile enemies to peaceful settlements of disputes. However, now that those times have gone down the halls of time amidst the din of cannons' roar, it is high time to make even a bigger noise in behalf of tranquil progress in all lines of endeavor. The screen can contribute prodigiously to this cause by supplying more photoplays with object lessons against all forms of disagreements among mortals. One of the psychological effects of war was to stifle the usual hopes of human beings. The natural life was so seriously disturbed that it became little more than a panic. Horror entered into most every calculation—it filled the air. But now on this Christmas of 1922 all that has ceased to wield its baneful influence over mankind. For this blessing alone, everyone owes unstinted gratitude.

In the midst of all the desert-like situations, such as the present expose of the alarming growth of the drug 'evil for instance, there is always an oasis—Eternal Hope—hope that ere another twelve-month rolls around one more scourge to society will have been vanquished from the face of the earth. Incidentally, all people in and out of the film industry should do more than hope for such beneficial results—each individual owes it to the world to do anything within his or her power to aid in the great campaign to remove the curse of narcotics.

This gift season finds the Motion Picture Industry giving to the world much better products than it did a year ago. So long as improvement obtains, the cinema art is sure of getting somewhere at the top with other forms of artistic expression.

It might not be amiss to suggest that a ban be placed on New Year's resolutions since it is the age when everything should mean something.

If the average kiddie knew who Santa Claus is in reality, old dad would have longer lists of wants to read!

With the holiday rush over, many a pocket-book will be found deep under.

Christmas Greetings to All Hollywood

Filmland Arises in Its Might to Obliterate the Drug Evil

Wallace Reid's Case Inspires a Battle-cry Presaging Remarkably Effective Campaign of Nation-wide Scope Against Narcotic Vendors.

THE greatest war ever recorded in history against a bane to mortal pursuit of happiness has been declared against the drug evil, and, the motion picture industry has done the declaring without a single reservation, enlisting in its army a grand array of constituted authorities and enforcers of the law from coast to coast and from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico.

The divulging of the pitiable condition of Wallace Reid, one of the screen's foremost actors, as a result of his being addicted to morphine, has served to arouse the populace of not only all Filmland, but of all Los Angeles in particular, and the United States in general.

It is time to act and not to dilly-dally with delaying probes since most anybody can point out many drug-peddlers who have the audacity to mingle with their fellow-man in incessant efforts to increase their patronage. It is time to act, not merely among the actual peddlers of the death-dealing wares, but among the higher-ups, who have become wealthy and plutocratic as a "reward" for being able to manipulate to keep the vendors supplied with stocks. Among these higher-ups are probably some well-known politicians of influence. Position should not be permitted to aid them one iota and the maximum penalty of the law must be imposed upon them first of all if true justice is to be meted out and the human race is to be saved from the degradation of sinking in the depths of such a dangerous and distressing habit.

All this is the consensus of opinion among the sincere advocates of the sweeping process of total obliteration which has now been set in motion and it is urged that there be perpetuated such a public clamor for the incarceration of every man and woman participating in any way in the distribution of drugs for unlawful use that no official will have the least opportunity of relaxing in his efforts to rid society of the scourge.

Startling evidence just revealed in various cities proves that the drug evil is not concentrated in the one spot occupied by motion picture people as a portion of the press seems prone to have inferred. Chicago, for instance, is in the throes of the worst epidemic of vicious drug-using ever recorded in its annals while St. Louis seems to be second in point of excessive suffering. New York and Atlantic City are among the most fertile fields for unscrupulous dealers in narcotics. However, Los Angeles is invaded to a complete sufficiency and it is the time to face the facts bravely and openly. It is the time to face these facts with the one idea of removing their cause by resorting to the most extreme tactics. It is possibly inevitable that certain rich men, living in fine homes and having fine families, will fall eventually as a result of all this, but it will be a disgrace they have brought onto themselves by their own avarice which led them to accumulate money at the cost of the morale of fellow-beings.

Will H. Hays, as the titular head of the major portion of the Motion Picture Industry, has taken the initiative most courageously in issuing the call to arms and before departing from Los Angeles last Wednesday he issued sweeping orders to bring into action every force within this great industry to rid itself of the intolerable conditions wrought by the criminal element bent on the acquisition of some of the so-called "big money" picture people earn. If the jails of this community are not filled with drug suspects within the next ten days, there is something seriously wrong with the local police department and it will behoove the motion picture industry to engage all of the successful detective agencies to co-operate in rounding up all those involved in the spreading of the drug habit. Obviously it would be sheer fallacy to confine this rounding up to the underworld only since the higher-ups, the real cause of the detrimental effect, reside in the most exclusive residential districts.

The city of Los Angeles has joined this relentless war on the dope octopus with a zeal which promises much. Chief of Police Louis D. Oaks pledges himself and all of his aides to a battle royal to rout all traffickers in an effort to break the grip of narcotics. One of Chief Oaks' first moves was to appear before the Police Commission and urgently request an increase of $10,000 in the police secret service fund with which to combat the situation. The Police Commission promptly recommended that the City Council appropriate the money. Chief Oaks says:

"The increase of drug addicts is alarming. Some indication of the seriousness of the matter can be found in the daily press and statistics gathered by members of this department, assisted by the agents of the State Board of Pharmacy and the Federal narcotic squad, show a steady increase of narcotic users."

Camera! joins the campaign with the suggestion that every man and woman in all

"Fatty" Arbuckle Becomes a Target Again

When Will H. Hays gave Roscoe ((Fatty) Arbuckle a pardon as a Christmas gift, he also gave countless people throughout the nation a shock and likewise something more to fight over.

Storms of protests, tempests of denunciations and hurricanes of drastic resolutions have followed in the wake of the news of the fat comedian being given official sanction in his ambition to return to his cinema activities.

Clergymen and club women seem prone to vie with each other in arousing hornets' nests of opposition to the proposed reinstatement of this principal in an unsavory tragedy of the recent past. City officials and state censors have also leaped into the limelight to shake menacing fists at Fatty, Willie and all others who would dare give the deposed king of laugh-makers a chance to rehabilitate his fame and fortune.

So concerned has the whole populace become that straw votes are being polled in various cities and thus far these results show that Fatty fares about fifty-fifty so far as the public esteem goes.

Over night Arbuckle has become a national issue and a stormy petrel. Within another week he will have been established as the most popular target for unrestrained verbal shots and broadsides the screen has ever produced. Then there will be a critical upshot that will come with the attempt at releasing his first come-back picture, probably one of the several which reposes on Paramount shelves.

Editorially newspapers manifest an avidity in "panning" the rotund comedian. An example of this is Fred J. Wilson's journalistic bombardment in the Hollywood Daily News. This editor was so unsparing in his arraignment that "he took the hide off" of every argument which could possibly be given in defense of the fat fun-maker—just now more of a trouble-maker.

Jesse L. Lasky and Joseph M. Schenck are among the film magnates who have expressed confidence in Arbuckle deserving this opportunity to return to the good graces of the photoplay-loving world.

Meanwhile Fatty is openly jubilant in his search for a suitable story with which to start his well-known clowning before the cameras. He seems supremely confident of his ability to overcome most any obstacles and Mr. Schenck, who is to be his employer again, does not give any hints of his doubting the soundness of a further investment in the man on whom he has staked millions already.

Every indication points to an unusual situation arising. Since various states and cities have the legal right to choose their screen fare, it is certain that while one city or state may permit the exhibiting of Arbuckle films, an adjacent city or state will bar them most sternly. Chicago, the hot-bed of advocates of personal liberty, will probably allow Fatty to cavort on the screens within its city limits. But Detroit officials have been most prompt in announcing a decision adverse to that of Mr. Hays and hence there will be none of the Arbuckle antics shown there.

Thus goes a digest of the situation created by the latest motion picture thriller. Inevitably the big question which arises of its own volition and devoid of any mortal prejudices is:

Could any man come back when there are so many forces determined to hold him back?

Is the comparative importance of the great motion picture industry and the fat Roscoe Arbuckle entangled in a dangerous skein out of which it eventually might be as difficult to extricate the former as the latter if the two battled side-by-side too much like pals?

Verily, the Arbuckle question is the most prolific instigator of other questions the cinema has had in many a moon. And, every question involves a point of tremendously far-reaching importance, because underlying the whole situation are basic principles and fundamental intricacies galore.

What are the answers?

How Will a Matinee Idol of Athens Fare in America?

Will the matinee idol of Athens become a matinee idol of America? This is the question George Rigas, popular Grecian star, is in Hollywood to answer. He modestly refuses to advance any opinions as to the possibility of his duplicating on the American screen any of his personal triumphs on the Grecian stage, but he is "on the job" to have the acid test. The many people who know Mr. Rigas have little idea of his ability and versatility because as is typical of his race he is reluctant to refer to himself or his achievements. It will be therefore a surprise to these legions of friends to know that Mr. Rigas is the author of the two best novels printed in the Greek language during the last decade. He is also a playwright with at least a half dozen dramatic successes to his credit. But his interest centers in his histrionic work and he earnestly aspires to ascertain whether or not the standards by which Greek play-goers measure their stage favorites can be compared to the manner of estimate of American audiences.

When Mr. Rigas came to the United States about three years ago, he had his mind set on making this test within the confines of the proscenium circle and he made his debut at the Madison

George Rigas, erstwhile Matinee Idol of Athens, now in American motion pictures.

Square Garden in New York as Romeo in a Grecian version of "Romeo and Juliet." It proved to be an auspicious start, because this presentation enjoyed a long, prosperous run.

Then the lure of motion pictures exerted its influence. It was none other than Mary Pickford who offered the young romantic actor a favorable opportunity to try interpreting the silent drama and in his first effort—in an important part in Miss Pickford's "The Love Light"—he was a success. Ever since he has been pursuing the cinema art with all the might of an assiduous and unrelenting study. He has appeared in more than a dozen important photo-plays since he made his advent into the new field and now he is making active preparations to enter the producing branch of it with the idea of offering the American public film versions of his own fictitious works.

It is his plan to play leading roles in these pictures, but to surround himself with all-star casts of the first magnitude. However, he will play in at least three other productions before launching this venture and it is rumored he is being considered for one of the most important roles in the elaborate picture version of "Ben Hur" A. L. Erlanger is to make.

Radiophone Becomes Boon to Film-making Industry

The world do move! And, the film world do, too!

It was once considered marvelous to be able to send a human voice over a wire. Now the wire is no longer needed!

Verily, evolution surges forward, revolutionizing everything in its pathway, and, the film-making industry is occupying the very center of that pathway.

The success of the newly invented radiophone as a practical utility marks one of the highest crests of this great wave of progress which bids fair to place the Twentieth Century far ahead of the fore-ranks as an age for ameliorating humanity's condition with the aid of mechanical wonders.

While most people thus far have embraced the innovation of being able to send and receive vocal communications through the radiophone with a zest such as would become youth and there is a general tendency to regard it as a plaything, the film folk have been prompt to press it into very useful service, recognizing in it a veritable boon, much needed and very welcome.

At the beginning, when the game of making moving pictures was largely an experiment, producers depended on the medieval courier system of communication—it was the day of the office boy and the messenger boy, and, upon his fleetness of foot and efficiency of brain the man with the investment at stake had to rely absolutely. If an executive member of the office force wished to confer with the director "out on the lot," he sent a boy to summon him orally.

Contingencies and exigencies soon made it imperative to improve this method and the subsequent installation of telephone wires followed, making it possible to dispense with the services of the courier. Every nook and corner of the studios and surrounding grounds were thus connected up with the office of the producer and he had but to pick up the phone on his desk to quickly reach anyone of his field staff to whom he desired to issue an order. But, while this constituted a great saving of time, it did not suffice, for the wire telephone never did meet all the demands of the film-making industry.

When companies were sent "on location," to remote sections of the country where there were no telephone wires, the matter of headquarters keeping "in touch" with the daily and hourly situations was beyond the pale of possibility. Consequently, many big losses were sustained for the lack of co-ordinated effort between the home and field forces. In view of the fact that any one company never remained at one of these obscure spots long enough to make it financially wise to go to the expense of building a telephone line to its center of activity, the motor car had to be depended on as the only means of exchanging messages.

Now comes the radiophone, with its summary elimination of the necessity for using wires when there is so much sound-conducting ozone to be had for the asking! And, the radiophone is the very instrument motion picture producers have been waiting for. Hence they were not slow in adopting it, because already it is in quite common use in most of the larger studios of Los Angeles, Hollywood and Culver City. Among the first of these bigger concerns to install this wireless telephone system was the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios to which it came at a most propitious moment, right in the midst of two exceedingly large productions. Forsooth, the problems confronting both Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, in their latest picture activities, could not have been solved satisfactorily without the radiophone.

For instance, Miss Pickford, in filming an elaborate revival of her great screen success of nine years ago, "Tess of the Storm Country," found it necessary to go to Chatsworth Lake for a suitable site on which to build the old fisherman's village which plays such an important part as a locale in Grace Miller White's masterly story. Chatsworth Lake happens to be fully thirty miles from the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios in Hollywood, and, because of the very extensive business interests outside of her own individual histrionic efforts, it is indispensable that this noted star be able to communicate with her business offices at the studio at any moment or that her associates may reach her quickly. The radiophone made it possible for Miss Pickford to attend to her numerous other business affairs, requiring attention at her office, while she enacted the character of Tess those thirty miles away.

In the case of Douglas Fairbanks, he found the radiophone equally as essential to the proper management of the herculean efforts demanded in the picturizing of his version of "Robin Hood," a production in

Genius for Reviving Romance Brings Star Long-term Contract

Because of the fact that Gaston Glass has won world-wide recognition as one of the most impressive and influential exponents of romantic drama on the motion picture screen and feeling that his histrionic methods of blazing the trail which will lead eventually away from the ultra-modern habit of mankind to regard human love in a light too base are worthy of the most advantageous dissemination, B. P. Schulberg, the noted photoplay producer, has signed this sterling actor to a contract for a term of years and announces important plans for featuring him in a series of romantic dramas calculated to contribute extensively to arousing humanity to the vital importance of returning to a regard for heart affairs comparable to the wholesome old-fashioned notion.

Mr. Glass convinced Mr. Schulberg that he is an inspired actor possessing rare genius for romancing usefully in his portrayal of the title role of "The Hero," recently completed and the latter confidently predicts this picture will serve a very laudable purpose in setting a worthy example as to how a true lover should love.

As an interpreter of various romantic roles, Mr. Glass has established himself as

One of the Famous Gaston Glass Screen Embraces. Alice Lake is the Embraced one.

Mr. Glass as the Hero and the Rose." in "The Spider both original and different. He depends upon his natural dramatic ability and instinctive inspirations while others may depend upon good looks or sex appeal. He is one of the most skilled of all actors in the difficult art of making his mental processes explicit to audiences despite the handicap of being held to certain limits by the silence of the drama in which he distinguishes himself.

The terms of this new contract are already in force and Mr. Glass is in the midst of a second Schulberg picture, "The Girl Who Came Back," an adaptation of Charles E. Blaney's stage play by that title.

As a Schulberg featured player, Mr. Glass will be surrounded by all-star casts.

During the past year this popular screen favorite has played leading heroic parts in a half dozen notable pictures, three of which have not been released as yet. This promising trio of forthcoming silversheet events are: "The Hero," Bennie Zeidman's film version of "The Spider and the Rose" and Rupert Hughes' "Gimme." In the first named picture, Barbara LaMarr played opposite Mr. Glass while Alice Lake occupied this position in the Zeidman production and Helene Chadwick acted in the same capacity in "Gimme."

The Mysticism of Geneology

Before Douglas Fairbanks had been portraying the stellar role in the filming of his elaborate version of "Robin Hood" two weeks, it was discovered that he possessed an almost uncanny ability for "sensing" how the people of eight hundred years ago acted. During the very initial "shooting" he started interpolating little mannerisms upon the impulse of the moment and invariably he would be corrected by the director, but Doug was so cock-sure he should follow his own conception because it impressed him as right that he would insist upon consulting the mass of data gleaned from history by his research experts, and, every time it was found he had instinctively hit upon an idea justified by a historical fact.

After there had been a half a dozen instances of this sort, some wise-acre of the "lot" of many acres ventured the theory that Doug was proving himself to be "a man of infinite wizardries." When this famous star had repeated his feats of knowing how they did things back in the Twelfth Century without any personal reference work and he proved to be correct without exception, it started to become truly uncanny.

"How do you know all these little details?" he was asked finally.

"I don't know how I happen to know 'em," Doug replied. "I guess I don't really know these things to be facts, but I find myself having strong, irresistible hunches and I can't get away from them. Luckily so far, they happen to be good hunches."

But the ever-present investigator—species more commonly known as "news hound"—was not satisfied with this explanation. Hence there followed some very thorough-going work in the nature of prying into the inner portals of mysticisms in a zealous quest for the cause of effect! And, there came to pass a most interesting discovery, which at least clears away a part of the mystery of this strange power for knowing that which it could not be expected of any man to know without special study.

That discovery is—genealogy may be the cause of Doug's remarkable faculty for knowing so much about knights and things of so many centuries ago. While it has never been a secret, very few people know Douglas Fairbanks is a descendant of the Earl of Nottingham. His great grandfather, Robert Finch, was a direct descendant of this Earl through the latter's second son.

"It is a heritage, a very close mental sympathy with forefathers, a sympathy that enlightens through feeling rather than actual knowledge of the historical facts involved," was the conclusion of the investigator.

It all seems plausible enough, but there is a deep occult science entering into the proposition not the least of which has to do with mental acrobatics as they may obtain in leaping back to a period eight centuries ago. A modern mind attuned keenly sympathetic to the life trials and tribulations of those so long gone from earth offers a wide field for assiduous study.

American Film Increasing Its World-wide Supremacy

The American distributor will be pre-eminent in the film affairs of Europe before long.

Low salaried actors will not wrest from America the palm for premier productivity so eagerly sought by European picture producers.

American sales and exploitation methods are forcing ultra-conservative booking concerns of Great Britain to the wall.

Years of accumulation of picture-making material and the establishment of perfect synchrony in the workings of units necessary to the production of a motion picture will safeguard Hollywood's claim to photoplay-making premiership for many years to come regardless of its climatic advantages.

These terse and telling phrases epitomize the message brought by P. A. Powers, famous film magnate, on his regular bi-annual visit to Los Angeles in connection with local film interests.

Mr. Powers, who is president of the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., a great motion picture distributing concern of New York, of which the local Powers studios, formerly known as Robertson-Cole, are a creative unit, arrived in Los Angeles almost directly from Europe, where he had gone to investigate expansion possibilities for his concern.

"The ventures of American producers in European productions have resulted in nothing but failures," he says. "They have gone there with the idea that it was necessary simply to make pictures abroad, where actors could be hired more cheaply, in order to supply the American market with productions at a price to compete with the foreign producers. They soon learned that the lack of proper facilities in Europe more than offset any advantages gained by low salaries. They found the lack of a supply of trained motion picture artists, as available in the United States, a costly barrier to speedy production. The time spent in inducting the European stage actor into the secrets of acting before the camera added materially to the cost of production and offset any advantage in cheaper salaries."

Mr. Powers sees in the invasion of American film methods in Great Britain striking evidence of the Americanization of the film industry in Europe generally. All the foremost American film concerns now have distributing offices in London, with widely ramifying branches throughout the Kingdom, he found. The establishment of these sales organizations, he says, has resulted practically in the elimination of the British renter, who for the most part, having bought his pictures in bulk and stored them against a year's prospective bookings, finds he cannot compete either in quality or in quantity with the ready sale that can be had with American productions freshly imported and booked almost simultaneously with their release in America. Where pictures released in the British way by the British in the past have often gone unnoticed on the part of the public generally, with minimum receipts resulting, the special exploitation invoked in behalf of the American-made pictures exhibited in the American manner in Europe have safeguarded American producers and distributors in Europe against any such financial hazards.

"The British renter, therefore," says Mr. Powers, "with accumulations of bookings made from a year to a year and a half in advance, is bound to suffer heavy losses and in time will be unable to survive in the face of the terrific competition from the American distributor. The result will be that the American producer, controlling the distribution of films in Europe, will also control the production of European pictures or the sale of such pictures to the European exhibitors."

"This trend of affairs apparently has not been taken seriously by the European producer and renter, and I feel it is now too late for them to halt the invasion of American film methods."

"While this condition is more apparent in Great Britain than on the Continent, it is a question of only a short time when it will be impossible for a European producer to make a picture and market it in Europe through an American distributing organization."

Mr. Powers sees little or no commercial future for the European-made picture. Whatever superior talent Europe may develop, America is bound to usurp because of its ability to offer exceptional inducements for the migration of such talent to our shores.

"The American producer has always the price and can afford to pay for anything that is discovered or developed in the way of unique or exceptional ability," said Mr. Powers. "This is apparent from the fact that the outstanding director of Europe and the artist considered as the best on the continent are now active in Hollywood."

MIAMI LETTER

Miami, Florida, Dec. 11, 1922—Rex Ingram is in New York after having completed the last shots for "The Passion Vine."

Richard Barthelmess was here for a few weeks doing exteriors for his latest feature.

J. P. McGowan is preparing his new picture, which will go into production about the first of the year.

Wray Physiog and Charles Granlich are also lining things up to start after the new year.

Rex Ingram has had considerable difficulty in getting variety in his locations. He was forced to make an expensive trip to Cuba for a waterfall. His next story will be Sabinti's "Scaramouche" which he hopes to make in Europe.

Ralph Cloninger, as Thad Parker in Reginald Barker's forthcoming "Hearts Aflame," adapted from the novel "Timber," by Harold Titus, brings to the screen one of the most convincing dramatic portrayals of the last six years. He is shown here in a scene with Anna Q. Nilsson.

Baby Violet Van Gundy, a starlet of vaudeville who is just entering motion pictures. She recently scored a hit at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre in a character singing act.

For Success Start Early and Avoid the Crush

Meet the personification of invincibility—a chap who had enough of the tragic happen in his boyhood to set him back ten years, but, who, instead of yielding to such a fate, took hold of the reins of self-reliance as a penniless orphan of sixteen years and achieved more by the time he reached his twenty-fourth year than most men do in a life-time of longevity.

It was from the lowland of obscurity into which the recent World War had plunged him by causing the untimely death of his father and obliterating the family fortune that Robert Florey, refusing to be dismayed, promptly started a climb considered meteoric inasmuch as he is recognized thus early as one of the foremost writers and equally foremost picture directors of France as well as being accredited with an unusually brilliant career in numerous fields in America. Moreover, by dint of his diligence, tenacious "spunk" and talents he has blazed a trail of entry for himself into the inner circle of such celebrities as Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Max Linder, Baron de Rothchild, ex-Premier Clemenceau and many others of equal note whom he can count as close friends.

Primarily, let it be noted at the outset that the object lesson held forth by the accomplishments of M. Florey is: the best way to make sure of avoiding the painful crush of bitter disappointment is to start doing serious things early—not later than one's sixteenth year on this mundane sphere. Indeed, it would seem better if youth would discontinue his empty play in its entirety at this age and buckle down to a happy battle to forge ahead. Then once ahead, there will be plenty of time for more play. By all odds, it sounds like a mighty good theory.

One of the first men to lose his life on account of German aggression was M. Florey's father. The boy was still in school when the war broke out in 1914 and he had scarcely brought himself to a realization of the dire importance of the turmoil when he was summoned to go through the ordeal of being the sole mourner at his paternal parent's bier. The next blow the ruthless god of war landed on him was to bankrupt him down to the last penny, leaving him without both shelter and food. Ordinarily this would have been a staggering blow since M. Florey had been accustomed to a life of ease, but he lost no time in bewailing his ill fate.

The first move he made within a few hours after the interment of his sire was to volunteer his services to the French army, but he was rejected on account of his youthfulness and size. The same day he went straight to a Paris newspaper office and got a reportorial job. Although he had had no previous experience in newspaper work, he was so determined to avoid defeat in anything that he made good to such an extent that he was chosen to go to the front as a war correspondent, being the youngest human being to ever be given such an important and hazardous assignment in Europe. After distinguishing himself in this important service, he became incapacitated and had to return to Paris. Instead of taking a long rest as anyone would be expected to do, he immediately got busy doing something else. This time it was the production of motion pictures upon which he concentrated his interest and before he had reached maturity he gained the enviable prestige of being recognized as one of the most capable producer of photoplays in France. His fame in this line spread to Denmark and to Switzerland in both of which countries he wrote and directed some of the most successful screen productions.

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Robert Florey

Later he was associated with Louis Feuillade and Gaumont, the largest motion picture concern abroad. His success attracted so much attention that the position as editor-in-chief of a leading movie magazine of Paris was offered him. He accepted and this led to his being chosen as the first French journalist to ever be sent to Hollywood as a representative to observe and write about the film industry as it obtains in the film capitol of the world.

M. Florey had not been in Hollywood long before his two good friends, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, prevailed upon him to accept the executive position of director of the foreign publicity department of the Pickford-Fairbanks studios. His ability to write in nine different languages in masterly style makes him invaluable to these international favorites of the cinema. Since settling in Southern California, M. Florey has written two important books, one of which is called "Filmland" and is being published by "La Sirene," one of the biggest publishing houses in Paris. This work promises to pass the million mark as a best-seller and is of such high literary class that it has established its author as a world figure as a writer. His second book entitled "One Year in Hollywood" will be issued next December.

Now at the age of twenty-four years, after making his start at the lowest of low tide when most boys will be simply boys, Robert Florey has made his name something to be conjured with as a household word throughout especially France, where it is estimated he is read regularly by several million people, and, he is far from unknown in motion picture circles in the United States. Several of his closer American friends who know and understand him best are not at all reluctant in predicting this "foiler of fate" will become the French screen's greatest directorial genius in due time, and, that time is not so very distant, for this young man plans on returning to his native land ere a great many moons for the sole purpose of undertaking to make the biggest, most spectacular film ever conceived in a foreign country.

"I have little to say, for I'm too busy working," was all M. Florey wanted to say when interviewed recently. However, when pressed he added: "It is nothing to succeed—that is, if you work and keep determined you can do as many things as well at the age of twenty-one as you ever can and it is certain the earlier you make any start the quicker you will get to whatever place or position you seek."

Undoubtedly there is a whole lecture in these few words. It knocks the time-honored theory of letting youth have its full fling into a cocked hat. It argues strongly in favor of making boyhood the serious key-stone to a future career's whole being. If nothing else it is exceedingly interesting.

The second unit of the Gerson organization will immediately start their first full length feature, which Lorimer Johnston will direct. Johnston, during his long screen career, has more than two hundred pictures to his credit. He is the man who went to Zulu-Land and took a feature picture with the entire company composed of natives. Josef Swickard, star of "The Four Horsemen" will be the featured player, in a role said to be the greatest of his eventful career. Edna Flugrath, sister of Viola Dana and Shirley Mason, and known abroad as "The Mary Pickford of England," will assume one of the prominent parts. The title of the picture will be announced shortly.

Muriel Frances Dana is the latest child artist to become a star.

Truman Van Dyke, Charles Ray and Conrad Nagel are all leaders in the same church.

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

We have never yet encountered a regular motion picture fan who was not thoroughly versed in practically every phase of the cinema art. There are few exhibitors whose judgment of photoplays cannot be matched by most any patron of this form of entertainment. The making of this statement is far from being a reflection upon the ability of the exhibitor to run his own business. On the contrary, it is only due recognition of the highly developed intelligence of the American public, and the indisputable evidence of this simply drives home the fact that producers have been wasting a lot of money and time on the fallacy of extending their picture activities to the managers of picture houses alone. From the very inception the one who had made the feature should have appealed to the photoplay-goer direct. Heretofore the decisions of theatre managers have been final, and apparently the powers higher up have not cared to take the public into their confidence and to feel that public's pulse with exceeding care and constancy. However, these same gentlemen are now beginning to see the light in a different light and consequently some of them are conducting most judicious advertising campaigns in newspapers and magazines which circulate almost exclusively among the fans. It is not difficult to understand how this is going to work as a veritable boon to the great industry. The stimulating effect is discernible from the inception—the intense interest of fans is actually being intensified and the increasing of interest means a corresponding increase in business—an expansion the exhibitors could never bring about unaided. The prosperity of pictures is entirely up to the general public, and therefore it certainly behooves the producers to "put it up" to the public through the mediums which reach that public. Wise men need no repetitions of lessons already learned!

Why not eliminate from the histrionic category the much used and too much abused word "star?" If there ever was a syllable which should be obsolete, insofar as being an appellation in such a sense, that syllable certainly is "star." It is eminently fitting to substitute the word "artist," for "star" in every case, and of course, there still would be the extensive latitude of good, bad or indifferent artist. Now, under the existing customs we have good, bad and indifferent "stars." Most anyone can become a self-styled "star," but very few convince the public. Yet dozens of near-artists cling to the "honor name" with dogged persistency and truly terrible tenacity. In the natural course of events it long since ceased to mean anything definite to be a "star." But there is real credit in being regarded as an artist. Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Pauline Frederick, Charles Chaplin, and Lillian Gish are all real artists and we venture the assertion that none of them would be the least offended if they were never referred to as stars again. We are just as confident that each one of these celebrities is genuinely gratified every time anyone calls her an artist. To be recognized as an artist carries weight; to be hailed as a star is to be classed lightly with many players who are not artists. We would not

One of the most assuring trends of the moment is that of erstwhile manufacturers of films who have now shown a disposition to produce photoplays as artistic as well as business propositions.

Suddenly there comes a deluge of indications that leading independent producers are prone to induce successful players to sign long-term contracts. Only a few months ago scarcely anybody was doing this.

There is a growing inclination among film magnates to reason with unreasonable reformers rather than to continue the old policy of ranting at them. This is a comforting breeze in the right direction.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the world's greatest actress, declares the wonderful development of the cinema art is "a magnificent example of American enterprise and skill." When the American shadow stage can elicit such praise as this from such a supreme authority on histrionic art, it is time to concede that the general trend of this tremendous industry is reassuringly upward and forward.

All-star casts, which are really composed in their entirety of stars, have become a fad among producers now. "Quincy Adams Sawyer," now current, is an example and there are at least a dozen features, ready for release, which will even press that excellent production for high honors in the matter of corraling stellar players.

British wisacres are urging efforts to offset the effect of American film propaganda in their colonies, and there is every evidence of worry obtaining in the land of John Bull over the truly marvelous progress which is being made towards popularizing the animated pictorial goods of the U. S. A. throughout the world. But why all this British ado over the matter? Can not the English producers compete on a strictly merit basis? If not, Uncle Sam's masters of cinema deserve to get something of a lion's share of the business. On the other hand, if the British can amicably excel, they deserve the big bulk. Verily, it is the age for a definite discontinuance of this habit of resorting to unfair subterfuge in order to make the most money. Even those few American magnates who aspire to form trusts and grow fabulously wealthy with the aid of protective tariff, should realize this. Just as we believe that the best man should invariably win, let us have faith in the justice of the doctrine that the best film should win.

be surprised, therefore, if all the thinking artists in the realm of photoplay would welcome the total abolition of "star." The fact that it is meaningless is sufficient to warrant its removal from the foreground. Let who will be a "star," but let every photoplayer earnestly strive to be an artist, and a long stride will be taken in the direction of elevating the cinema art. And, suffice it to add, this art still needs elevating, although it has made truly marvelous progress upward, outward, and occasionally wayward.

One of the treats of the season, a veritable feast for the eyes, is Marshall Neilan's production of "The Stranger's Banquet." This is a photoplay which contains in just about the correct proportions all the essentials which go to make up real entertainment, unalloyed by monotony and hackneyed what-not. One of the outstanding features is the smoothness with which the story moves forward and the suspenseful influence it has over anyone watching its unfoldment. Another striking feature is the cast—an army of stars: stars in minor parts even. Furthermore this picture serves as one of the best examples of Mr. Neilan's genius for knowing what the public wants and giving that something to it. In this regard Mr. Neilan is rapidly carving himself out a place in the screen world comparable to that long occupied by George M. Cohan in the stage world. "The Stranger's Banquet" is one of these pictures no lover of big cinema achievement should miss.

Very early pre-view reports indicate that Bennie Zeidman has scored another ten-strike in his latest production, "The Spider and the Rose," which is to be one of the big independent releases of the new year. This is a story of the early days in Southern California, when the Spanish influence held full sway and the romantic elements in it are said to be thrillingly striking. Gaston Glass and Alice Lake are the lovers. The various characters with whom they come in contact in the course of the developing of the story are in the hands of such stars as Noah Beery, Louise Fazenda, Edwin Stevens and Robert McKim. In story value "The Spider and the Rose" is par excellence; in acting value it is away above the average and the production value surpasses anything Mr. Zeidman has done previously. This one looks like a box-office winner such as will create a demand for a doubling of the Zeidman output.

Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" is dreamily charming and her artistic performance is such that it will adequately bolster up any weak spots there may be in her starring vehicle, and, there are some weak spots. However, Mack Sennett has displayed some marked ability as a producer of amusing situations with an underlying object lesson challenging serious thought in this particular picture. He has been fortunate in his selection of the supporting cast for Miss Normand and especially worthy of praise is Leon Bary, the popular French actor, who proves himself a most adept delineator of character in a difficult role.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, DEC. 23, 1922.

L. A. PLANS TO ENTERTAIN PRESIDENT IN SPECIAL TRAIN ON HIS TRIP TO EXPOSITION

Tentative plans have been completed by the Motion Picture Industry in conjunction with the city of Los Angeles to entertain President Harding in a most unique fashion on a special train they will place at his disposal when he comes to this city next June to officially open the great Exposition to be held in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. Not only will the most palatial cars obtainable be chartered to make up this train, but they will be especially equipped to augment the comforts and pleasures of those aboard and among other features will be one car converted into a luxurious motion picture theatre in which will be projected the leading current photoplays of the time, if the reported plans are carried out successfully.

Accompanying the Chief Executive of the nation will be several illustrious members of his own official family together with various distinguished representatives of the diplomatic corps and a Committee composed of leading members of Congress all of whom will participate in the opening ceremonies at Exposition Park. It is estimated it will cost a total of about $40,000 to finance this momentous trip of the Washington dignitaries and the Motion Picture Industry proposes to provide its full share of this sum.

Mayor George E. Cryer, who has just returned from the east where he personally invited the President and other great statesmen to attend the Exposition opening as guests of the city of Los Angeles, says Mr. Harding is eager to be among those present on this notable occasion and that he indicated he would be prevented only by the most pressing exigencies such as are not to be expected at that time. It is therefore considered as assured as is humanly possible so far in advance that the presidential party will arrive here on schedule.

BUELL WINS AT GOLF

L. H. Buell, purchasing agent for the Famous Players-Lasky company, won the cup at the recent golf match of the Motion Picture Gold Association from a field of sixty starters. There were prizes for best gross scores.

VALENTINO'S EARLY RETURN TO LASKY IS PREDICTED

There are said to be definite indications of Rodolph Valentino having reached a decision to return to the Paramount fold at an early date since the courts have reached the decision that the contract held by Lasky for his artistic services is binding. According to reports received yesterday from New York, where the famous screen star still lingers, he has rejected an offer to go abroad under the management of Charles Cochran at a salary of $3,500. The fact that the Lasky contract could not interfere with him in any pursuit of his profession in Europe encourages the belief that he is approaching a compromise which will make possible his immediate return to the Paramount program.

One despatch from Gotham this week stated that Valentino had received an offer to make some phonograph records, but he seems disinclined to consider this, as he does not specialize in either singing or patter and his dancing and silent drama would not of course count.

On last Tuesday the actor emphatically denied having any intention of entering the business world as a manufacturer of perfume bearing his name.

Hence by the process of elimination of possibilities of feasible recourses, it seems to be made certain Rudy will avail himself of his one alternative by returning to his old Lasky job since his love for the cinema is known to be overwhelming.

THEY BOUGHT; YOU BUY

One of the last official acts of Will Hays before he left Los Angeles, Wednesday, was to pay $10 and become a patron of The American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. Thomas G. Patten and Joseph J. O'Neill, his new Hollywood representatives, followed suit. They realize what this Revue and Exposition will mean to the motion picture industry. They realize how big an event the Premiere

DOPE PEDDLERS MAKE HASTY EXODUS FROM HOLLYWOOD AS POLICE START BIG DRUG WAR

MARY AND DOUG DO NOT DENY WORLD TOUR REPORT

The widely published report to the effect that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks will start an eight-month tour of the world next spring has remained undenied by either of the stars now for a whole week. Since it is announced on good authority that these famous screen luminaries have gone far in the matter of negotiating for the chartering of the steamer, Persia Maru of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, much credence is given the rumor.

It is well known that Mr. Fairbanks has been eager to do some extensive travelling ever since he completed the filming of "Robin Hood," but that Miss Pickford could not make up her mind so long as she was controlled by an ambition to appear in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," scheduled as her next picture. Meanwhile her celebrated husband has been rather undecided as to what kind of a story he would do next. At first he was all set to picturize "Beaucaire." Then he changed his mind. Now he seems settled on the idea of starring himself in a pirate play although there is a persistent rumor that he will produce a screen version of "The Talisman," starring Wallace Beery in which case Doug would be in the background as merely the producer.

CHICAGO PRODUCER COMES TO L. A. TO CAST PICTURE

That the most of the cinema talent is assembled in Hollywood is again indicated by the fact that Blair Coan, Chicago producer, has wandered from his native haunts to our fair city in quest of suitable talent for his next picture, "The Little Girl Next Door." W. S. Van Dyke has been signed to direct the picture and Doris Schroeder is now preparing the continuity. After the casting has been completed, Mr. Coan will take his company back to Chicago, where the production will be filmed.

Get the man higher up!

This is the slogan and imperative command in the present sensational war on the vicious traffic in drugs.

And, the authorities are on this very trail, wisely selecting it as the most effective course almost from the inception of this latest demand to clean up the social side of contemporary Los Angeles life.

All agree that the one place to get at the bottom of all the havoc wrought by the spread of the narcotic habit is at the top, and, at the top the forces of law and order are concentrating at this very moment under the direction of Harry D. Smith, Federal agent in charge of the Pacific Coast Narcotic Division. Already there have been disclosures implicating prominent men as the instigators of the illicit practices which have tended to increase the army of addicts to a degree as has enriched the criminal few at the expense of the souls and physical powers of those unfortunate enough to yield to the terrible temptation.

The very latest reports of this stirring week indicate that a series of arrests is to be staged within hours and in each case a higher-up will be directly involved.

"We know positively the names of several influential men who are behind drug rings, but so far it has been almost impossible to obtain evidence against these men actually responsible for much of the traffic," Agent Smith says. "The way is clearing for us, however. We're going into action."

Meanwhile motion picture people residing in Hollywood report a noticeable sudden disappearance of several dope peddlers who have been rather bold in plying their trade for several months. It is a natural upshot that these creatures would vanish with the first signs of a storm of wrath. But, most of them have left trails which can be followed and everyone of them should be in jail ere another week rolls by.

One Hollywood druggist, long under suspicion, sold out his store and departed some time ago and efforts to find him are being made in the hopes he can be forced to give valuable in-

Irvin V. Willat, who recently completed the direction of the Metro production of "All the Brothers Were Valiant," is in his home town in Florida to spend the holidays.

Bertha Stewart, who has served as stenographer-secretary for motion pictures producers during the past three years, has been appointed auditor of the Fine Arts studios.

"A Front Page Story" is the title of Jess Robbins' latest comedy-drama for Vitagraph release, which has just been completed at Fine Arts, starring Edward Everett Horton.

Billie Dove had the honor of presiding over a booth at a bazaar given by the Assistance League of America at the home of Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo in Los Angeles recently.

Anderson Smith has been added to the cast of "The Abysmal Brute," the Jack London prize ring classic which Universal is filming as a special starring vehicle for Reginald Denny.

Frank Ormstrom, one of the best known art directors in motion pictures, has been engaged to design sets for the Norma Talmadge picture, "Within the Law," which Frank Lloyd is to direct.

Irving Asher has been appointed assistant to Jack Lawton, location manager at Universal City, succeeding Edgar Stein, who was transferred to the staff of Wallace Worsley, director of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Henry McCarty, author and director of Lester Cuneo westerns, has started work at Fine Arts on the last of his series of pictures for Western Pictures Exploitation. Floyd Jackman is cameraman.

Irving Cummings Productions, Inc., has loaned the services of Irving Cummings to Myron Selznick for a part in "Rupert of Hentzau." Cummings is playing the role of Bernstein. As soon as he is through with him he will return to his old duties as a film producer.

Edwin Carewe arrived from New York this week with a staff to produce David Belasco's "The Girl of the Golden West" as a First National picture. Sol Polito will photograph the production with Wally Fox assisting.

Clara Kimball Young has completed her work in "The Woman of Bronze," which is her newest starring picture to be produced by Harry Garson. Miss Young will take a short vacation before starting work on her next picture.

It is expected that Semon will sign a long term contract with one of the bidders, some time this week. But five pictures remain to be produced by Semon to fulfill the terms of his present three-year contract with Vitagraph.

G. M. Anderson is producing a burlesque on "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Fine Arts studios. The picture is titled "When Knights Were Cold," and stars Stan Laurel. It is being made for Metro release.

Barney McGill, cinematographer, is the proud daddy of an eight-pound girl, born at the St. Vincent's hospital, Nov. 30. Little Miss McGill is to be named Violet Welcome after her aunt, Welcome Lewis, well known singer and violinist.

As a token of the esteem in which she is held as an aviatrix in her native France, Andree Peyre, Pathe player, has received a miniature aeroplane of silver from the French aces who banqueted her during her recent visit to Paris.

Corinne Griffith is being tutored for special scenes in the Selznick production, "The Common Law," by Antonio Rolando, noted South American dance exponent, who has been scoring a hit at the Cocoanut Grove in the Ambassador.

Alice Lake has been signed by Universal to play opposite Herbert Rawlinson in his newest vehicle, "Nobody's Bride," which is just entering production. Herbert Blache, a French director formerly associated with principal producers, will direct the filming.

Henry McCarty, who has written and directed the stories produced by Doubleday productions in its contract with Western Pictures Exploitation, is preparing to start work within the next few days on the last picture of the company's present series. Lester Cuneo is the star.

Sol Cohen, who has arranged the musical scores for many of the leading film productions of the past twelve months, is now engaged on a special musical score for Gene Stratton-Porter's first production from her novel, "Michael O'Halloran."

After vacationing for a brief period in New York during the month of January, James Leo Meehan, director for Gene Stratton-Porter, expects to return to the Coast to begin preparations for the second production to be made by the famous novelist.

Carl H. Schillinger, formerly film editor for William S. Hart, is putting the finishing touches upon Gene Stratton-Porter's "Michael O'Halloran" at the Ince Studios, under the immediate supervision of the director, James Leo Meehan. The author herself personally inspects the progress made each evening.

John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of the Fine Arts studios, announced this week that his plant is now leasing production quarters to twelve different companies. Among the newest companies are the Hugh Deirker productions, the Amalgamated productions and the Bennie Zeidman productions.

Herbert Blache, French actor, will guide the production of Herbert Rawlinson's next starring vehicle, the working title of which is "Nobody's Bride." Rawlinson has been away on a vacation for six weeks and now will return to the labors of stardom. The story was written by Evelyn Campbell and the scenario was prepared by Albert G. Kenyon.

Warner Baxter, film star and former Morosco leading man, accompanied by his wife and sister-in-law, narrowly escaped injury when the automobile in which they were returning from San Diego skidded in the mud and overturned on one of the bad stretches of highway between Los Angeles and San Diego. The three occupants were badly bruised.

Larry Semon has received a unique gift from James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, U. S. A. It is an enormous cake, in the shape of an open book. On the pages are a circular photo of Semon, the engraved greeting, "Best Wishes to Larry Semon from his friend, James J. Davis," and the circular seal of the City of Los Angeles.

The gift, which has just arrived from Washington, occupies a conspicuous place in Mr. Semon's office.

PICTURE BUSINESS IN EUROPE IS IMPROVING

The demand for American films and the business of the film industry generally in France, Belgium and Italy, is improving. So reports Maurice Gaillot, who represents Pathe Exchange, Inc., in those countries. Mr. Gaillot sailed for France on the Aquitania last week after a short visit to this country, during which he exchanged ideas with officials at the Pathe Home Office regarding prospects of export of standard and new product.

"In France," said Mr. Gaillot, "the picture business has been poor for some time past, reflecting conditions of general business. Latterly there has been improvement in an encouraging degree, which seems likely to continue as it appears to be the effect of familiarity with the disturbed financial situation due to unstable rates of exchange and more experience in dealing with this disadvantage. But the cost of living is still abnormally high. Everything, in fact, seems disproportionately costly because of the extreme depreciation of the national currency. That is a psychological effect of paying in francs instead of in dollars.

"As France produces only about 20 per cent of the pictures shown in its theatres, it must rely to a very great extent on American product. For this trade there is keen competition between the leading American distributors. Pathe product—particularly its celebrated brands of comedies—is much favored, being more human and natural than most other examples, and therefore presenting less difficulty in the adaptation of idiomatic titles in a way to make them intelligible to the Latin mind."

Mr. Gaillot included the Belgium and Italian trade in what he said about conditions in France. He was hopeful that the next two years would prove increasingly favorable toward American picture production.

ASTRAL STARS FAVOR PHOTOPLAY STARS

Cinema, both as an art and as a business, is destined to make its greatest progress and to achieve its biggest triumphs during the year of 1923, according to the stars—the astral stars, not the screen ones. Prof. Berne Walsker, a Chicago astrologer now sojourning in Los Angeles, sees all kinds of incentives for consummate optimism in the "tips" radiated by the twinklers of the faraway firmament and in an interview granted exclusively to Camera! he waxes enthusiastic over the good signs of the times shining down from above.

"A great amount of good will come to the whole motion picture industry through the probe of the drug evil just started and before the year of 1923 is half gone, the traffic in narcotics will be so nearly stamped out in Southern California as to be considered negligible," he says. "Moreover, every sign points to an unprecedented building activity in the film colony. Will H. Hays was under the right star when he started his crusade to upbuild Hollywood and his whole plan will be blessed with complete success much sooner than most people expect."

In pursuing his reading of the stars as they now obtain in their relativity to Mother Earth, Prof. Walsker adds:

"One of the few disconcerting prospects imparted by the astral situation at this time is that Saturn will wield an unusual influence during the coming year, which means there will be much bad weather, including deadly tempests and excessive rainfall as well as extreme coldness. Crops in various sections will be devastated and the forthcoming spring will be unpleasant. Those companies now making moving pictures with numerous outdoors scenes would do well to get the work done during the present winter season and not wait for next spring, because they are bound to be disappointed in the weather then.

"The outlook is fairly favorable to a steady condition of prosperity, but there are positive astrological warnings of serious unrest within the film industry, a rebellion of the employees against certain now powerful employers. I have no doubt but what the Valentino case, now so prominent in the public prints, will prove an opening wedge to a great deal of lack of harmony between the two forces and out of this temporary chaos will probably come a realignment such as will decrease the power of some and increase that of others. In plain words, there will be some decisive shifting of mortal influences as it obtains in the picture world.

"However, as a whole, the year will bring thrift, steady plodding and a tendency towards more fair dealing with consequent greater achievements in film-making. It will be a constructive year and a certain amount of destruction always precedes such an era."

Shooting on "Destiny," the seven-reel feature starring Edna Purviance under the direction of Charles Chaplin, was resumed at the Chaplin Studios last Monday after a recess of two weeks due to the illness of Miss Purviance.

"Destiny," which is Chaplin's first production of a serious nature, will be marked by a number of original features of a mechanical nature in addition to the original methods of direction of Chaplin. A number of new photographic effects will be used and special scenery designed and executed for its dramatic atmosphere rather than for detail will feature the production. Arthur Stibolt is the technical director for this production. "Destiny" will be released through United Artists.

Joy Winthrop has been engaged to play the part of a landlady in the current Viola Dana picture, "Her Fatal Millions," at Metro.

ZANE GREY SUES HAMPTON AND OTHERS FOR PROFITS

Benjamin B. Hampton, Eltinge F. Warner and the Zane Grey Picture Company, Inc.; were made the defendants in a legal action brought in the courts when Zane Grey, sued for an accounting of funds, alleging fraud and diversion of funds on the part of the producers.

Grey declares that practically all of the profits accruing from films based on his books have been appropriated by the defendants and that he has not received the 25 per cent stipulated in his contract. The accounting covers films based on "Desert Gold," "U. P. Trail," "Mysterious Rider," "Riders of the Dawn," "Man of the Forest" and "Wild-fire."

OPERATIC VOICE IS RESTORED AFTER FOUR YEARS

Severe tonsillitis which developed into a chronic case drove Alan Hale out of grand opera about four years ago when everything was in his favor for achieving high success inasmuch as he was a protege of Andrea Dygsei, the renowned impresario. Now a Los Angeles surgeon has just removed the cause of the ailment and predicts Mr. Hale will yet make his mark as an operatic singer if he so chooses, declaring his vocal organs to be perfect. But Mr. Hale is very much enrapt in the silent drama at this time and has little need for a fine voice, and he is in a quandary as to what course to pursue.

Immediately upon returning from Utah, where he was "on location" with James Cruze's company filming the Paramount production of "The Covered Wagon" in which he plays a leading role, Mr. Hale developed such a sore throat that he went to a specialist for an examination. The specialist was alarmed at what he discovered and rushed the actor to a hospital, where the surgeon performed the successful operation post-haste.

It all happened so quickly due to the alarm of the specialist that Mr. Hale had no opportunity to apprise his medical advisor of the fact that he was scheduled to start playing the "lead" opposite Viola Dana in "Her Fatal Millions," the next day. Consequently when the cameras were ready to start photographing this feature he was very much bed-fast and his part had to be assigned to another.

Now after nearly three weeks of being kept inactive Mr. Hale is starting with Bernard Durning in his special all-star production for William Fox.

"Incidentally, it might be mentioned this was the first time in my life I ever took ether," Mr. Hale says. "More than incidentally, it might be added that it was also the last time I'll ever take it, because ether reminds me too much of bootleg whiskey."

The trouble with too many stage plays nowadays is, they consist of three overt acts.

In case there is universal disarmament after all, wonder whether or not the flowers will get rid of their pistols?

Christopher Columbus, poorly equipped, discovered America in less time than it took Kaiser Wilhelm with all of his wonderful equipment. It's a good bet Bill is wishing there was no America to be discovered by Columbus or himself.

Scientists claim the whale is built along lines which insure its flesh of being wholly wholesome. We will neither deny nor affirm in view of the fact that we know so little about ichthyotomy, scarcely knowing how to spell the word even.

You cannot accumulate an overabundance of ambition. Here is one essential you can have without stint. Take plenty and keep plenty. Work zealously to realize on the plenty. Make your ambition potential. If you will, the world needs you.

The latest "dope" seems to be too much "dope." The next move is to effectually obliterate all forms of "dope." Mere investigation and probing is not sufficient. The rich and wicked higher-up should be the first species obliterated. This is the real "dope."

More tenacity and less temporizing would go a long way towards saving some of the smaller photoplay producers from going the short way to financial ruin. Closer adherence to sound business principles and less penchant for building fine, big studios and less lavishing of fabulous salaries on stars would also help to chase the wolf away from the door. Numerous film manufacturers need elementary business education.

Just as was expected, Mayor Cryer proved to be the right man to voice Southern California's virtues to the easterners. Moreover, according to all indications he displayed rare skill as a publicity man in disseminating inspiring information relative to the forthcoming exposition to be held in Los Angeles. His willingness to brave the rigors of frigid winter to personally tour the east in behalf of this great enterprise deserves commendation. The Motion Picture Industry does its full share of the appreciating since it is the leading factor in making a success of this biggest amusement undertaking in its history.

ACTORS, DO YOUR BITS

Boost the Monroe Doctrine Exposition to be held in Los Angeles next June! Photoplayers especially should co-operate now to make this great event a triumph. Every citizen should mention it in every letter written to friends and relatives in other sections of the country. In short and explicitly, there should be no slackers in any quarter when so vital a civic enterprise is under way and since it will redound in more benefits for the Motion Picture Industry than any other single force, no one interested in any way in this industry should overlook the importance of contributing some efforts and money towards it.

If all producers will be perfectly fair in seriously doing all in their power to make clean pictures, there will be an inconsequential few unfair enough to continue to assail the cinema fare. Bath rooms and nearly undressed women do not constitute fair fare.

Like a city with its street-cleaning department, let Film-land have its own cleaning department and to insure against outside interference, be sure this department is efficient and devoid of laxities.

Ed Roberts declares he can prove the contents of his book, "The Sins of Hollywood," to be true. But, can he prove his purposes in writing the obnoxious volume was true blue? Does he believe Hollywood deserves such assaults upon its civic character even if the unsavory stories about a few motion picture people are true? If he does—well, we hope he doesn't.

Hays may come and go, but his chief aide, Patten, will stay for—quite a while.

Come out of the kitchen, Kit chen. There is a parlor in film-land life, too.

President Harding lauds educational motion pictures. By way of reciprocity producers or educational pictures should laud the nation's Chief Executive.

Whatever else can be said about the merits of the Valentino-Paramount controversy, it must be conceded that it is a complete success as a publicity-getter. If that was the idea, it was a bright one.

Fifty per cent of the people today live yesterday and yet wonder why procrastination is so general as a kernel of deterioration.

SECOND-HAND STUFF

By PERLEY POORE SHEENAN

How long are they going to try to keep on doing it? Suppose you knew a millionaire. Suppose he bragged a lot about his influence, the amount of money he spent, how necessary he was to the welfare of the world, but most of all about his looks. And still he went shuffling around in second-hand clothes, clothes which were not made for him in the first place, never did fit him and couldn't be made to fit him, and which perhaps were not very clean. Wouldn't it be awful? Wouldn't it be fierce? Wouldn't you be ashamed of him?

That is what the great Motion Picture Industry is doing for the most part.

Second-hand stories, second-hand plays, second-hand ideas—these are the garments of the trade, or the art, or the profession.

They can talk all they want to about a "vehicle" for this or that star, or constellation. But the so-called "vehicle" is really the dress, the costume, in which said star or constellation goes forth on the great mission of showing the world what it ought to be.

To get to the crux of the situation, when—oh, when—is this great industry of ours going to act like a self-respecting white man and come out in clothes of its own—new and clean and tailored to fit?

In other words, beloved, let us fight for the Original Story—the Original Photoplay—the Virgin wool-woven and dyed and "built" not for someone else, but for ourselves!

ALTRUISTIC MOVIE COMPANY COMING TO L. A.

Aspirants for all kinds of screen honors—would-be writers, actors and directors now in oblivion—will be given a chance to show what they can do in the way of competing with the present-day crop of recognized masters of the various crafts and arts involved in the motion picture industry if the Theatre Owners' Distributing Company, a $5,000,000 corporation just formed in Chicago, succeeds in its purpose. In fact, this organization proposes to be so extremely altruistic as to actually bar all persons having any previous achievements to their credit so far as film work is concerned.

According to the latest despatches received yesterday this unique company will send its officials to Los Angeles soon after January 1st to begin the work of establishing it in suitable studio quarters preparatory to early production of stories to be selected from among latent literary talent. The tentative plan is to heap rather fabulous wealth upon the unknown who can supply a marketable story, the offer being a guarantee of $300,000 for such material.

Only budding genius will be given a hearing—neither professionals or deluded persons will be given any attention. The whole purpose is to discover and develop American genius, which, declare the promoters of this enterprise, will never be given a chance under the present system, which is criticised severely because of it being kept so invulnerable to outsiders.

"The big fellows may imagine they have the situation sealed up," one of these promoters says. "They have been the dictators long enough. True ability has not counted with them and now we propose to make such ability count potentially with everyone. Our big aim will be to see to it that worthy screen material is marketed regardless of how obscure the author's name may be."

This unusual company is being backed by W. A. True of Hartford, Conn., W. D. Buford of Aurora, Ill., Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, Sydney S. Cohen of New York and L. J. Dittman of Louisville.

Marguerite Kósik, child dancer, has been filling an engagement with the Amalgamated productions featuring Stan Laurel in "When Knights Were Cold."

4 DIRECTORS HAVE USED THIS BABY ARTIST TWICE

Baby Muriel MacCormac has just finished a four-week engagement in the B. P. Schulberg production of "Poor Men's Wives," under the direction of Louis Gasnier, who is the fourth director to call for her artistic services for a second picture. No better criterion could be asked than the ability to repeat with critical makers of photo-plays who are always zealous in obtaining the best talent possible. The other Gasnier feature in which little Miss MacCormac appeared was "The Call of Home."

Director Paul Powell liked this child's artistry and cleverness so much in his Lasky production of "Borderland" that he assigned her a bigger part in "The Daughter of Luxury," as yet unreleased.

Irvin Willat called her for a return engagement in "On the High Seas," starring Dorothy Dalton, after she had ingratiated herself with him in his "Yellow Men and Gold."

Marshall Neilan is the fourth director to recognize this child's talents to the extent of calling her back to his studio for a second picture.

Although Baby Muriel MacCormac is only four years, she is something of a pioneer in motion pictures, having been an active player for two and one-half years, during which time she has played real parts in a total of thirty-four productions.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Al to Play N. Y. Safe

Following the completion of his next comedy for the Fox Film corporation, Al St. John, the star comedian, will leave for New York on his first vacation in several years. Likewise it will be his initial visit to the eastern metropolis, hence, he is taking his assistant director, Bennie Stolloff, a native of Gotham, along with him as guide and interpreter. Al has heard so much about the evils of the big city that he is having his bank roll and a clean collar sewed into the lining of his coat and he says he will change 'em both when he arrives in New York.

Metro Company in San Diego

Ten members of the company who are working on the filming of the S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) production of "Your Friend and Mine," for Metro, have gone to San Diego where the exteriors for this picture are being made. San Diego Bay is to be utilized for many scenes of this Willard Mack story which Clarence G. Badger is directing.

"Felix Bavu" Going North

The Stuart Paton company, now filming the Universal Jewel production, "The Attic of Felix Bavu," will leave Hollywood Tuesday morning for Truckee, Cal., where they will film the atmosphere scenes and, incidentally, finish that picture. The cast is composed of Wallace Beery, Estelle Taylor, Forrest Stanley and Sylvia Breamer. Jack (Curley) Kiehl has been added to the staff of cinematographers who will accompany this group north.

Advances Protection Measures

Plans to further protect and assist the legion of feminine aspirants in quest of cinema honors were made at a luncheon-meeting last week at the Hollywood Studio Club, where Will Hays and his associates, Thomas Patton, J. J. O'Neill and Fred Beetsen, were guests of honor. The Studio Club is under direct supervision of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., and officials of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are co-operating with directors of the club in an endeavor to construct a new home for girls who are employed in the moving picture industry.

Enid's Sister in Comedy

Catherine Bennett, a little fair-haired and blue-eyed 19-year-old Australian girl, has been engaged for an important feminine role in "When Knights Were Cold," the newest Amalgamated comedy for Metro, starring Stan Laurel. Miss Bennett is a sister of Enid Bennett, who has been a well known figure on the American stage and screen for several years. Both are natives of Sydney.

Make-up Agency is Unmade

Cancellation of its license by Walter G. Matthewson, State Labor Commissioner, ends the career of the Classic Film Agency, which had been operated by Michael J. Pictures Lure Him Westward

Harold D. Mills, juvenile lead in several eastern independent productions, has arrived in Hollywood, where he is making arrangements for future film activities. Previous to making advent into the motion picture field, Mr. Mills served with the Shubert company in St. Paul for one year, and at the expiration of his contract with an independent producing company in Chicago, he refused an offer of a year's stock engagement in order to migrate to filmland's capitol.

Gaston Gets Gastronomic

As a result of being convinced that every man should eat at home with frequency whether he has a mother or wife or not. Gaston Glass, the romantic actor, who has no wife and whose mother lives in far-away Paris, has engaged a professional chef to preside over the kitchen of his Hollywood bungalow and to look after the scientific proposition of making sure he gets the proper ratio of calories of food value. The strenuities coincident to being a hero in many photoplays are such as to make it indispensable for the hero to keep in fit physical condition, and, as food constitutes such an important part of maintaining health, Gaston thinks it behooves an actor to be a little gastronomic.

Try the Surgeon Again!

Monty Banks, the popular comedian, is in the same predicament as the man who had money to burn and found he had no matches. Monty is between pictures and has had a two-week vacation tendered him, and finds he has nothing to do. Excepting the few weeks in which he travelled to New York to undergo a surgical operation, this is the first rest Monty has had in two years. "Sure wish this was over," Monty says. "I get more tired hanging around doing nothing, than I do working 12 hours a day."

Had to Corral Governors

Three governors had to give their consent before permission could be obtained by Thomas H. Ince to film some spectacular flood scenes now being made for "News," his latest production in which May McAvoy is being starred. To get shots of a scene which occurs in the story when a levee breaks, a dam has been erected at Yuma, Arizona, temporarily turning aside the Colorado river from its course. Due to the long controversy over the Colorado river, permission was obtained from the chief executive of California, Colorado and Arizona before the producer was willing to tamper with waters which have been in such bitter dispute. Tremendous sums are being expended by Ince to obtain shots that can not fail to carry a mighty wallop in this production which is being directed by John Griffith Wray.

As Song Titles Tell It

"Where There's a Will There's a Way," sings the little extra girl. "Tomorrow" chirps the casting director. "You've Made Me What I Am Today," sings the original story of the producer.

Viola Dana Starts Making "Her Fatal Millions!"

The filming of "Her Fatal Millions," Viola Dana's newest Metro starring picture has been started at the Metro studios in Hollywood under the direction of William Beaudine. It is a story by William Dudley Pelley which Arthur Statter has adapted for the screen. Huntley Gordon has been engaged to enact the leading male role in "Her Fatal Millions." Mr. Gordon has just completed playing an important part in the all-star production of "Your Friend and Mine," which S-L (Sawyer-Lubin) is producing for Metro, and previous to that enacted a leading role in Fred Niblo's film version of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," for Metro.

Within Filmland's Interesting Inner Portals

What is the truth about the drug evil as it obtains in the center of film-making, the city of Los Angeles and environs? First answer: that it does exist just as it exists in New York, Chicago and other cities, and, second answer: that the habit has grown among mortals in every walk of life in the last two or three years. It is a moot question whether or not Prohibition has had anything to do with this unsavory growth and public opinion seems to be about equally divided on the subject. However, as Alan Hale, the well-known screen star and one of the drug peddler's most implacable foes in the present crusade to rid the world of such mortal menace, points out, something besides normal conditions is the basic fault, because in normal times—in the days of more personal liberty than is allowed now—there were fewer addicts to narcotics and the terrible plague did not have the grasp it has at this time. "Unfortunately, the Wallace Reid case merely serves to throw the spot-light on intolerable conditions which have been a bane to followers of many occupations for several years," he declares, "and it constitutes the sounding of a warning that the whole populace must arise and act in unison to obliterate all men and women unscrupulous enough to peddle drugs from the face of the social map." Mr. Hale has been conducting a personal campaign against "dope" distributors for some time, but he asserts his efforts have been mostly in vain for the reason that those who pursue this nefarious trade seem to have adequate protection at all times. Therein undoubtedly lies the secret of the whole development of this evil—there has been laxity of law enforcement on the part of many of those higher up. Hence at the top seems to be the place to get at the bottom of the dangerous situation!

To be given credit for being "one of the most potential powers in promoting a revival in the interest of human romance" is quite a compliment, but it is the lot of Gaston Glass, the popular romantic actor of the screen. This tribute came to him in a letter of commendation from a prominent professor of one of the leading eastern colleges and was inspired by the fact that this savant found the influence of Mr. Glass' love-making on the screen was such as to aid him materially in his own efforts to arouse a greater degree of respect for the necessity of wholesome love, involving the elimination of the blasé spirit so rife among the rising generation of this rather fastidious age. "This offers one more proof that if the creators of motion picture entertainment will only embrace their opportunities, they can wield an influence for good in many directions," the professor writes. "A complete change in the attitude of the average young human being of this period towards matrimony must be brought about in order to combat the divorce evil which threatens the very institutions of government." Evidently, the love business is in a critical condition and needs some new captains. Now what Mr. Glass wants to know is, what's gone wrong with Daniel Cupid. "Is he on a vacation?" he asks blandly. You answer it.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's recent refusal to discontinue her stage work on account of illness because of her claim that she would die in the event she resigned herself to taking a complete rest, has aroused wide admiration among professionals in the Hollywood film colony. Leon Bary, now a resident of the picture capitol and a prominent figure on the American screen, was Lloyd Hughes, who declares Real Estate is the only kind of "Dirt" to Deal in Nowadays.

Mme. Bernhardt's leading man four consecutive seasons and he therefore understands her temperament about as well as anyone. "Mme. Bernhardt has always been the maximum in two things in particular, namely: her art and her fortitude," he says. "It is not surprising to me, therefore, that she is so determined to continue her efforts in the field she loves until the very last moment. This great dramatic star is what you Americans call 'game' in all the term implies."

Is a beautiful, young, unsophisticated girl in grave danger when she ventures to make her advent into motion pictures? Do they generally come to grief because of their coming in contact with undesirables holding high positions dictating the employment? Dorothy Manners, who is young and beautiful and who knew next to nothing about the world at large until she left her small-town home in Texas to try her luck in filmdom at Hollywood, answers both of these questions in the negative most emphatically. "It is all entirely dependent upon the girl and if she possesses the right kind of mind, she can have her full opportunity to achieve fame strictly on her merits without ever suffering to be insulted even once," she declares. "In all of my two years' endeavors in motion picture work, I have never been treated in an ungentlemanly manner by anyone, and, I have gone into most all of the studios unescorted, too." Miss Manners adds it is regrettable that certain magazines print stories to the effect that innocent, young girls are unsafe in the film field. "No girl is any more unsafe in a picture studio than she is in a textile factory," she concludes. Miss Manners' next notable screen appearances will be in support of Jack Pickford in "Garri-son's Finish" and in support of Shirley Mason in "Pawn Ticket 210."

The exodus of collegians from Yale to embrace cinema opportunities in Hollywood has become so marked that Murray Spencer, prominent among the ex-Yale men, has started the work of organizing what he calls the Yale Actors Club, the membership of which is to be composed of something like twenty former students of that famous institution. Spencer plans on drafting Maurice (Lefty) Flynn, at one time a Yale football star and now a screen star, to serve as president of his organization. "One of the purposes will be to instill some of the college 'pep' in picture circles with the idea of helping in the general progress of things," Mr. Spencer says.

Lloyd Hughes, whose latest screen triumph is scored as Mary Pickford's leading man in her new "Tess of the Storm Country," made a good point in an interview this week. He urges that every time anyone starts gossip on scandalous subjects, someone else arise and change the subject from "dirt" to real estate. "If more people would interest themselves in the great sport of investing savings in Southern California realty, this part of the world would be better off," he says. Mr. Hughes has been investing his profits in lots and houses for some time and only a fortnight ago made a purchase involving a consideration of $17,000.

Muriel Frances Dana, the four-year-old starlet of the screen, has an extraordinary Christmas present. It is a cat, which has presented itself to her despite all protestations and efforts to the contrary. This cat had been a pet around the Robertson-Cole studios and was used in a few scenes Baby Muriel appeared in recently in support of Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory." The feline took such a fancy to the juvenile artist that it followed her home in time to be counted among the Christmas gifts and no amount of persuasion can get the animal out of the idea of remaining right in the middle of the Dana family henceforth and longer than that if possible.

Does being a society girl help any in becoming a motion picture star? Very little, if any, according to Helen Kesler, who is among society's contributions to the cinema art. "I find the only thing that helps even one little tiny bit is talent," she says. "Of course it sometimes helps to know a little something about etiquette, but wherein there must be real knowledge has to do with dramatic proportions more than the proper gentility, portions." Miss Kesler, who is the daughter of a well-to-do manufacturer and as such moved in the highest society, got her screen training as leading lady to Jimmy Aubrey in Vitagraph comedies. Now she is appearing in "Souls For Sale," her second Rupert Hughes picture.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Film News of This Week You May Have Overlooked.

Little Julia Brown is again appearing with Lewis Sargent in the Scott Darling comedies.

Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "The Pilgrim," will be released within the next few weeks.

Seventy per cent of the pictures exhibited in France now are American-made, according to statistics just compiled.

Larry Semon, who will leave Vitagraph soon, has been signed to become a First National star, according to current reports. No confirmation is obtainable at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven have completed their comedy, "A Waggin' Tale," at the Powers Studios. Monty Brice is responsible for both the story and continuity.

Katherine MacDonald adds her denial to the long list a loquacious Dame Rumor has made necessary. Miss MacDonald declares she has not the remotest idea of getting married.

Japan will make a strong bid for supremacy in the production of motion pictures ere the year of 1923 is gone, according to the opinions of close observers. Two rather large studios are being built in Tokio now.

All jobless and needy actors and actresses in New York will be dined Christmas day at the Stage Door Inn there with "Mother" Allen, who is past 70 years old, acting as chaperone. There'll be a Christmas tree and everything that goes with it.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 18, 1922.—Eric Von Stroheim, Ernest Traxler, Ray Moore, and Ben Reynolds are in San Francisco looking for locations, and making arrangements for the filming in January of Frank Norris' big story, "McTeague."

Peter B. Kyne, author of the Saturday Evening Post stories soon to be filmed at the Paul Gerson Studios, was in town last week.

Jess Willard, well known to the screen and the prize-fight ring, spent a day in San Francisco last week. He was enroute to Portland, from there to go to New York to go into training for a fight.

Dallas M. Fitzgerald, director of the Belasco Productions, spent Sunday in San Francisco to be present at the preview of "Eyes of Love."

Isadore Bernstein has severed his connection with the West Coast Films and is in Los Angeles.

Bernard Durning was in San Francisco

Nola Luxford, leading support for Lawson Butt, is recuperating from an illness of several weeks duration. She will join Lawson Butt and his company in San Francisco the first of the year.

Harry J. Howard, formerly auditor for William S. Hart, has been appointed to fill a similar position in the office of Morris R. Schlank, president of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of Hollywood.

Leo McCary has been assigned to assist George Archainbaud in the direction of the Selznick screen version of Robert Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," in which Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle, and other players will be seen.

Progress on the filming of "Bella Donna" at the Lasky Studios has been slower than intended because of the indisposition of Pola Negri, the star, who is experiencing difficulty in becoming acclimated to Southern California weather.

The film industry of Germany has suffered almost a complete collapse as the result of unsettled political conditions. Less than fifteen percent of the motion picture studios in that country are being operated at all, according to the latest report.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the greatest dramatic actress the world has ever produced, collapsed this week at the close of a rehearsal in Paris and she is reported in a critical physical condition, her advanced age of 78 years being a handicap to her warding off an early crisis.

Seemingly authentic reports have it that Pauline Frederick is once more on the shoals of marital disaster. Dr. Rutherford whom she married last June, has returned to his home in Seattle, and close friends say that incompatibility has been responsible for the separation.

Myron Selznick has established a special still department composed of expert photographers. Shirley Vance Martin, well known art photographer, has been placed at the head of the department, and in addition to making regular production stills, will give portrait sittings to the various stars in Selznick productions, in an effort to supply the magazines with the right kind of material.

"The Beautiful and the Damned," the Warner Brothers adaptation of the F. Scott Fitzgerald novel, scored a hit on Broadway in New York. Critics praised it. One of them declares this picture contains "much more piquancy and nerve than usually graces photoplays."

The New York critics went after the Goldwyn $10,000 prize play, "Broken Chains," with hammer and tongs. One of the more caustic reviewers even went so far as to declare the story is not worth thirty cents. Nevertheless, "Broken Chains" looks like a money-maker at that. Adverse criticism has often kept adversities away from photoplays.

At the request of sportsmen all over the country, special previews of "The Hottentot" will be held for horseback riders in all the cities where Thomas H. Ince's comedy-drama special will be released shortly. Magnificent action flashes of the steeplechase in this picture, which were filmed at the cost of weeks of hard work with the assistance of a group of "gentlemen" riders, some of whom are nationally known, are said to be some of the finest ever brought to the screen. The release of the picture will be made a real event in sporting circles throughout the country, riders being given an opportunity to pass expert opinion on the work of sporting brothers who volunteered to ride in this big race "for the fun of the thing." "The Hottentot" in which Douglas MacLean and Madge Bellamy, play the leading roles, is Ince's film version of the stage play in which Willie Collier scored such a big hit.

Madge Bellamy Starts as Star

Madge Bellamy who has been signed by Regal Pictures Incorporated to star in a series of six pictures for Associated Exhibitors release has begun work in "The Tinsel Harvest," especially adapted for her from a story by Harold Shumate. John Bowers, who is featured with Miss Bellamy in Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone," recently released, will play the leading role. Other members of the cast include Hal Cooley, James Corrigan, Francelia Billington, Billy Bevan, Norris Johnson, Ethel Wales, Otis Harlan, Myrtle Vane, Arthur Millette and James Gordon. William Seiter is directing. All six of the Regal features will be produced on the lot of the Thomas H. Ince Studios.

Flashes from Frisco

last week buying ships for a big forthcoming Fox production to star Dustin Farnum. The cast will be announced on his return.

The Belasco Productions, Inc., wish their name withdrawn from the list of members of the San Francisco Producers Association as they have never been connected with it, owing to the fact that they really make their pictures in the south.

Clarence R. Nixon of Hollywood was among those present last week.

The Belasco Productions gave a preview of their new picture, "Eyes of Love," to about a hundred invited guests at the Royal Theatre on Sunday morning. Dallas M. Fitzgerald directed the picture and it has an all-star cast including Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchel Lewis, Kate Lester and Richard Tucker.

The San Francisco Producers Association have forwarded a copy of their recently adopted by-laws to Will H. Hays for his approval. They are working for the making of clean pictures in San Francisco by legitimate companies.

Ralph Proctor of the cinema world of Los Angeles spent a few days in San Francisco last week.

A Vitagraph company, directed by Dave Smith, is in San Francisco shooting some sea scenes for "Masters of Men." Cullen Landis will be featured in the picture with a cast including Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley, Bert Apling, Jack Curtis and Charlie Thurston. The work here will take about two weeks.

—Agnes Kerr Crawford.

Leon Bary, whose latest screen triumph is scored in Mabel Normand's "Suzanna," is the only actor to remain as Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's leading man four consecutive years.

THE NEW PEDAGOGUE

new policy is to produce only four pictures each year, but each one a masterpiece, dealing with the greatest topics of the year.

The first of this series of seven-reel, all-star cast, special features—

"THE GREATEST MENACE"

Exposing the Drug Evil

has just been completed and is now being edited and titled.

The second big feature—

"WHY DO WE LIVE"

is now being cast by Jack Livingston at the Fine Arts Studios, and discloses both sides of the question of new thought, spiritualism and capital punishment.

The third one of the series is a new and original version of showing the only logical solution to avoid wars and gain universal peace.

The fourth feature—

"GODS] FOR [SALE"

is dealing with religion as it is and as it is practiced. Each one of these four all-star cast special features is being adapted, produced, supervised and released personally by which more than 1,500 players appear and in which some of the "sets" are so large that even the largest megaphone does not serve to carry the director's voice to the ears in distant corners. The banquet hall "set" in King Richard's castle actually covered more ground than the Concourse in the Pennsylvania Station in New York City and it was not humanly possible to shout loud enough even through a gigantic megaphone to be heard by everyone in that "set." Nor was it in any way a possibility for Allan Dwan, the director, to make himself heard all over a tournament field large enough to accommodate 1,500 men and women together with scores of horses and to issue instructions to twelve assistant directors, some of whom were stationed as far as a quarter of a mile away from him. Therefore, when, before starting his directorial labors, he was apprised of the fact that he would have a radiophone system at his command, he exclaimed exultingly: "Blessed be the power of inventive genius!"

And, the upshot of it all was, whenever Director Dwan desired to issue an order to an assistant, he needed only to speak in an ordinary conversational tone into a radiophone and the man to whom he addressed his remarks heard it as if Dwan stood right beside him and in spite of the fact that the two were so far apart they could not make each hear the other though they might yell at the top of their voices without the magic power to utilize the air waves.

The saving in time and money the radiophone accomplished for the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios cannot be computed, but it amounted to many thousands of dollars per week. It saved so many steps that attaches heretofore accustomed to running around at top speed all day found it necessary to take some physical exercise at the close of each working day. It created a condition of convenience so complete and flawless that one man—the producer—can sit in his office and talk to everybody on a "lot" of a score of acres simultaneously.

Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks jointly brand the radiophone as one of the greatest improvements added to the art of making photoplays in the history of the industry.

branches of the film business make it a point to report the identity of every dope peddler familiar to them. There need be no fear on the part of the one making the report, and, let everyone realize now that it would be a fallacy to protect any dope peddler because he happened to play the part of "a good fellow." It makes absolutely no difference who or what any man is, if he has sold or is selling narcotics illegally, he belongs in prison and he has not the slightest vestige of a right to his freedom to move in and out of society, blazing a trail of moral disaster. Camera! ventures the assertion that if every person in the picture field having any knowledge of the activities of various individuals implicated in the selling of narcotics performs his duty, the police would be able to take into custody a majority percentage of the offenders in one raid. True, there has started already an exodus of these criminals for parts unknown, but there are many who can suggest the trail which leads to those said parts. Conclusively, it is a time of crucial test. Enforcement of the law must be the paramount issue and there can be no regard as to whom such an enforcement hits. Above all, the use of drugs in any form must be stopped not only within the film world, but all the "worlds" adjacent to it. The most effective way to stop it is to make it impossible for anyone to secure drugs illegally. Individual information could aid materially in accomplishing this highly desirable end.

Meanwhile Wallace Reid has been staging a valiant fight to rid himself of the habit. He has been lying at the point of death for days in a Hollywood sanitarium, but he has been admirably persistent in his insisting that he shall win. Like most everyone else who ever became a victim of this habit, Mr. Reid was the mark of vicious influences wielded with impunity by breakers of the law. Once he was started on the precarious pathway downward, there were always plenty of dope peddlers in close proximity to him to keep him supplied with the poison and to take much of his money therefor. Now the point is, if these foul despoilers of human happiness can keep so close to their prey for such prolonged periods of time, why, through the assistance of the many possible informants, cannot the authorities make quick work of getting close enough to them to apprehend them?

Mr. Hays, in sincere sympathy with Mr. Reid, visited the popular actor at his bedside last Tuesday and encouraged him in his struggles to become master of himself. Although Mr. Reid was so extremely weak as to be unable to speak in normal tones, he cheerily whispered a "Merry Christmas" to the director general of filmdom. Jesse L. Lasky and William de Mille accompanied Mr. Hays on this visit and each voiced confidence to Wally in his ability to emerge victor.

The religious forces of Los Angeles and environs were not slow in getting into the limelight. One of the first moves on the part of the ministers was to demand a most searching investigation with aims of discovering who is responsible for the amazing growth of drug-using. This is a move in the right direction if it will be properly pursued, because the men and women who actually deliver the small portions of drugs each addict uses are not the ones whose removal would stop the traffic. Their incarceration would only leave the higher-ups free to engage the services of other peddlers later when this storm subsides. The place to make the real start is at the top—right where the ministers suggest—at the top where abide the men with sufficient capital and ingenuity to keep large consignments of various narcotics coming into the country constantly. It is probable the biggest of these higher-ups will be found in New York, but there are at least several of them right in Southern California. Ordinary deducing makes this patent.

After learning of the action of the ministerial group, Mr. Hays issued the following statement:

"My attention has been called to the action taken by the ministers of the city, in which they requested me to use my best endeavors in the matter of a proposed investigation of any traffic in narcotics that may exist in this community:

"I will do all I can, of course, to assist in any investigation sponsored by City Council, the courts or any other authority that will reveal conditions that should be remedied and I will be glad to join any responsible groups in helping, in any way I can, any phase of the situation."

"The motion picture industry, of course, is in full sympathy with the announced purpose of stopping any traffic in narcotics that may exist in this community.

"In this effort, as in every other effort for right things, the industry will co-operate in every possible way with those in authority and those who have the matter in charge.

"I am sure the constituted authorities will take care of the situation, whatever it is, and we will be very glad to help."

There is gratifying reassurance in the voluntary declarations of determination in all quarters of filmdom to co-operate to the maximum limit to destroy the drug traffic.

It all accentuates the fact that the present war is the most potential, most promising of any ever waged on any foe of humanity.

Note these Suggestions from Your Public

The eternal problem of producer, director and star is the determination of what kind of pictures the public wants. One fact is certain: The public has decided opinions on the matter.

HERE are a few comments by film enthusiasts which seem to clearly indicate a trend of thought. They may represent the voice of an active minority, but do they?

Read what they say. Then see if the indications of change in national habits and tastes do not closely conform to these expressions. America is gradually swinging back from the immediate and regrettable influences of the war to the normal, sane and wholesome things of life.

The motion picture should have taken the lead, but failing to lead it must now follow. The opportunity, the greatest which has ever come to the motion picture industry, was almost entirely overlooked. Unfortunate! Now the call is no longer an appeal, it is a demand.

Sane, wholesome drama—true to life and stripped of superficiality—is what Americans want.

We can supply stories of this kind—strong well-knit stories from the minds and imaginations of typical Americans. They contain fresh, new viewpoints and include every type of story which is worthy of your consideration.

A representative will gladly discuss with you the stories which are now available.

Dear Sir:

I do not hail from Missouri, nevertheless I am a firm believer in demonstration. Will someone please tell me what the object of _____ really was? I admit my stupidity. If some noble thought or teaching was struggling for expression could it not have been expressed minus the probability of an "insult" to any nation? An American may be broad minded and still object to the presentation on the screen of immorality, especially when it would seem to have no motive. It is the bright, wholesome and uplifting picture that we need.

Dear Sir:

For a long time I have wished to protest against the frightful superficiality of _____ productions.

Dear Sir:

I was never more disappointed in a picture than I was when I went trustingly into the _____ Theater of this city and saw _____ in _____.

The story had absolutely nothing in common with the book. The atmosphere of the world was entirely missing—even the incidental happenings were different. The hero in the picture was no more _____ the part than _____ the director.

For instance, in the blood-and-thunder films. Every time I see my favorite actor risking his life doing stunts, I lose my interest in the picture. Why can't we have sane, sensible stories, with people behaving like human beings, instead of going through those breath-taking adventures and barely escaping deaths scores of times?

I have a warm spot in my heart for the films and the players; they have done me so much good, and have kept me healthy and happy. And let us have more of the best of things.

Snappy New Year! May You Step Lively to Joy and Plenty

Welcome to our fair film city, 1923! May this be a year of general personal participation in the proposition of "peppy" progress!

It is with a deep sense of gratification that CAMERA! calls attention to the generally conceded fact that the motion picture screen is doing its full share to lead the people in the right direction by furnishing incentive for thoughtful reflection upon the great variety of subjects the new conditions bring to the foreground. Indeed, the movies deserve unstinted praise for taking the initiative in issuing propaganda which is unique. The fitting shadows of the screen do more to arouse the public to a harmonious attitude of thinking for themselves as a powerful unit than any other agency. Verily, it is little short of remarkable, is the influence wielded for good. Pictorial lessons plus diverting animation could not fail to be impressive, and the photoplay art has not failed in many things. The new year of 1923 finds this art holding an ideal strategic position and ready to multiply its useful efforts under the benign spell of encouragement so universally bestowed by governments as well as people.

It was the legend, which, according to tradition, appeared on a flaming cross in the sky to the Roman Emperor, Constantine I, before his battle with Maxentius, that gave to posterity the imperishable battle-cry: IN HOC SIGNO VINCES. There is an augmented fitness in the application of this to present-day history. 'Twas truly in the sign of the flaming cross that the millions arose in their righteous might to vanquish the menace of 1914. The unswerving faith of free men in the principle of Christianity supplied the strength which overwhelmed warring foes. It was necessary to accomplish the near-impossible in order to stay the mad cohorts of a madder monarch, but the feat was performed with consummate efficiency and reassuring celerity. It seemed to be decreed by the Supreme Power that the advent of the next new year (1919) should be marked by signal triumph such as would preserve the peace so many of us thought had vanished irrevocably. The hysteria which led some people to think that such a war meant the end of the world was never founded on anything more substantial than superstition. Could we ask for better proof of the durability and logic of the right than is furnished in the beacon light of the year of 1923, just come? We have stronger reason than ever for adhering to our belief in the sublime wisdom of holding before us the flaming cross.

Yes, it is exceedingly bright, is the future of the screen. Most everything is in its favor at last. True, a few untoward conditions can seriously retard its progress, but there is a reassuring tendency to discontinue haphazard disposals of all the problems arising as a result of the truly rapid development of this whale among whales. The twelve-month branded 1923 promises to be a memorable record-breaker in more ways than one, and the devotees to the cinema art can depend upon having increased pleasure and benefit. Unscrupulous producers and unwholesome photoplays will probably gasp their last respective breaths in this new year. The public is very determined on doing its share towards emancipating the glorious silver sheet from inglorious exhibitions. We doubt if fans would ever again go to see the kind of moving pictures they used to "break their necks" to witness simply because they knew they were sensational. In fact, sensationalism has ceased to be the money-maker it used to be and there is every prospect of its becoming a dead issue in the science of making film. All the old favorites, as well as all of the newcomers in the field, seem to be in accord on the general subject of the desirability of appearing only in photoplays which are wholesome. Some producers do not seem to be quite so much in tune, but the big leaders evince a realization of the demands of the times and, therefore, they may be depended upon to set an example which the smaller fellows will be obliged to follow if they wish to remain in the business at all. Two or three rich producers still act as if they have not generated enough power to resist the temptation of smearing the screen with bits of unclean literature, but they are being "talked to" seriously by a determined people. There is evidence of the coming of more intelligence and a greater business acumen, too. We heard only recently that one prominent film manufacturer was investigating the system through which the great American steel industry was developed. This sounds promising, for there is no reason why there should be such an outstanding lack of sound business judgment exercised in the moving picture business. The possibilities for the production of notable screen triumphs were never so great as now and it seems certain we will soon see and recognize a real photoplay literature. Some master minds are working out plans for the introduction of stories which can be described truthfully as typical of the motion picture works only, and the day of presenting the inferior works of celebrities will surely go when it is once proven that almost countless unfamed geniuses can supply better material for the purpose in hand. Taken all in all the year of 1923 can be rightfully termed the ideal year for the newcomer with real ideas. Traditions will not amount to a straw any more. Henceforth it will be so that if John Doe, of Arkansas, can write a better story for the screen than the most eminent novelist of the day, Doe shall be the man. Up to now conditions have not been conducive to such a healthy open-door policy as this, but Father Time has exerted some influence for amelioration in Filmiland, too. Yes, the outlook is very good and we have no doubt as to the future greatness of the photoplay art.

It is hinted that politicians are going to use the screen extensively in their campaign of 1924. Or, are they going to misuse the screen?

Four-Year-Old Faces 1923 with Confident "Hello"

Muriel Frances Dana, four-year-old starlet of the screen, says she will phone her New Year's greetings to all her friends. It's some job she has taken upon herself, because she has thousands of friends in Los Angeles alone. She will make personal appearances at the Pantages Theatre during the week beginning January 8th as an added attraction to "The Forgotten Law," in which she plays a principal role.

Happy Endings

By DONALD H. CLARKE

Some persons like their breakfast eggs soft, some like them medium, and some like them hard. And some persons like the endings of their plays happy, and some like them sad. If there are any champions of the medium ending they haven't made much noise.

Show some folk a final fade-out of the hero and heroine doing a stationary version of the old-fashioned Bunny Hug, with a touch of Soul Kiss tossed in for good measure, and they'll be likely to say, "That's the trouble with the movies; they're not true to life; life is sad." Show others the hero dying, as comfortably as he can with a heroine leaking glycerine tears all over his make-up, and it's not at all certain they won't remark, "Aint that a shame! Life is sad enough without having to pay your good money at the box office for the privilege of being made sadder."

Of course, it isn't set down as a steel-armored fact that everyone thinks life is sad, but the conviction that it is, appears to be smeared thickly enough over the landscape for present purposes. And, anyhow, perhaps it is true that life is sad. What of it? Many sad life experiences have happy endings; and a warm hour of sunshine at the end of a soggy, dreary day is worth a hundred hours of the same medicine during a cloudless month.

The true story of Miss Winifred Kimball, of Appalachiola, Fla., is an illustration. It might be worth while repeating at this time because a motion picture of which she is the author, and with which she won a $10,000 first prize among 32,000 contestants, thus bringing a happy ending to the very real tragedies of her life, now is being shown on the screen. If for no other reason, this picture, "Broken Chains," is of unusual interest because, dramatic as it is, it is no more dramatic than the story of Miss Kimball, which it has made known to the public.

Get the setting. Miss Kimball's father, a wealthy contractor of Chicago, having lost his fortune, had sent a bullet through his brain. Miss Kimball had gone to live with her sister, Mrs. Alexander, in Appalachicola. Within a few weeks, Mrs. Alexander's husband, a distinguished physician, had killed himself. The two sisters—except for Lavinia Henry, a faithful old Southern "Mammy"—were left alone in the world. Their future looked mighty dark, as about all that could be seen on the horizon were over-due taxes, mortgages and bills of all descriptions.

Then Miss Kimball read of the motion picture contest which was announced by the Chicago Daily News and Goldwyn. Hoping that she might be fortunate enough to win one of the smaller rewards she wrote "Broken Chains," some of its strongest situations having been suggested by incidents in her own life. The manuscript was sent in with the name of Lavinia Henry signed as author, and accompanied by the prayers of the three women.

There isn't much else to say, except that when the check for $10,000 arrived in Ap-

Meaning of the Roscoe Arbuckle Controversy

Unbiased Analysis of the General Public Opinion Concerning the Proposed Return of the Fat Comedian to the Screen.

A CRIMONIOUS controversies always run riotously wild in their inception and the ado started by Will Hays granting Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle a pardon and a chance to return to the pursuit of his screen career was no exception. But now with the passing of a week, the disconcerting affair is simmering down to a basis where it may be gauged somewhat. Wild threats and wild intimations of retaliations are succumbing to better-tempered reasoning and there are indications that within the next fortnight, the topic will not be deemed of sufficient interest to occupy front-page space of newspapers.

The outstanding developments of the latter part of this week seems to be decidedly favorable to Arbuckle. The well-known and time-honored American spirit of giving every mortal another chance is asserting itself and an honest survey of the official and public sentiments wherever divulged in various parts of the country is convincing of the fairness of the conservative estimate that sixty per cent of the expressions of opinions bespeak generosity in behalf of the fat comedian. "Give him a chance," is the answer being repeated in high and lowly places. At the same time there is little disposition to scold the churchmen for their zealous efforts to prevent "Fatty" in his proposed attempt to realize his fondest ambition.

The ministerial group of Los Angeles is fighting him more bitterly than any group in any other section and Dr. Gustav Briegleb as well as Rev. Robert Shuler offer some logical argument against permitting the come-back. These two gentlemen are staging a valiant battle to persuade their city law-makers to see the proposition as they do and they are unquestionably honest in their declarations of fears for the morals of the public if Arbuckle does succeed in regaining the prestige which was his before the unfortunate death of Virginia Rappe.

However, it is interesting to note that clergymen in many of the leading eastern cities are apathetic towards the subject and evince no signs of planning any determined fights to bring about a prohibition of Arbuckle pictures in their communities. It had been expected by some of the more pessimistic prophets that churchmen everywhere would rebel as a single unit most actively. No such widespread harmony has manifested itself as yet.

Strange as it may seem, a majority of the state and city censors of motion pictures are either openly firm in refusing to participate in the campaign being waged to defeat Arbuckle or are issuing statements to the effect that they regard it as their sole duty to judge the moral merits of a picture production and not to dabble in the question as to a picture actor's past record. A typical instance of this attitude is given by the Board of Theatre Censors of Seattle, Washington, where Arbuckle's films will be passed on the same as anyone else's in the future as in the past.

Arbuckle himself added fuel to the flames this week by issuing a statement in which he asked one striking question, namely: "Is religion a thing of claws and teeth?" He was actuated in making this query by the energetic manner in which the Los Angeles church leaders "went after his scalp." The comedian seems to be deeply hurt on account of the persistency with which his opponents assail him and he is wondering why he should be denied the opportunity to make atonement for any indiscretions he may have committed. He feels the tragic death of Miss Rappe cannot be held as a cause warranting his being ostracized since a jury of his peers in open court not only declared he was guiltless of any crime, but had been done a great injustice by over-zealous authorities who had forced him to suffer the ordeal of being tried on such a serious charge, which charge is established forever in court records as totally baseless.

Straw votes on the Arbuckle question have become a popular fad throughout the nation, and, according to newspaper reports, Arbuckle receives a majority of the votes in practically every case. There are other evidences of the public holding to the doctrine of fair play, interpreting the phrase to mean that Roscoe Arbuckle is as much entitled to it as anyone.

On the other hand, there are plenty of city officials everywhere thoroughly sympathetic with the reform forces now striving to force Arbuckle to remain in retirement. Mayor George E. Cryer of Los Angeles is among those loudest in his expressions of objections to the Hays edict. Executives in especially cities of the mid-west are also decreeing against the resumption of exhibiting the pictures of this actor in their cities. Women's clubs are conspicuous among the forces marshalled to thwart the come-back.

Meanwhile Will Hays stands pat. He has reiterated his contention that Arbuckle deserves a chance after a year of irreproachable living. The fact that Mr. Hays flatly refuses to rescind his order lifting the ban has had the effect of diverting much of the attack from the comedian to the Czar of Filmdom. Many mildly express disappointment, but many others are bitter in their hurling of angry accusations at the former postmaster general. Those who know Mr. Hays best declare he is of the type of executive who convinces himself he is right first and then stands on that conviction to the end. In a polite telegram to Mayor Cryer he declared his full confidence in his judgment being right in the Arbuckle case, which means that so far as Mr. Hays is concerned, there will be no further obstacles placed in Arbuckle's way.

Now, properly focused under the microscope of unprejudiced analysis, what does the whole Arbuckle situation mean and what is the most likely final result?

In the first place, it is patent Roscoe Arbuckle will never again have the general following he once had. For instance, probably a large percentage of any one clergyman's parishioners used to go to theatres to laugh at Arbuckle's clever clowning. A very small percentage, if any, will go to see his pictures henceforth. This means Arbuckle will be a weak attraction in communities where the church element is entrenched strongly.

In the second place, there are enough curiosity-seekers and genuine habitual sympathizers in this country to somewhat counteract any loss of patronage. There will be thousands of men and women clamoring to get into theatres showing his films and many of these thousands probably never saw his animated likeness before.

In the third place, there is little danger of Arbuckle injuring the cinema as an honorable art. Likewise there is little possibility of his helping to advance its best interests very much from the uplift standpoint it makes no difference how clean his future pictures might be since he will continue to be more of an influence one way or the other than the story in which he plays a leading character.

In the fourth place, the aforesaid American spirit of fair play to all will surely tend to insure him adequate means of earning a livelihood as a screen star despite any efforts of any ministerial group to deter him. He will ever be a target for at least desultory verbal hot-shots, but gradually time will work its wonders in producing the inevitable lull born of sheer exhaustion.

In the fifth and last place, Roscoe Arbuckle and his precarious experiences stand as an impressive object lesson to every man and woman in any line of endeavor. That object lesson is stated rather strikingly by a Chicago clergyman, conceded to be very broad-minded since he is among those in favor of giving the comedian a chance to come back and redeem himself. Here are the exact words of this assenting churchman: "The lesson all should learn from Mr. Arbuckle's case, and, when I say all I mean especially all those engaged in the picture business, is, DON'T TAKE THE CHANCE HE DID. DON'T LIVE SO AS TO BE VULNERABLE TO SUCH A FATE AS HAS BEEN HIS BITTER LOT. DON'T RISK YIELDING TO THE TEMPTATIONS SO RIFE IN FIELDS WHERE THERE IS PROSPERITY. DON'T BE FOOLISH!"

Most of the more influential captains of the film industry are openly backing Arbuckle and in some cases rather vitriolic denunciations of the campaign being waged against him have been issued. Carl Laemmle, head of Universal, is among those who has little patience with the reform elements seeking to bar the actor from future activities. Mr. Laemmle says in part:

"It is inconceivable that in a land whose cardinal principles are fair play and liberty there should be so many who are ready to condemn Fatty Arbuckle and drive him forever from the only business he knows. A court has found him not guilty of charges on which he was arrested. Why shouldn't that alone settle the case?"

"Why discriminate against Arbuckle? The American public forgot and forgave the charges that once were made against one of the world's greatest singers. It forgot and forgave charges brought against one of America's comedians. It forgot and forgave charges against one of the greatest of sport promoters.

"They were acquitted and the public accepted the acquittal at full face value and took the singer, the comedian and the promoter back to its heart. Why not give Arbuckle an equal chance? He has brought joy to millions. Give him a fair chance to do it again.

"In the eyes of the law he has done nothing."

Why So Many Artists Leave the Stage for Pictures

According to Alan Hale, who is a close observer and a thorough-going student, the stage would be practically deserted if there was room for all the actors on the screen. He says he knows very few dramatic or comedy artists, still earning their livelihood before the foot-lights, who would not accept a first reasonable offer to join the ranks of the exponents of the cinema art. And, there are many exceedingly interesting reasons.

Primarily, the moving picture is as yet new enough to provide unbounded novelties; real chances to get away from the monotony of long-set stage methods. In the movies the actor is always doing something different, because there is ever ample latitude for such variety. Space and change of scenery alone insure perennial shifting such as keeps the interest whetted to a keen edge while the limited action and scenic back-ground which is possible behind the proscenium arch keeps the efforts of the artists performing there down to a certain, definite limitation. Therefore, one outstanding reason who so many actors have rushed pell-mell into pictures is the prospect of more freedom; more space; more possibility of doing something different.

"When I discovered how small is the largest stage compared with the locale which a motion picture camera will photograph, I decided there and then to hasten away from the limited area to the emancipation afforded in the all outdoors so much a favorite of film producers," Mr. Hale says. "However, after establishing myself as a screen actor, I was persuaded back on the stage and this latter experience served the good purpose of making me once for all convinced that the only field for me was Southern California, where photoplays are made."

Another reason of first importance for the readiness of so many actors to rush into the cinema fold is the promise of residing in one place permanently and thus being enabled to enjoy real home life as those in other pursuits do. The stake makes nomads of all who tread its boards while the screen makes good, old-fashioned home-bodies out of the artists. The best proof of the avidity with which these professionals embrace the opportunities to live in homes of their own is the marvelous upbuilding of Hollywood as one of the largest and greatest suburban residential districts in the United States. A large percentage of the finer houses as well as the almost countless bungalows belong to film folk, and, verily, they live within them with a zest.

"One of the first moves I made after getting into pictures was to purchase a real, honest-to-goodness home in Hollywood, a home where my wife could be contented and comfortable pursuing the natural proclivities of the happy house-wife and a little nest where we could rear properly our little Alan, Junior," Mr. Hale says. "And, I am just like scores of others in my profession in this regard. We of this line aspire to give our children the same advantages as any other children have and know an orderly home constitutes a first requisite."

Mr. Hale adds a strong denial to the oft-repeated charge of scandal-mongers that most screen actors use their homes chiefly to stage wild parties. Anyone who is familiar with life in Hollywood knows the wild-life idea has been exaggerated grossly. A stroll or motor trip through the various Hollywood residence streets most any day will reveal great stars out in their yards in overalls 'tending the lawn or doing little chores, thus giving eloquent demonstration of their happiness to be in the midst of wholesome home life.

Still another interesting reason why the work afforded by the film-making industry is appreciated by the artist is, it aids digestion! It may not be well known by the public in general, but it is nevertheless a fact that the most common physical ailment among stage folk centers in the stomach and is due inevitably to the manner of eating their life forces them into. While "on the road" they are ever on changing diets and expediency forces irregular hours for appeasing the appetite. The result is, a stomach trouble sooner or later for most of them, and, one noted specialist only recently made himself more noted by declaring there was more dyspepsia among stage artists than in any other group of people. However, once established in Southern California as an active interpreter of characters before the picture camera, the actor or actress forthwith starts eating like any other normal human being—in a home and at regular hours and the food is uniformly good.

"Few human stomachs are immune to the bane of always grabbing a bite on the run to catch trains and a year's life in Hollywood is the best cure extant for all the disorders an actor may have contracted as a result of such unwise eating," Mr. Hale says.

Then, last but not least, the screen is attractive to all talented performers because salaries are larger and there is more chance of saving some of the money. The living in one place and being thus able to dodge the extorting processes always strewn across the path of the traveler serve to make possible the fattening of bank accounts. "You don't have to tip the maid or butler you hire to serve you in your own home," is the pointed way Mr. Hale expresses it. And, that's the story in a nutshell so far as the pecuniary side of it is concerned.

Now can you blame those legions of clever people who have rushed away from the stage and onto the screen for their rushing?

Alan Hale and his dog, Pete. The dog, by the way, is missing from home for the third time in three months. It was a gift to the actor from Peter B. Kyne, the Author.

Some of the Alleged "Dumb Bells" of Filmdom

By RAY H. LEEK

Some wise journalist once remarked that good news always was bad news. In other words, that destructive news was the most interesting, which prompts me to offer the exception and prove the rule.

Helen Klumph, that engaging writer on persons and things having to do with the screen, recently toured the studios of the West Coast film capital with the avowed intention of finding and interviewing that much advertised personage—the beautiful dumb belle.

But—here's the surprise of the tour—she failed to find the dumb belle. Helen announced she found beauty and brains, that she often found both qualities in one and the same person, that she found hardly a screen player of any repute who could not have won fame and fortune in some other line of endeavor had they chosen so to do.

At the risk of anticipating some of the interesting productions of her busy type-writer, I will paragraph a few of her discoveries. Miss Klumph says that—

Katherine MacDonald, declared to be the most beautiful woman in America, might have attained fame as a designer and sketch artist.

Tom Forman is almost as gifted an actor and writer as he is a director.

Cullen Landis is a mechanic of no mean ability, having assembled the automobile he drives.

Barbara LaMarr spent all her leisure while working in "The Hero" writing an original screen story soon to be filmed.

Victor Schertzinger was a composer of national repute before he became a picture director, having two musical comedies and several successful songs to his credit.

Gasnier has a quaint sense of humor that would have proved a valuable literary asset had he not chosen the speaking stage, then the screen, and then the directorial field.

B. P. Schulberg was advertising writer, scenarioist and promising writer of stories before he became a producer.

Rex Ingram considers the making of pictures a side line to his work as a sculptor. Fred Niblo's name is well known among scientists through his reports of explorations in darkest Africa.

"It is an interesting thing to think of dumb belles in pictures, because we know picture players best through their pleasing appearance," said Miss Klumph. "But what business or profession has claimed as many versatile men and women as the screen?"

Penrhyn Stanlaws, the magazine artist—

picture director, who recently concluded a contract with Famous Players, has attracted considerable attention to himself by making public an analytical study of the current screen beauties. And the creator of "The Stanlaws Girl" has spared nobody in pointing out everything from a cranium that he says is placed too far forward to give a certain star opportunity to work her jaws, to ankles that are too plump for anything approaching grace.

A measure of joy may have been brought to the hearts of the beauties thus assailed by a review that appeared the same day that the Stanlaws onslaught was published, which sets forth that, "About the worst dramatic film of the year is Penrhyn Stanlaws' production, 'Singed Wings.'" The critic thereupon elaborates on the flaws of Mr. Stanlaws' picture in much the same vein as does Mr. Stanlaws, in another column, denounce the feminine players with whom he has been working.

Those logical persons who love to put two and two together may find some significance in the two articles. Possibly Mr. Stanlaws is showing why his pictures have been no better. Or, perhaps, the screen beauties may attribute their failure to appear at better advantage in his productions to faulty direction.

THE SILENT TREND

There is every indication of a most lively 1923 so far as cinema entertainment is concerned. The white feather has not shown itself in any quarter of this great amusement industry as yet, despite all of the burdens and hardships of the trying Reconstruction Period. The public mind must have its diversion and, therefore, the captains who steer the Ship of Photoplay must do their share towards providing this in wholesome abundance. Apparently all the leaders in the field are well aware of their obligations, and they are proceeding accordingly. As a consequence it is possible to announce now that the motion picture features to be released henceforth until next spring will be as nearly what the times demand as can be realized. We have had occasion recently to discuss the situation with practically all of the leading producers, and we find them standing pat to the man on policies of expansion and increased activities. Business has been exceedingly lively throughout the early winter weeks, and this is taken to presage a veritable rush when the regular 1923 season opens. During the past few weeks studios here have been scenes of gigantic efforts to complete a sufficient stock of better pictures to meet the demands of better tastes during the forthcoming months of coal-shoveling and fretting over the numerous problems created by economic difficulties. It will be virtually a clean slate the film concerns will offer the photoplay-goers and the day of reissues seems doomed. There are numerous reasons why the general public henceforth should support the screen to a greater extent than ever, and one of the principal reasons is, the screen is an absolute essential to mental and physical recreation. It is to be hoped that persons who formerly went to the movies once a week will be able to treat themselves at least twice in the same period hereafter. This is obviously for their own good, and, simultaneously, it will give fresh impetus to the perfection of this most democratic form of entertainment and enlightenment. Forsooth, the cinema art should be embraced with an avidity equal to that characteristic of the Americans in clinging to the free press. Both are agencies for unlimited good and both should have every opportunity to continue making good. A splendid slogan would be, "Read and see a movie daily."

Marshall Neilan's new picture, "Minnie," has fared well in its preview showings before the leading critics of the country and the consensus of opinion seems to be that the prolific Mickey has scored another tally which will enhance his reputation as a good provider of screen morsels. Some of the critics are openly enthusiastic over this feature while many others are little less reserved in their warm praise. An example of this latter class of reviews is afforded by the Exhibitors Trade Review, which says: "This film is somewhat of a novelty or at any rate it affords a theme which is just a little different from the majority of themes—it is a happy combination of comedy and drama with a rather unusual romance and many bright spots running through the story that should easily provide laughs enough for all." Mr. Neilan not only wrote the story of "Minnie," but is responsible for the scenario as well. Leatrice Joy, who plays the title role, stands revealed as more than simply a first-class actress—she demonstrates her ability as a make-up artist of the first rank,

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

One of the most reassuring tendencies with us as the New Year dawns is that of producers to make their films more and more non-political and non-sectarian in even slight inferences.

Never was the future so promising for independent production and it seems to be one of the current fads to organize new producing units for the independent market. At least fifteen new concerns will start activities with the New Year.

The avidity with which producers embrace opportunities to give film versions of popular and even unpopular novels is not abating much as yet, but there are plenty of wisecracks who claim they can prove the original story is bound to come into its own ere 1923 is gone.

Pioneer firms, often rumored to be approaching the shoals of financial disaster in recent times, are giving convincing evidence of being revived rather than deprived. Vitagraph is a notable instance of this. Meanwhile such veterans in the game as Pathe and Metro are actually expanding instead of shrinking. All signs of the times are encouraging for a general prosperity.

True, it is an era of verbal controversies between competing producers, but this is to be expected in any big industry. Many men forget that time alone works out the settling process of a great new structure! Another point to bear in mind always is, parties of both sides of a dispute can be more or less right and justified in their contentions.

because in making herself appear as the "ugliest girl in town" in conformity with the demands of this story, she achieves a triumph with the aid of grease paints, a triumph all the more notable for the reason that she is naturally far from being ugly in any way. "Minnie," as a photoplay, looks like another good answer to those still prone to accuse producers of seeking the salacious on every possible occasion: "Minnie" is as wholesome entertainment as can be imagined.

Universal has contributed a quite excellent picture to the current screen in "For-saking All Others," the direction of which was well done by Emile Chautard. This story centers around a mother, but gets away from the much-used mother love theme to an equally human one in the form of mother jealousy, a jealousy mothers often manifest when their children grow to maturity and evince preferences for other interests. In this case the mother strives with undue zeal to hold her son for herself and in so doing creates suspenseful situations because of that son's love for a most winsome girl. In fact, this picture is a study in well-conceived and well-executed complications, most of which are worked out logically. Cullen Landis as the son and Colleen Moore as the girl divide high honors while May Wallace is acceptable as the mother. David Torrence, Sam DeGrasse and June Elvidge are others in the cast deserving of special mention for fine performances.

Thomas H. Ince has accomplished one unusual feat in his film version of Willie Collier's stage hit, "The Hottentot," inasmuch as he has made it a veritable whirlwind of action such as keeps audiences gasping for breath. At times it seems the pace set by the characters is beyond the limit of human laws of quick comprehension. No doubt many splendid points will be overlooked by the average audience because of the swiftness with which they come and go. However, "The Hottentot" is one of those films for which there is constant demand and it is so well played that it will not fail to register favorably with the majority. Douglas MacLean plays the leading role, but Raymond Hutton gives him a race for first honors while Madge Bellamy occupies third place in the credits. James W. Horne, who directed this picture for Mr. Ince, gives evidence of possessing the happy faculty of keeping story values in the foreground while busily engaged in keeping many important things moving in the background.

Old-fashioned melodrama threatens to become the newest fad of the screen and the Vitagraph production of "The Ninety and Nine," time-honored and time-worn as the prototype of "East Lynne" and "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," seems sure of contributing much to the rejuvenation of the popularity of hair-raising thrillers wherein the mortgage on the old farm counts so frightfully. There is plenty of room for doubts of the advisability of producers fagging the brains out trying to discover or develop new thrills when old-time writers such as Ramsay Morris supplied all this excess of them. Yet it is quite possible the public will be "fed up" quickly on this sort of screen fare. It will be a better indication of true progress if originality is given a little more latitude instead of concentrating on hackneyed old-timers. The familiar story unfolded in "The Ninety and Nine," including the sad affairs of the falsely accused hero, the villain with a ridiculous black moustache and the heroine's whose stern parents make her shimmy with nervousness, is not the kind of a story worthy of encouragement if there is to be serious effort to create such a thing as screen literature, a "community" capable of standing on its legs without the aid of antiquated plots. Incidentally let it be impressed now—there is not the least semblance of a public clamor for more of these oft-repeated mellerdrainers.

New York critics are quite unrestrained in their expressions of admiration for Marie Prevost as a result of her excellent performance in "The Beautiful and Damned." A fair specimen of the kind of praise she is eliciting just now is the following contained in the New York Morning Telegraph's review of that picture: "Marie Prevost has a startling combination of the charm of an ingenue and the instincts of a very fine actress. She is like the girl of the book, but a great deal more interesting."

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, DEC. 30, 1922.

DANGER LURKING IN LULL IN DRUG WAR IS POINTED OUT

Earnest advocates of a relentless war to a finish against the traffic in drugs are alarmed over the surprising lull in the public interest in the very recent expose of the dangerous proportions to which the narcotic habit had grown, and, genuine concern is felt over the tardiness on the part of the authorities in the work of apprehending dope peddlers and higher-ups. No notable arrests had been made at the end of the first week of the great war against this bane to society and it seems the scores of men and women involved in the lucrative trade of supplying addicts with various kinds of drugs in Southern California have had a comparative easy time of it getting out of the way while the storm rages, according to several leaders in the film world who are particularly anxious to co-operate in the task of stamping out the scourge.

It is pointed out that there is always grave danger in permitting a lull in such a case, because it is during lulls that criminals "fix themselves securely out of reach." Already there has been enough lull to give every dope peddler in the Los Angeles field plenty of time to get into the interior of Mexico. However, it is understood that several of the more notorious dealers in these vicious wares still linger around their usual haunts, rather brazen in their flouting of the idea of any interference coming to them. This leads to the inclination to wonder on the part of the uninitiated since it seems to indicate there is such a thing as protection being provided by influential forces much higher up. Some persons, said to be well informed on events and affairs in Hollywood, assert that drugs have been illegally distributed and sold within the film colony even during the last week in the midst of all the storm of protest. If this is true, it will be regarded generally as intolerable, and, action must be forthcoming without delay.

It is well known that the authorities encounter all kinds of difficulties in gathering evidence against suspects even though they are cock-sure they are breaking the law. Right now the officials have the names of a dozen traffickers in this illicit business, but it is impossible to get enough evidence to insure a conviction once they are haled into court. The drug ring is composed of exceedingly shrewd men, who have covered their tracks so cleverly that it is next to impossible to take them into custody with any degree of assurance of being able to send them to prison. This predominating shrewdness presents a condition hard to overcome, but the consensus of opinion among moving picture people is that the way must be found to make a clean sweep of it and to rid this community of the drug evil in its entirety even though revolutionary methods must be pursued.

"This thing of being awakened by a loud alarm and then dropping back to sleep again constitutes the very weakness of the populace which makes possible the prosperity of dope peddlers," declares one film magnate. "It is a weakness apparent now in this most crucial of tests and it is to be sincerely hoped every man and woman residing within all Southern California will rise up in all their might and demand action so persistently and with so much determination that the drug ring will have to be broken up."

MOVIE STUNT MAN KILLED BY PLANE

Doubling for William Desmond, Universal serial star, Jean Perkins, well-known "stunt" man, fell to his death from an aeroplane last Saturday during the filming of Desmond's latest starring vehicle. Perkins was to have jumped from the plane to a fast moving freight train. Observers say the pilot evidently miscalculated the distance and Perkins fell to the ground, breaking both legs and sustaining internal injuries. He was rushed to the Riverside community hospital, where, after a valiant battle for his life, he died.

ED ROBERTS GETS TRIAL POSTPONED

The initial hearing of charges against Ed Roberts, alleged author and publisher of "The Sins of Hollywood," will be heard next Tuesday before Federal Judge Bledsoe. The hearing was scheduled for last week, but a continuance was granted because of the plea of the attorney representing Roberts for more time in which to investigate the Federal indictment charging him with sending obscene literature through the United States mails.

"GOOD CHEER FOR ANOTHER YEAR," AL'S SLOGAN

When Al Christie stepped off the boat from Honolulu his face was wreathed in smiles and full of New Year cheer principally because he brought back his company and a large assortment of moving pictures taken on the picturesque island, in plenty of time for all concerned to have Christmas dinners at home.

Christie has a Happy New Year thought, the idea being Thomas A Edison's and the execution of which the producer takes upon himself among other first-of-January resolutions. Mr. Edison's recent statement was that it is "the first duty of the motion picture to entertain, to bring more joy and cheer and wholesome good will into this world of ours."

Those were the exact words of the wizard of electricity, and Christie, being one of the most prominent comedy producers, declares that such has always been his pride—bringing wholesome good cheer into pictures—but the new year will see still further efforts along this line.

Christie's comedy program for 1923 contains some departures from the usual procedure of amusing films in that there will be still more of the scenic educational factors combined with merriment in the pictures made by him. The picture made in Honolulu, for example, is one of the new program, and the lengthy trip was undertaken for the comedy, "A Hula Honeymoon" for the purpose of bringing new backgrounds and unusual pictorial beauty into the comedy subject.

SENNETT BECOMES UNITED ARTISTS PRODUCER

Henceforth for a long term of years, Mack Sennett will release his motion picture productions through the Allied Producers and Distributors corporation, the subsidiary organization of the United Artists corporation. The contract is already in effect and the Allied concern is handling Mabel Normand's current starring vehicle, "Suzanna," as an initial undertaking. The announcement of this new realignment of such important interests came as a surprise, as there had been no hint of even the possibility of such an arrangement being made. Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, and E. M. Asher, representing Mack Sennett, consummated the deal in New York.

According to current rumors this new subsidiary of the United Artists will soon take over the entire output of two other prominent independent producers, one of whom will bring one of the biggest stellar names in motion pictures to this fold. It is well known that a serious business-like effort is being made to develop the Allied combination into a releasing organization second to none. With such premier leaders as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith as a keystone, the organization has about the most formidable Gibraltar in the field.

Mr. Sennett indicates an intention to continue the producing of serious full-length photoplays of the type of "Suzanna," although he will not totally abandon the two-reel comedy line immediately at least.

Metro Abolishes Program Pictures

Metro's announcement to the effect that they will discontinue producing program pictures and will devote their undivided efforts to making special all-star productions is a further indication of the advent of a non-program era.

Viola Dana, the last Metro star to be featured in a program picture, will be tendered a renewal of her contract which expires next month with the understanding that she will be featured in all-star special productions only.

Louis Burston is making arrangements for the filming of his dramatic story, "Desire," which will be enacted by such prominent artists as Marguerite de la Motte, John Bowers, Estelle Taylor and David Butler.

Rex Ingram is scheduled to arrive in Hollywood during the month of January, when he will immediately start producing the picture version of "Scaramouche."

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Film News of This Week You May Have Overlooked.

Baster Keaton is preparing to work on the first of a series of five-reel comedies.

Sidney Franklin has completed the final scenes in "Brass," which Harry Rapf is producing.

Ruth Roland, serial star, is using her spare time writing interviews of her cinema friends for a prominent film publication.

Elliott Dexter is back from his honeymoon and is working assiduously on an important characterization in the Paramount picturization of "The Common Law."

The Mission Film Company has taken production quarters at the Fine Arts studios where filming of its next story is scheduled to commence this week. Clif Elfelt is the director.

Morris R. Schlank, president of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., declares this organization is the largest of any firm dealing in independent products from the West Coast.

John A. Murphy, president of the Abbey Pictures, Inc., announces their first production, "Puppets of Fate," has been started, and will have an all-star cast and 1000 "supers."

Lambert Hillyer will direct the latest Bennie Zeidman production, which will enter production this week at Fine Arts. The company recently moved into Fine Arts from the United studios.

Julien Josephson has completed the scenario of "Main Street" for Warner Brothers and Harry Beaumont, who is to direct it, is making his final arrangements for starting the cameras to grinding.

The production of "Vanity Fair," which Hugh Ballin has been directing for Goldwyn release, is completed and will be assembled in a few days. Mabel Ballin, wife of the direction, will be seen in the starring role.

G. M. Anderson has completed production of "When Knights Were Cold," starring Stan Laurel, and will start work on the next of his series of two-reel comedies for Metro within a few days at the Fine Arts studios.

Hobart Bosworth's latest production, "The Law of the Sea," was scenarized by Clarence Badger, former Goldwyn director and was directed by William H. Clifford, well-known scenarist. "Reserve English," says Mr. Bosworth, "with pleasing results."

Eleanor Boardman, who has an important part in Marshall Neilan's production, "The Stranger's Banquet," was selected by Robert McIntyre, Goldwyn casting director, from several thousands of applicants in New York.

Hugh Deirker, one of the newest producers to lease space at Fine Arts, is assembling an all-star cast for his first production, which is to be a dramatic story for release through American. Charles Stumar is chief photographer.

According to John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of the Fine Arts studios, fourteen companies will be actively engaged in production at his plant by January 15th. Three new companies were added to the studios this week.

Two more of George M. Cohan's successful stage plays are now well on their way towards the screen. These are: "Little Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr.," both of which Warner Brothers have purchased as starring vehicles for Wesley Barry.

Corinne Griffith, before going East to organize her own producing unit, announced she will make one more picture in California. Webster Campbell, who directed her for Vitagraph, will also act in that capacity for Miss Griffith's new company.

Will Rogers, former Goldwyn star, and now in the Ziegfeld Follies, will accompany Hal Roach on his return trip from New York to Culver City where he will produce a series of two-reel pictures under the Roach banner, according to report.

Raymond Cannon, well known in film circles, is named as director of Protean Arts, which company will resume production of its series of one reelers at the Fine Arts studios shortly after the first of January. Cecil Holland is the star, Ernie Miller is cameraman and Fanchon Royer is continuity writer.

The two most unusual Christmas celebrations recorded were those held in the sick-rooms of two very famous exponents of the dramatic art: one in a Hollywood sanitarium, where Wallace Reid had been near death's door, and one in a Paris hospital, where Mme. Sarah Bernhardt was staging her courageous fight to recover from a collapse. Both had Christmas trees and all that went with them.

Mystery enshrouds the granting of a divorce decree to Doris Rankin from Lionel Barrymore, both stars of the stage and screen. It was stated that Miss Rankin was awarded $12,000 a year alimony, but no details as to the reasons for a separation were divulged.

Among the more interesting notes of Christmas cheer reported among film folks was one Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle received from his wife, Minna Durfee now of New York. She reassured the portly comedian of her complete faith in his ability to stage a triumphant comeback.

Douglas MacLean has formed his own company and will star in a series of comedy dramas for one of the country's largest releasing organizations. His company has taken studio quarters at Fine Arts and work on his first picture, which is yet untitled, will start within the next two weeks.

Filming of the Paramount production of "The Law of the Lawless," starring Dorothy Dalton and supported by Theodore Kosloff and Charles deRoche, famous French actor, has been delayed considerably because of hard rains which have damaged exterior street scenes to be used in this picture.

Following the final filming of "The Woman of Bronze," starring Clara Kimball Young, King Vidor, who directed this production, signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn and will soon start on his initial picture for this concern. It is understood his first vehicle will be a picture version of a very successful stage play.

Joseph M. Schenck has secured the film rights to play "Madame Pompadour," to serve as the next starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge. The French success will be made at the Metro studios. Just as soon as Mr. Schenck arrives from New York he will make plans for the adaptation of the play and then casting will get under way.

Winifred Bryson has been engaged to portray the role of Fleur de Lys in the Universal production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." At a recent preview of Mack Sennett's picture, "Suzanna," in which Miss Bryson has an important role, Irving G. Thalberg, Director-General of Universal City, was impressed by her work and immediately decided that she was just the type for the role of Fleur de Lys.

Rupert Julian, Universal Jewel director who finished Von Stroheim's "Merry-Go-Round," has a rather queer job—that of directing a director. He was asked by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Productions, to instruct Prince Sascha of Thurn and Taxis, a member of the Royal family of Austria, on the finer points of the cinema art.

It is stated that "The World's Applause," William de Mille's recently completed photodrama, has developed into one of the most compelling screen plays he has ever made. "The World's Applause" has as its leading players Bebe Daniels, Lewis Stone and Kathlyn Williams. Harrison Ford and Adolphe Menjou also play important roles.

Upon the completion of her long-term contract as leading lady to Harold Lloyd, Mildred Davis signed a contract with the Sacramento Film Company for whom she will star in a series of productions. Lambert Hillyer will direct her first starring vehicle, "Temporary Marie," in which she will be supported by Kenneth Harlan, Myrtle Stedman, Tully Marshall and Stuart Holmes.

Mrs. Daisy C. Danzinger has denied emphatically that she would wed Antonio Moreno, the popular film star. Mrs. Danzinger, who is a prominent Los Angeles society leader, reminded the newspapers of the fact that she is still a married lady since the final formalities of her present divorce proceedings will not be consummated until the latter part of January.

Whosoever might have designs on keeping Norman Selby, known to the sporting world as "Kid McCoy," out of the public prints is doomed to failure. Just to make sure that Santa Claus did not monopolize all the newspaper space around Christmas time, the Kid routed a couple of burglars with his trusty bare fists, beating 'em both into the notion of a precipitate haste in getting away.

Either a persistent fire-bug or a fiery fate has determined designs on Universal City. For the second time in a comparatively brief space of time, fire broke out in the cutting room of this big plant and only the quick, heroic work of Herbert Rawlinson and Norman Kerry in taking the leadership in some unusual voluntary fire-fighting prevented a destruction which would have entailed a loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Two employes were burned seriously.

POSSIBLY ABOUT YOU AND—YOU!

Monte Blue is spending the holidays with his mother in Indianapolis.

H. M. Warner and A. Warner, here from New York, have spent most of the holidays in busy conferences with their brothers, J. L. and S. L. Warner of the West Coast Studios. The 1923 production schedule and the proposition of enlarging their studio have been the subjects occupying most of their thoughts.

Marie Prevost is enjoying a brief vacation after a long siege in the stellar role in "Brass," just completed at the Warner Brothers Studio.

Max W. Herring, who has been affiliated with Warner Brothers for some time, has been appointed purchasing agent for that company.

Dorothy Manners, the Dorothy Manners who has proven she has a legal right to this name and who is a brunette, all of which explanation is made necessary by the fact that another girl has appropriated her name and is rather active with it in New York, has been engaged to play an important role in "The Eleventh Hour," with Shirley Mason at the William Fox Studios. This is the second consecutive Shirley Mason picture in which Miss Manners has worked.

Baby Peggy, four-year-old star of Century comedies, is in San Francisco on a vacation and will go from there to Chicago, with her parents. She will be away from her studio activities four weeks.

New York, Dec. 24.—The Friars Club takes this opportunity to express their thanks to the Camera! for giving the club members the benefit of its newsy little magazine. It is one of the most sought after sheets in the lounge. Merry, Merry Christmas to its publishers.

Alan Seigler of the A. S. of C. of L. A. has been engaged by Cosmopolitan productions. His first assignment is to complete the Paramount picture, "The Go-Getter," which is being supervised by Edward H. Griffith.

Gilbert Warrenton, son of Lulu Warrenton, has been engaged to crank on "Enemies of Women," together with Al Lagouri; another Cosmopolitan picture.

Fort Lee is once more a producing center. Several pictures are under way in the several studios there.

Hal Roach entertained one thousand employes, their relatives and friends at his Culver City studios last Sunday evening. It was an annual Xmas celebration.

According to a telegraphic report from New York, Mrs. Kenneth Alexander, nee Mollie King, famous as both a musical comedy and screen star, expects the stork early in the new year.

Edward J. Montagne, who has just completed writing the screen versions of "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law," two big Selznick all-star productions, feels that he has earned a rest, and has settled upon Catalina Island as a good spot for a few days vacation.

Harold McCord, well known film cutter, has arrived from New York to edit the Selznick all-star production of Robert Chambers' well known novel, "The Common Law," which is now being made by George Archainbaud at the United Studios. McCord, who has edited many big film productions, was brought on specially for the job.

Howard P. Brotherton has been assigned by Myron Selznick to the task of cutting the big all-star production, "Rupert of Hentzau," which is now in the making under the direction of Victor Heerman. Brotherton cut "One Week of Love," "Modern Matrimony," and other films for Selznick.

Jules Cronjager and Joe Goodrich are the cinematographers who are grinding cameras on the Selznick screen version of Robert W. Chambers' well known novel, "The Common Law," which Director George Archainbaud is making at the United Studios, with an all-star cast.

Huntley Gordon has completed "Your Friend and Mine," with Enid Bennett, and is now playing opposite Viola Dana in "Her Fatal Millions."

Cullen Landis is playing the leading male role in a Vitagraph special production, under the direction of David Smith.

Eva Novak has completed her role opposite Jack Holt in "The Tiger's Claw," at the Lasky studios.

Buster Keaton has purchased a new home in the Wilshire District. His wife, Natalie Talmadge and their baby son are making arrangements to move into their new abode early in the new year.

Ethel Chaffin, head of the Wardrobe Department of the Lasky studio, whose clever brain devises the beautiful gowns worn by Paramount stars and leading women, (excepting only those appearing in Cecil B. DeMille's productions) has gone to New York, where she will interview several of the most noted designers in the world, and from that number select one who will be engaged to work here under her supervision.

James Morrison is finishing his present engagement in Frank Borzage's "The Nth Commandment" this week.

He recently completed an assignment with the Fatty Karr comedy unit at the Federal studio.

Rennie Rensloe, who has been with the Al St. John company on the William Fox "lot" for the past two years, has just left on a tour of the Orient with the William Wrights water show.

William A. Johnston, president of Motion Picture News, will come on to Los Angeles about February 1, "to look over the industry," according to a letter just received from him by Perley Poore Sheehan. The two are old friends, their friendship dating from the days when they were room-mates at Union College, New York.

Stephen Goosson, art director and designer of all sets for "Rupert of Hentzau," which Victor Heerman is directing, has been engaged by Myron Selznick to serve in a like capacity for the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," now being filmed by George Archainbaud.

W. Emile, French fencer and Douglas Fairbanks' first fencing master, is dashing from Tod Browning's set for "Drifting" to "The Attic of Felix Bavu" set in which he is training Wallace Beery to use the swords. He manages to confine his fights to only the days and nights.

Warner Baxter's latest hobby is hunting big game. While awaiting the start of the next Robertson-Cole picture in which he is to be featured, the star has taken down his trusty thirty-three and gone out to get a bear.

Along the Rialto

Raymond McKee and Charlie Murray have started work on their fifth all-star comedy.

D. W. Griffith started work today after two weeks of rehearsing on "The White Rose." It will be made below the Mason-Dixon line, Kentucky, and thereabouts.

A Long Island yarn about Tom Mix's horse, "Tony," has caused considerable talk among the sidewalk elite. The Long Island paper stated:

"TOM MIX MOVIE HORSE KILLED ON MANHASSET HILL

"Tom Mix's groom yesterday lead the horse, 'Tony,' up Manhasset Hill into a speeding automobile. The machine struck the horse in the side killing it instantly. There are twenty horses with Mix at Manhasset."

Adele Astaire, star of the "Punch and Judy" company at the Globe theatre, received a ton of coal from her friends on her birthday. The card stated that the givers thought the "black diamonds" more useful than white ones. Miss Astaire turned the coal over to the theatre, for which she received from the owner a bouquet of orchids with a note thanking her for her generous sacrifice.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

WHO IS NOT WISE?

If most any Tom, Dick and Harry who happens to gain a smattering knowledge of the moving picture business can organize a producing company, interest enough capital to make a start and then eventually "flivver" leaving many persons and firms "stung," who is wise? Certainly not the wildcat promoter and just as certainly not the "angels" who supply the cash. By no means is the person or firm wise in permitting such an unknown quantity to incur indebtedness. Yet, the film industry has always had its irresponsible Toms, Dicks, and Harrys doing business at the old rickety stand and presumably there always will be more to take the places of those who are forced to evacuate by ired creditors.

A whole lot of attention has been paid fallaciously to the censorship proposition, but no one has thought of undertaking to curb the fly-by-night "artists" to the extent of making it impossible for them to float new corporations galore. It is a growing evil which has been left to flourish just as weeds are often overlooked. Meanwhile, like weeds, the wildcat promoters are disgracing the worthy garden of photoplay art in many spots. The man or group of men who devise a method of control by which the field can be kept free of those who would impose their little wills to make a few easy dollars, will contribute prodigiously to the cause of real advancement in an industry which deserves immunity from the machinations of small men with mercenary motives.

In view of the fact that the wildcat guys continue to be active and unthinking men persist in handing over their money for shares of stock in their doubtful promotions, it cannot be said there is a definite end to the gold-brick days and it is decidedly regrettable that so honorable a business as the cinema should be made the "goat." It is an urgent matter requiring the attention of men of wisdom, this thing of forcing the harem-scarem gentry to abdicate and to desist their victimizing efforts. Who is wise?

A good resolution for every individual in pictures is one of unalterable determination to persist in assisting in the fight against the drug evil until the last vestige of its detrimental potentiality is obliterated. It would be a grievous error to resume the old-time apathetic attitude while officials lapse into the popular fad of probing instead of acting. All should bear in mind that the demon narcotic was not banished by the single outburst of a week ago.

A SCREEN OF PROPAGANDA

There has been much said of the screen of smoke as an aid in modern warfare and now we have a screen of propaganda. It is the American motion picture screen—the screen of national scope upon which are shown the best possible arguments for loyalty and activity in behalf of your country. It is the screen which obscures the malicious underhanded propaganda of evil Anarchistic origin and it takes the leadership in an enlightenment which exposes "Red" frightfulness without mercy. So important has the propaganda work of the screen become that it is quite generously heralded as the greatest thought-conveying medium extant and it has long since been recognized as being as essential as the press.

We are convinced that every person should spend at least two evenings or afternoons a week in first-class photoplay houses for the sake of keeping abreast with the spirit of the moment and deriving the incalculable benefits therefrom. By becoming such a steady patron of this great art you will be placing at your disposal a most useful supplementary knowledge of current events, your duties in connection therewith and of the moral tendencies toward triumph in life.

According to our way of thinking, it is not merely ridiculous that anyone should stay away from the movies—it is neglectful of the demands for enlightened progress. The able-bodied person who never sees a moving picture show is certain to be lacking in much momentous information and mental broadness, we don't care who that person is, whether he or she is a college professor, a theologian or an illiterate peon. No one has any business denying the screen a part of his or her respectful and careful attention, especially since it is necessary to watch the screen in order to profit by the great endless propaganda it is showing so impressively in behalf of the cause of democracy in general.

Supplementary to its main purpose—that of printing all the news of the motion picture industry and many special articles pertinent to it—Camera! aims to be a public forum through which people in any quarter or of any strata of Filmland can express themselves on live topics of the day. A cordial invitation is extended to all to make this publication the medium for any discussions of interest to others within the industry.

An honest-to-goodness periodical for photoplayers and all their associates from the top to the bottom—the magnate and the supernumerary included—this is what Camera! aspires to be throughout the year of 1923 and for many years to follow.

THE DECLINING DOLLAR

Humanity is entering an era in which money will count for nothing and humanitarianism will count for everything. There will be no sharp lines drawn between the rich and the poor. The aristocracy of the future will be men and women who have done something worth while for humanity and all will be simon-pure, non-political democrats. The dollar will decline in power more and more until it is reduced to precisely what it should have always been, namely, a mere standard for fair trading. For all of these years man has utilized the dollar as a weapon in most every conceivable way—it has been a much feted god and always an elusive one, unworthy of 99 per cent of the adulation it has received.

Even very wealthy men recognize all these truths now. Only recently Charles M. Schwab, the steel magnate, who is acquitting himself with so much credit as a helpful citizen, declared that his riches never gave him happiness. He admits he has found that the only way to be happy is to do something useful. He refuses to heap any praise upon the so-called almighty dollar, because he knows it represents the unreal portion of life, while service diffuses the only desirable rays of bliss. Andrew Carnegie no doubt got more fun out of giving his millions away than he did out of worrying and fretting over the gigantic task of accumulating them. He, like Schwab and many other rich men, knew there was no pleasure to be derived from so fickle a master as a dollar—the dollar which may forsake you without any notice and leave you to starve without the slightest quail.

Once all the people, rich and poor, come to know that hard, cold cash is impotent when it comes to doing many of the things which must be done to insure happiness, the trend of mankind will be such as to automatically eliminate virtually all crime, both petty and capital. Did this ever occur to you? Moreover, did you ever stop to think of what a pity it is that any man would impair his priceless health for the sake of acquiring a few dollars of a very definite pricelessness? Think less of the dollar and more of your fellow-man and you will be better off. You cannot afford to retard the decline of the dollar since its continued occupancy of the commanding pedestal can only mean worry, sadness, anger and even desperation.

There is politics in every great industry and motion pictures have not escaped being infested or blessed, whichever it may be, by a full share of it. The important thing is, to see to it that politics do not engulf anyone. It's a wide, dangerous expanse, is the sea of politics, and it is easy to be "at sea" there.

MIDNIGHT MUSINGS

"To be or not to be"—be!

It is a poor policy to envy the rich.

A rowdy bruiser—the soaring price.

Levity in a career insures brevity.

The naked truth does not need redress.

Oh! the palaver of the modern "salver!"

Do some good, then you'll know you do.

Have an aspiration to avoid desperation.

Belles-lettres—readin' with the right ring to it.

Success follows a leader. Then why lag behind?

Be the very antithesis to a drone. Be a busy bee!

If you will only serve you will strengthen your nerve.

If you are duty-bound, don't be tongue-tied—say so.

It is really difficult to be low-bred in these high-bred times.

If Fate deals an ordeal, you meet it with a sound ideal.

The one time you must not give up is when you're down.

Oh, tyro, don't tire o' rebuffs. Courage must be your best asset.

Figuratively and literally too many people are just dying to live fast.

At least be mathematician enough to make yourself count and divide.

As you would be polite, be humane—help others first and help yourself last.

He who pauses and stares with envy can never climb the stairs of success.

If you don't ask questions what else will answer in this battle royal for lore?

Love thy neighbor helpfully. It beats sympathizing with him helplessly.

How like amazing magic the gentle Romeo becomes the truculent husband!

You are living in the greatest age in history. Make yourself worthy of the age!

MARION STARTS ON SECOND MILLION DOLLAR FILM

There goes, in Cosmopolitan's New York studios, another million dollars on a single film! It is none other than Marion Davies repeating her well-known expenditures on the triumphant "When Knighthood Was in Flower." This time it is an entirely different kind of a story, her selection being "Little Old New York," once very popular as a stage play. A conservative estimate places the probable cost of this picturization at an even million dollars, which is the same sum lavished on Miss Davies' current screen hit.

Miss Davies will, of course, appear in the role of Patricia O'Day, the little Irish girl who landed in New York, only to find that in order to obtain the family fortune she would have to be a boy. Included in the supporting cast are the following: J. M. Kerrigan, Mahlon Hamilton, Courtney Foote, Harrison Ford, Norval Keedwell, George Barrard, Sam Hardy, Montague Love, Riley Hatch, Charles Kennedy, Spencer Charters, Harry Watson, Charles Judels, Pauline Whitson, Mary Kennedy, Thomas Findlay and Marie R. Burke.

New York as it appeared a century ago will for the first time be faithfully depicted in this film, it is said.

CHILD DANCER SCORES

Because of the attention that she has attracted in her Gipsy Nautch dance at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre for the last two weeks, Valentine Churchill, known on the screen as the "little girl with the glasses," has been asked to present the Hindoo Danse Grotesque at the Ambassador the afternoon of January 7.

The Hindoo danse Grotesque is one of the Burmese dances taught to the child by the natives in India. Little Valentine carries the distinction of being the only white person ever taught these Burmese dances as they are part of the sacred rites of the natives. Valentine Churchill recently played the leading role in Neely Dixon's play, "The Magic Word," at the Hollywood Community theater.

JACKIE SURVIVES DOG ATTACK

Little Jackie Coogan has entirely recovered from the rough treatment of a strange dog that attracted the caress of the little star and then turned on him and bit his hand. Jackie denies he is "cured" of his fondness for animals, even strange ones.

TOLD IN A HEAD-LINE

IN THE DEATH OF FDR. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, THE REFORM FORCES OF THE NATION HAVE LOST ONE OF THEIR MOST BRILLIANTLY CAPABLE LEADERS. ALTHOUGH DR. CRAFTS WAS OFTEN AT ODDS WITH VARIOUS MOTION PICTURE INTERESTS, HE ALWAYS FOUGHT FAIRLY AND WAS MAGNANIMOUS WHEN OTHERS WERE ADAMANT.

LOS ANGELES CHURCHMEN INDICATE A DETERMINATION TO COMPILE AND PUBLICIZE A "WHITE LIST" OF ALL THEATRES REFUSING TO EXHIBIT ROSCOE ARBUCKLE FILMS.

REPORTS OF A RECONCILIATION BEING EFFECTED BETWEEN WILLIAM S. HART AND HIS WIFE, KNOWN ON THE SCREEN AS WINIFRED WESTOVER, HAVE ALTERNATED WITH REPORTS THAT A DIVORCE ACTION WILL BE STARTED IMMEDIATELY. THE MOST GENERAL BELIEF IS THE LATTER COURSE IS INEVITABLE.

SAN FRANCISCO NEWSPAPERS AND FILM PAPERS PRAISE THE MAX GRAF PRODUCTION OF "THE FORGOTTEN LAW," AGREEING ON ITS DRAMATIC POWER TO THRILL AND APPEAL TO THE EMOTIONS.

THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT HAS NOTIFIED THE UNITED STATES POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT AT WASHINGTON, D. C., OF ITS DECISION TO BAR THE PHOTOPLAYS PRODUCED BY MOST OF THE LARGER AMERICAN CONCERNS, INCLUDING METRO, PARAMOUNT, GOLDWYN, SELZNICK, VITAGRAPH, WARNER BROTHERS AND EDUCATIONAL, BECAUSE OF RECENT RELEASES CONTAINING SCENES THE MEXICAN OFFICIALS CONSIDER UNFAVORABLE TO THEIR GOVERNMENT. THIS IS ANOTHER RESULT OF UNCLE SAM'S FAILURE TO RECOGNIZE THE OBREGON ADMINISTRATION.

JACK PICKFORD WILL ACTUALLY RETURN TO THE SCREEN AS A STAR ON JANUARY 15TH, WHEN UNITED ARTISTS WILL RELEASE HIS "GARRISON'S FINISH."

"THE TOLL OF THE SEA," THE TECHNICOLOR PRODUCTION IN A NEW NATURAL COLOR PROCESS, HAS JUST RECEIVED THE HIGHEST PRAISE FROM CRITICS AS A RESULT OF ITS PREMIERE SHOWING IN NEW YORK. THIS LATEST PROCESS SEEMS TO SOLVE THE PROBLEMS OF REPRODUCING NATURAL COLORS WITHOUT PRODUCING NEAR-BLINDNESS AMONG THOSE IN THE AUDIENCE.

RICHARD WALTON TULLY WILL PRODUCE "TRIBLY" AS A FIRST NATIONAL RELEASE AND PREPARATIONS FOR THE FILMING ARE UNDER WAY HERE NOW.

"ADAM'S RIB," WHICH WILL BE CECIL B. DE MILLE'S NEXT CONTRIBUTION TO THE SCREEN, IS RECEIVING ALL KINDS OF ADVANCE CREDIT AS BEING ONE OF THE MOST SURPRISING INNOVATIONS OF ALL CINEMA HISTORY.

POLA NEGRI'S SECOND MADE-IN-AMERICA PHOTOPLAY WILL BE AN ELABORATE VERSION OF "DECLASSE," CONSIDERED BY MANY AS THE GREATEST STAGE PLAY IN WHICH ETHEL BARRYMORE EVER APPEARED.

B. P. SCHULBERG HAS PURCHASED THE SCREEN RIGHTS TO "THE PARASITE," THE NOVEL BY HELEN MARTIN, AND ANNOUNCED HE WILL FILM IT EARLY IN THE NEW YEAR.

THOMAS H. INCE HAS COMPLETED THE FILMING OF "NEWS" IN WHICH LLOYD HUGHES AND MAY MACAVOY PLAY THE LEADING ROLES.

THE WESTERN MOTION PICTURE ADVERTISERS WOUND UP THEIR YEAR'S ACTIVITIES LAST WEDNESDAY NIGHT WITH AN INTERESTING MEETING AT WHICH JOSEPH A. JACKSON INTRODUCED JUNE MATHIS AS THE NEW EDITORIAL DIRECTOR OF GOLDWYN AND AT WHICH IRVING THALBERG, GENERAL MANAGER OF THE UNIVERSAL STUDIOS, DELIVERED A PLEASING ADDRESS.

MABEL NORMAND, WHO SPENT HER CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS IN LONDON, IS EXPECTED TO RETURN TO HOLLYWOOD ABOUT THE MIDDLE OF JANUARY, WHEN SHE WILL START HER NEW PICTURE AT THE MACK SENNETT STUDIOS.

GRIFFITH AND MAE MARSH RE-UNITE AFTER 6 YEARS

One of the most important engagement contracts signed in the closing hours of 1922 was that which took Mae Marsh back to the directorial guidance of her discoverer, David Wark Griffith, who will feature her in "The White Rose," scheduled as his first picture of the new year.

It has been six whole years since Miss Marsh responded histrionically to Mr. Griffith's megaphone commands and during this long interim she has starred in a series of Goldwyn pictures, made excursions into the independent field and appeared in London-made films.

Mae Marsh was the youngest of all the screen leading women to attain celebrity. When she was 15, she came to the Griffith studio with her older sister, and was busily overturning stones to watch the black bugs crawl from under, when Griffith first saw the play of expression that has made her face unrivalled.

A year later she was known throughout the world as the little sister of the Cameron family in "The Birth of a Nation."

Of her Mr. Griffith has said: "Every other motion picture star I have ever known was 'made' by long training and much hard work, but Mae Marsh was born a film star. Destiny itself seemed to have been her coach in acting."

SID IN DRAMMER NOW

It is not often heard that a film comedian as well known as Sid Smith deserts comedy to go in for regular drama. However, Sid felt the call of "The Ne'er Do Well" and will soon sail from New York to parts south where Lasky company will remake the film. In the original production of "The Ne'er Do Well" produced by Selig company several years ago, Sid played the same role that he is now cast for.

Sid Smith was recently the featured member of the Hall Room Boys lomey company. Upon completing work in this feature Sid will return to Hollywood where he will probably make his own productions.

Sterns Improving Studios

A corps of workmen under the supervision of Bert Sternbach and Sig Neufeld are rapidly completing the task of renovating the Century studios inside and outside. Sixty carpenters and twelve painters have been kept on the job day and night in an effort to make all the improvements planned before Julius and Abe Stern return from New York. This company will start 1923 off with a rush by using six units to make a full supply of Century comedies.

Should We Standardlaws? and Many Other Questions

By SHELDON Krag JOHNSON

What is in a face? What is face value? Would a star with any other face be less a star?

Should a face be the index of the owner's personality or should it be no more than a piece of well-balanced architecture? Should it express a condition or an emotion?

We are led to assume from Penrhyn Stanlaws' recent article anent Our Girls' Faces that he is more or less in quest of a face perfectly proportioned; that all the time he has been gazing at Miss Blank's blank face, he has not been seeking a point of contact with her thought, but has been murmuring, "Not this, not this, the heart's desire,—'tis but a horse's nostrils that I see."

Now the question pressing close is Why? Why should so eminent a connoisseur of things feminine be seeking a perfectly proportioned face? With all the opportunity he has had to study feminine charm he has availed himself thereof no more than to pursue the Unprocurable Specimen. Is he no more than a "bugologist" who tirelessly chases the butterfly that has never yet been netted? Were he to succeed, were he to come, face to face as it were, with this Ideal Quest, would he not pass quietly out, his task completed, his journey done?

For the only thing which intrigues an artist of the "regularity school" to seek the perfect face is the secret knowledge that "it ain't to be had." It is not desired for its own sake, but for the sake of its unattainability. Knowing this, were one to suddenly find it, what else would there be to do but burn the net and expire in apathy?

The value of a thing lies in its significance. What can be the significance of a perfectly proportioned face?

If its significance is symmetry, symmetry of what? Is it of value as an index of symmetry of character, or of health, or—just symmetry?

Is symmetry of any value by itself? If so, why not enshrine a mosaic, or an arabesque, or a geometrical figure? These surely are symmetrical. Perhaps the aesthete will say symmetry is its own justification for the aesthetic stimulation induced.

But this presupposes that man is an automatic reflex to aesthetic stimulus. That this is not so, the aesthete will be the first to affirm; for he well knows that only a special course of study initiates one into the mysteries of aesthetic appreciation.

The aesthetic response is not, then, an innate response like hunger, but is the result of education, of the inlaying of ideas. Only, in the case of the aesthete, the idea is that of mere response to symmetry, as a final good in itself. So that in the last analysis, it is all reduced to a matter of ideas, of what one has set up for oneself as being of value.

But for those who have not had the benefits of this special training the value of a face or figure is the significance for which it stands as an index.

The harmony of the human body is of great significance, not as an end in itself but as indicating a high adaptability to an end. It is of value because it involves purpose and action. If it is perfectly proportioned, it indicates a pliable and well coordinated instrument adapted to rapid, precise and harmonious expression.

So with a horse. The aesthetic value of a horse is in direct ratio to its ability to perform along any one of its several lines. The aesthetic value of a photodrama is in direct ratio to its ability to transmit the emotion embodied within it without waste, inaccuracy, false leads or lost motion. The list can be multiplied indefinitely. Even in the mechanical and business world we have a word, which in these fields, means the same thing. That word is efficiency.

Efficiency is precision, the accurate adaptation of means to an end. In the world of art we speak of harmony, proportion, aesthetic value. What do these terms mean but precision, the accurate adaptation of certain means to the end, of conveying an emotional effect?

In either case, the harmony subserves a purpose, an idea, an intent. Beauty cannot be detached from idea, for in truth Beauty is but an idea. It does not exist for itself alone and it would be meaningless to attempt to make it do so. In fact, the only standard of beauty is its harmony in correlation to other ideas.

Now to get around to the face. Is it alone, of all objects, an exception which is justified for its own sake? Or is it beautiful in the degree to which it lends itself to some significance, ulterior to its own harmony?

Is it beautiful simply because of its proportions or because of significance which these proportions may possess? Does one look across the breakfast table thrilled that one faces a face in which there is nothing out of drawing, a face whereon the nose is equidistant from brow or chin—chin or brow, the sort of face that is so balanced it looks as well upside down as any other way, or does one thrill because one faces indelible evidences of certain traits and characteristics to which one has become addicted?

Can it be said a perfectly proportioned face, like a well-balanced body, is a more perfect instrument for the expression of such thoughts as might, perchance, lie within? Is each feature but a physiological instrument? Is the true ideal the assembly of the right number of perfect parts and will this assemblage serve more perfectly to reflect ideas?

This might be true if the features had no significance in themselves as ideas. That the face is not merely a blank screen for the mirroring of ideas is indicated by the fact that in actual practice the more nearly faces approximate perfect symmetry, the more completely blank they become. This should not be so. If a face is to be harmoniously blank in order to portray ideas, it should not get blanker when an idea is met.

There is much cause to suspect that the features are not merely entrances and exits of a mechanical nature, but that each represents an idea in itself and that variations in the feature indicate corresponding variations in the owner's use of the idea. The topography of most any country has its own significance. Why should not the topography of a face be more than a well-drawn map?

If features mean something in themselves in their variations and if their assembly is the highlight and shadow of the composite picture, then of what value would mere balance be?

Perhaps Mr. Stanlaws would standardlaws the face. But would he standardize personality? Is there a standard of perfection to which all personalities should conform? If so, why have any individuality at all? Standardization in some lines may be a blessing. For instance, it helps to make cheap cars cheaper. But is it not enough to have to divert one's gaze from millions of flivvers without so standardizing the face that one would have to do the same?

Fancy living in a nation of Venuses all alike to the thousandth of an inch! We would then see a fine crop of advertisements like this: "Your face marred and altered. Individuality guaranteed. Originality and eccentricities worked in until twins become as strangers. Custom-made bodies of exclusive design."

Fancy reducing the fascinating galaxy of personalities we have before us today to the mean level of a perfect face! Who would dare thus to mechanize the Spirit of Diversity? Could our eminent artist have the face to look upon such a world? It would be like living in an asylum of Benda Masks—all alike.

What if the cheek bones are high? It is better than a high temperature. What if some heads are big? They'll come down. What if some noses end up with "horse's nostrils." 'Tis by no means the most objectionable part of a horse. Let us rejoice that it is no worse; that at least they are not all the same.

Take a mouth—any mouth. Need it be perfect, ten degrees off dead center and in the ratio of one and a half per cent to all the rest? Might not a less perfect mouth prove as sweet?

Is a mouth to be no more than the Broadway of the Food Traffic; the Magna Vox of the Broadcaster within; the Mansion of a Dentist's Revenue? Is a mouth to be but the arc of a circle or is it to be recognized as the Plastic Prop by which the owner shades and seasons the life story that she tells?

Thanks to Mr. Stanlaws, these questions, heretofore shelved, are now put in issue and cry an answer.

Before the verdict is rendered we can rest at ease, knowing that no Artist can cast the malign spell of standardization upon that glorious diversity of eyes and lips and noses which have refreshed our weary eyes, lo, these many centuries. As of old let us continue to squint merrily.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Tom is Happy Again

Tom O'Neil, head of the scenic department at the Century studios, has just passed the cigars around again. A new little girl is in his home. Nineteen months ago a bouncing boy arrived. Tom is mighty proud of the tiny duo.

Ex-Fox Writer at "U"

D. A. Epstein, former associate editor of the William Fox scenario staff, is now writing his second continuity for Universal. It's called "The Lion's Whelp" and it is being prepared for "Hoot" Gibson. Mr. Epstein recently finished "The Ninth Man" for Herbert Rawlinson.

Ward Crane Hops East

Having completed his role of Dudley Gillette in Fred Niblo's picturization of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," a future Mayer-Metro release, Ward Crane has left Los Angeles for a short visit in the East. According to his present plans, he will return to the film capital after the holidays to resume work under a new contract now awaiting his signature.

Hope Hampton Coming West

After completing her contract with William Fox whereby she is to be featured in an all-star production now in the course of production in his New York studios, Hope Hampton, who won success in "The Light in the Dark," released last October by First National, will transfer her activities to the Lasky studios in Hollywood, where she will play a featured role in "Lawful Larceny."

Filming "David Copperfield"

Warner Brothers' production of Charles Dickens' classic "David Copperfield" with the popular boy star, Wesley Barry, in the leading role has gotten under way in New York. The producing of "David Copperfield" is another step toward the Warner goal which is to produce only photoplays from the best known books, and written by the best known authors.

Pola Finishing "Bella Donna"

Intense dramatic moments, wherein Pola Negri in the title role of "Bella Donna" is cast off by her Arabian lover "Baroudi" as played by Conway Tearle, have been completed by George Fitzmaurice in his Paramount production of Robert Hichen's story which Ouida Bergere adapted and in which Miss Negri is supported by Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson. Other scenes in a Nile villa and some work on location near Oxford, kept this unit very busy. The picture will be completed very soon.

Pollard Advances a Reel

That Broadway audiences accept Snub Pollard as a star in 2-reel comedies is recognized by the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres of New York in booking "Newly Rich" for an uninterrupted period of two weeks. The Rivoli played this comedy the week of Dec. 10 and its engagement at the Rialto began Dec. 17. Pathe verifies the report that representative houses in all sections of the United States are demonstrating a similar degree of faith in Pollard's drawing power in the new two-reelers, and feature them accordingly.

Cameraman Films Scenes of Universal City Fire

While flames spread dangerously about the buildings and studio sets at Universal City last Saturday, Jack (Curley) Kiehl, assistant cameraman, set his camera in the midst of the scene and proceeded to film the destructive disaster. The origin of the fire is said to have been in the cutting room, and following a series of explosions of stock films which were stored in the vaults, the flames soon menaced the entire film-city. As the fire gained ground, Kiehl was forced to retreat in order to avoid being seriously burned.

Doug is Out For B'ar

Douglas Fairbanks is going to fight the Triangle Company by taking his case to the United States Supreme Court. The New York Supreme Court ruled that Mr. Fairbanks' old picture could be reissued and re-edited by the Triangle Company and put on the market in competition with his newer productions. Mr. Fairbanks held the re-editing and changing of his pictures was unfair to him and illegal, and now that the New York Supreme Court does not agree with him he is going to take it to the highest tribunal and plead his case.

Stahl Back to Work

John M. Stahl, prominent producer-director under contract with Louis B. Mayer, has returned to the realm of Klieg-lights and cameras after a two months' visit to New York. While in the East, Mr. Stahl attended the world's premiere of his latest First National attraction, "The Dangerous Age," a drama of Spring, romance and a man of forty, which has been heralded by the critics as one of the greatest achievements of the screen. Mr. Stahl is now busy with preparations for the making of his next all-star special for Mayer-First National release. It is rumored the story is based on an original theme which will go into production under the working title of "Money, Love and the Woman."

Another Producing Unit

Earl Montgomery, who was featured in Montgomery and Rock comedies by Vitagraph for five years, has formed his own producing company and for the past six weeks has been filming his first picture, a feature comedy. He will make a series of six during the year. Bruce Mitchell, who recently completed a series of comedies starring Fatty Karr, is co-directing with Montgomery and Ray Adams is cameraman. Many well known funsters are appearing in support of Montgomery in his first subject and include Billy Franey, Gale Henry, Ford West, Lucille Hutton, Art Detloff, Eddie Hayward, Jack Duffy, George Rowney and others.

Hiers is Progressing

Work on nearby locations has been completed on the Paramount company making "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime." Walter Hiers is the star. In addition, scenes in a Spanish cafe where the hefty hero spends his last ten-cent piece for a cigar and is thereby involved in a revolution, were made. This picture, which Wesley Ruggles is directing and in which Jacqueline Logan is featured in support of the star, is something of a novelty, inasmuch as it combines real laugh-getting situations with many thrills and has a plot of genuine interest. It was adapted by A. S. LeVino from a story by Dana Burnet. George Fawcett, Robert McKim and others appear in the cast.

Says Film Soviet Exists

Benjamin Flogell, a New York detective who is enjoying a winter vacation in Southern California, has given an interview in which he declares he has discovered the presence of a "film Soviet" within the motion picture industry in Hollywood. He says his discovery is the result of close observation and "habitual listening in on conversations" around various hotel lobbies frequented by picture people. He admits the Soviet spirit takes the form of ostensibly mild "knocking," but that underlying it all is a dangerous determination to be iconoclastic. The sleuth concludes by predicting the early advent of a lot of excitement coincident to "an inevitably eventual arousing from a lethargy to obliterate the dissemination of wildly revolutionary doctrines."

Wanted—A Good Bruiser

Director Mal St. Clair has started working at the Powers studios in Hollywood on "Six-Second Smith," the third of the series of well-known "Fighting Blood" stories by H. C. Witwer which are appearing in Collier's

Weekly. A gruelling prize-fight between George O'Hara, the featured player, and one of the toughest bruisers that can be found in Los Angeles will be the spectacular feature in "Six-Second Smith." Director St. Clair is now searching for the bruiser to play the part of the "pug."

"Fourth Musketeer" Under Way

Johnnie Walker has started production on "The Fourth Musketeer," with the petite Eileen Percy as his leading lady. The supporting cast includes Eddie Gribbon, James McElhern, J. M. Scott, Aggie Herring, Edith Yorke, George Stone and Lucy Donshire. William Kerrigan Howard is directing "The Fourth Musketeer," which is adapted from H. C. Witwer's well-known story by the same name, appearing recently in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Walker appears in the role of a pugilistic garage owner in "The Fourth Musketeer." The screen adaptation was made by Paul Schofield.

"Glory" Approaches Finish

The actual filming of "The Greater Glory," in which Ethel Clayton will make her next stellar appearance, is approaching the final "shots" rapidly at the Powers Studios under the direction of James W. Horne. In the supporting cast are: Wilfred Lucas, Muriel Frances Dana, four-year-old starlet; Albert Hall, Anderson Smith and Victory Bateman. The story, which was written by Wyndham Gittens, deals with the romance of a war widow and is said to be replete with love interest with several touches of high-class comedy.

Vitagraph Announces Big Production Program

According to reports emanating from New York sources, the Vitagraph West Coast studios are destined to hum with industry during 1923 and all rumors anent this company being on the verge of financial ruin seem unfounded. Among the special stories which this concern plans on filming without delay are: "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough; "The Ready-Made Husband," by Rupert Hughes; "The Hidden House," by Amelia Rives; "Kidnapped Millionaires," by Frederick Upham Adams; "My Man," by Edith Ellis; "The Man From Brodneys," by George Barr McCutcheon; "A Shop Girl," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson; "Steele of the Royal Mounted," by James Oliver Curwood; "The Tenderfoot," by Alfred Henry Lewis, and "Who's Who," by Richard Harding Davis. All of these are adaptations from popular novels.

MORE GOTHAM GOSSIP

New York, Dec. 21.—Alice Calhoun will be Mary in "Mary Mixes In," a Vitagraph picture.

Elsie Ferguson is on Broadway again, playing in "The Wheel of Life."

Pauline Frederick will return to Broadway early in the spring in "The Guilty One."

Robert Vignola, who directed "When Knighthood Was in Flower," was one of the 450 persons who sailed from New York on the Cunard Steamship Laconia on her epoch making world cruise.

Valentino refused $3,000 a week according to statement made by his lawyer. Former Justice Frank C. Laughlin, counsel for Ruddy, pictured him as a young man unable to speak English, when he arrived in this country eight months before his contract was signed. He said that his client was unfamiliar with the salaries paid to motion picture stars and thus was easily induced to work for an amount far less than he should receive.

Frank McGlyn, who has made his niche in the dramatic world by his vivid portrayal of Abraham Lincoln, is going into pictures. "Lincoln" closes next week in Boston.

Sidney Olcott, "one of the finest," from auld Ireland's sod, will direct Marion Davies in a new super special, "Little Old New York."

Dell Henderson is directing the Raymond McKee and Charles Murray comedies.

Richard Thorpe will direct a series of one-reel pictures for C. C. Burr, of Mastodon Films, Inc.

Will Teach 'Em How to Play Theatre Organ

An addition to the music world of Los Angeles is announced in the opening of motion picture pipe organ lessons by the Hulff School of Music. This department has been taken over by Mr. Harry Perkins, formerly of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Pupils are given actual instruction in the theatre pit, under the direction of Mr. Perkins, and finally are allowed to play a show during a performance. An added feature is the benefit of practising on the regular theatre pipe organ.

Cornyn Has Record For Publicity Victories

John Cornyn, who has opened an office in the Byrne Bldg., for advertising and publicity purposes, was formerly manager of the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation film exchange in Vancouver, B. C., the Canadian office of the old Mutual releases, and later the Robertson-Cole program. He was personally responsible for putting over

"Mickey" in a publicity campaign that exceeded anything ever attempted in Canada at that time. From Vancouver he was called to Seattle, where he worked with the Jensen Von Herberg organization, finally coming to Los Angeles, where for the past six months he has been advertising representative of Screenland Publishing Co. His perseverance and genial personality have won him a host of friends.

Another Gotham critic calls her "lovable" and a third says she is "one of the sweetest things in pictures."

"Captain Fly-By-Night" looks like it might do much better than that—it may even enjoy a wide vogue for a prolonged period of time despite the fact that the screen is just about to become crowded with Spanish romances. Johnnie Walker, the featured player in this latest Johnston McCulley story to reach the films, according to Gertrude Chase, New York critic, is pleasing with his own personality despite the fact that he "leaps about in the shoes of Fairbanks and the hat of Valentino." One thing certain is, Johnnie Walker has been showing signs of being a genius as an extraordinary exponent of silent drama for some time and he reveals himself as advancing with reassuring rapidity in "Captain Fly-By-Night."

Gaston Glass, hero of "The Hero," has mastered the violin since making believe to play one so triumphantly in "Humoresque" in which he made his name a household word.

Lloyd Hughes, Mary Pickford's leading man in her new "Tess of the Storm Country," is probably the only idol of the screen who has never seen New York, as he has spent his whole life in only two states, California and Arizona.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford will each spend a million dollars on their next film productions, to be started early in the new year.

ing wrong. He is as innocent as you or I, and as innocent as those who rush into print to damn him forever."

Many of the biggest and most powerful newspapers have rushed voluntarily to Arbuckle's defense, too. A notable instance of this is a sensational editorial printed by the Chicago Tribune in which this paper pleads for due respect being given the findings of an American trial jury which found the actor not guilty and acquitted him accordingly. Some of the more striking paragraphs in this Tribune editorial follow:

"It is an unreasonable and ungenerous mass spirit which condemns a misdemeanor to life punishment regardless of any change which may have taken place in him. It is an uncritical use of the moral force of the community. It is savage and not reasoning."

"It is a misdirection of good force, so often misdirected with such serious results in the United States. Many of our social lapses are caused by the unfocused vision in which we keep crimes against society. The irrelevancy of our moral uproars produces confusion."

"There is a constant leaking of moral energy, and when it ought to be concentrated it has been dissipated."

"Arbuckle's reappearance in the cinema is not worth an organized protest from anywhere. He will either please or fail to please. Some people want to form a moral mob and hunt him down. That idea cannot prevail in a rational society."

Taken all in all, the big, vital meaning of the whole situation created by Mr. Hays' action in favor of Mr. Arbuckle is, the comedian is going to have his chance in spite of everything his opponents can do to prevent for the simple reason that America is the land of the free, the land where every mortal is regarded as being deserving of a fair chance to retrieve himself if he so desires.

palachicola it put one of the happiest real life endings possible to imagine upon an unusually sad real life drama. And the money that assured the two middle-aged sisters of a life of modest comfort in the small Southern community, wasn't all of it. That check brought the sunshine of hope into gray lives; Miss Kimball is working harder than ever now at her writing. It was a happy fade-out of one episode in the lives of the sisters—and happiest because of its promise of brightness for the future.

Whether or not you prefer happy endings on the stage or screen, chances are you prefer them in your own life. They're handy things to have around the house.

Different Views of the Week's Film News

Douglas Fairbanks is going in for colored photography in his next picture, which will unfold a pirate story. Evidently Doug is determined upon making this feature colorful one way or—both.

Mary Pickford's suggestion that "Hollywood save the trees" be the slogan for 1923, is a capital idea and one which should tend to inspire many thoughtless persons to permit the trees to do their own leaving—and consequent staying.

Something like a billion dollars rolled into the box-offices of the 17,000 theatres showing moving pictures during the year of 1922. A good percentage of this money kept on rolling until it landed in Southern California, where it was spent in making more pictures, all of which is one more good argument in favor of settling in this magic country, Mr. Tourist.

Just conjure this up in your mind for a moment: Nine years ago Hollywood had one studio, a livery stable converted into the slightest semblance of a studio. Today there are nearly seventy studios covering thousands of acres of ground and something like two hundred companies working every day. Moving picture history surely has moved forward most rapidly.

Charles Ray urges that all picture producers strive to make photoplays replete with beauty and truth. This is a splendid exhortation and it is to be devoutly hoped that no one will take exceptions to it on the grounds of it being too lacking in commercialism. History has proven many times that both beauty and truth were valuable assets in business.

They guzzled more ice cream sodas than usual in Hollywood on New Year's Eve, which is one more proof that the buncombe about "horrible Hollywood" is a prize-winning myth. The few who did spend any of their "filthy lucre" for filthy boot-leg booze kept very much in the back-ground even while they were paying again with headaches such as always constitute the penalty for imbibing these days.

Wonder how many people who have taken any stock in the scurrilous attacks made by irresponsible writers upon this community know that Hollywood is one of the real church centers of Southern California and that the attendance at places of worship of various creeds surpasses that of the average city of Iowa, Kansas, Ohio or New York? Undeniable statistics reveal the fact in favor of Hollywood.

Max Linder's forthcoming return to Hollywood to resume his producing activities after making a futile attempt to combat the disadvantages of photoplay-making in France is one more evidence of the fact that Uncle Sam's domain has the edge on the rest of the world in this industry, too. The readiness with which Ernest Lubitsch discontinued his cinema work in Germany and hurried to the U. S. A. to accept a position directing Mary Pickford is still another proof of the same thing.

Jesse L. Lasky, in his New Year's greeting, declares the future of good pictures is secure. Of course there is no change in the status of the future of bad pictures since it was always insecure. Now the point is, how will the producers fare in the struggle for mastery over a scientific knowledge of what is good or bad—or even indifferent—in pictures? It strikes us that the acquisition of a definite, accurate system whereby all photoplays can be judged positively without bias prior to their release to the public and critics is the end most desired right now.

The payroll of motion picture producers in Los Angeles and environs for the year of 1922 totalled thirty million dollars, which was distributed among about 15,000 employees. Three-fourths of all the pictures made in the entire United States were made right here. An additional twenty million dollars was expended for material purchased within this territory by the fifty-two studios in operation during the year. Verily, you don't have to drink cheap whiskey out in this country to get a stagger. The contemplation of motion picture figures is amply staggering.

Now is the time for all good picture folks to come to the aid of their greatest forthcoming event—the Exposition Extraordinary to be held in Los Angeles next June. While the basic occasion will be the observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine, it will be ideal occasion for the motion picture industry to impress its importance upon the whole wide world, and, the more individuals who join in on the impressing the more impressive it will be. Do YOU get the impression we are striving to convey? In plain words, it is very much up to YOU, whoever or whatever you are in the cinema art or film-making business.

Professor Coue, the French auto-suggestion expert who is about to start a tour of the United States, should not fail to visit the motion picture colony of Southern California if only to ascertain in how many ways has been construed his famous saying: "Every day in every way, I am getting better and better." We heard of one Prohibition officer, who is disgusted over the difficulty experienced in enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment, saying: "Every day in every way, the land's getting wetter and wetter." We also heard of a certain actor, who is discouraged over the progress he is making in mastering the technique of motion pictures, saying: "Every day in every way, my head's getting fatter and fatter."

THE NEW PEDAGOGUE

Professor Photoplay, the new general superintendent of Education! And don't you forget it, said dominie is right on the job teaching more lessons better than any of his predecessors or contemporaries, the Public Press et al. He is the latest thing in education is Professor Photoplay, and therefore he enjoys the distinction of being a fad for the good of the general weal. Were he not so popular he would not be so influential. For some time Photoplay has been teaching folks all kinds of object lessons, science and geography, but now he is taking the leadership in imparting vital information on the subject of patriotism and how to make it count for a glorious victory of world-wide righteousness. Supplementing this with powerful instruction on how to make war effectually by food economy et cetera, he is proving to be just about the most servicable public servant extant. And even yet, there are people who are wilfully throwing obstacles in Photoplay's way—censors for the most part who are doing their utmost to minimize the usefulness of a loyal slave to duty. Quite incomprehensible it is, but nevertheless, every great benefactor must endure unjust aspersion. However ungracious the maximum plethora of revolutionary buncombe never did cut a very wide swath, and there is little chance of it in this case. So, Professor Photoplay can go right ahead teaching the legions of apt and eager devotees. May the power to perform this incalculable good never grow less and may the new pedagogue remain in full charge of our great school with plenary jurisdiction!

Coins, Pageantry and a New Epoch

It looks as if the Motion Picture Industry is going to have some special coins of its own. It won't be stage money, either. The United States Senate this week passed Senator Hiram Johnson's bill providing for the coinage of 300,000 half dollars commemorating the Monroe Doctrine Centennial. The bill was sent to the House of Representatives where similar action is anticipated immediately.

These coins are to be distributed through the Los Angeles Clearing House and the banks of Southern California in connection with the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to be given in Los Angeles next summer under the auspices of the Motion Picture Industry. It is planned to sell these half dollars at $1 each, using the fifty cent premium in helping finance the Revue and Exposition.

Interest in this coming event, at which the industry will join the rest of Southern California in playing host to the world, seems to be increasing as the magnitude of the undertaking grows upon the public. The historical Revue, showing in gorgeous pageantry the outstanding events of history, from the coming of Columbus until 1823, when President James Monroe enunciated his famous "hands off" proclamation for the benefit of European nations contemplating further conquests in the New World, will be by far the most spectacular thing of its kind ever attempted.

These events will be depicted by a series of pageants in which the wealth of dramatic and artistic talent in the entire motion picture industry will be utilized. At the same time it is planned to make a picture, using greater detail to give it continuity, that the world may learn real history authentically from the screen. Every branch of the industry has pledged its support for the huge undertaking. Every phase of motion pictures will be directly affected and will be directly benefited.

Many who have never been enthusiastic in their support of the screen and some who have been active opponents of motion pictures have declared the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to be one of the greatest things the industry could have undertaken. The educational possibilities are unlimited, they have said, and they will gladly do all in their power to promote its success. It is thought that a film such as it is planned to make will not only serve a great educational and patriotic purpose, but will win the Motion Picture Industry many new friends and advocates.

Aside from the serious purpose of the project, there will be a month of entertainment the like of which has never been seen in Southern California before. When the Southern California delegation, headed by Frank B. Davison, Director General of the Revue and Exposition, and George E. Cryer, Mayor of Los Angeles, was in Washington in December to invite President Harding here for the formal opening, negotiations were begun for bringing the United States Marine Band to Los Angeles for the Premiere.

There will be sufficient diversity of entertainment to please every taste, as a supplement to the series of historical pageants. The history of music and the dance will be traced from its origin to the present day. There will be a pretentious program of field and aquatic sports. The huge coliseum now nearing completion in Exposition Park will be used for this.

Virtually all the nations of the Western hemisphere will be represented by individual exhibits at the Exposition. The great celebration now in progress at Rio de Janeiro, in observance of the hundredth anniversary of Brazilian independence will be closed March 31, instead of being continued through the summer as was recently planned. This will give ample opportunity for bringing the best of the exhibits there to Los Angeles for the Revue and Exposition here.

The Premiere of the coming event is expected to be the greatest thing of its kind ever held anywhere. President Harding accepted the personal invitation extended him to attend the Premiere and said only unexpected complications in national affairs would prevent his coming. Several members of his cabinet, other high government officials, and prominent Latin American diplomats are expected to be present also.

The contest among art directors for the design of the Exposition buildings closed last week. The judges of the contest are expected to announce their decision shortly. Some of the designs submitted are startling in their beauty and originality. The ensemble effect of the Exposition architecture when it is completed is expected to be one of the most attractive features of the celebration. In compliment to the Central and South American countries participating in the Revue and Exposition, the motif of the architecture will follow the general Spanish style.

The personnel of the Motion Picture Industry is being given the first chance to become patrons of the Revue and Exposition. Patron Certificates costing $10, which may be paid in installments, carry with them $12.50 worth of tickets. These include one admission to the Premiere. Only patrons can attend this, as the number necessarily will be limited. Only a limited number of Patron Certificates are to be issued and when they are finally offered to the general public they are expected to be snapped up quickly.

Cats, Coloratura and Concatenation

By J. O. S.

People of the stage have two traits in their personal cosmos that stand revealed.

One is—don't everybody speak at once—temperament—basely insinuated by persons of candid and brutal tendency to be another name for temper, but known by all true artists to be the elusive and volatile faculty of coloring ordinary situations with a definite tone-tint.

The painter throws gobs of paint on his canvas in apparently casual and indiscriminate manner, which viewed at a distance and in proper perspective assume definite form. This explains why temperament is beautiful in contemplation, but irksome as a roommate.

We will leave this to psychologists to determine, while admitting it as an eccentricity of all artists, whether of stage or atelier.

Another quality not generally attributed to the actor folk, and one which seems the antithesis of this much maligned characteristic, is love for the dumb brute. The homeless mongrel, and even the feline of the alley variety, always finds a friend in the actor, notwithstanding that the house cat of the theatre has many a time and oft spoiled a perfectly good scene by nonchalantly strolling out from the wings and ambling across the stage with sublime indifference to the gasps of mirth and horror that greet his appearance.

In a pathetic scene, say where the hard-hearted father has turned his erring daughter out into the cold, cold world, and is contemplating the picture of his long-lost wife who eloped with the hired man many years before, "Tabby" has even been known to take the center of the stage and meow persistently, or, worse still, do an impromptu dagger dance on the edge of the foots.

This is a contretemps that never occurs in photoplays, but situations just as laughable do occur every night at many motion picture houses, due entirely to misdirected and mistaken efforts of the one-man orchestra, or even the leader of an orchestra, who attempts to "dramatize" (what a libel on the word!) pictures. One of the pet hobbies of this genius is to take "themes," as he calls them, and tack them to the characters on the screen. This he does with more attention to the many concoctions of musical hash he can make out of a given "theme," than to the intent of the action or dramatic situation.

When Annabelle Curlylocks, the cute little ingenue with the tomboy disposition, whom everybody loves and forgives because she has blonde hair and looks sweet in baby clothes, first romps on the scene, her entrance is announced by the tintinnabulation of a frisky giocoso. No matter what vicissitudes Annabelle may encounter in her five-reel life, she is pursued by this Nemesis of a frisky giocoso—sometimes moving with a slow and heavy step like an anaemic cat, at others hopping along on three legs a la valse movimento, and again moping in a minor mode.

Enter the testy old aunt who looks on life with mournful eyes, and is always reproving Curlylocks for her prankish ways, followed by a doleful melody that dogs her relentlessly—a musical Frankenstein. In adopting this thematic scheme the musical tyro imagines he is following the masters, when, in reality, he is simply burlesquing music drama.

It would be interesting to know what the intelligent screen actor would say had he power to speak from the screen. There would be a new field for the censor!

American Pendulum Swings Back to American Screen Hero

By RAY H. LEEK

It is remarkable how much film history can be made in a short week. Seven days ago the feverish quest for successors of Valentino seemed to be at its height. Today it is over.

Not that one of the sleek-haired candidates for the tottering throne of Rodolpho has proved his right to that position. But the desire for such an individual has disappeared as suddenly as it arose.

In other words, the grape vine telegraph system through which the wants of the theater-going public percolate to the inner office of the picture producer has made known the fact that the Valentino type—at best a fad of a few days—no longer is in demand. Instead the upstanding American type of man, who is not too familiar with the heft of the tall silk hat, and whose wardrobe contains no spats, is being eagerly sought by those who find their romance on the silver-sheet.

A tangible evidence of this sudden change in the masculine player market is to be found in the fact that B. P. Schulberg, looked upon as one of the most astute followers of public taste, has passed over the crowded list of actors with "the European idea" and has signed Kenneth Harlan, tall, athletic and typically American, for a term of years. Under this contract the fortunate Kenneth will be featured in a series of special productions to be filmed as Preferred Pictures, future Al Lichtman attractions.

When questioned about his choice Schulberg left little doubt as to his reasons for betting so heavily on this sudden switch of public favor.

"The trend of the times is so unmistakably in favor of the wholesome American type of player, as opposed to what we may call the 'shiek' type that there is no disguising it," he said. "The feminine theater-goer decides the success or failure of the male star. Usually she picks her story book ideal as her screen favorite.

"This does not mean that her screen ideal is identical with her ideal in real life. The girl who has given her heart to a hard working bank cashier may stand in line for hours to see a dashing male beauty perform deeds of unbelievable daring on the screen—without the slightest suggestion of unfaithfulness to her more prosaic choice.

"Consequently, there are fads and fashions in screen favorites just as in literature. The desire for the Continental, or Valentino type was general, but extremely brief. The American theater-goer has a point of view so entirely different from that of the European that except in rare cases is it possible to show European pictures here. Likewise, the American woman cannot long be interested in the type of hero seen in such stories.

"The athletic, wholesome, American type of screen player, I am convinced, is the coming—the permanent—ideal of the theater-goer. I am so convinced of that fact that we are investing heavily in support of this belief."

What won't a picture player sacrifice for his art! Bert Lytell, whose wavy black hair is credited with causing countless feminine hearts to miss many a beat, created a sensation when he appeared on Hollywood streets the other day a perfect blonde. The black waves had become far more unruly and several shades lighter than straw. Bert's explanation is that the proper conception of "Rupert of Hentzau" requires a blonde Rupert. Hence the peroxide.

Theater-goers who mumble over the subtitles in pictures as they are thrown upon the screen probably have little conception of the infinite care with which these bits of art work are prepared. Some hint of the serious effort being made to get real meaning and beauty into "art titles" may be gleaned from the statement that half a dozen famous painters have abandoned their New York studios, where portrait painting, cover designing and other art work was their specialty, to develop this branch of picture production.

Renauld Hoffman, whose titles for "Rich Men's Wives" have attracted so much attention, paused to explain the objective of the art title maker the other day.

"Just to make something beautiful is the least of my difficulties," said he. "The man who seriously undertakes to make art titles studies the scenario and watches the production of the picture as faithfully as does the director himself.

"In some cases it is desirable to use title backgrounds that will carry one away from the narrow limitations of the picture settings—to unleash the imagination of the theater-goer. In others—where the story soars to tremendous heights—it is the constant effort to keep the imagination within certain limitations, to hold it down to the essentials of the plot."

The good old days when picture folk were considered fair prey for any and all who

After being in the same motion picture field for two years, following and preceding each other in various studios, but never meeting face-to-face, Muriel McCormac and Richard Headrick, both four-year-old starlets of the screen, have met at last under rather unusual circumstances. It happened at the radio broadcasting station of a leading Los Angeles newspaper. Both happened to be on the same program to entertain the thousands of radio "fans" who daily listen in on the vocal and instrumental features sent out on the ether waves. This was on New Year's Day and it was a return engagement for Baby Muriel since she had been a headliner on the Christmas Day program, too. When asked to express an opinion of Richard, little Miss McCormac was enthusiastic. "He's too cute for words and I think I'll have him engaged as my leading man in my very first starring vehicle if I ever have one," petite Muriel said. It is strongly suspected that meanwhile Richard is seriously considering Muriel as his leading lady in his first starring vehicle, too.

Edith Storey is looking for a story! This former Metro star, who has been in retirement for about three years, is planning on becoming one of the most active of the active actresses during the new year of 1923 and the most serious obstacle in the way of her immediate resumption of histrionic endeavor before the cameras is the dearth in suitable new plots. In short, Miss Storey is one more reason for the writers of original screen stories pounding on the old typewriters a little harder and incidentally pressing the old creative genius forward to the extent of evolving some acceptable manuscripts.

Muriel Frances Dana will finish a long engagement this week at the United Studios, where she has been playing the biggest part of her career in support of Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory." Next week this four-year-old wonder child will make personal appearances at the Pantages Theatre of Los Angeles as an added attraction to the showing of the Max Graf photoplay, "The Forgotten Law" in which she plays one of the principal parts. Little Miss Dana will offer a complete vaudeville act consisting of songs, dances and monologue, she being the youngest photoplayer in the world to do more than merely make a few bows after saying a few words.

Gaston Glass continues to vie with all other actors as the busiest actor in film-dom. He's been working in two pictures at once and everything during the last several months and he has not had one single minute's rest between pictures since he finished playing the leading male role in Rupert Hughes' "Gimme." The other day he began another B. P. Schulberg production three hours before he had completed enacting his role on another one and now before he is even well started on this latest one, he is already scheduled to start a third-in-a-row one for the same producer. "This is the life and I'd nearly die if I was one bit less busy," Gaston declares.

Lloyd Hughes will start as a full-fledged star under the guidance of Thomas H. Ince within a few days. The story selected as Mr. Hughes' first vehicle for stellar activities is entitled "Atonement."

Max Linder, the famous French comedian, is due to arrive in Hollywood from Helen Kesler and her favorite dog. Miss Kesler has just returned to her old place as Jimmy Aubrey's leading lady in Vitagraph comedies after working in two Rupert Hughes pictures for Goldwyn.

Paris not later than next January 20th and it is said he will start a new full-length comedy immediately. Mr. Linder returned to his native France several months ago to produce a super-picture, but he found financial conditions and studio facilities at such low ebb there that he decided it was a better bet to return to the Southern California field.

Gertrude Astor is now at Colon, Panama, with the Thomas Meighan company under the direction of Al Green, which outfit will be in the southern republic five weeks filming various scenes in the popular Paramount star's newest picture.

Gretchen Hartman, who has just returned to Hollywood from an extensive tour in the east, says the moving picture theatres of such cities as New York, Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore are doing almost double the amount of business they enjoyed last winter, which is taken as another proof of the actual return of normalcy. "The only thing that seems to worry any easterer right now is the shortage of coal," she adds. "Most everybody has more money than coal back there right at present."

In the temporary absence of Maurice (Lefty) Flynn, former Yale football star who has gone to New York to play the "lead" opposite Alice Brady in her latest Paramount picture, Murray Spencer, also an ex-Yale man who has made an auspicious advent into the motion picture field as an actor, will preside at all meetings held by the Yale Actors Club of Southern California and which is composed of more than fifty erstwhile collegians. "Yale and her output must be kept alive and going in the field of cinema, because it is an art worthy of the best traditions of that great institution of learning," declares Mr. Spencer, whose latest film work was done in "McFee's Sensational Rest."

When George Rigas opened one of his Christmas packages which arrived late from Athens, Greece, he was surprised to discover that it contained a three-bowl, one-stem smoking pipe. In plain words, it is three pipes which one man can keep going. The object of the triple bowl capacity is to permit of a smoke combining the power of three different kinds of tobacco with the blending process coming after it has been reduced to smoke instead of in the mixture of the tobaccos.

"The third time is always a charm," Alan Hale points out. "My police dog, Pete, ran away from home for a third time and in view of the fact that he has been missing for a full month now when the other two times he was absent only a couple of days, is sufficient evidence that he's gone for good this time." It is almost superfluous to add that the charm is not in this popular actor's favor especially in view of the fact that the dog was valued at $500.

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

"Hearts Aflame," Reginald Barker's latest directorial achievement will undoubtedly win a place at the top of the list of the best cinema offerings of 1923. Here is a picture so replete with suspense, action and thrills as to be truly remarkable. Moreover, it is enacted by one of the most superbly capable casts ever assembled. Frank Keenan and Anna Q. Nilsson are featured ahead of exactly thirteen others, but according to several critics, Craig Ward, the hero of the story around whom all the action revolves, is second to no one in the matter of brilliant performance. Forsooth, Mr. Ward is credited with being a revelation—one destined to develop rapidly into a veritable sensation. He is an absolute innovation in the way of being a leading man quite unlike all others. No one familiar with his artistic accomplishments and impressive personality could doubt his prospects of rising to dramatic heights above any attained by anyone previously. He is an exceptionally fine specimen of American manhood, fully six feet in height and tipping the beam at about two hundred pounds. He has the classic face of a virile fighter for exalted principles and unusual eyes radiating romantic impulses of the sort sure to ingratiate him with the fair fanettes. We understand he abandoned a successful stage career in Margaret Anglin's company to accept the role of hero in "Hearts Aflame" and it is evident to us the screen has gained a luminary it should do its best to retain. We also understand Mr. Ward is a Harvard graduate. He acts like one—seldom does anyone see so much intelligence as he displays in character interpretation and he seems to have a perfect understanding of dramatic proportions. We have no hesitancy in predicting that Craig Ward will be one of the biggest names in screenomere the year of 1923 has run its course and already it is safe to announce that Director Barker has placed another white feather in his cap as a discoverer of talented recruits for the silver-sheet. Here's hoping Mr. Ward will not yield to the lure of returning to his first love, the stage, because the silent drama needs artists of his type and ability. Welcome, Craig, to our realm—may you like our environment enough to become one of us permanently!

There can be no questioning it, King Vidor has made a near-perfect photoplay out of the material J. Hartley Manners has provided in his greatest stage triumph, "Peg O' My Heart." Nor can there be any doubt of Laurette Taylor's ability as a pantomimist being equal to her ability as a stage actress. Surely here is a motion picture which will join the few assured of a place in posterity. The decisions of the nation's most erudite critics are as nearly unanimous as possible and to publish excerpts from most any review is merely a matter of presenting a study in the various ways to praise without stint. The only difference is, some writers concentrate their energies on lauding Miss Taylor while others devote themselves to singing the praises of the photoplay itself. Some share their space fifty-fifty most enthusiastically as in the case of Motion Picture News, which in one breath declares: "It is one of those enduring plays, which will go on forever," and, in the next breath adds: "for sheer charm of mood and impulse—for sheer charm of caprice and whimsicality, Laurette Taylor's

That the public tastes are improving is indicated by statistics showing the demand for educational films to be nearly double what it was one year ago. In fact, the educational short subject seems to be gradually pushing the old-time two-reel comedy off most programs.

* * * * *

The possibilities of permitting public clamor to cast a motion picture are shown to be exceedingly slight by the experiences of the Goldwyn company in inviting the "fans" to select the player to enact the title role in their contemplated production of "Ben Hur." Already there have been a couple of hundred favorites named. William Farnum, who played the part on the stage years ago, seems to be as good a bet as any of them, while it would not be a bad move for anyone concerned to give William S. Hart the chance to come back to the screen in his old role of Messala.

* * * * *

Never was the trend toward big special productions so pronounced as it is now. It seems no one—not even the "time-honored" makers of "manufactured" program pictures—is prone to do anything less than a "special" in these days of advancement.

* * * * *

All efforts of certain scandal sheets, dedicated to rattling the skeletons in photoplayers' closets, to injure the motion picture industry by making mountains out of mole-hills so far as the present drug war is concerned, are falling flat due to the disinclination of the masses to rush to news-stands to hand out their money for the very latest scandals. It may be the newspapers are giving a great surfeit of this brand of reading.

The theatre-going public continues to show its preference for simple stories free from complications, as is evidenced in the case of the picture version of "Peg O' My Heart" in which Laurette Taylor stars on the screen with as much success as she did on the stage.

Peg is without question the richest portrayal of the silversheet." Exhibitors Herald vies with all competitors in the matter of heaping praise upon this newest screen triumph. Martin J. Quigley, editor of this popular trade journal, says: "This play is among the most delightful and thoroughly entertaining productions of the year." A most careful search through stacks of printed reviews of this picture fails to reveal a single serious objection to it and that its vogue will be extremely prolonged and universally popular is a foregone conclusion.

Better pictures prevail more and more as Father Time steps along and "To Have and to Hold" contributes its share towards the prevailing. In all the essentials "To Have and to Hold" is a better-than-average photoplay and inasmuch as the motion picture here serves once more to perpetuate a romantically vigorous story of good purpose, more rejoicing over the true usefulness of the cinema as an art is in order. One interesting question this picture brings up is: Can a photoplay be too filled with action? Several critics have verged onto taking exceptions to the avidity with which Director George Fitzmaurice has crammed this rapidly moving element into this film. Pearl Rall, of the Los Angeles Evening Express, gives some typical attention to this phase of it as follows: "Critics or playgoers who demand action in their films can find no fault with this Mary Johnston story. It reeks of action from beginning to end." Betty Compson, Bert Lytell, Theodore Kosloff and Raymond Hatton all come in for a share of the praise for making this picture a success. Miss Compson does her best work of many a moon while Mr. Lytell portrays his character with decided intelligence such as it does the heart good to see visualized on the screen. Mr. Kosloff's villainy is an astonishing revelation of this artist's versatility while Mr. Hatton's characterization of the weak King James I is an engrossing study of the artistic finesse of a master of the craft.

If its story had been as imperative as the title, Tom Mix's "Catch My Smoke" would have been deserving of classification as among his very best starring vehicles, but it is to be feared the always interesting Mix has depended too much upon his own acting and the extraordinary tricks of his truly great horse, Tony, to hold the interest. Of course this combination will suffice so far as the children are concerned, for this picture will tickle them from beginning to end, but for the sake of holding his general public, which consists of adults as well as children, this champion of rollicking western comedy-dramas should give at least a little more attention to the constructing of a more coherent plot if only to challenge the intelligence of the average matured mind. In the first place, he must get away from stories so familiar as to be hackneyed, we would say, and, in the second place, we must add it would be a fine thing if Mr. Mix would take full advantage of his golden opportunities for impressing the juvenile mind with valuable object lessons in the finales of his films. He is idolized by Young America as few screen favorites are and he has earned this popularity. Now to teach the youth something more than stunts! It is simply a matter of getting back to fundamentals: of making the silversheet serve a laudable purpose while it entertains. Don't let the one remaining impression be relative to some hair-raising stunt and a fine equine performance alone. Let it be plain to the most unsophisticated that right has won out because right always deserves such victory. Of course Mix pictures are always beyond reproach so far as cleanliness goes—it is all merely a proposition of unfolding more story of sufficient import to make everyone think about it for some time after coming in contact with it pictorially. If the one memory is going to be simply of a good actor and a good horse, Mr. Mix will miss accomplishing all he is so brilliantly capable of accomplishing.

Universal is more on the upward wing than ever. All the latest releases of this great organization indicate a very marked

DOPE WARRIORS ARE MAKING HEADWAY

The fact that it has become far more difficult to buy drugs from illicit sources during the last week indicates the vigilant crusade of the federal and local authorities is having a highly desirable effect in Los Angeles and environs. The righteous war of the preservers of the law against dope peddlers and higher-ups is gathering noticeable momentum and reassuring results are beginning to be discernible. One of the most gratifying announcements of the current week was that pertaining to the United States government inaugurating a campaign to keep all the ports in the world under a close surveillance with the determination of stopping the importation of all forms of narcotics. This is a move in the right direction since it bids fair to get at the very root of the trouble with the prospect of nipping the vicious traffic in the bud.

One of the most important developments of the week was the arrest of Dr. John Scott Barker in Oakland on a charge of having illegally sold drugs. He had maintained a sanatorium in Los Angeles and all the records of this institution were seized by the authorities. These records revealed that at least one well-known film star, Juanita Hansen, had been a patient and had entirely cured herself of the craving for such stimulants while it was indicated Wallace Reid had come out of the same sanatorium a physical wreck.

A private investigation of moment has revealed the interesting fact that among all the hundreds of photoplayers in the Southern California field, there are less than a dozen who have ever been known to be addicted to the use of drugs. This decisively disproves the wildly exaggerated rumors to the effect that the habit is common among members of this profession.

Clifford S. Elfelt, president and general manager, Metropolitan Productions, Inc., announces that the new series of special western dramas, featuring J. B. Warner, are to be known as the Clifford S. Elfelt productions. The first of the productions, featuring Mr. Warner, is from an original story written by Frank Howard Clark, entitled "Danger," which is now in the first week of production at the Fine Arts studio.

LASKY TO FINISH 4 BIG FILMS IN 1 WEEK

Seldom do so many "big 'uns" come down the home-stretch in a single week in the same studio as they will next week at the Lasky Studios, where four features of the first importance will be completed almost simultaneously.

Perhaps the most interesting of this group is the George Fitzmaurice production of "Bella Donna" in which Pola Negri is making her American screen debut with the aid of Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson.

Another picture of unusual interest to be concluded about the same moment is Walter Hiers' first starring vehicle, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," in which he is supported by Jacqueline Logan and George Fawcett.

Finis will be written to "The Tiger's Claw," too. Jack Holt is being starred in this picture, described as a thriller. Eva Novak plays the feminine lead opposite Mr. Holt in this production.

Gloria Swanson has practically completed the scenes in the Greenwich Village which forms some of the most interesting moments in "Prodigal Daughters," the Sam Wood production in which she is to be starred by Paramount. Her studio in Washington Square is a weirdly beautiful place, arabesque in decoration, while the company there assembled is almost grotesque in character. Monte M. Katterjohn adapted the story by Joseph Hocking and modified it to meet the present day trend in pictures.

Edwin Stevens, one of the most popular of American actors, was laid to rest this week. His death was due to pleurisy. He was sixty years of age and his most notable stage appearances were made in support of Ethel Barrymore and Henrietta Crossman. During the last several years he has devoted his entire attention to motion picture work in Hollywood. His final screen appearance will be made in Bennie Zeidman's production of "The Spider and the Rose" in which he will be billed as one of the featured players of an all-star cast. Few actors were held in higher es-

PHOTOPLAYERS AID HOLLYWOOD IN ROSE-FEST

Motion picture folks went to Hollywood's aid when Southern California gathered up its flowery beauty New Year's day and placed it in Pasadena, at the annual Tournament of Roses. Such a display of nature's loveliness can hardly be expected to be equaled again. While 250,000 spectators looked on, a mass of floral splendor paraded through three miles of flower-strewn streets of Pasadena. Many hours before the floral barges had sought their places in line, a solid mass of humanity had lined the streets and thoroughfares through which it would pass.

For the fifth time in the history of the Pageant of Roses, the City of Glendale, staking its hopes on a gorgeous peacock, covered with California's fairest blossoms, was awarded the first prize. A trailer following their beautiful display carried the four loving cups won by previous contributions to the Pageant.

Hollywood distinguished herself by carrying off fourth prize in the Class A, Civic Body division, presenting a marvelous Queen of Beauty Float, with May McAvoy portraying the title role. Co-featuring in support were Baby Peggy and little Billie Lord, two of filmdom's most prominent child artists. This trio of film celebrities created a sensation as their float passed the cheering throngs.

Ballston Spa, a New York village, has just voted in favor of Sunday motion picture exhibitions by a vote of 848 to 750.

PHOTOPLAYS BY RADIO IS IN PROSPECT

It seems like a wild stretch of the imagination, but the transmission of motion pictures by radio seems destined to come some day as a feasible reality. According to reports emanating this week from the laboratories of C. Francis Jenkins in Washington, D. C., surprising progress is being made in the development of scientific methods for making such remarkable feats possible and common in the future. It is definitely stated that within the next 18 months, it is likely there will be perfected an apparatus capable of projecting animated pictorial action from a central broadcasting station throughout an extensive radius via the ether waves. The one vital problem remaining unsolved at present is that pertaining to speed, having to do with experiments as to how swiftly any mechanism will have to operate to be synchronized with the color-carrying power of the air.

Mr. Jenkins, who is dedicating his life to the promotion of such science, is given a great deal of credit for developing the present motion picture projection machine into the marvel of reliability it is today and those familiar with his ideas as to how to press the radio into the service of further popularizing motion pictures claim he has discovered the trail which bids fair to lead to success as complete as has blessed his efforts in behalf of his past accomplishments.

While the whole prospect of sitting in one's home and watching movies transported by thin air sounds a little too ethereal to impress as real, it seems so well within the range of possibility as an early achievement of man that it is attracting the attention of practically all the learned men of the nation.

Leon is On Again

Leon Bary has been assigned an important role in support of Dustin Farnum in his next William Fox special, actual filming of which will be started next week somewhere in the north where snow abounds. Colin Campbell will direct. Mr. Bary returned only recently from Hawaii, where he played a principal part in support of Betty Compton in her latest Paramount picture, "The White Flower."

Three Noted Actors Die

Edwin Stevens, one of the most popular of American actors, was laid to rest this week. His death was due to pleurisy. He was sixty years of age and his most notable stage appearances were made in support of Ethel Barrymore and Henrietta Crossman. During the last several years he has devoted his entire attention to motion picture work in Hollywood. His final screen appearance will be made in Bennie Zeidman's production of "The Spider and the Rose" in which he will be billed as one of the featured players of an all-star cast. Few actors were held in higher esteem than Edwin Stevens and his demise constitutes a distinct loss to the Thespian art.

Harrison Hunter, creator of the title role in "The Bat," the sensational stage success, died in Boston Tuesday after a major operation.

George Hernandez, a veteran motion picture actor, died last Sunday at the Glendale Sanitarium and was laid to rest Tuesday. Mr. Hernandez began his screen career with Selig in 1910 and he was widely popular as an exceedingly capable delineator of unusual characters.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Film News of This Week You May Have Overlooked.

David W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," has been re-issued as a United Artists' special.

Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" opened in London Christmas week and according to cable reports has scored an instantaneous hit there.

"The Light That Failed," another one of Kipling's literary gems, will reach the screen. Rex Ingram plans to make it after completing "Scaramouche."

Herbert Brenon, one of the real pioneer directors of motion pictures, has just arrived in Los Angeles for his first sojourn in the film capitol. He will direct for Lasky.

Two of "Fatty" Arbuckle's older comedies were shown at the Park Theatre in New York New Year's Eve and not only failed to cause a riot, but likewise failed to even fill the house.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, has concluded a 108-day run at the Criterion Theatre in New York. A total of 245 performances were given during this time.

"Going Up!" originally called "The Aviator," has been purchased by Douglas MacLean, who will produce and star in it at the Hollywood studios, where he has established his own producing unit.

"Her Reputation" is the title which has been chosen for Thomas H. Ince's latest picture, an original by Bradley King temporarily titled "News" which has been completed at the Ince studios. May McAvoy and Lloyd Hughes head the cast.

Marshall Neilan has started another picture at the Goldwyn studios. It's "The Ingrate" in which Hobart Bosworth will play the feature role. Claire Windsor, Bessie Love, Helen Lynch, George Cooper and Tom Gallery are the other principals in the cast.

It is interesting to note that during the six months from March 1 to September 1, 1922, there were released a total of 285 full-length feature photographs, 220 short comedies, 64 short dramas, 117 miscellaneous short subjects, 16 scenics, 6 serials and 5 series of news reels.

Rupert Julian's story of "Flesh" has been completed by Universal. George Archambaud directed the production. In the cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Grace Darmond and Clyde Fillmore. Julian, who is producing "Merry Go Round," also prepared the continuity for this story.

Jane Novak, who is usually seen in pictures wearingingham aprons and sun-bonnets, will be all dressed up in lace and everything in her next production which has just been started, under the direction of Chester Bennett. The story, as yet untitled, is from the pen of Arthur Dennison and is a modern society tale.

Federal statistics reveal the fact that fifty billion cigarettes are smoked in America every year, or 460 per year for every man, woman and child. Hollywood's quota of smokes divided by its populace reveals the fact that each man, woman and child in filmdom's capitol smoke only 210 per year. Wicked Hollywood!

Hobart Bosworth is all ready to start filming a series of four feature productions in which he will star. The stories are: "The Blood Ship," "Blue Blood and Pirates," "The Silent Skipper" and "Violets of Yesterday." With the exception of the last title, it sounds as if Mr. Bosworth is going to be very much at sea for the next few months.

"His Good Name," the William Slavens McNutt story, recently published in Collier's magazine, is being filmed by Universal, under the direction of Harry A. Pollard, who directed "The Leather Pushers." Rockliffe Fellowes, Fritz Ridgeway, Hayden Stevenson, Buddy Messenger and Frederick Stanton are the principals selected for the cast.

A special orchestration for "Bell Boy 13," Thomas H. Ince's new comedy farce, starring Douglas MacLean, which will be released shortly, has been written by Sol Cohen, noted Los Angeles violinist. MacLean is said to have put over the best characterization of his career since "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave" in this farce of modern hotel life.

Two distinguished Hoosiers met in Los Angeles recently when Will H. Hays, supreme arbiter of filmdom, discussed the future of the cinema with Gene Stratton-Porter, the Indiana novelist, who recently became a motion picture producer for the purpose of screening her own widely read works. Mrs. Porter pledged to Mr. Hays her enthusiastic support of his efforts in behalf of the film industry.

Who will be who in the principal roles in the picturization of "Main Street," to be made by Warner Brothers, has been settled at last. Florence Vidor will play the leading part of Carol Kennicott. Monte Blue will be Dr. Kennicott while Noah Beery will visualize the character of Valborg. Three other big names are in the cast—Robert Gordon, Harry Myers and Louise Fazenda.

Neither Mary Pickford nor Douglas Fairbanks seems to be anything like ready to start actual "shooting" on their new pictures. Edward Knoblock, the playwright, is said to be applying himself assiduously to preparing Doug's next starring vehicle while Ernst Lubitsch, the German wizard of the directorial art, seems busy enough preparing to preside over the filming of "Dorothy of Haddon Hall."

The Famous Players' experiment with producing motion pictures in Germany is definitely a matter of history now and chalked down against it is the word "failure." The Berlin studio this company fitted up will be used as merely a distribution center henceforth. Also in the future, this concern will confine all of its producing activities to Hollywood and Long Island, New York.

San Francisco, Cal., January 2nd.—A Vitagraph company making "Masters of Men," finished the sea scenes done on San Francisco bay, and returned to the studio last week.

Eric Von Stroheim and Ernest Traxler of the Goldwyn forces returned to San Francisco on Friday. They will do the scenario here for "McTeague" from Frank Norris' story.

John Emmett McCormick, Western representative of First National, with headquarters in Los Angeles, spent Christmas with his parents in Milbrae.

Mae Murray is spending the week-end in San Francisco, and welcomed in the New Year here.

Paul Gerson has left for Los Angeles to superintend the feature picture made by the Paul Gerson Picture Corporation. The picture will be made at the Universal Studios,

Flashes from Frisco

Lorrimer Johnson, director, with a cast including Joseph Swickard, Fritz Ridgeway, Virginia Brown Faire, Carolyn Francis Cook, Paul Gerson and others.

The Paul Gerson Picture Corporation has taken over the Montague Studios at 1974 Page Street, San Francisco, and will make it their permanent home. The buildings are being enlarged and improved, and they will have room enough for four companies, and expect to have three or four units steadily at work. January 2nd work was begun there on the series of two-reel pictures done from Peter B. Kyne's Saturday Evening Post stories. Orral Humphrey will be featured, with Craig Hutchinson directing, and John Thompson at the camera.

William Dudley Pelley, whose book "The Fog" is to be made into a picture by Graf Productions, is in this city in consultation with Max and Louis Graf about details and locations, as the picture is to be done at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo. Work will begin the middle of January as soon as H. H. Van Loan finishes the scenario.

The Northern California Photo Play Corporation on Friday started a company of five people to Buenos Aires to make a series of two-reel comedies. Charlot Molina is at the head of the company with Floyd Logan as co-director. Anna Smith will dance with them and they carry a trained bull. The films will be sent up to San Francisco to be released every two weeks. This company will send a second company to South America soon to make two-reel pictures of the capture of wild beasts, native tribes, and the scenery of the jungles and mountains of the interior of Peru. The company will consist of ten men headed by J. J. Don Q., late of the Selig forces, Jerry Bolton, and W. A. Rogers, cameramen. They will go via New Orleans, Christobal, and Guanaquil to the interior of Peru and the high Andes. Don Q. will also capture wild animals to be sent back to zoos here. The pictures will be released as two-reelers, one every month.

ACTOR HURT WORSE AS SCREEN HERO THAN IN WAR

You don't have to go to war to get hurt. You can go into pictures and get the same result. Ward Craig is among the many actors who will testify to this. He served in the United States army throughout the precarious days of the World War in Europe without getting so much as a scratch, rising from a private to a first lieutenantcy through his bravery and efficiency. Then in playing his first role in a California-made motion picture, he was injured so severely that he was confined to a hospital bed for more than five weeks.

It all happened while he was serving as the heroic leading man opposite Anna Q. Nilsson in the Louis B. Mayer production of "Hearts Aflame" under the direction of Reginald Barker. The scenario called for some histrionic endeavor on his part in the midst of some real flames which were swiftly destroying a forest. In his eagerness to portray all the realism possible, Mr. Craig was burned so nearly to a crisp that his face forbade recognition for several weeks. In fact, he has only just recovered and is once more ready to respond to the engagement calls of his manager, John Lancaster.

Mr. Craig is one of the newcomers in the Hollywood film colony, having ended a triumphant stage engagement with Margaret Anglin to serve as the hero in "Hearts Aflame." He is a somewhat different kind of a leading man, being entirely out of the "pretty man class" and more in the ranks of the big, stalwart American chap who is the real back-bone of real American life. He is fully six feet in height and weighs well over the 200-pound mark.

"It is like old war days of countless hair-raising escapes to work in pictures filled with adventure and although I am hopeful of being a little more fortunate in the matter of escaping in the future, I must admit that I am fascinated by the work and already I feel safe in declaring my preference for the screen over the stage," Mr. Craig says.

Not So Wild

The man who wrote "The Sins of Hollywood" ought to live on my street. They roll up the sidewalks at eight-thirty.

The day following the completion of his engagement at Warner Brothers studio, in their production, "Brass," little Bruce Guerin, three-year-old screen artist, was cast for a Universal picture, starring Priscilla Dean, under the direction of Tod Browning.

Craig Ward, who was severely burned playing the hero's role in the Reginald Barker production of "Hearts Aflame."

POSSIBLY ABOUT YOU!

Mary Lee Wise, who is appearing as Queen Anne in "To Have and to Hold," has finished an engagement in "The Famous Mrs. Fair" for Louis B. Mayer.

Harry S. Northrup has been engaged for the Charles Chaplin production of "Destiny," featuring Edna Purviance. This production is under the personal direction of Mr. Chaplin.

Edward Jobson is playing a wealthy commodore with Tom Mix at Fox in "A Modern Monte Cristo."

King Vidor will direct the Goldwyn production of "Three Wise Fools," which will be under production soon.

"The Zero Hour" is announced as the title of the last picture in Lester Cuneo's present series of westerns for Western Pictures Exploitation company. The story was written and is being directed by Henry McCarty, who is the author and director of all pictures so far produced by the company. Interiors are being filmed at Fine Arts.

Charles R. Seeling has signed Big Boy Williams again for a two years' contract. Big Boy was Seeling's find three years ago when he starred him in six pictures. Williams proved to be a box-office star. Mr. Seeling, after his last trip to New York, found that New York, Texas, and other states were anxious for more of his pictures. He will make six pictures a year with the youthful star.

Walter Hiers has had a little heart trouble lately, so the Lasky organization has presented him with a few months' leave as a wedding present. The cause of his affliction is Miss Ada McWilliams, formerly of Hollywood. The ceremony will take place in New York, after which the couple will make a honeymoon tour.

Louis Victor Eytinge, life-prisoner who was given a reprieve on good behavior Christmas day, made a visit to Universal City Tuesday. He is the author of "The Man Under Cover," Universal's next starring picture for Herbert Rawlinson.

EARLE IS OUT TO OUT-BELASCO BELASCO

"To show the Twentieth Century through the eyes of a dreamer of dreams."

That, Ferdinand Earle confides, is his hope in producing for motion pictures Eugene Walter's melodrama "The Easiest Way."

"I have long desired to do a modern story with beautiful lighting and beautiful sets," explains Earle.

The question arises whether "The Easiest Way," dramatizing life in New York's "roaring Forties," can sustain the poetic and artistic flavor with which Earle infused "The Rubaiyat."

Artistic devices which largely replace ordinary motion picture studio "sets" in Earle's screen edition of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, excited curiosity among film producers and distributors. The picture itself occasioned praise from many of Earle's contemporaries in picture-making—and a law suit on the part of one of them.

David Belasco, who produced the stage play with Frances Starr in the leading role, contributed greatly to the strength of the story by the use of that wizardly realism for which he is famous.

That Ferdinand Earle is likely to "out-Belasco" Belasco is young David O. Selznick's prediction.

PICTURES OF MONROE DOCTRINE IN L. A.

Photographic reproductions of the Monroe Doctrine as the immortal James Monroe drew it have been brought to Los Angeles from the government archives at Washington, D. C., for use in connection with the great Motion Picture Exposition to be held at Exposition Park next June in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of this historical document, which has played such a potential part in preserving the comity of nations in the New World.

The special delegation, headed by Mayor George E. Cryer, was entrusted with the priceless photographic records on its recent visit to the nation's capitol and one of the purposes in using them will be to promulgate the inspiring principles enunciated through this undying medium by the illustrious statesman to whom the country is obligated for finding a practical way to prevent encroachments on the part of older governments.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

One thing certain, 1923 will be a bigger year than 1922 by one at least.

It's a dull week when the gossipers fail to have Charlie Chaplin wedded at least once. Pretty soon an expert statistician will be needed to keep track of all the alleged Chaplin nuptials.

It is easy to criticize, but not so easy to stabilize. It is comparatively easy to tell them how bad their pictures are, but not so easy to designate ways to improve them. Let's all choose the more difficult course and try to be constructive. Instead of encouraging "knocks," why not promote the worthier cause of forming boosting blocs!

"Make Hays while the sun of indignation shines," seem to be the slogan of the good ministers just now so zealous in the fight against Roscoe Arbuckle. However, there is no indication of Hays being as amenable to ministerial edicts as some men might be and consequently Fatty's fat chance remains fat. Meanwhile Hays' prestige suffers.

Somehow they must ring down the curtain on the drug ring and it must be curtains forever for this bane of society. Let no man—private citizen or official—desist his efforts until the freedom of all mortals from the viperous dope peddlers is assured. Make Southern California an unsafe place for any such law-breaker. Let there be nothing less than sweeping victory for the forces of right and orderly living.

It is predicted that the corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Cahuenga Avenue will be the 42nd and Broadway of Hollywood some day. If it ever is, here's hoping one familiar "sight" of New York's great corner will be missing from the picture. That "sight" undesirable is none other than the professional panhandler who has infested Gotham from time immemorable.

The Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Los Angeles next June in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine deserves the unlimited support of every photoplayer in all filmdom and the photoplayer who fails to give the project such support is failing to give his own means of livelihood a boost it deserves. Think it over briefly and hasten to ascertain how to help the good thing along!

A FRIEND

"What is a friend? I will tell you. It is a person with whom you dare to be yourself. Your soul can go naked with him. He seems to ask of you to put on nothing, only to be what you are. He does not want you to be better or worse. When you are with him you feel as a prisoner feels who has been declared innocent. You do not have to be on your guard. You can say what you think, express what you feel. He is shocked at nothing, offended at nothing, so long as it is genuinely you. He understands those contradictions in your nature that lead others to misjudge you. With him you breathe free. You can take off your coat and loosen your collar. You can avow your little vanities and envies and hates and vicious sparks, your meanness and absurdities, and in opening them up to him they are lost, dissolved in the white ocean of his loyalty. He understands. You do not have to be careful. You can abuse him, neglect him, berate him. Best of all, you can keep still with him. It makes no difference. He likes you. He is like fire, that purifies all you do. He is like water that cleanses all you say. He is like wine and warms you to the bone. He understands. You can weep with him, laugh with him, sing with him, pray with him. Through and underneath it all, he sees, knows and loves you. A friend, I repeat, is one with whom you dare to be yourself."

THE FOURTH DIMENSION

There's something in the present air, most queer and odd and most bizarre, fills me with apprehension; I hear it talked in den and shop where savants meet, ideas to swap,—the Famous Fourth Dimension. It seems it's round us everywhere, fills every solid and the air, has elastic extension, it's here and there, yet we can't see, and that's the thing that puzzles me about the Fourth Dimension. They say it's outside things that are, just at your elbow, near a star, it causes mild dissension, they say it fills all things the most, it causes all, from Man to Ghost, this weird old Fourth Dimension. Some say it's Mind, some claim it's Love, which gets our whole attention, some says it's kriyasakti force, they disagree 'til they get hoarse, about the Fourth Dimension. Some say its dreary mathematics, they seem to have bugs in their attics, and can't give clear attention. The Rule of Three was taught to me and that's as far as I can see,—not in the Fourth Dimension. It's in the air, its in the ground, in mines of gold it doth abound, and more places to mention, I'd like to know just where it lies, whether in front or behind the eyes, this funny Fourth Dimension. Some wand'ring chap from Hindu land, gave it to Those Who Understand, those terms that need declension, like Prana, Yogi and the like that make us for the dictionary hike,—this great Unknown Dimension. I think myself it's only Love, for that gets any man above ideas of wage or pension, he can't see solids as they are, he thinks his Girl came from a star, out in the Fourth Dimension. He presently doth then emerge, a victim of the Cosmic Urge, and gives nightly attention, to lulling baby squawks that came as a necessary corollary of the Game, from Out The Fourth Dimension.

JUST JESTING

IS THIS TRUE?

"Pretty girls should be called Opportunity."
"And why?"
"Because they are so often embraced."

FINDING KATE

Tommy's sister Katie had hidden from him, and, after searching the place over, he finally found her perched high in a nearby apple tree. Tommy ran to the house shouting with glee, "I found her! I found her!" to which his mamma responded, "You finally located her, did you?"

"No," came the unexpected reply, "I high-Kated her."

STARTED HIM UP

First Aviator: What did young Wingleigh do when you told him you had beaten his altitude record?

Second Aviator: He went right up in the air.

THE REAL MOTIVE

Young fish: It's real kind of that man to put a fresh worm on that crooked wire as soon as we take one off.

Old fish: Beware, my son! His motive is not one of kindness. He is trying to worm his way into our confidence.

FALSE TESTIMONY

Attorney: Your husband has testified that you cast aspersions upon him.

Mrs. Divorco: Then he lied! I never did throw anything on him but hot water.

GLORIOUS

There is nothing else that affords the exultant pleasure of spending somebody else's money.

THE CHICKENS USE IT

"What caused the coolness between Jones and Miss Primply?"
"He referred to talcum powder as Poultry Compound."

FIRED EITHER WAY

Instead of being fired by ambition a great many men are fired for lack of ambition.

WHEN EGGS ARE HIGH

Teacher (endeavoring to illustrate the word "untidy"): Now, if a little boy was to come to school with his face all smeared with egg, what should he be called?

Johnny: Eggstravagant!

The demand for motion pictures is growing. Official government statistics prove this. Hence the reformer who insists the whole business is going to the bow-bows would do well to go away back and sit on a tack in order to get the point.

There seems to be a very marked trend towards tossing the Valentinos aside into the discard. It is possible that when Rodolph finishes his legal battle he will not be able to demand even $1250 a week.

BABY CALLED BACK FOR ENCORE ON TIMES RADIO

If it means anything to be called back for encores, Baby Muriel McCormac, four-year-old screen starlet, is a big winner in all the word implies. Motion picture directors habitually call her back for second and third engagements in their productions because of her artistic histrionic ability and now the Los Angeles Times has re-engaged her in a new calling, namely: entertaining over the radio. Little Miss McCormac was among those who entertained the legions of radio fans from the Times broadcasting station on Christmas Day and when she told some stories impromptu which caused people all over Southern California to roar with laughter, it was decided there and then she should be among the head-liners of the other biggest day of the year: New Year's Day. Hence she was invited back and did make her second "appearance" over the ether waves on that day.

One of the notable events of this latter occasion was the first meeting of Baby McCormac and Richard Headrick, another well-known juvenile artist, at the radio station. Although these two little rivals for high screen honors vied with each other to do their best in broadcasting diversion, they became boon companions and each expressed a wish to work with the other in some future photoplay.

A striking coincidence is that Baby Headrick appeared in the B. P. Schulberg production of "Rich Men's Wives" while Baby McCormac has just finished a long engagement in the same producer's "Poor Man's Wives."

NAME OF MANNERS IS IN DISPUTE ONCE MORE

A resumption of the legal battle royal for the exclusive right to the use of the name of Dorothy Manners is threatened again. The Dorothy Manners of Hollywood, who is just now playing in her second picture with Shirley Mason at the William Fox Studios, has been aroused to action by the re-appearance in the public prints of Miss Sally Bosse under the name of Dorothy Manners. The latter is pursuing her histrionic career in New York City. She is a blonde while the Dorothy Manners of Hollywood is a pronounced brunette. The two of them had a long-distance set-to across the continent over this cognomen matter a few months ago when Miss Bosse figured as a co-respondent in a divorce suit. The Hollywood Dorothy proved by documentary evidence that her full legal name is Dorothy Manners Greene and that she therefore had the right to the abbreviated Dorothy Manners wherein Sally Bosse had no right to it at all.

The lull in the storm came when Miss Bosse indicated her intention of not only discontinuing the use of the name, but a decision to retire from the screen. Now it seems she is back with the proverbial vengeance and still determined to be a Dorothy Manners. The one out west who claims to be the real owner of the name is just as determined to stop her if she has to go all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States to accomplish it.

"One thing that I do claim is entirely my own is my name," the Hollywood Dorothy Manners says. "It isn't so bad to have someone else appropriate one's name, but it is very bad if that someone has different ideas as to how the name should be used. I have every reason to fight to keep the name the law says is mine and I'm going to fight, too."

This Dorothy Manners is quite generally heralded as one of the most beautiful brunettes in pictures and she is climbing the ladder of cinema success rapidly. Her next notable screen appearances will be in support of Jack Pickford in "Garrison's Finish," and in support of Shirley Mason in "Pawn Ticket 210."

Rita Rogan, the seven-year-old cinema artist who won praise in such productions as "The Wild Goose," and "Orphans of the Storm," has been engaged by the Arrow Film Corporation to star in a series of feature pictures, the first of which is now in the course of production at the Tec Art Studios in New York.

Dorothy Manners, one of the most beautiful women in pictures, who announces she will fight to retain the exclusive use of her legal name.

200 GUESTS PRE-VIEW RAY HIT

Charlie Ray has another screen triumph to his credit. Two hundred capable judges, who were the invited guests of the star and Stanley Anderson, manager of the Beverly Hills Hotel where the pre-view was given Thursday night, are practically unanimous in this decision as a result of seeing his latest completed feature, "The Girl I Loved."

Although Mr. Ray has returned to a serious role—that of an impetuous lover—and although there will be a disposition to miss some of the delightful comedy touches with which this sterling actor has usually adorned his pictures, it is a foregone conclusion that "The Girl I Loved" has given him all the requisite opportunities to score a personal triumph, and, all are agreed that he has taken full advantage of his every opportunity.

As is generally known, the story unfolded in this work is the personal love history of James Whitcomb Riley as the revered Hoosier poet revealed it in the masterly verses he wrote under this title. However, Mr. Ray has lightened the exceedingly heavy drama suggested by interpolating episodes of a prankish boy's life on an Indiana farm. In this portion of the photoplay he is at his best.

COMEDIANS ARE ABANDONING 2-REELER

What's going to become of the two-reel comedies? Practically all the leading comedians of the screen have either abandoned the short subject in favor of fun films of from four to nine reels or are planning such a move.

Charles Chaplin ended his career as a two-reel star with the final shooting on "The Pilgrim," the last picture he will ever make for First National and after he completes his self-imposed task of directing Edna Purviance in her present feature comedy-drama, he will resume the making of innovations in length and strength of "The Kid," according to authentic report.

Harold Lloyd has long since discontinued making 1800-foot and 2000-foot films and he has been boosting his footage ever since "The Sailor-Made Man," both "Grandma's Boy" and "Dr. Jack" being longer.

Max Linder, the greatest foreign comedian, was a pioneer in the making of feature-length comedies. His "Seven Years' Bad Luck," "Ee My Wife" and "The Three Must-Get-Theres," all feature productions, have been the biggest triumph of his brilliant career of eighteen years' duration as a cinema star.

Monty Banks is the latest comedian to announce plans for expanding his fun-making enterprises into at least four-reelers and he will make the change immediately upon completing his present contract with Federated next March.

Larry Semon and Lloyd Hamilton are two other kings of the kingdom of laughter who are expected to follow suit in the pursuit of more extensive trails ere long and when all this galaxy of leaders are into the new field, there will be just cause for wondering what the ultimate fate of the two-reel comedy will be. It is possible it will pass into the land of past history just as the half-reeler did and as the one-reeler seems destined to do before long.

Joseph B. Walker, cameraman, is now with the Clifford Efelt company at Fine Arts studio, photographing "Danger," a forthcoming Efelt production. "Chub," the little wire-haired fox-terrier which Walker has been training for the screen, has a prominent part in the picture, appearing with a small pig and three kittens in several scenes. This is "Chub's" first appearance but he already shows promise of becoming an accomplished canine actor.

TOLD IN A HEAD-LINE

ALL SIGNS OF THE PRESENT WEEK INDICATE THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY IS ON THE CREST OF AN UNPRECEDENTED WAVE OF PROSPERITY AND THAT 1923 WILL BE THE BIGGEST PRODUCTION YEAR IN ALL THE ANNALS OF THE CINEMA.

EXPO PREMIERE WILL BE A THRILLER

The probability of President Harding being in Los Angeles for the formal opening of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition next June is accelerating the sale of Patron's Certificates throughout the film industry, according to reports at exposition headquarters. The Certificates are not ready for delivery yet, but applications are being taken at $10.00 each. The certificates will include admission to the Premiere of the Revue and Exposition and regular admission and grandstand Revue tickets.

One of the most interesting events will be the Exposition Premiere, to which only patrons will be admitted. This will begin at 8 o'clock the opening night with an electrical parade; the official inspection of the Revue and Exposition by President Harding, the Governor, the Mayor and other dignitaries participating; the Stars' and Queens' Ball, from 10 P. M. until 12. Exactly at midnight the President will proclaim the official opening. This will be followed by a pyrotechnic display. At 1 A. M. there will be an exposition breakfast; at 2 A. M. All Stars' and Queens' Ball and Reception, and at sunrise taps for the premiere, and reveille for the public opening.

Inasmuch as the event is sponsored by the film industry its personnel is being given the first chance to become patrons. Attendance at the premiere, of course, will have to be limited. Hence, only those who buy their certificates now are assuring themselves of admittance.

Halperin productions, whose latest production, "What Do We Live For," has been proclaimed as one of the best feature pictures produced during the year 1922, is preparing to start shortly on a new story, the title and details of which have not been announced.

Jess Robbins plans to start production at the Fine Arts studios before the 15th of January on a new comedy-drama for Vitaphone. His latest picture, "A Front Page Story," is now being prepared for early release.

Fanchon Royer, or who is known in private life as Mrs. Raymond Cannon, will write continuity for a series of single-reel farce comedies which her husband will direct and produce at the Fine Arts studios. Cecil Holland will be starred in the series.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Fatty's Wife Coming Back Too

Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle, professionally known as Minta Durfee, has announced she will return once more to the stage and screen. Miss Durfee was the first actress to play opposite Charlie Chaplin in America and made her last screen appearance in support of Mabel Normand in "Mickey." Miss Durfee played leading roles in Keystone Comedies for four years and has over 100 screen appearances to her credit.

English Actor Has War Record

Monte Moles, the English comedian who recently located in Hollywood, is bent on convincing the American picture-lovers that his ability as a fun-maker is not confined to the speaking stage only. Monte has a rather picturesque past. At the outbreak of the World War he was making a tour of Canadian speaking stages, and immediately enlisted in the Canadian Navy where he trained for seven months. He was then transferred to the Canadian Cavalry and was sent "Over There." He was actively engaged in battle for twenty-three months during which time he received three wounds, the last of which proved to be so serious that he was unable to continue his career as a soldier. Mr. Moles received his education at the Bethany House College of England and married Constance Parke, niece of the Tolemarche peerage, in London, where he was hailed as one of the most brilliant comedians of Great Britain.

De Ruiz is Kept Busy

Nikolai de Ruiz, the picturesque character actor whose work in "East is West" was favorably commented upon by the press, is accumulating pictures for future release. No sooner had he finished a big role in "The Thundering Dawn" at Universal City than he was cast for an important characterization in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." "Thundering Dawn" was formerly called "The Attic of Felix Bayu." It was directed by Stuart Paton and has an all-star cast of which Mr. de Ruiz is a member. In "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" he supports Lon Chaney and appears as the executioner of Fifteenth Century Paris.

Famous "Pugs" Train Actor

Three famous veterans of the prize ring have been engaged to teach the finer points of boxing to George O'Hara for the prize-fight episodes in the "Fighting Blood" series. They are Leach Cross, Johnny Schiff and Johnny Thompson. Mal St. Clair is producing this series which was adapted from H. C. Witwer's well-known stories of the same name now running in Collier's Weekly. George O'Hara plays the featured role, with Clara Horton as the feminine lead. The supporting cast includes Arthur Rankin, M. E. Ryan, William Courtright, Albert Cooke, Kit Guard and Mabel Van Buren.

Juvenile "Fans" Organize

Because of their love of Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Richard Barthelmess, thirty little boys and girls of New York City have organized the "Gish-Barthelmess Club." The president is Miss Annette de Fuccio, 327 Pleasant Avenue, New York City. The Club has adopted lavender and orchid as the Club colors and issues a booklet entitled "Club News." The membership is made up of girls and boys who have seen all of the productions in which this celebrated triumvirate have appeared in recent years. They promise not to miss any of their forthcoming productions.

"Merry-Go-Round" Still Going

Contrary to reports Rupert Julian, Universal's super Jewel director, has not completed "Merry-Go-Round," the mammoth Viennese drama. According to the director there is at least three weeks more of hard work, and it will require a longer period if the weather takes a turn for the worse as most of the scenes are in the open. However, Julian is rushing work on the production so Norman Kerry, his leading man, can start to work as a member of the cast of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Louise Has a "Biggest Set"

Louise Fazenda, engaged on her second two-reel comedy for Educational in the Jack White Mermaid series, is working at the United studios on one of the largest sets ever constructed for a short subject. A whole side of a ship and adjacent docks have been completed with every detail present to make them look like the real thing. Miss Fazenda is an immigrant in her new mirth quake and she thinks she hails from Sweden. Opening shots were taken at San Pedro, but now that she has "landed," the work is proceeding at the studios. Bob Kerr is directing.

Rogell is Youngest Director

Perhaps the youngest director of big pictures is Albert Rogell who has just completed the filming of Angela C. Kaufman's anti-dope picture, "The Greatest Menace," at Fine Arts studio. Mr. Rogell, though but 22 years old, has been in the picture industry since boyhood. He began his career as a school boy by appearing in stock companies in Spokane. He went into pictures playing minor parts and assisting in the technical department at the same time. Phil Rosen developed the boy into a camera man and later he turned the crank for Andrew J. Callaghan in a series of features in which Bessie Love was the star. On the completion of this series, Rogell wrote and directed a series of western features starring Marion Aye and Bob Reeves. Rogell was nineteen years old when he directed his first picture.

Albert Austin Directs Bull

With the engagement of Albert Austin as director, actual "shooting" on the new Bull Montana comedy has been started by the Bull Montana comedy unit at the Metro studios. It bears the working title of "The Two Twins" and succeeds "They Call It Dancing," which was originally announced. Mr. Austin has been associated with Charles Chaplin for the past several years in the capacity of assistant director. Prior to that time he was in vaudeville, coming over to this country from England in the same company with Chaplin. Recently he has been directing Jackie Coogan, one of his successes being "Trouble." With the engagement of Albert Austin, the Bull Montana company now includes Clyde Bruckman as "gag" specialist, Dick Stevens, assistant director, and Irving Reis and Ted Reese at the cameras. Hunt Stromberg will continue to supervise.

To Start "The Cheat" Jan. 22

An announcement by Jesse L. Lasky is to the effect that Hector Turnbull's story, "The Cheat" is to be re-produced by Paramount as a Fitmaurice production with Pola Negri starring, Jack Holt featured and Charles deRoche in support. The new version has been adapted by Ouida Bergere. This picture was originally produced by Cecil B. DeMille. It was the picture that made Hayakawa a star, but his role will be changed to a Latin type and will be played by DeRoche. "The Cheat" is the only motion picture ever made into an opera, and was composed by Camille Erlanger. It was dramatized by Willard Mack and produced by Wm. A. Brady on the stage. The picture is to be started about January 22nd at the West Coast Paramount studio.

Six-Month Task Completed

Fred Niblo has completed the making of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" as his first all-star production for Louis B. Mayer presentation through Metro. Adapted by Frances Marion from the noted stage success by James Forbes, the picture has consumed close to six months in the filming. Like past Niblo triumphs, it has been staged on an extensive scale. Mr. Niblo has lived up to his standard in the casting of the characters of "The Famous Mrs. Fair." Myrtle Stedman will be seen as Mrs. Fair, Huntly Gordon as Mr. Fair, Marguerite De La Motte as Sylvia, Cullen Landis as Alan, Carmel Myers as Angy Brice, Ward Crane as Dudley Gillette and Helen Ferguson as Peggy.

Photoplaywrights, Notice!

Ever since his return from New York two weeks ago, John M. Stahl, director of "The Dangerous Age," has devoted his time towards searching for a story for his next Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, but as yet a vehicle of the proper calibre has failed to come to light. As is evidenced by "The Dangerous Age," Mr. Stahl's pictures are more than just entertainment. Each contains a purpose, or a lesson, which is carefully prevented from becoming preachment. Human interest stories which fit requirement are difficult to find, but their success on the screen more than make up for the delay and expense involved.

This Sounds Labor-like

A plan to establish a forty-eight-hour working week for motion picture performers will be proposed by the Actors' Equity Association of New York, it is reported. Mr. John Emerson, president of the Association is at present in Los Angeles studying working conditions in local studios and it is said he will submit the plan to Will Hays, generalissimo of filmdom, upon his return to New York. The proposed plan will not specify that performers can only work an eight-hour day, but that they shall not work more than a total of forty-eight hours during any week, and incidentally, it will apply only to principal actors of a cast.

He Missed the "Boat"

Jack (Curley) Kiehl, assistant cameraman for the Stuart Paton company now filming the Universal-Jewel production, "The Attic of Felix Bayu," is threatening to move his bed out to the Universal "lot." It all happened this way. The entire company was scheduled to leave Tuesday morning for Truckee, Calif., where the exterior scenes for the production are to be filmed. However, Mr. Paton suddenly decided to leave Monday morning and after assembling all of his company except Kiehl, who he could not get in touch with, the group headed northward. Tuesday morning found Jack wandering around the studio looking for his lost company, and now he's working with another U outfit.

HORRIBLE HOKUM

By Sirrom Knarf. Inspired by an extra
Wot's dat? You don't know me Bo?
Now dat's a funny ting.
Wy I'm de guy from Hollywood,
Where all de year it's Spring.
If you go to pitcher shows,
Yu must a heard o' me.
Cause I'm de first inventor
Of dat great industry.
I tot dere's no one livin',
Not a bloomin' one,
But didn't know dat I'm de bird
Dat found Warren Kerrigan,
And Mary Pickford played wid me
Wen she was just a kid.
Th' little tings I showed her
Is all she ever did.
Primrose made de people laugh
Wid his funny talk.
While I taught Charlie Chaplin
To do his foney walk.
I'm in de pitcher business
Spreadin' sob stuff an' cheer,
Wen Fairbanks was a extra
Wid breech cloth an' a spear.
Dere ain't no part of dis game
I don't understand,
I coached most all de actors
From Walthal to Hank Mann.
Izzie Bernstein asked me how To build his Universal.
Griffith never shot a scene
Till I saw th' rehearsal.
Wy I knew Jessie Lasky,
Ince an' Goldwyn, too,
Wen all dere winter clothes was hocked
An' shoes an' garters too.
Wen Christie was a bell hop,
Wen Vidor rode a Ford,
I knew Bill Hart wen Bill Fox
Was workin' for his board.
Dey never made a pitcher,
Never built a set,
Dey never trained a camera
On a movie actor yet,
Until dey asked a question
Dey want ta know you bet,
"Now where's de kid from Hollywood,
So we know wot we'll get."
Never heard my moniker?
Never saw my phiz?
Well dat jist goes ta prove ta yu
De great big world dis is.
Wy I'm de guy from Hollywood.
De real cheese in de game,
De bloke wot knows, mitt me Bo—
Kid HOKUM is my name.

wished to turn a neat but dishonest dollar by writing salacious stories which were palmed off upon the public as "truth about Hollywood," seem to be passing.

Some weeks ago there appeared on the news stands throughout the country a racy appearing booklet which purported to contain numerous heretofore unprintable stories about film idols. That they were without exception the fictitious creations of the author was not announced.

The document was only mildly interesting and might have died a natural death but for the fact that the federal officials took occasion to make an investigation. The other day one Edward Roberts, more or less well known to members of the film colony, was indicted as a result of this investigation.

A week or so ago another man, the author of a similar document, decided to abandon his plans to distribute it and left Los Angeles rather than face an investigation. His whereabouts are unknown.

Some day somebody will honestly write "The Truth about Hollywood" and find a fortune awaiting him. Until that time it is probable that such attempts to cash in on the interest manifested in picture people and all of their doings by the public at large will continue.

Why does Lillian Gish say she would not go through the torture of her scene in the closet in "Broken Blossoms"? Why did Barbara LaMarr recently collapse after ten days' of emotional acting in one episode of "Poor Men's Wives"?

Miss LaMarr showed a flash of the emotion she usually reserves for the screen when the question was put to her the other day.

"Because a real player puts himself into every part he or she plays," said she.

"If you think it takes any imagination to suffer when David Butler is twisting your arm, just ask him to try it on you. At first Mr. Butler wanted to 'play pretend' in our big scene. But I couldn't get the necessary feeling into it, so I made him mad so he would squeeze hard. And he did!"

"Afterward the poor boy came over and apologized, and explained that he had forgotten himself in playing the part. I just laughed. It was just what I wanted.

"I can't bear these wishwash characters that try so hard to look beautiful that they can't show an emotion. And I want to be honest enough with my audience to live the character I am playing down to the minutest detail of feeling."

Benjamin Franklin probably holds the record for a certain kind of daring as a result of his kite and key experiment during an electrical storm. But he will have to look to his laurels with the filming of "The Broken Wing," which is about to be put on as a Preferred Picture.

For it is planned to do everything in this picture production that was impossible in the stage production. For instance, the time for filming the picture has been set for California's mid-winter rainy season in the hope of catching one of the electrical storms that play over the peaks of the San Bernardinos with the aid of a cameraman in an aeroplane.

The story opens and closes in an aeroplane. The opening involves a wild fight through an electrical storm. And it is planned to bait and capture a genuine display of lightning as it plays about the aeroplane.

The identity of the male star for whom this task is being planned has not yet been announced.

MORE GOTHAM GOSSIP

Mary Anderson is making personal appearances throughout Pennsylvania.

Neil Sullivan, photographer for Johnny Hines, was bitten by the radio bug. His outfit is set up in his dark room where he spends most of his time listening in.

Charlie Harris, head scenic artist for C. C. Burr, has concocted a paint for doors, et cetera, that will not rub off on the actor's clothing. Surely he will have a place in the actor's heaven.

Edgar Lewis has completed his production "The Drummer Boy," at the Glendale studio. He left for Hollywood, Christmas week, to do a well known story for himself; the title is being withheld.

Film News from England

Pretty little Molly Wright is engaged on her third film entitled, "Just Me." Molly is playing the title role. Bert Haldane is directing the production.

A few scenes remain to be filmed for the new Walter West production, "Hornets Nest." Weather conditions have not been favorable during the filming of this picture, and Mr. West has had long delays "waiting for the sun to shine."

Plans by Walter West

Walter West will soon commence work on another racing film. The film will be set in the countryside of the Sussex Downs. Mr. West has written the story in collaboration with J. Bertram Brown.

Standing Becomes Parson

Wyndham Standing is seen as a young parson in "The Hypocrites," on which he is now engaged. Although delayed by the bad weather in the filming of "The Hypocrites," Standing hopes to return to London during this week.

A new leading man will be introduced to the British film industry when "Weavers of Fortune" is privately shown next week, in the person of Derek Glynn. At present Mr. Glynn is taking part in the Midnight Revels at the Grafton Galleries, and is meeting with great success.

Valentine Churchill, child character actress, has been taking part in the dancing dolls act at Grauman's theater the past two weeks. Valentine does an Indian Nautch dance, wearing her own costume from India, with solid gold trimmings.

Alec Francis has returned to Los Angeles after spending Christmas as a guest of Max Graf.

Will H. Hays has accepted the invitation of the San Francisco Producers' Association, and will spend a day as their guest, soon, to look over the motion picture industry here.

Earl William's name was, through a mistake, omitted from the cast of "Masters of Men," the sea scenes for which are now being shot by the Vitagraph Company on San Francisco Bay.

Gouverneur Morris, well known author of the screen, spent several days in San Francisco last week.

Edward Belasco and H. A. Sebastian of the Belasco Productions, have left for New York with the negative of their new picture, "Eyes of Love."

Virginia Chester, late leading woman with Harry Carey, now in dramatic work, is in town.

J. I. Schlitzer, of the Film Booking office, spent the past week on business in San Francisco.

pressed his personality indelibly on the spoken stage, would have had beautiful opportunity to vent his well-known temperament on the "musical dramatizer" of to-day, for he was a man of sound musicianship who never hesitated to display his gifts of sarcasm or ridicule.

Although a sincere and earnest effort is being made to apply brains and talent to this feature of photoplays and actors and producers of ability have not disdained to give their best efforts to the production of real photo masterpieces, the musician has not yet come into his own. In order to elevate the screen drama to a plane higher than the once popular ten-twenty-third mellerdrummer, it behooves the artistic director of motion picture dramas to consider more seriously the musical setting of his productions. This is being done in many cases, and the results have done wonders in convincing skeptical worshippers of spoken drama that motion picture dramas have a legitimate place in the world of art.

Sid Smith and Lon Chaney are both sons of deaf-and-dumb parents. Sid is one of the premier comedians of the screen and Lon is one of the foremost dramatic actors.

George Rigas, now in American films, was the most popular matinee idol in Athens, Greece, for five years prior to coming to the United States.

Helene Chadwick is planning a vacation in Europe during 1923.

Leon Bary, at home, with his rare ukelele he bought in Hawaii. Mr. Bary is scoring a triumph in support of Mable Normand in "Suzanna."

trend towards taking the initiative in blazing new trails for the cinema art. Their production of "One Wonderful Night" is an example of this, for here is among the first serious attempts to emulate the contemporary stage in its foremost achievement: that of developing mystery melodrama along lines highly artistic. While this first attempt is not entirely free from flaws, the chief of which is confusion as a result of the complication of mysteries, it proves adequate diversion for the average audience. This is one of those photoplays in which there is something highly interesting going on every second—for about 4,500 feet there is not the slightest let-down in the forward action, which within itself is an achievement redounding to the credit of the skill of Stuart Paton, the director. The cast is satisfactory with Herbert Rawlinson and Lillian Rich winning first honors. The most common criticism of the production is that it carries too much plot and affords too little opportunity to get thoroughly acquainted with the characters.

Irving Cummings has shown us how to take a worn-out theme and make it compelling by dressing it up cleverly in realistic action and human touches in "Environment," which has to do with the regeneration of a crook, the same crook who has been regenerated so many times on the screen. Again has Mr. Cummings displayed rare astuteness in his selection of a different kind of a crook—a girl quite unlike the average type the cinema has used for deviating-from-the-path-of-rectitude purposes. The main object in citing "Environment" at all is that it constitutes a striking example of how to get out of the old rut when harassed by old material with which to work. At times this old, old story seems positively new and refreshing so adroitly has it been reconstructed with elements ordinarily foreign to such a plot. Of course the potential power of love as a regenerator is pushed to the foreground as usual, but in such a thoroughly human way as to be at least nearly enthralling. Here is proof that originality can enter into the consideration even when one is dealing with the most unoriginal of situations—it is all in the lights and the shades, the minutest details tinged with human touches which appeal as ringing true to life itself. This seems to be a veritable panacea for the ills of so many stories in their last throes of repetition.

Chalk up another one for Warner Brothers. "Heroes of the Street" lives up to most all expectations and it is being received by the most skeptical critics with acclaim. In the first place, it's a corking good story and in the second place it offers Wesley Barry at his best, a best which reveals he is something more than merely a clever kid, for in this picture he gives a convincing demonstration of his ability to interpret with understanding the true dramatic art as it has been developed in its new silent form. This picture is dedicated to the policemen, who are the "heroes of the street," and the narrative unfolded is most engrossing. One of the attractive high-lights is the excellent proportion of the comedy relief interpolated throughout with a deft hand. Young Barry has been surrounded by an exceptionally capable cast, including such sterling players as Marie Prevost, Jack Mulhall, Wilfred Lucas and Philo McCullough.

J. Warren Kerrigan is returning to the screen in the Paramount picture, "Covered Wagon," after an absence of three years.

Ideas, Ideals, and I-Don't-Know-What

Slowly but surely the majority of the people throughout the world are coming to the realization that hatred is utterly futile. The time has come when a love for fellow-men seems certain to predominate and greater happiness is sure to ensue. Meanwhile, about the only class of people who are dilatory in the matter of reforming to the extent of harmonizing with the trend of the hour are those few radical politicians, who, for the sake of self-aggrandizement, still seek to use hatred of opposite principles to win elections and to keep in office men who will do their bidding. If every man and woman will only ponder long enough when their support is solicited by any out-and-out politician, it is a foregone conclusion there will be less influence wielded by those who have the least right to be influential. The future of this and all other nations is more in the hands of the common people than ever before.

In making an editorial resume of the progress made by motion pictures as an art during the year of 1922, the New York World says: "The trouble with the films is not so much lack of morals as lack of brains." So, perchance, there is a latitude for some diversity of endeavor on the part of reformers—just to break the monotony the fight to improve the morals can be alternated with a determined campaign to improve the brains!

Some people who think they know how to make motion pictures, think it so exclusively that they don't give motion pictures a chance to make them!

According to the New York papers, Canon William Sheafe Chase, who is known chiefly as an arch-enemy to motion pictures, says he thinks well of the Ku Klux Klan because it is hated by bootleggers, gamblers, Sabbath-breakers, corrupt politicians and producers of films. We mention this only to show that even a good man's judgment can be warped if he permits unrestrained prejudice to control him. It is so manifestly unfair to include such an unquestioned great public benefactor as the photoplay art in the class of law-breakers in general that the Canon is sure to be unconvincing to even those eager to believe in the reform as a righteous occupation.

The Motion Picture News has just concluded a canvass of as much of the public as it could reach in an effort to ascertain the sentiment relative to the forthcoming return of Roscoe Arbuckle to the screen, and it finds a decided majority of the people in favor of keeping a permanent ban on the comedian. "Fatty" and Will Hays may find themselves alone on their side of the question even yet.

Through diplomatic negotiations instituted by Will Hays, success has crowned American efforts to persuade the Mexican government to lift the embargo it placed on the film products of many American producers on the grounds that they contained episodes and characterizations unfavorable to the Mexican people. So now Mexico will be free to enjoy all the good pictures again, and meanwhile producers would do well to avoid insulting Mexican or any other racial ideals, either inadvertently or wantonly.

"If Winter Comes" will be released for its metropolitan premiere late this winter. In the hopes it will continue to run prosperously there even if summer comes?

We have always believed in the old saying anent the impossibility of keeping a good man down, and now we are willing to also believe most any kind of a screen sheik cannot be held down either. Exactly seven more new sheik pictures are on schedule for early release, and here most of us had decided long since that the American public was ready to turn to some other brand of hero—most any other brand excepting the bull-fighter.

If the photoplay is to survive and make its best mark on posterity, there will have to be less devotion to mercenary worrying over current prosperity. When one is busy grabbing dollars, or trying to grab them, art is practically sure of being totally neglected. And because somebody, or many somebodies, made oodles of money out of the picture business in 1922 will prove no cause at all for posterity being handed anything. Art is real, and money is like the reel!

A reader has written to Camera! congratulating it on now being "a real pre-digest of the motion picture industry." There's something about this that sounds previous—or, was it just this reader's way of being serial about it?

Wonder what's become of the old-time picture fan who used to get into the front row so he could watch the piano player and trap drummer bombard the place with deafening din?

What goes up must come down. Except prices. They may never come all the way back down again. It would be a fine thing if theatre admission prices could be the exception to the exception though.

Once upon a time, everybody had time. But this moment of hustle-and-bustle is no such time. If idleness is the devil's work-shop, the place is pretty much closed in this day of unsurpassed strenuousness when the average mortal gets angry because the law prohibits running a motor car more than thirty miles an hour.

So those of the trade who may be interested will know

And Then the Majesty of Public Opinion Prevaileth!

Wherein a Digest of Published Versions Shows It Has Come to Pass that the Great Masses of People Will Pass on Roscoe Arbuckle's Fate after All.

Inevitably the final reaction of the decision made by Will Hays to the effect that Roscoe Arbuckle shall be given the chance to go back to his screen work has brought to a sharp focus the relations of the motion picture industry with the public. The consequent situation is perfectly logical and unmistakable—the public will decide the issue and no one group in any one walk of life will wield a sole influence. In short, the case stands now where many high authorities think it should have stood immediately after Arbuckle was acquitted by a jury of his peers, who added a sweeping exoneration to their verdict for good measure.

Most all publications, having at heart the interest of the silent drama as both an art and a business, are unanimous in scolding all classes of people for getting excited over the affair. "We see no reason whatever why anybody should lose his head over this matter; no reason why he should abandon common-sense in favor of hysteria since the public will decide," the Exhibitors Trade Review points out.

In very few quarters is there any disposition to give reformers any credit for possessing more power than the great public. A shining example of the quite general attitude is voiced by Greater Amusements, a Minneapolis film magazine of the trade class. "The wisdom of Will H. Hays' action, of course, will be determined by the public and no one else," this editorial observer states. "If the public wants Arbuckle on the screen, then on the screen he will be. It is now up to the exhibitors, who may be considering the playing of Arbuckle pictures, to determine first the attitude of their patrons and to be guided in the matter accordingly." It is especially interesting to note how carefully the objections raised by the ministers of the country are avoided in this conclusion, because such avoidance is typical of all current comments on the subject.

Orren M. Donaldson, editor of Holly Leaves, Hollywood's community weekly and one of the finest publications of its kind in the world, takes the view that the Arbuckle case should be handled strictly upon its merits and without regard to any false public sentiment which might be aroused by any faction. "The state and nation ought to be run in accordance with public opinion, but it ought to be real public opinion and not pseudo public opinion," Editor Donaldson writes after calling attention to the report that Arbuckle had caused to be sent out a half million letters to people throughout the country asking them to write Mr. Hays in his behalf and the whole idea of this habit, fostered by politicians especially, is condemned.

Nearly all of the New York newspapers have given extensive editorial attention to the Arbuckle case and the consensus of opinion among them is that the public alone will sit in the final judgment "without the aid of censors, reformers or the hoi polloi of calamity-howlers," as one editorial writer expressed it.

The entire working out of this unfortunate incident is regretted by many of the high captains of the film industry and there is a readiness on the part of many to openly criticize Mr. Hays for his manner of handling and disposing of the problems involved. In the first place, it is impressed by this group that no man should have essayed to arbitrarily deny Arbuckle his constitutional rights—that the matter should have been left to the wisdom of the whole public from the inception. "Many subsequent complications and these final unpleasant circumstances would have been avoided as a natural, normal course of events had Mr. Hays maintained a cool head and followed the policy of keeping his hands off until the public had its chance to make known its decision," cites one man very high in the executive branch of the industry.

MEANWHILE "FATTY" STARTS

Even as the ado over his reinstatement gathers the momentum of fury in some quarters, Roscoe Arbuckle is actually and serenely at the task of staging his come-back as a screen comedian. He started "shooting" a two-reel comedy entitled "Handy Andy" last Wednesday and this will be offered as his first appearance since the discontinuation of his career more than a year ago. It is announced he has had $75,000 in hand with which to produce this picture and the capital comes from a group of San Francisco men, headed by Gavin McNab, the star's attorney during his several trials in that city. Apparently Joseph M. Schenck and Lou Anger have no part in the financial end of this venture although they are actively assisting Arbuckle in various business and production details. It is said "Handy Andy" has been constructed to afford the fat comedian plenty of opportunities to "come back" in one of his old-time parts in which slap-stick comedy plays a big part.

On the other hand, those who uphold Mr. Hays declare it was simply his misfortune to be confronted by such an unsavory incident so early in his administration and that he undoubtedly did his best to serve an exalted and useful purpose.

AND HAYS SAYS FINAL SAY

"All suggestions which have been received from all viewpoints, and they are many and varied, will be referred to the proper parties. This is the kind of question that must be left finally to the judgment of the public on the one hand and on the other hand to those who have business associations with the individual and the individual himself. I have removed the artificial situation of one man being or appearing to be the judge in such matters either for one hundred and ten million people, or for a great industry and art. Such a condition in the development of a business is absolutely unsound economically, and from every other standpoint, and permanently must not be. A temporary framework or scaffolding may be a very valuable tool for a period in the remodeling or construction of a great building, but it must be remembered as the building progresses that such structures are only temporary facilities."

In offering his sermon, "How Would Jesus Act in the Arbuckle Case?" Reverend George Chalmers Richmonds of the Church of Messiah, stated: "In his reinstatement of Roscoe Arbuckle, Mr. Hays acted in the spirit of Jesus." He quoted Mr. Hays as having begun his work in a magnificent fashion, and deserving of Los Angeles' cordial cooperation.

Individuals of the great public are evincing a lively interest in the discussion, too. Sedley Brown, a Los Angeles writer, advances a theory which has something of the new angle to it. "I take the broad ground that a writer, painter, sculptor or actor should be judged solely by the work he presents to the public," he says. "Take the morals of artists into consideration and you have fewer great paintings, fewer great plays, and, by the way, fewer great sermons."

Thus it remains—the great theme for the eternal ado of the time-honored battle royal of Pro and Con. But out of all the ramifications of mortal differences of opinion, out of all the condemnations and endorsements rises the big incontrovertible fact—the public will decide and who dares to deny the public this right is sure to be disappointed bitterly. And, as has been mentioned frequently by reputable publications of various classes, the whole idea and ideal or censorship may be weakened perceptibly as one of the many ultimate upshots if hysteria is permitted to run rampant. Meanwhile, there are plenty of wiseacres advising the leaders in the motion picture industry to mind their knitting and to pursue the line of least resistance, which is one of reconciliation with all forces, even those most vitriolic in denunciations of most everything that happens in filmdom.

The Day of Youth

How a schoolboy, writing and producing puppet plays for sheer "fun of it," reaches at 23 the directorship of an ambitiously conceived art photodrama, is revealed in Ferdinand Earle's appointment of Paul Detlefsen to head his "Faust" unit.

With the care of a university professor, the ardor of an artist and the energy of a city editor, Ferdinand Earle has for twelve months planned his picture version of the age-old Faust story. Paul Detlefsen has been his chief aide. Now Earle has accepted a commission from David O. Selznick to direct "The Easiest Way" in New York and has placed Detlefsen in complete charge of work in Hollywood.

Who is this Detlefsen, who suddenly finds himself playing Atlas to a motion picture production more stupendous in its plan than "The Rubaiyat"?

He is 23, a slight, unobtrusive youth with an engaging grin and straight blond hair, wisps of which work into his eyes. Ask him about his work and he is instantly eagerly explaining. Ask him about himself and he blushes, deprecatingly.

Yet young Detlefsen has made an intensive study of art, drama, story construction and human nature—"thanks to my parents, who let me choose the nature of education I desired, and helped me to get it," he says.

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, Calif., Jan. 8.—The Redwood Film Co. has been added to the list of producing companies of San Francisco. C. H. Humphrey is president, with offices in the Spreckles Building, and they will begin production February 1st, at the Gerson Studios. They expect to make eight five-reel pictures during the year, and, will release through Associated Distributors.

Ivor McFadden has formed the Co-operative Motion Picture Production Co. This concern will make a picture on a co-operative basis called "The Curse of Prohibition," a plea for light wines and beer. Jack Connolly will be leading man, and Seymore Zelif will direct. McFadden and Zelif wrote the story.

The West Coast Films Co., will begin work on their next picture February 1st, at a studio in San Francisco itself, the name and cast to be announced in about a week.

Eric Von Stroheim is here, hard at work on the continuity for "McTeague." Ernest Traxler and Ray Moore are getting locations and arranging for production. They have had the unusual experience of finding many of the scenes absolutely in every detail as they were when Frank Norris wrote the book thirty years ago. Work on the picture will be begun here early in February.

H. H. Van Loan, after refusing interviews to all the local press, confides to us that he considers the new "Camera!" the best, and liveliest paper of the moving picture industry.

Jimmie Cruze, director for Lasky, Carl Brown and Walter Reed, spent Sunday in San Francisco, en route to Eureka on location.

Richard E. Sibley, of the Exhibitors Exchange, arrived in San Francisco on Sunday for a stay of some length.

Along The Rialto

New York, Jan. 8, 1923—Sessue Hayakawa is starring in "Tiger Lily," a Shubert-Jordan production.

Folks in Hollywood and thereabouts planning a trip to the great mad island of Manhattan should allow an evening to visit "Blossom Time." The 500th performance was celebrated at the matinee performance Thursday. It is the most popular operetta ever produced in this country. It will continue there through the season at the Century.

Miss Billie Burke made her appearance at the Empire last night under the management of her husband in a new play called "Rose Briar."

"Java Head," starring Leatrice Joy, was given a special Christmas showing to the studio employees. Uncle George Melford produced it at the Long Island studios.

Flora Finch is lying in the Jamaica Hospital, Jamaica, Long Island, suffering from a broken hip. The doctors expect her to remain in bed all winter.

"Dr. Jack" and Harold Lloyd's popularity won for them a second week's showing at the Strand theatre.

Last week the writer of this column ran into Bill Hart, Rex Ingram, Alice Terry, Montague Love, Chas. Gerrard, Harry Morey, Rubye De Remer, Alice Brady, Al Green, Leatrice Joy, Louise Lovely and her husband and scads of others. Hollywood must look rather deserted nowadays.

Louise Lovely is heading on the Keith circuit with a movie act, and we hear tell as how she's knocking 'em dead.

New World's Greatest Men Will Attend Filmdom's Greatest Amusement Event

A special train, appropriately painted and decorated, and luxuriously appointed for the personal and business convenience of its distinguished passengers, is being planned by the management of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to bring to Los Angeles for the Premiere of the event next summer the President of the United States, members of his official family, the diplomatic corps from Latin America, a Congressional delegation, the United States Marine Band, and the Director General of the Pan American Union. These men and their wives will be the guests of Los Angeles and of the Revue and Exposition from the time they leave Washington until they arrive home again.

Plans for this special train, which will run from Washington to Los Angeles and return via many of the principal cities of the United States, are now being worked out by Frank B. Davison, Director General of the Revue and Exposition. Mr. Davison, with Mayor Cryer, visited Washington in December and extended the President and many high members of officialdom there, personal invitations to be present at the Revue and Exposition Premiere. These invitations were accepted almost without exception. President Harding evinced the greatest enthusiasm over the motion picture industry's project to stage a great international celebration suitably commemorating the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. He declared he would surely be present at the formal opening unless unforeseen developments in the affairs of his office made it imperative for him to remain in Washington. It has been known for some time that the President is desirous of making a trip to the Pacific coast and Alaska and it is thought practically assured that his plans will be adjusted to permit his presence in Los Angeles for the Premiere of the Revue and Exposition.

The special train, bearing so many international celebrities, will be the greatest publicity and advertising move Southern California has ever made, in the opinion of Mr. Davison. It is planned to have all cars of this train repainted to bear the Monroe Doctrine Centennial design. Club cars and diners will be added to the Pullman sleepers to give the passengers every convenience of a modern hotel. Provisions will also be made for the busy officials to bring along a sufficient corps of stenographers and secretaries to attend to urgent business of their several positions while en route.

Without doubt every city and community through which this train passes on its way to the Revue and Exposition in Los Angeles, will turn out to fete the noted personages of the party. The President will probably be called upon for as many public appearances and rear platform speeches as he can possibly make. From the time the train leaves Washington until it arrives in Los Angeles, its progress across the continent will be followed in detail by the press.

The Washington delegation will probably arrive here just prior to the Revue and Exposition Premiere, an event the originality of which is expected to eclipse anything ever attempted before anywhere.

The tentative program of the Premiere is as follows:

From 8 until 9 P. M., electrical parade with Stars and Queens in illuminated throne floats.

From 9 to 10 P. M., official inspection of the Revue and Exposition by the President, other visiting celebrities, and Stars and Queens.

From 10 P. M. until 12 o'clock Stars and Queens ball.

At midnight the President will proclaim the official opening and the Queen of the Premiere will press a button to ignite the first bomb of a gorgeous pyrotechnic display.

At 1 A. M. there will be an Exposition breakfast, the first event of its kind ever held.

The festivities will last until daybreak when taps will be blown for the Premiere and reveille for the public opening of the Revue and Exposition. The month to follow will comprise a fiesta of literature, music, history and art. The history of the New World will be shown in pageantry, from the discovery of this continent by Columbus until President Monroe's historic proclamation in 1823 that has guaranteed the territorial integrity of the three Americas from European aggression for the past century. It is planned also to film this story, filling in the series of pageants with greater detail to give it continuity. With the fruition of these ambitious plans the motion picture industry of today feels it will have left succeeding generations an educational legacy of incalculable value, for the world may then get from the screen an authentic account of American history which will be of absorbing interest.

The entire motion picture industry is united in sponsoring this great event. All the technical, artistic, and dramatic resources of the industry are at the command of the Revue and Exposition management in staging this series of pageants and in making this picture. The huge Los Angeles Coliseum, now nearing completion in Exposition Park, a mammoth stadium with a capacity of approximately 80,000 spectators, will be utilized in presenting this big undertaking to the public. In addition to this, a group of Exposition buildings of unusual beauty and originality of design, is to be built near the Coliseum for the various exhibits. All the nations of Central and South America are expected to be represented here.

An attractive booklet telling in detail the plans of the Revue and Exposition management will be off the press shortly and may be obtained free by writing to Motion Picture Exposition, 1005 Hollingsworth Building, Sixth and Hill Streets, Los Angeles.

Enter: Faust--Twice at Least

Faust is going to find himself competing with himself! That is, he will if all the present plans of the several ambitious would-be perpetuators of his fame are carried out successfully. Indeed, there are no less than four different screen versions of the great "Faust" in prospect right now and at least two of these are as reasonably certain of being produced as is humanly possible. One absolutely sure of coming within the pale of projecting machines throughout the civilized world is that which Mary Pickford is preparing actively to film right at this moment. The announcement of her decision to side-track "Dorothy of Haddon Hall" in order to make way for her determination to interpret the role of Marguerite in this classic of the decades came as an almost astounding surprise to most everybody within the inner portals of filmdom even.

Her plan to film "Faust" had been kept a secret until Miss Pickford conferred with Ernest Lubitsch, who will direct this most ambitious attempt of Miss Pickford's career. But it was with this production in mind that she sent for Mr. Lubitsch. Coincidentally enough, it developed that doing "Faust" was also the great ambition of the famous European director. Up to the time of his meeting with Miss Pickford, Mr. Lubitsch had never found anyone whom he thought capable of properly presenting the part of Marguerite, but he greeted her intention with the greatest enthusiasm and declared she would make an ideal Marguerite.

Accordingly all machinery has been set in motion for the filming of "Faust," and the actual work of production will be started in the near future. The script is being prepared by Edward Knoblock, the well-known playwright, and Mr. Lubitsch, under the supervision of Miss Pickford herself.

"Faust" bids fair to represent the most noteworthy achievement of Miss Pickford's career. The story will be derived from the various Faust legends including Christopher Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus," Goethe's "Faust" and the various operatic versions and will represent a careful blending and selection from them all. It is to be put on in the biggest possible way and will probably cost more than the estimates for "Dorothy Vernon." The cast will be chosen with the greatest care with particular reference to the parts of Faust and Mephistopheles.

Meanwhile preparations for another screen version of this same great piece of literature are progressing, and have been progressing for some time, in another quarter—that occupied by Ferdinand Earle, who has just taken occasion to emphasize his determination to give the world a spectacular film based on this undying love legend as soon as he completes his task of directing Theda Bara in "The Easiest Way" for Selznick. Either Mr. Earle or someone interested in him made it a point to give very wide distribution this week to an announcement of his having paid the sum of 228,000 German marks, which in American money is about $80, for a single copy of Goethe's "Faust" illustrated by Sepp Frank. This is of a German edition limited to 190 copies and it is said the illustrations are especially illuminating.

A particular care was taken to incorporate

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

One of the brightest, snappiest stories ever unfolded in a photoplay is that which comes into one's scope of comprehension as a result of seeing "A Front Page Story," which was previewed in the Play Room of the Writers Club last Tuesday evening. In the first place, it is pure comedy-drama, unalloyed by any of the subterfuges of extreme fictitious license of which too many make too much use. In the second place, it is a story which really deserves space on the front page! The comedy evolves with natural grace from genuinely human situations and the drama is the very kind of drama which comes into the life of most anyone most any day. Explicitly, here is an ordinary page from human life made exceedingly interesting by a combination of clever scenario construction and excellent character interpretations by a cast of intelligent players. Edward Horton is starred and he justifies his selection for this premiership by giving one of those sterling performances such as is sure to ingratiate him extensively with a general public. Forsooth, here is the ideal picture for the general public—it is one anybody and everybody will appreciate because of its attractive simplicity and undeniable power to hold the interest in wholesome entertainment. Mr. Horton's supporting cast is all good—Lloyd Ingraham, Edith Roberts, Lila Leslie, James Corrigan, Tom McGuire, Mathilde Brundage, Buddy Messinger and W. E. Lawrence are all satisfactory in the roles assigned to them and several of them do exceptionally fine work. It is interesting to note that "A Front Page Story" has had sincere encomiums bestowed upon it in all quarters occupied by authorities on picture values. For instance, The Film Daily agrees that "when it comes to laughs and sure-fire entertainment, 'A Front Page Story' is there" while Moving Picture World brands it "an exceptionally good comedy drama... distinctly superior," and, Motion Picture News is "of the opinion that the company should toot its horn in giving us such a pleasing slice of reality," for, as this periodical adds, "its humor is subtle and novel and appealing." Jess Robbins, who has produced "A Front Page Story" so well proves himself a master of this particular type of picture and it is no risk to predict his directorial star will rise rapidly if he keeps on this track. This is the third of a series he is making for Vitagraph, the other two being "Too Much Business" and "A Ladder Jinx."

The Universal-Jewel production of Booth Tarkington's story, "The Flirt," looks like a sure winner. It is certainly Director Hobart Henley's finest contribution to the screen. Moreover, it is a living demonstration of the current spirit to give the photoplay-lovers something worth while and much credit belongs to Universal for taking so much trouble to present it in such an attractive way. Critics are in harmony in acknowledging this picture to be worthy of the whole public's attention. The appraisal of the critic for Exhibitors Trade Review is typical of the preponderance of opinion. "There is great emotional power in this screen adaptation," this trade journal announces unequivocally. "There is also the power to make great popular appeal and if this work does not record sensational popularity throughout the country it will be the result of a condition not in any way connected with the picture's production.... It certainly has the spectacular emotionalism

A reassuring large number of great leaders in various useful fields are arising voluntarily in defense of the motion picture industry. James E. West, Chief Scout Executive of the Boy Scouts of America, is the latest to declare his friendship for the industry in its constant effort to give the world better pictures. The continual winning of new defenders is a tendency, which will prove a source of unlimited gratification to all conscientious producers.

In a new war against film thieves just launched by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the William J. Burns Detective Agency has been enlisted in a determined effort to put a stop to the expensive "incursions" of members of the illicit clan.

There is a general agreement among the better informed leaders in the amusement world to the effect that the film industry has regained its equilibrium and that 1923 bids fair to be a year of steady patronage at all classes of theatres. Marcus Loew, president of Metro, is the latest to add his expression of confidence in the new year bringing true normalcy in this country.

It has come about that only all-star casts appeal seriously to especially the exhibitors in smaller cities. It is evident someone has started something which everybody will be compelled to help finish by co-operating. Meanwhile, the old-time star system is all but obliterated by the new "fad and fancy."

The campaign against "first runs," as now exploited as a part of a system, is gathering momentum and it begins to look as if the concerted effort of a large group of powerful interests to oust all monopoly on preferred theatres will become most determined without much more delay.

Since every indication points to the eventual general abandoning of the two-reel comedy field by the leading comedians, whose ambitions carry them to the realms of more footage, there is a pronounced inclination to wonder if there is to be another repetition of the "mad rush of all to do the same thing at the same time."

which vibrates the affections and sympathies of the populace. It does seem that a play so moving as this one can take a handicap and still go through with flying colors." No producer could desire more whole-hearted praise of his work than this. Besides, Camera! seconds the motion!

We've had "Hail the Woman" and now comes "Conquering the Woman." Right at the outset, it will be universally agreed that it is much easier to hail than to conquer her. However, this latest directorial effort of King W. Vidor affords some pleasing entertainment and although the story is built out of very familiar material, none of the hackneyed elements bore one in the least on account of the good judgment Mr. Vidor has exercised in embellishing here and there with the hand of originality. He has achieved one difficult feat with impressive mastery and that is to blend romance with comedy without "making a fool out of either one of them." Florence Vidor and David Butler divide the high honors so far as the cast is concerned and the former as the rather imperious heroine gives a performance in which dramatic skill is outstanding. There is plenty of action in this film, notably the fight Mr. Butler ouers when he is shanghaied. The story, while not the newest thing under the sun, is interesting because of the somewhat changed angles of construction ventured and in brief is as follows: Judith Stafford returns to her San Francisco home after a lengthy sojourn abroad during which Aunt Sophia, a social climber, is her chaperon. While aqua-planing on the south coast of France Judith falls off her plane intentionally and is much annoyed when Larry Saunders of Oklahoma, whose yacht is close by, dives to her rescue. Judith berates Larry and swims to the boat of her host, Count Henri de Marcellus. Later when Larry comes to Frisco he visits his old friend Tobey Stafford and is amazed to find that Judith is Tobey's daughter. Judith becomes engaged to the Count. Her father opposes the match and tricks her and Larry aboard one of his merchant vessels. He gives Captain Sandy MacTavish certain orders which result in Larry and Judith being marooned on an uninhabited island in the South Seas. Larry tries drastic means of taming Judith but is unsuccessful. He adopts gentler and persuasive methods and wins. Judith is happy in love with him. But the Count turns up unexpectedly and kidnaps Judith. Tobey arrives and with Larry starts in pursuit of the abductor. After a thrilling chase Judith is rescued by her lover.

As its vogue widens, "The Strangers' Banquet," Marshall Neilan's latest contribution to the screen, does not fare so well with especially the newspaper critics. The chief fault stressed by several is that it's so much a melange of so many things as to be confusing to the average audience. While all admit there are flashes of true directorial genius here and there and the comedy touches are given full credit for "getting across," the opinion is general that Mr. Neilan could have made it much easier for the average theatre-goer to ascertain what the story is all about. As one critic points out, the popular Mickey seems prone to lean toward the high-brow idea. However, this is denied by those who know his screen ideals best. It would seem germane to make the point here for the benefit of all creators of motion pictures that the more direct and the more simple the manner of offering a story is the better it will be, because when all ramifications of exhaustive dissecting are taken into due consideration the one combination which really bids fair to make the cinema a true art of the first magnitude will be that of direct simplicity. A complete freedom from complications beyond the ordinary grasping is a goal ever and anon worthy of the most zealous striving to attain, according to our version of it.

The most engrossing topic of discussion

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, JAN. 13, 1923

FILM QUEEN TO BE QUEEN OF EXPOSITION

Which Queen of the Screen shall also become the Queen of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to be given in Los Angeles next June? It has been decided there will be such a Queen and that she will be selected by popular vote. Moreover, it has been decided that she shall share regal honors with President Warren G. Harding, who is expected to attend the opening of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, which has the earnest support of three Americas — North, South and Central. Naturally there is going to be some keen competition for this exalted position of such ruling pre-eminence and already there is discernible excitement within filmland.

Since the Motion Picture Industry in sponsoring the Revue and Exposition, it has been decided to let those of the industry select the Queen of events for the opening night. The lucky girl winning this honor will ride in state in the electrical parade preceding the opening; she will preside at the opening ball and lead the grand march with the Governor or some other high dignitary; she will have a prominent part with President Harding in the official opening ceremonies; she will press the button that ignites the first bomb of the pyrotechnic display; and she will preside at the Exposition breakfast to be given at dawn following the night of festivities that will mark the opening to the public of the 30-day celebration.

Only patrons of the Revue and Exposition will be admitted to the Premiere. They alone will elect the Queens who will preside on the successive nights of the month's fiesta of history, literature, music, and art. Patron Certificates are now being offered the personnel of the Motion Picture Industry at $10 each. These certificates carry with them $12.50 worth of Revue and Exposition tickets, including a ticket to the Premiere, and 1000 votes for Queen.

When the filming of Douglas Fairbanks' next starring vehicle begins, it will be done under the direction of Raoul Walsh, who has just signed a contract for his services in this capacity. Doug's next picture will be a spectacular pirate story.

SELZNICK SEEKS SITE HERE FOR DISTRIBUTING

What seems to be the initial steps towards establishing Hollywood as a moving picture distributing center as well as a producing one, were taken this week when George L. Eastman, president of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, authorized a special committee to assist representatives of the Selnick Pictures Corporation in locating suitable quarters for its distributing organization. Although confirmation of the report that the Selznick organization intends to move their distributing department to the Southern California field is lacking, it is generally understood such plans have been definitely made.

DRYDEN'S INITIAL 3-ACT PLAY IS HIT

Wheeler Dryden, well known stage and screen actor, made his debut as a playwright a few weeks ago when his three-act mystery drama, "Suspicion," which he wrote in collaboration with George Appell, a prominent Los Angeles attorney, was produced at Egan's Theatre. This is Mr. Dryden's first full-length play, although he has written others in one act, notably, "The Dawn of Truth," specially written for Mildred Harris, and "The Wasp," which may be used as vehicles for a vaudeville tour in the near future.

In addition to creating the character of Jake Pepperstein, the Jewish second-hand dealer in "Suspicion," Mr. Dryden is stage manager of the production, and among other actors and actresses in the cast who are prominent on stage and screen are: Marjorie Meadows, Clarissa Selwynne, Violet Schramm, Wedgewood Nowell, Boyd Irwin, Theodore von Eltz, Mitchell Ingraham, Ross Forrester, William Eugene, Charles Healey, Robert Clark, Edwin Zuna, William Oakley, and George Appell, Junior.

The play was directed by Roland Rushton, late of the David Belasco forces in New York City, and is presented by Walter Hast, prominent theatrical producer, who has such successes as "Scandal," "The Little Brother," and "Martinique" to his credit.

"Suspicion" has now been playing at Egan's Theatre for five consecutive weeks,

NEILAN WILL DIRECT FILMING OF "BEN HUR"

At last one angle of the "Ben Hur" discussion has been settled. The question as to who would direct this Goldwyn super-production has been a topic of as much interest as that of the one who would play the title role. Reports received from Goldwyn's New York offices announce that Marshall Neilan has been selected to direct the great production, thus setting to rest rumors that D. W. Griffith, Rex Ingraham and other celebrated directors had been chosen. This widely heralded film venture is said to have cost the Goldwyn organization $1,000,000 for its film rights, and that it will require at least that much more for production cost.

GOLDWYN IN A NEW FILM DEAL WITH FITZMAURICE

One of the most interesting new affiliations of the current week was revealed in an announcement that Samuel Goldwyn, former president of the Goldwyn corporation, which still bears his name and of which he is still one of the stock-holders, and George Fitzmaurice, famous Paramount director, have signed a five-year contract, under the terms whereby Mr. Goldwyn will undertake to supply Mr. Fitzmaurice with unlimited capital, with which the latter will produce a series of cinema dramas.

Because of the fact that Mr. Fitzmaurice is contracted to direct one more picture for Famous-Players Lasky before his services with that company are terminated, it is understood the new organization will not commence operation before April 1st.

According to present plans, other prominent directors may be employed to assist production under the supervision of Mr. Fitzmaurice, and negotiations have been under way for some time to corral a number of the most celebrated stars of the screen and stage to be featured in their contemplated photoplays.

Mr. Goldwyn declares that although he is thoroughly convinced Los Angeles is pre-eminently the best field for cinema production, it is not his intention to confine his activities solely to the Southern California locale, and that the new producing unit will have studios both in the east as well as the west.

RUSSIAN PLAY TO OPEN FOR DRAMA WEEK

The Los Angeles Co-operative Repertory Theatre Association will observe the week of January 22d, nationally known as Drama Week, by giving a premiere of its production "Ivanoushka" at the Hollywood Woman's Club. The play is a Russian extravaganza from the pen of Irma Peixotto Sellars, playwright, artist, and authority on Russian folk lore, around which the story is woven. Harl McInroy, prominent picture actor and playwright, is directing the production.

One of the features of the attraction will be the dances by Mattie Frei, who will do his famous peacock dance which has been seen on the screen in several feature productions. He will be assisted by his dancing troupe.

Glory Raye, noted Irish actress, and of Hollywood Community Theatre fame, plays the title role of "Ivanoushka," a Russian prince. She is supported by a capable cast including such well-known names as Esther Ralston, John Gough, Miriam Nelke, Rollin Arenz, Estelle Gouldin, Monte Collins, Hazel Sylvester and C. N. Ralston.

Something new in scenics will be shown in the settings and lighting effects introduced by Mattie Frei, while many magnificent costumes have been designed by the author.

WOODS IS BACK WITH BIG FILMING PLANS

Frank E. Woods, former supervising editor of the scenario department of the Paramount organization, has returned to Hollywood from New York with his plans perfected for the launching of one of the most important of new producing units in which he will be affiliated with Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris, two of America's foremost playwrights. It is said this company will get under way in the matter of executing its far-reaching plans without delay and that a decision has been reached as to the initial story to be put into production.

While others shout from the housetops their accomplishments, you can remain perfectly imperturbable on the terra firma of keep-plugging-away.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Film News of This Week You May Have Overlooked.

The latest Tony Sarg's Almanack, released by Educational, is "The Haunted Castle."

Jimmie Adams is the barber's victim in "Once Over," the latest of Educational's new series of one-reel Cameo Comedies.

Jackie Coogan's latest production, "Toby Tyler," was finished this week. The story is described as a heart-gripping account of a kid's adventures with a circus.

Maurice Tourneur, who is producing "The Isle of Dead Ships," reports he will soon conclude the actual filming on this fantastic tale of the Saragasse Sea.

Herbert Brenon, noted director and one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, will produce pictures for Paramount, co-featuring Betty Compson and Conway Tearle.

Carmel Myers is in New York City. While there she will replenish her wardrobe. Miss Myers will go from Gotham to Chicago, where she plans making pictures in the old Essanay studio.

Harry Carey and company are in Barstow, filming atmosphere scenes for his next picture, "The Man From the Desert." Marguerite Clayton is playing the feminine lead, and Val Paul is directing.

The Century Comedy Club held its second meeting on January 2nd, and plans to break ground for a bungalow-clubhouse were discussed. Honorary President Julius Stern is due in time for the third meeting, which will be held at the Ambassador hotel.

Katherine MacDonald's next story for First National will be a tale of the stage and its temptations, written by Ernest Pascal, under the title, "Chastity." Edythe Chapman has been engaged by B. P. Schulberg to play one of the chief roles in this new Schertzing-directed drama.

"The Two Twins" is the tentative title of the new "Bull Montana" comedy which Hunt Stromberg is producing for Metro. This will take the place of "They Call It Dancing," previously announced as the fifth of this series of fun makers. Albert Austin is directing "The Two Twins."

"Pest of the Storm Country," evidently a burlesque on Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country," will serve as the vehicle for an early stellar screen appearance for Louise Fazenda. This comedy will be released as a special by Educational.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes story, "The Man With the Twisted Lip," has been made into a two-reel picture, and will be released by Educational as one of the series on The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

"Garden of Geysers," the next release of Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, shows interesting views of geysers in Yellowstone National Park and contains also some clever animated cartoons and trick photography.

Catherine Murphy, now playing with Norma Talmadge in her next picture, "Within the Law," is a Seattle college graduate who is making rapid strides in film-dom. Director Frank Lloyd predicts a great future for the newcomer.

Active preparations are being made at the Richard Walton Tully offices at United Studios, to greet the First National producer on his return from abroad. On his arrival in Los Angeles, Tully will find everything ready to enable him to go right into the production of "Tribly."

"Hazel From Hollywood," a new Christie comedy, was designed with the idea of not only making people laugh, but to serve as a warning to movie-struck girls who are bent on leaving home for flyers in the film world of Hollywood, according to a statement just issued.

Following the completion of her engagement with Selznick, for whom she played a part in "Rupert of Hentzau," Josephine Crowell was signed to play an important role in "Main Street," under the direction of Harry Beaumont, who is making this production for Warner Brothers.

Paul Gerson, formerly a prominent leading man on the legitimate stage, will make his advent on the motion picture screen in his own production which he is personally supervising at his San Francisco studios. Mr. Gerson is founder of the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation.

If present plans materialize, Thomas Lee Woolwine, District Attorney for the County of Los Angeles, will act as chief legal advisor for a group of local independent motion picture producers at a salary of $20,000 a year. This was the announcement issued following a meeting at the offices of Attorney Roth in Hollywood this week. The offer has been laid before Mr. Woolwine, and if it is accepted, as is predicted, he will resign his present position.

Ruth Hiatt has been so successful as a leading lady to Lloyd Hamilton that she has been retained to play in all of the remainder of that comedian's present series. In "Extra, Extra!" the latest Hamilton mirth film, Miss Hiatt is said to give an exceptionally fine performance.

Wallace Beery, one of the most prominent screen villains of film-dom, will support Buster Keaton in the sober-faced comedian's initial five-reel feature comedy, "Three Ages," now in the course of production. Margaret Leahy, the English prize-winning beauty, will play opposite Buster.

Rupert Julian has turned the Gigantic Praeter set into a beautiful winter scene for the final "takes" of "Merry Go Round." The Praeter is the Coney Island of Vienna, and with its snow-covered palaces of joy it is a sight seldom seen in this locality. Most of the action of "Merry Go Round" takes place on the Praeter.

Four big producing companies are bidding for Larry Semon, say rumors at the comedian's studio. The funmaker's three-million-dollar contract with Vitagraph expires with the completion of five more comedies, and an announcement is expected almost hourly of a new contract to take effect when the remaining five pictures are finished.

Jeff Lazarus, Paramount-Grauman exploiteer from Chicago and New York, has arrived in Los Angeles preparatory to the opening of Grauman's New Metropolitan Theatre. Mr. Lazarus is visiting the newspapers with Arthur S. Wenzel press representative, telling the press how big and great the New Met. is. Opening date is January 26th at five dollars per.

"White Frontier" Cast Grows

Allen Holubar, who is producing "The White Frontier" for Associated First National distribution, has added five new members to the cast that is supporting Dorothy Phillips in the picturization of Jeffrey Deprend's widely read novel. Although the production is rapidly nearing completion at the United studios, a number of important scenes are yet to be "shot." The recent additions to the notable cast already assembled are Richard Hedrick, Rosemary Theby, Cyril Chadwick, Brinsley Shaw and Eric Mayne, now appearing in support of Mabel Normand in Mack Sennett's production of "Suzanna." "The White Frontier" is Allen Holubar's second production for First National starring Dorothy Phillips.

"Silent Skipper" For the Silent Drama

One of Hobart Bosworth's first productions to be filmed during the early part of this year will be "The Silent Skipper," a dramatic sea-story written by Everett C. Maxwell and Harry E. Dunham. The setting of the play is wide in scope, starting from a New England fishing village, moving into thrilling sea episodes and ending in the South Sea Islands. Mr. Bosworth will play the stellar role, John North, the silent skipper.

Marguerite De La Mott Starts New Picture

On the day after New Year's Marguerite De La Mott, the J. L. Frothingham star, started work in the leading feminine role in a Louis Burston special, entitled "Desire," for release through Metro. During the past year Miss De La Mott has appeared in three all-star Ince productions, "What a Wife Learned," "A Man of Action" and "Scars of Jealousy," released through First National; was starred by Irving Cummings in "The Jilt"; played the lead with Lon Chaney in "Shadows,"—and finished in "The Famous Mrs. Fair," a Fred Niblo production, the day before Christmas. Her portrayal of Sylvia Fair in the last named picture eclipses all her previous work, it is said.

EDITOR SAYS PUBLIC

IS BEST FILM JUDGE

James Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, has formally awarded to Inspiration Pictures the Medal of Honor for having produced in "Tol'able David," in which Richard Barthelmess made his first appearance as a star, the best picture of 1922. This was done at the Radio Show held in Grand Central Palace, New York City, Mr. Quirk's speech being broadcasted. The handsome gold medal was accepted by J. Boyce Smith, Secretary of Inspiration Pictures. In his presentation speech Mr. Quirk said: "This award is made not by a jury of critics, of judges, of so-called experts, or of censors, but by the American people. These people are regular attendants of motion picture theaters throughout the United States, and they are therefore best qualified to pass upon the merits of any production."

FILMING AMERICAN HISTORY IS EXPENSIVE

Players to enact some of the most famous characters in our history were chosen when Charles Ray and his director, Frederick Sullivan, completed the casting for America's first love story, "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

With Longfellow's epic poem as the basis, Ray is setting out to make a historical drama of big sweep covering the adventures of the Pilgrim Fathers, costing at least half a million dollars. Mr. Ray will, of course, have the role of John Alden. The other figures in this drama of real life will be portrayed as follows:

Priscilla Mullins by Enid Bennett, now best-known for her Maid Marian in "Robin Hood"; Miles Standish by Fred Warren, well-known character actor most recently in Goldwyn productions; Captain Thomas Jones by Stanton Heck, who had leading parts in "A Tailor-Made Man" and "Scrap Iron"; Winslow by Thomas Holding, whose last work was in Marshall Neilan's "Strangers' Banquet"; Fallon by Tom Wilson, familiar for many parts in Griffith, Fairbanks and Ray pictures; Carver by Sam de Grasse, most recently in "Robin Hood"; Elder Brewster by Joseph Dowling of "Miracle Man" fame; Howland by William Sullivan and Allerton by Frank Farrington, both of whom come from the East after long stage engagements; Governor Bradford by Norval MacGregor; Steven Hopkins by Max Asher, for years a featured comedian with many companies; Mary Chilton by Charlotte Pierce, and Dotey by Sidney Bracey.

Besides these, there are many minor roles remaining to be filled, the cast being one of the largest yet to be seen in a motion picture. More than a hundred players of rank eagerly sought parts in "The Courtship of Miles Standish", not counting the claimants of direct descent from the original John and Priscilla, who thought their kinship would qualify them for the leading roles.

At least six months will be consumed in making the Ray production.

Another Hollywood Film

Director Fred Caldwell, who produced "Night Life in Hollywood," a feature of his own writing, has commenced work upon another story of Hollywood. This film play, which is entitled "Knighthood in Hollywood," will be the initial output of the newly formed Fred Caldwell productions, to be followed by a series of comedy-dramas of the same order. Actual shooting is now under way at the Fine Arts studios.

BLACKTON THINKS HE'S FOUND NEW FILM GENIUS

Miss Maisie Fisher, a 17-year-old English girl, was selected by Mr. J. Stuart Blackton to play the role of Mary, Queen of Scots, with Lady Diana Manners as Queen Elizabeth in the super film, "The Virgin Queen", just completed.

Mr. Blackton saw Miss Fisher dancing at a school where his children are pupils, and was immediately struck by her resemblance to Miss Norma Talmadge at the time he picked that present-day star from a crowd in his studio and gave her her first part—the little seamstress in a film based on Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities."

That was in 1911. The leading role, Sidney Carton, was played by Maurice Costello, the first internationally-known film star, and this was the first Dickens film. Miss Talmadge made an immediate success. She was then 17.

When Mr. Blackton saw the young English dancer, he concluded that she had a remarkable film face, with a striking likeness to Miss Talmadge at the beginning of her career. He called Miss Fisher aside and asked whether she would be interested to take up film work. A few days later, he took a screen test of her and found that she filmed well and showed a decided aptitude for the work.

A small part in "A Gipsy Cavalier" followed. As the vision of the boy hero's mother in the prologue the young lady did so well that Mr. Blackton decided to cast her for the role of Mary Stuart in "The Virgin Queen." The Scottish Queen was about the age of Miss Fisher at the period in which the film story is laid, and this young lady is remarkably like the portraits of Mary Stuart at this period.

"It was a risk to cast an inexperienced player in this role, although it is not a large part," said Mr. Blackton. "I remembered, however, that I had done the same in the cases of many other artists who succeeded, including Norma and Constance Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Antonio Moreno and Lillian Walker. Shortly before I left America, I started May McAvoy the same way, and she is now a star. I believe Miss Fisher will reward my confidence. I expect her to develop into a splendid film actress."

Now that we have read all the proclamations of faith in the new year being a record-breaker for the film industry, we make and second the motion that all proclaimers adjourn and repair to their respective workshops to do the thing indispensable to making their proclamations ring true.

ENGLAND'S BEAUTY STARTS IN NEW KEATON FILM

Margaret Leahy, England's prize-winning film beauty, is playing opposite Buster Keaton, frozen-faced screen comedian, in his first five-reel production.

Selected from an army of 80,000 contestants as Great Britain's most beautiful girl, Miss Leahy was brought to America by Norma and Constance Talmadge, who have agreed to sponsor her film career.

Originally Miss Leahy was to play Aggie Lynch supporting Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law", but photographic tests revealed Miss Leahy's exceptional adaptability for comedy leads. Hence her assignment to Buster Keaton in a part more important than the one for which she was selected as the winner of the beauty contest.

Eddie Cline has been chosen to direct Buster Keaton, and Jean Havez has returned to work in the comedian's scenario department.

Keaton now has four talented writers on his staff. Besides Havez there are Thomas H. Gray, well-known writer of many stage and screen successes; Joseph Mitchell, who is responsible for numerous laughing hits, and Clyde Bruckman, contributor to The Saturday Evening Post and other publications, and a veteran writer for the screen.

JAMES CALNAY EXPANDS HIS PRODUCING UNIT

Expansion has been ushered in with the new year as a watch-word in filmdom and James Calnay is among those energetic producers who is never overlooking any watch-words having to do with moving forward. Hence he has moved his entire producing unit from the Fine Arts studios into the Hollywood studios for the sake of increased space and he has put Lew King and Jack Livingston on the job of co-operating in the direction of his next feature, the working title of which is "Why Do We Live?" The scenario for this production has been prepared by that past-master among veterans of the original school of screen writers, William E. Wing, who, according to report, has accomplished one of his best achievements in the adaptation of this story for camera values. Mr. Calnay announces he expects 1923 to be his busiest year.

This year of 1923 promises to be a banner one for all filmdom. One of the requisites to insuring this is to rally round the banner and to persevere in being industrious rather than wayward.

HERSHOLT GETS A 20-WEEK JOB WITH VON

Jean Hersholt was the first artist to be engaged to play a leading role in "McTeague," which is to be Eric Von Stroheim's initial picture under his new contract with Goldwyn. The agreement to which Mr. Hersholt affixed his signature calls for his histrionic services for a period of twenty weeks beginning February 15th. However, it is understood actual "shooting" on this feature will not begin until about February 25th. It is evident that Mr. Von Stroheim intends to continue his much-discussed policy of devoting long periods of time to the producing of his Goldwyn specials just as he did during his affiliation with Universal, for the latter of whom he broke a record in this regard in making "Foolish Wives."

Mr. Hersholt has been cast to play the villain in "McTeague" and the part is likely to be on a par with the title role in point of importance as well as prominence. To this actor goes the credit of contributing two of the most notably brilliant "heavy" characterizations to the screen, his performance as Ben Letts in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country" being one of the big achievements scored in this triumph. According to pre-view reports, he has surpassed this performance in support of Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" in which he again serves as the mortal menace which creates the piece-de-resistance in the plot. In this latter production he plays a typical Von Stroheim villain of the brutally suave sort.

Mr. Hersholt's very latest screen appearance is in a principal role in Marshall Neilan's "The Stranger's Banquet."

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

Cheer up! They will never be able to prohibit good cheer.

Do you remember the custard pie? Well, he's out of pictures, too.

One of the big questions of the day—why be small about anything?

Los Angeles is a leader among picture-going cities. It is the leader among picture-making cities.

Can we continue to declare the motion picture to be still in its infancy when it can run up into the millions so fast?

Here's hoping every dope peddler will soon be kept busy peddling rocks on the inside of prison walls.

Now that we've had a surfeit of sheiks, rajahs and bull-fighters, let's not have any surfeits for a while. Variety is still the spice of life.

There is one thing which is absolutely censor-proof and that is American public opinion. The motion picture industry can thank its lucky stars for this.

Service is the watch-word of Camera! This magazine sincerely aspires to be of real service to the whole motion picture industry and everybody engaged in it.

Publications which devote themselves to scandalizing photoplayers are likely to soon be shoved aside into the position of devoting themselves to oblivion. Constructive criticism will always be welcome, but destructive witticism is sure to be a destroyer of the perpetrator eventually.

There seems to be a mutual disposition on the part of advocates of the original screen story on one hand and those loyal to adaptations on the other hand to dispossess each other body and boots. Has it ever occurred to many that there is plenty of room for both? Moreover, it is doubtful whether or not either source of supply of screen story material could ever become prolific and ample enough to make the other wholly unnecessary. It is the true American spirit to rejoice over letting the best man win. Why not apply the same principle to plots and rejoice over witnessing the best story win? In plain words, why "knock" a good story simply because it emanates from the source you are not prone to encourage or endorse?

FALSTAFFIAN FOLLY, FELLOWS

You've seen an octangular spree—one of those jags which has a fellow rocking and reeling from eight different angles at least. Grotesque business this. It is particularly repugnant when you know the victim to be capable of better things. You shudder when you see one you admire respond to the resilient call of Demon Rum. You realize the call is going to spring back and snap something off short, and that something is going to be a reputation or a chance for success. You worry a lot about others you do. We all do. Still, a vast majority of our worrying clique indulge our full share, having the audacity to tell friends we know when to stop, which is generally just in time to avert the calamity of being locked up for safe-keeping. Braggarts that we are, there is no limit to our boasts of taking care of the other fellow when he has wandered too far from the path of rectitude, but we are as mum as a clam when it becomes fair to refer gratefully to the several times we had to be towed in from the deep sea where we could see too little to be self-propelling. Now, why in the world do people imbibe so freely of the liquid refreshments which wilt instead of refresh? Why do we expect everyone else to grace the water wagon and leave the booze emporiums in our exclusive custody? It's all wrong. The partaking of intoxicants is a positive blunder. We all know it. There is nothing to gain and all to lose in taking a chance on being a drunkard. The old gag about needing an occasional stimulant is sheer tommyrot. It's one of those unnecessary "necessities." About the only thing a spree can do for you is to make you brag foolishly about a lot of foolish things. To err is human—to shoot a lot of "hot air" is just as human. Why we don't all arise in our might and abolish booze from our lives is a deep mystery. It's simply Falstaffian folly, fellows,—a folly which must never become potential enough to become apparent in the realm of photoplayers. Prohibition is never going to accomplish much, because life cannot be prohibited by man, and so long as there is life there is going to be drinking revelry. We know we're crazy to stagger around at all the angles an intoxicated brain misdirects us, but still we do not refrain from it. Aw, what's the use of striving seriously to attain success, fellows, so long as we are addicted to all this absurdity. Let's brace up. We're with you now, but we're not going to stick with you if the big journey is to be over the firewater route. Let's answer now the time honored question: When will folly end? This is no sermon by a devotee to piety. It's just an earnest dissertation on the subject of booze by a regular guy who honestly believes there is too much intemperance in the country today. Bone-dry prohibition won't ameliorate these conditions one iota, and prohibition cranks can drive more men to drink than a tantalizing nymph. The reformer is generally sillier than the one he seeks to reform. But, on the square, fellows, we Americans are consuming too much of the liquid that cheers to futility. Think it over.

It is never a bad idea to be good. And, a man who is a good actor on the screen, but a bad actor in his private social life must expect to pay in full for his follies. Nor can he expect to fool many people for any protracted period. By no means is he secure in his hopes of retaining any prestige or any hold on popularity. The few scandals the motion picture profession has had recently makes it certain the public will have no patience with those risking to perpetrate any repetitions of such unsavory affairs. A word to the wise ought to be sufficient, but it is not often so.

"The best is ever to come." It's a trite saying, but it's a promise founded in fact. We of this generation are living in a truly great age and it would be a pity to grow aged without realizing it and taking full advantage of it by contributing something towards making a great age greater. We can just hear some persons exclaim: "Tommyrot." But we are not afraid of criticism, for, verily, the best is ever to come.

According to high officials in charge of the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition, photoplayers are lagging behind in the matter of indicating their individual support to this great enterprise while technical men, for example, are embracing the opportunity to assist with a reassuring avidity. This is surprising and is probably mere neglect or procrastination and not reprehensible apathy. However, it behooves every artist of the screen to ascertain how he or she may co-operate helpfully in the gigantic task of making this exposition epochal in every detail. And, most important of all, it is imperative to do a bit now.

Now the great public will proceed to settle the Roscoe Arbuckle case just as it should have been given opportunity to proceed immediately after the comedian was acquitted by a Frisco jury. Bans constitute a too common fad among officials and various kinds of organizations in this country nowadays. The people—the common people—are quite capable of deciding any moral question which may arise and the sooner everybody recognizes this incontrovertible fact the better it will be.

The fuisome carping on the part of politicians bent on upsetting all plans for world-wide peace and their persistent habit of rattling swords as they show their teeth needs some exposing in the form of a photoplay with a plot revealing just what kind of a gang of despicable rotters these unscrupulous promulgators of war talk are in reality. A good dose of anti-war propaganda right now would be a beneficial counteracting force and the screen is the best medium through which to deliver a knock-out blow to those political leaders who show they would have no compunction in plunging the nations of the world into another general war. The screen proved itself a powerful agency as a war-maker during the recent calamity. Now let it wield its unlimited power as a peace-maker through fearless exposition of the ulterior motives actuating a few victims of self-aggrandizement just now much in the limelight because of their brazen efforts to keep various nations in a dangerous turmoil.

POSSIBLY ABOUT YOU AND—YOU!

Walter Heirs, Paramount's latest addition to their galaxy of stars, has left for Syracuse, New York, where he will wed Miss Adah Williams, a non-professional. Walter will return in a few weeks, bringing his wife with him.

Larry Semon's p. a. tells us he (Larry) is still wearing a straw lid, to convince his eastern friends that it is always summer here.

L. William O'Connell, who is serving as cameraman for Johnny Walker in "The Fourth Musketeer," has had a wide experience in the camera field. He photographed Clara Kimball Young in "The Hands of Nara," "Enter Madame" and "The Woman in Bronze." He turned the camera on Goldwyn's "Come On Over," and was a member of the Lasky photographic division for four years. O'Connell also was associated with Charles Rosher in the Mary Pickford producing organization.

Shannon Day has left Hollywood for a brief visit with her mother in New York City. It was in New York, incidentally, that Miss Day, as one of the Ziegfeld beauties, started on her road to fame.

Frank Hayes, the comedian with the mobile face, who played the role of Ci Prime in "The Old Homestead," and also enacted an important role in "One Week of Love," has been cast to play a spinster in Larry Semon's new comedy, as yet untitled.

Edwin Carewe has taken up production quarters at the United studios to produce Belasco's famous play, "The Girl of the Golden West" as his second release for Associated First National. Wallace Fox, who has been with Mr. Carewe the past four years, will be the assistant director while Sol Polito will be chief of photography and Louis Jerome business manager.

Cullen Landis is in San Diego on location for some exterior scenes for a new Vitagraph special production made under the direction of David Smith.

Lillian Lawrence has been engaged to play the part of Conway Tearle's mother in the Selznick production, "The Common Law." Corinne Griffith, Elliott Dexter and Hobart Bosworth are also in the cast.

Eva Novak has completed "The Tiger's Claw" with Jack Holt and has gone over to Fox to play opposite William Russell in a forthcoming production.

Edith Lee Grant is the latest to be added to the galaxy of Century Comedy beauties.

Junior Coghian, since returning from his visit to New York, has played with Bobbie Dunn, Johnnie Walker, and also Dorothy Dalton in "The Law of the Lawless." He has been signed to play the leading child role in Hugh Deiker's new feature at the Fine Arts.

An all-star cast, consisting of Jack Earle, Jack Cooper, Harry Archer and Lois Boyd, will be Century's first picture for 1923. Al Herman will direct it.

Pinto, popular cartoonist of the United Feature Syndicate, and known from coast to coast, has been made "gagman" for Century Comedy productions.

Jim Davis, well-known comedy director of the old school, has been engaged to make a series of comedies for Century. He will direct Buddy Mesinger's third for that company.

Baby Peggy has stepped into the role of philanthropist here in Los Angeles by offering to personally sell the "Peggy" doll for a helpless crippled girl, who makes these dolls for a livelihood.

An important addition has been made to the Louis B. Mayer forces in the person of Wellington Wales who has assumed the post of business manager of the organization. Long a prominent figure in coast film production and still a keen student of the art, Mr. Wales has held important positions with several of the biggest producers in the industry, his most recent association being with Marshall Neilan in the capacity of business manager.

Hugo Ballin, who has completed his production of "Vanity Fair" at the Goldwyn studios, is now putting on the finishing touches at Clune's Laboratory where the laboratory work on this production has been handled under the personal supervision of Pete Shamray. This production was photographed by J. R. Diamond.

Leaving the Paramount studio for the first time in many months, Edward Martindel is now engaged in a leading role in support of Shirley Mason in "The Eleventh Hour," with Bernie Durning directing.

George Warde has completed an engagement as child lead in "The Zero Hour" under the direction of Henry McCarty at the Fine Arts studio.

Henry McCarty, who has written and directed all stories so far produced with Lester Cuneo as the star, has completed production of "The Zero Hour," which is the last in the star's series for Western Pictures Exploitation, and he is now preparing to produce independently.

Alec B. Francis is playing a return engagement at the Fine Arts studios. Not so long ago Mr. Francis appeared at this plant in "Blind Justice," an Edward Sloman production, and he is now working there as one of the principals in "His Last Race," a Phil Goldstone picture.

Arthur Stewart, one of the screen's best known character men, who has been appearing steadily in pictures for the past twelve years, making his debut in "The Goose Girl," starring Marguerite Clark, has been cast for an underworld part in two different pictures being produced at the Fine Arts studios.

Edith Sterling is appearing opposite J. B. Warner in "Danger," a semi-western story, now in production under the direction of Clifford S. Elfelt. Joe Walker is chief cameraman.

Charles Mack has been cast for an important part in "Knighthood in Hollywood," a Fred Caldwell production.

Gertrude Lee Large, the character actress who played the "Witch" in "The Greatest Menace" and was mentioned in the cast as Lee Large Smith, wishes to announce that the name under which she is appearing on the screen is Gertrude Lee Large.

Beatrice Lovely has been added to the cast of "Why Do We Live?" a picture based upon the theme of capital punishment.

Margaret Diehl, who played the mother in "The Greatest Menace," was engaged by Jack Livingston to play a similar part in "Why Do We Live?" which picture is now being cast at the Hollywood studios.

Louise Leonard, well known character actress, whose work is best known for her extended connection with the Selig in Chicago, was added to the cast of James Calnay's seven-reel special feature, "Why Do We Live?"

Those two promising young actresses, Jane Sherman and Gladys Johnson, are the latest to be signed up by Universal to support Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is directing.

Miss Sherman and Miss Johnson both have important roles.

Otto Matiesen has been engaged to play the part of Dan Carter in "The Water Cross," William Russell's starring feature now under production at Fox studio.

Al Christie has engaged Hazel Deane, one of the rising young leading ladies of the film world, to play in his comedies beginning with the next picture which Mr. Christie will personally direct. Miss Deane came to Los Angeles from Vancouver a little less than eleven months ago and has already played leads in comedies—with Mack Sennett—and was recently the leading lady in a series of Western features.

Ariel Sawyer, Kirk Lucas and Penn Wood, are playing the minor servants in support of Charles Ray in his super-production, "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

A. D. Sewall has been engaged to support Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Michael Dark has signed for a six weeks' engagement with Warner Brothers. He will play the clever character part of Guy Pollock in "Main Street."

Zola Zorana and Hazel Madelin Lindoft, composer, are starting rehearsals for a musical comedy "Smile Again," to be produced at the Shrine auditorium in Glendale on the nights of February 8 and 9. Miss Lindoft is the author of the production. Miss Zorana is directing and will also play the lead, that of a little Hawaiian girl. Rosa Rehn designed the costumes.

Alfred Gosden, pioneer cinematographer, has completed a long engagement at Berwill studio as cameraman for the Bobbie Dunn comedies.

Promotion in Tully Company

Richard Walton Tully, producer of "The Masquerader" and "Omar, the Tentmaker" for First National Pictures, believes in the members of his organization, their ability and their promotion. It is seldom that he goes outside of his own offices to find persons to fill advanced positions in the Tully organization. The latest promotion among his staff is that of Agnes K. O'Malley, who assumes the title of Assistant in the studio publicity department headed by George Landy. Miss O'Malley has been associated with the Tully organization for the last six months.

BRUCE EDITS NEW SCENICS AS OLD WIN LAURELS

Robert C. Bruce, creator of Wilderness Tales for Educational, has returned to New York after making the second series of these scenic dramas in the mountain and lake regions of the Northwest and the less inhabited portions of the Pacific coast.

Mr. Bruce made several excursions from his headquarters in Portland, Ore., in search of material and settings for his various subjects. His journeys carried him down the coasts of Oregon and California all the way to the Mexican border. Most of the time, however, was spent in the Northwest mountain country.

The party was seriously inconvenienced by the unusually heavy smoke in the Pacific Northwest, caused by widespread forest fires. On one occasion they were obliged to remain in camp 35 days in order to do four days' camera work.

Mr. Bruce's new series will contain a sea picture, which he believes will be even more popular than the first of his Wilderness Tales, "And Women Must Weep." This picture was the first single reel subject and the first of a scenic nature ever classified as an exceptional picture by the National Board of Review in its publication, "Exceptional Photoplays," while in England, the Manchester Guardian declared "And Women Must Weep" and two other subjects of this series to be the finest artistic gems which had ever come out of America.

PEACOCKE IS FINISHING "THE MIDNIGHT FLOWER"

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, director of productions for the Los Angeles Production company, is completing the seven-reel picture, "The Midnight Flower," which was written by Mrs. Florence Herrington, the well-known children's welfare worker. Gaston Glass plays the stellar role in this film, while Volva Vale will be featured in the title role. Sheldon Judson heads the remainder of the cast, which includes Carmen de Cassan, Goldie Fessendo, Margaret Diehl, Josephine Calhoun, Anna Pederson, Olga Cazanova, Al McKinnon, J. Gorman Rex, Frank Stone, little Frances Symons and Tito Valentino, the latter of whom is making his screen debut in this picture. John Duell has been Capt. Peacocke's assistant throughout production, while Frank Cotner presided at the camera. "The Midnight Flower" is said to unfold an unusual story and is distinguished by having helpful thought back of it, a quality which must become more and more predominant in the photoplays of the future if the art is to achieve its greatest purposes.

CAPPING LAST-MINUTE CLIMAXES

"THE MIDNIGHT FLOWER," THE NEW LESLIE T. PEACOCKE PRODUCTION, WILL BE PRE-VIEWED AT THE AMBASSADOR HOTEL THEATRE, FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19th, AT 7:30 O'CLOCK AND ALL MEMBERS OF THE PROFESSION ARE INVITED TO ATTEND.

WATCHFUL POLICE GIVE SEA-WEED TWICE-OVER

Any question as to whether Los Angeles County police officials are obeying the spirit of the recently enacted Wright law might well be answered by Maurice Tournour, motion picture producer.

Tournour suffered considerable inconvenience last night as the result of the zealous efforts of deputies to see that the Wright law was not being evaded.

In the picture which he is now producing, "The Isle of Dead Ships", Tournour has found it necessary to use large amounts of sea weed, taken fresh from the ocean. In order that the kelp might be available early in the morning, Scott R. Beal, production manager for Tournour, dispatched two large trucks, with crews, to Santa Monica late yesterday.

It was dark before the tide allowed the men to gather the kelp. Wading into the water, with the aid of a large flashlight, the men loaded the trucks and started back for Hollywood. They had barely left the beach when they were overtaken by a high-powered automobile and commanded to halt.

Deputy sheriffs surrounded the trucks and with pitchforks probed every inch of the trucks' odoriferous contents. Unsatisfied, the deputies ordered the trucks unloaded. After the trucks had been found to be without even a suspicion of liquor the boys in charge were allowed to proceed. Harold McChesney was in charge of one truck and "Shorty" Phillips of the other.

MAESCHER WILL HELP MAKE 1923 BIG YEAR

The A. B. Maescher Productions have just finished final cutting on their first eight-reel special, "The Rip-Tide," which was written by J. Grubb Alexander and is said to be one of the most powerful dramas filmed in the Hollywood field during the closing months of 1922.

Now this organization is completing plans for an unusually active new year and actual "shooting" on an original story entitled "Treachery," also by Mr. Alexander, will be started without delay. This work is described as a mystery melodrama of the type of "The Bat."

Two other big feature productions are on the Maescher schedule for early making. One is "Thou Shalt Not," being adapted from an unpublished novel said to be startling in its innovations. The other is "Felony," announced as an epic of every-day life in the raw.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

"Pasteur" Film Arrives

J. Ipstein, the French director, arrived in New York aboard the Cedric, December 23rd. He brought with him a print of his production "Pasteur," the film depicting the life and deeds of the great scientist, Louis Pasteur, whose centenary is soon to be celebrated.

Chinese Actor Aids Ruggles

James B. Leong, the Oriental who plays one of the leading supporting roles in "The Remittance Woman," Ethel Clayton's second F. B. O. starring vehicle, is acting as technical adviser to Director Wesley Ruggles in staging the Chinese episodes of his production. Leong is an American college graduate and also a writer. He wrote the scenario for "The Lotus Blossom," which was recently produced with an all-Chinese cast.

"Brass" is "Moulded"

The picturizing of "Brass," the Charles G. Norris novel of marriage and divorce, has been completed at the Warner Brothers west coast studios under the direction of Sidney Franklin. It was adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson, and it was produced by Harry Rapf. The complete cast includes Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Frank Keenan, Irene Rich, Harry Meyers, Miss Dupont, Pat O'Malley, Helen Ferguson, Vera Lewis, Harvey Clark, Margaret Seddon and Edward Jobson.

Bernhardt Fortune Lost

According to cablegram advice from Paris, the fortune of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the dramatic genius who is now fighting valiantly for her life, has been dissolved to such an extent that physicians attending the aged actress are averse to enlightening her of her true financial condition. Despite the fact that Mme. Bernhardt earns a very large salary, it is understood that unfortunate investments made by her son, Maurice, are responsible for the dissipation of the family funds.

Frothingham's 1923 Plans

J. L. Frothingham, producer of "The Ten Dollar Raise," "Shattered Idols," and "The Woman He Loved," has elaborate plans for the new year. His first production will be "The Dice Woman," an original story by Harvey Gates, author of "Hurricane's Gal." Mr. Gates is writing the continuity now and camera work will commence within two or three weeks. His second picture will be a celebrated stage play with a theme of universal appeal, the name of which will be announced soon; the third will be an original story by William V. Mong, who will enact the principal role.

Believe It or Not—But

Mickey Neilan was a messenger boy not so many years ago. Douglas Fairbanks was a hardware clerk. Allan Dwan used to be an electrical engineer. Charlie Chaplin was once an acrobat and George Melford used to shoot glass balls with a rifle in a traveling circus. Lloyd Hughes was once a bookkeeper. Monty Banks was a wine merchant in Italy and Frank Lloyd used to climb telegraph poles when he worked on a construction gang.

Flapper Continues Flapping

Pauline Garon, filmdom's delightful little flapper, has been signed for a part in the forthcoming George Melford production "You Can't Fool Your Wife," which will be made at the Long Island studios of Famous Players. She recently completed a similar role in Cecil B. De Mille's "Adam's Rib" and has just arrived in New York City after spending the holidays with her parents in Montreal. Her many Hollywood friends will be glad to learn she intends to return here upon finishing with Melford some time in April.

In a Class to Himself

Here is one handsome man, at least, who lives in Hollywood, is a member of the motion picture industry, and has "never had a rumor of marriage promulgated against him." He is Edward Martindel, one of the happiest bachelors in Hollywood. At present he is engaged in a leading role in "The Eleventh Hour," a William Fox production starring Shirley Mason. Martindel, with many years of stage experience and almost as many more before the camera, still clings to bachelorhood, although most of his friends have become benedicts. In all of his life, he declares, he has never had a single whispered rumor started about the possibility of marriage on his own part.

Baker's Dozen All Baked

Twelve novels and stage plays have been secured by the Warner Brothers for production during the season of 1922-23. They include "Babbitt," by Sinclair Lewis, "Being Respectable," by Grace H. Flandrau, "Beau Brummel," and "Lovers' Lane," both by Clyde Fitch, "David Copperfield," by Charles Dickens, "How to Educate a Wife," by Elinor Glyn, "Shadowed Lives," by Justin Adams, "The Age of Innocence," a novel by Edith Wharton, "Broadway After Dark," by Owen Davis, "George Washington, Jr.," and "Little Johnny Jones," two George M. Cohan plays, and "Cornered," the Broadway success of last season with Madge Kennedy, written by Dodson Mitchell and Zelda Sears.

Here's the P. A.'s Friend

Wayne V. Pettit, who has just been appointed photoplay editor of the Washington (D. C.) Post, announces he will welcome sketches of the journalistic output of studio press agents, as he intends to devote much of his space to production news and gossip of general interest. He is especially desirous of having humorous material submitted to him.

Handy Book Enterprise

Considerable interest has been aroused among local film folk over the introduction of the Standard Casting Directors' directory, which is being published by Harry Kerr, casting director of the Metro studios, in conjunction with A. O. Ridgway, who is in active management. The booklet, which is issued monthly, is supplemented by daily sheets, sent to all casting directors, giving changes in the telephone numbers of subscribers to the service. Undoubtedly this enterprise will prove very popular.

Barker Mushing It

Headed by Reginald Barker, a location hunting expedition left the Louis B. Mayer studios last week bound for Truckee, from which point they will proceed north, with the aid of snowshoes and a dog team, to the Lake Tahoe district. The object of the trip is to choose locations for some of the exterior scenes in "The Law-Bringers" which Mr. Barker will make as his next Mayer-Metro all-star special. Accompanying the director are Mason Litson, production manager at the Mayer studio, Percy Hilburn, chief cameraman of the Barker company, and Harry Schenck, assistant director.

Beats Coue to It

In these days of Coue-ism, Warner Baxter comes forth with a sure cure for insomnia, which he found practical by curing himself of that malady years before the noted professor came into prominence. Baxter found that by lying very relaxed and concentrating his thoughts first upon his eyes, then upon his finger tips, then to his toes and so on, he could bring on a drowsiness within a few moments which would result in sound sleep, whereas before applying this system, he had often lain awake for hours before falling asleep. His explanation of the theory is that possibly this system of concentrating thought on various extremities of the body causes an active circulation of the blood which results in a soothing of the nerves and resultant sleep.

After a few of these self-treatments, Baxter avers that he has never since been bothered with sleeplessness.

Mong Loaned to U

William V. Mong, who will be long remembered favorably for his exceptional characterizations in especially "The Connecticut Yankee" and "The Ten Dollar Raise," has been loaned to Universal by J. L. Frothingham, who has him under contract, and he is portraying the character of a Chinese opium smuggler in "Drifting" in which Priscilla Dean is starring under the direction of Tod Browning. Later Mr. Mong will appear in more Frothingham specials, according to present plans.

"Common Law" Cast Completed

Theodore Van Eltz and Lillian Lawrence have been added to the cast of "The Common Law," Selznick all-star production which is being made under the direction of George Archainbaud. Von Eltz will play the part of Sandy Cameron and Miss Lawrence will be seen as Mrs. Neville. This completes the casting of the piece which includes such well-known players as Conway Tearle, Corinne Griffith, Elliott Dexter, Phyllis Haver, Wally Van, Doris May, Harry Meyers, Bryant Washburn, Hobart Bosworth and Miss Dupont.

Humphrey Playing Tinker

The first of the Peter B. Kyne Saturday Evening Post stories, which will be issued as short subject features by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco is under way at the company's new studio. These pictures will have the personal supervision of the author and will be titled by him. The humorous character of Tiberius Tinker, which runs through all these stories is being done by Orral Humphrey, the well-known character actor. Humphrey is Kyne's own choice for this part. Prominent in the support of Humphrey is Evelyn Nelson and Freeman Wood. Craig Hutchinson and David Kirkland are co-directing the series.

Back to N. Y. From Cuba

Richard Barthelmess and his supporting company have returned from Havana, where they went to film the exteriors of "The Bright Shawl," under the direction of John S. Robertson. The company had been in the Cuban republic for more than three weeks and Mr. Robertson says he was able to get local color to such an extent that he will bring to the screen a faithful reproduction of the early struggles of Cuba to throw off the tyrannical yoke of Spain. Included in the cast that went to Havana were Dorothy Gish, William Powell, Anders Randolph, Luis Alberni, George Beranger, George Humbert, Fred Bezerril, E. G. Robinson and Jetta Goudal.

CAPTAIN LESLIE T. PEACOCKE directing GASTON GLASS, VOLA VALE, SHELDON JUDSON and J. GORMAN REX in a scene from "THE MIDNIGHT FLOWER," a seven-reel super-feature by Florence Herrington.

"Is it true that Jones prides himself on being a handy man about the house?"
 "I think it is. At any rate when his mother-in-law arrived yesterday, he made a bolt for the door."

Whither His Gaze?

An interpretative danseuse, borrowed for the occasion from one of the fashionable cabarets, did an Egyptian number in a picture in which Bryant Washburn was playing a principal role.

"Did you notice the expression in her eyes?" Mr. Washburn asked a spell-bound "extra man" near him.

"N-n-no Sir," he stammered.

"Well, you should have looked at that too," the star answered. "I did—once."

Ashamed of His Wealth

Speaking of Scotch conservatism, David Torrence, the character actor, recounts the following:

Andy McTavish, a burly boy from the heather country, was waylaid by two highwaymen in New York, who demanded his money. Andy put up such a ferocious fight the robbers thought surely he must be laden with wealth. It was two hours before they finally overpowered the Scot, then all they found in the pockets of their prostrate victim was a single dime.

"What th' Deil did you fight so hard for?" asked one of the astonished highwaymen.

"I dinna want you to know how little I had," replied the victim.

Neglected Plunder

Lloyd Hughes, now working his first starring vehicle under the management of Thomas H. Ince recalls this one:

The lady of many portable possessions was moving from town to the seashore for the summer. A cab had been thought big enough to convey her and her property to the station, and the cabman sat there, passing from one stage of disgust to another still deeper, while his vehicle, inside and out, was piled high with a miscellaneous assortment of cherished belongings. At last the task of loading came to an end.

"Is that all?" inquired the cabman with polite incredulity.

"Yes," was the reply.

The cabman looked surprised.

"Seems a pity," he ejaculated, "to leave the doorstep."

in photoplay circles at present is the moot question as to whom the producers should heed, the exhibitors or the fans. By a slow process of evolution, the manufacturers of film have come to the conclusion that the judgment of managers of moving picture houses cannot always be depended on in the matter of deciding what kind of features the patrons of the respective theatres want, and as a natural consequence there have been numerous cases of deterioration in popularity, which to some men has been inexplicable. The writer knows of an actual experience which undoubtedly serves as an example of which way the wind is blowing. A young haberdasher purchased the leading picture playhouse in a high-class suburb of Philadelphia. The property was exceedingly valuable, because it was returning a truly big profit. The new owner's first fallacious idea was to increase the earnings by reducing the expenses incurred by having the best photoplay features at an early date. Immediately there came a slump in his business. He wondered why, but his competitor across the street, who had a theatre not nearly so elaborate, knew why, and he quickly closed a contract to show "the big stars and big pictures" at his place. Naturally he likewise got the big business. Meanwhile the haberdasher-manager was foundering around desperately trying to find a solution to his troubles. He tried most everything, including the old nickelodeon plan of changing programs every evening, with about one feature a week of the first magnitude. However, it was a useless fight. He had erred in judgment—had failed to ascertain what the people of his locality wanted in the way of cinema entertainment, and finally he was obliged to sell out to a more astute exhibitor at a heavy loss. So goes it, and we might add that it is doubtful whether or not half of the exhibitors are sagacious enough or sufficiently mindful to learn the inclinations of their neighbors in their search for diversion. As is plain to be understood, the producers who place their whole dependence on the decisions of exhibitors are liable to find their favorite releases failing to get the attention they deserve. It is just as obvious that the only sensible business method for the photoplay producers is to take their cases direct to the fans through the mediums of publicity which reach the fans, because it is unmistakable folly to leave the welfare of costly productions entirely in the hands of the small army of managers.

in this announcement that Paul Detlefsen is devoting many hours a day in Hollywood to his direction of the assembling of data for this production and that no expense will be spared to insure this picture of being recognized as one of the most lavish attempts at masterly adaptation of a literary masterpiece in the annals of the cinema art.

Also, in the meantime, Miss Pickford has supplemented her original announcement with the statement that since there is no copyright on "Faust," there is no element to prevent as many as may please from producing film versions of it. "There is plenty of room for all of us," she adds.

The other two proposed versions seem to be in the more distant future, but none the less likely, and, in the event there should come to the silversheet the whole quartet within this year of 1923, it is certain the plentitude of room will have diminished perceptibly, according to the views of exhibitors now being expressed freely. However, both the Mary Pickford and Ferdinand Earle versions seem sure of enjoying a wide vogue and general prosperity, and, each is deserving of congratulations for thus advancing the general cause of augmenting the importance of the cinema by contributing such masterly literature to it.

Max Graf will leave for Los Angeles tonight to complete the cast for "The Fog." Work on the picture will be begun at the Pacific Studios immediately on Mr. Graf's return.

Craig Hutchinson, director for the Paul Gerson Corp., has begun shooting the exterior scenes for the first of the series of twelve two-reel pictures, made from Peter B. Kyne's Saturday Evening Post stories.

Dan Mason and company are on their last week's work on the last Plum Center Comedy at the old Paul Gerson Studios on Tenth Street.

The Montague Studios at 1974 Page Street, lately bought by Paul Gerson, and in future to be called the Gerson Studios, are being enlarged and repaired, and will be ready for use in a few days.

Captain Richard Day, Technical Director for Goldwyn, arrived in town on Friday to assist Ernest Traxler in preparations for the production of "McTeague."

Silas Young, producer of New York City, was in town last week on business.

B. H. Lennon, director, Frankie Hermann, and Violet Oliver, all of the National Film Company, are spending a few days in San Francisco.

Hearing at Last

There was a terrible dynamite explosion near a small town. An old lady, hearing it, turned toward the door of her sitting room and said:

"Come in, Bella."

When her servant entered the room she said:

"Do you know, Bella, my hearing is evidently improving. I heard you knock at the door for the first time in twenty years."

Can you read the handwriting on the wall? Will your name be "amongst those present" in the first issue? A telephone call will bring one of our representatives to explain our service in detail.

A Cosmopolitan Metropolitan

A Cosmopolitan art for a Cosmopolitan people.

Los Angeles is fast becoming one of the most cosmopolitan cities of the world. Sid Grauman, already famous as the builder and guiding genius of several of the most unique motion picture playhouses yet erected, must have had in mind the thought involved in the opening paragraph when he conceived the dream which is now rapidly nearing realization—the beautiful new Metropolitan Theatre, at Sixth and Hill Streets, which is scheduled to open January 26th.

The first impression one receives upon entering this theatre, the artistic investiture of which both startles and fascinates, is that truly here is a most cosmopolitan art—cosmopolitan in that it suggests the arts of various ancient and medieval people. It goes no further than suggest, however, and viewed from another light, might be said to represent a distinct innovation, a new decorative art which surrounds the spectator with an atmosphere different from anything he has yet experienced.

None of the suggested types of architecture and decoration above referred to are exact or faithful modellings or reproductions of any one of the number of schools suggested and yet the suggestions are very vividly felt. There are the elements of the grandeur and the colossal, which characterized the architecture of old Rome in its coliseum days and other examples suggest the classic beauty of the works of the Greek masters.

There are two large stained-glass panels. These always suggest Gothic and yet there is not a trace of the Gothic in their design.

Certain portions of the relief work suggest Egyptian and yet are a distinct departure from all recognized works of Egyptian art. At the approach from the foyer are two huge, semi-grotesque animal figures crouched as if guarding the realms of fancy within. While suggestive of similar figures in ancient art yet they are nothing like those figures.

Some of the massive columns take one back across a span of time to old Babylon and others, although similar to the Greek Ionic and Corinthian, are modifications thereof.

Suffice it to say, however, that upon entering this newest and perhaps finest temple dedicated to the silent drama one is vividly impressed. The outside world is forgotten in this novel atmosphere and the final lasting impression is of a realm unique to the nth degree and an atmosphere of extreme originality.

It is not a meaningless phrase to say that Mr. Grauman and his architects and decorators have made a wonderful contribution to art in this intriguing interior. One takes a moment to soliloquize: "I have never seen anything like it, never expected to see anything like it. Truly it is a realization of a fanciful conception, a dream of the dreamer: abstract ideas expressed in concrete, plaster and color."

What atmosphere could be more fitting for its purpose than one with a psychological effect such as this? Immediately upon entering this realm of the fanciful, one is unconsciously prepared for and brought into tune with the spirit of the dramatic, the emotional. Anyone who has ever sat in a dark grimly bare studio projection room realizes what a test such a lack of proper atmosphere is for the merits of the picture, how difficult it is to adjust one's feelings to the spirit of a pictorial fiction story.

In the colorful decorative designs the bizarre is tempered with the classic, the grotesque subdued by the general note of beauty and richness. One is fascinated, perhaps slightly awed, by a colossal circular decorative relief of intricate rich design on the interior of the vast dome, five stories in height. One is startled by the great diversity in semi-grotesque designs of the pendants which hang from the ceiling, some of them being so large as to weigh almost a ton. The spaciousness of the interior, however, cause these huge embellishments to be in perfect proportion to the setting when viewed as a whole.

There are no clashing notes in the effective color schemes. Of these two predominate. One is composed of an odd subdued shade of yellow plum and green, a combination which students of art inform us characterized Chinese pottery for over three hundred years. The other and minor note is made up of celestial blue, crimson and gold. These are gay and more or less bizarre colors when viewed singly, but they have been so combined by the wizards in art decoration in working out the effects that the beauty of the scheme predominates and adds a classic artistic finish to what might otherwise be very bizarre.

There is a note of the mystic in a number of fanciful lighting fixtures which throw perfectly outlined strange shadow designs silhouetted against the wall nearby.

The motion picture industry is playing host to the world here next summer. People are coming from many far places, from many foreign nations to see the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. It will be the greatest entertainment of its kind ever given. It is an opportunity for the motion picture industry to give the outside public a newer and better conception of its infinite possibilities, and of its sincere desire to become even a greater force in national life. This Revue and Exposition not only will be a month of incomparable entertainment attracting tens of thousands of new visitors to Southern California. It will be a great patriotic celebration appropriately commemorating one of the greatest events in American history—the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine. It is a project in which our sister nations of Central and South America are going to participate with the greatest enthusiasm, an event for which President Harding himself has bespoken the support and interest of the whole United States.

The formal opening of the Revue and Exposition—The Premiere—will make Exposition history. Southern California, Los Angeles, Hollywood—are accustomed to unique and brilliant fetes. But this Premiere will surpass in magnitude and interest anything ever attempted before. President Harding has accepted the invitation of Los Angeles to be the city's guest of honor on this occasion, if national business permits. He will be accompanied from Washington by many other high officials and by Latin American diplomats. When the time comes every resident of Southern California will want to attend this Premiere. But attendance at the formal opening will have to be limited. It will be restricted to holders of Patron Certificates. These Certificates are now on sale at $10 each. Purchasers get $12.50 worth of tickets to the Revue and Exposition, including a ticket to the Premiere, with each Patron Certificate. Don't put this off until it's too late. Fill out the application blank printed elsewhere in this issue of Camera! and mail it with your check today to 1005 Hollingsworth Building, Los Angeles.

Every Day, in Every Way, It's a Fine Day in Some Way

Ernst Lubitsch, the German cinema genius, who is just now in the midst of preparations to direct Mary Pickford in "Faust," refuses to "knock" American motion pictures in any way. But it's a good guess that he does not give a rap for French movies.

Here's a chance for the scandal-mongers to misrepresent Hollywood again: Mrs. Hollywood of Los Angeles is seeking a divorce from William Ray Hollywood whom she accuses of deserting her ten times. Now there's a choice morsel to "chew on" so as to make it appear as one more mark against the very name of Hollywood!

Mary and Doug join hands in approving any legitimate plan which will make life more pleasant for the "extras." Incidentally they give employment to as many of these strugglers as anyone. However, what the average, conscientious "extra" wants to do is to work harder in order to earn more money and make more progress towards the goal of fame. Hence it seems probable they desire having the tasks in the way of lucrative engagements increased instead of facilitated.

Hollywood has a gay Montmartre Cafe now, but sh! Don't let the out-of-town papers, including the Movie Weekly of New York, know, because a cafe offers a fine field for "cooking up something" unsavory.

Someone suggests a law requiring that the censors be censored. Then who will censor the ones who censor the censors?

Every time there's a murder anywhere in California, the newspapers seem dissatisfied until they can link some film actor up with it even though it soon develops, as a very general rule, that the film actor involved in the affair had served as a "super" in one picture and that he did not have a single thing to do with the murder anyway. Verily, yellow journalism is THE green-eyed monster.

According to newspaper reports, several audiences cheered two old "Fatty" Arbuckle two-reelers in New York one day this week. However, a later audience "sorter" jeered them. Oh well, that's life—cheers and jeers.

They have fixed it so you cannot get your beer any more, but it's still fixed so a bier will get you in the end.

New York is being Romeo-and-Julieted to distraction this season. Already two productions of the Shakespearean romance have been presented, one with Ethel Barrymore as Juliet and the other with Jane Cowl in the role. Now Elsie Ferguson, the favorite of legions of film fans, will have her fling at the part with Walter Hampden serving as her Romeo. All we hope is that Bull Montana won't try to do the same thing.

Antonio Moreno says he used to be a bull-fighter in Spain, which reminds us that Rodolph Valentino used to be a bull-fighter in pictures, too.

Jackie Coogan will be obliged to pay $260,720 of that $500,000 Metro gave him to the United States government as income tax. So all is not gold that flitters (away) after all.

Under the urge of Irving G. Thalberg, director-general at Universal City, all photoplayers engaged there will help boost the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition by stamping an advertising catch-line on each piece of fan mail sent out henceforth until next June. This is manifold as a capital idea inasmuch as it will tend to attract visitors with their capital to the film capital which will be the capital place to be during this great event.

"Wethinks" the press is making too much out of the story to the effect that the popular actor, Walter Long, was once a butcher, since he really followed this trade only a very short time. Anyway, Walter cuts a wide enough swath as a brilliant photoplayer to justify forgetting the few steaks he cut so long ago.

There is an unusual influx of successful stage folk into screenland. Evidently it is becoming more widely known than ever that the silence of the cinema is golden and that a record-breaking harvest time is at hand.

It is announced the women of Kansas City will boycott theatres showing Arbuckle films. Such a boycott promises to leave all the seats to the boys.

A timely ideal for everyone in every motion picture enterprise is to give everyone else a square deal.

Here's hoping the old habit of going from one extreme to another will not occur in the case of the currently popular costume pictures, for any such going—well, the other extreme is stark nudity.

Note This Contrast

Between Your Industry and Another Much Like It

THERE are marked similarities between the motion picture industry and the publishing business. They are too obvious to need comment.

There are differences, too, but one is particularly pronounced.

The older of the two industries, the publishing business, has discovered a fact which the motion picture industry is just beginning to discover.

Publishers could not hope to succeed if they employed a staff of five or six authors to produce all their stories.

Their sales would fall off almost immediately, because it is impossible for five or six authors to provide the fresh viewpoints, the varied interests which assure the large and unwavering audience necessary to successful publishing.

Yet motion picture producers attempt to accomplish what publishers know can not be done.

As a result they find their audiences drifting away. They wonder why former enthusiasts become critical and uninterested.

There is but one explanation.

The public is as desirous of seeing new and fresh pictures—pictures true to life, sane, wholesome, but varied—as it is of reading stories with a wide range of appeal.

Here's another point of dissimilarity between publishers and motion picture producers. Publishers do not pick out stage plays and motion pictures to adapt for novels and short stories.

Yet the motion picture industry is using thousands of stories, written for other mediums, and adapted by "main strength" in many cases to fit pictures.

Perhaps these practices were necessary years ago. But there is no cause for the persistence of these antiquated methods.

There are available original stories ably written for the screen. They picture life from many viewpoints. They are new, fresh, intriguing.

We can provide all the types of stories worthy of your thought.

Our representative will gladly talk with you relative to these scenarios which we have on hand.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIFORNIA

Behold! Hollywood, Home of Reincarnated Celebrities of Ancient Times!

Grecian Actor-theosophist Seeks to Prove that Socrates, Euripides, Democritus, Epicurus, Demosthenes and Other Luminaries Have Come Back to "a Paradise on Earth" in Southern California Film Colony.

CHARLIE Chaplin is only the modern cognomen which has been hooked onto Democritus in the processes of "evolving his way down through the centuries." It is one and the same fellow, performing now substantially the same service for mankind as he did back in the year 300 B. C.

Euripides has returned to the human flesh and is as active as a tragedian as he ever was, being known the world over as Lon Chaney, the great character actor of the moving picture screen, and he does all of his interpreting of the fine dramatic art right in Hollywood and environs.

Demosthenes, in his 1922 model of physical being, has just been defeated in his attempts to become governor of the state of California, and, under his present-day name of Thomas Lee Woolwine, he is the same great orator of old.

Socrates is the one ancient master who, upon returning to this mundane sphere, failed to embrace modern ideas in their entirety and he mingles with his fellow-man in "a manner and an appearance" such as inspires others to brand him as "peculiar." Known only as Peter the hermit, his daily life is somewhat a mystery to most of the residents of the film colony, but he is recognized as a philosopher with almost super-natural powers. In fact, he is accredited with having cured the hopelessly ill through the inculcating of confidence in his philosophical logic. Wherein he clings tenaciously to his olden ideas is particularly in the matter of personal appearance. His hair is long, hanging around his shoulders, and he never wears a hat. Nor do shoes ever grace his feet. He is never without a walking staff and altogether he is such a picturesque character that no one who glimpses him will ever forget him.

Quite unlike Socrates in old-fashioned proclivities, Sophocles has yielded to all the forces of change Father Time decrees, and, he is one of the most modern of all our notables of this decade as anyone who knows anything about Cecil DeMille and who may believe in reincarnation will realize. Yet, Sophocles retains all of his time-honored talents as a dramatist and it is only the public demands for lighter, more optimistic drama that causes him to refrain from writing the incomparable tragic drama of which he is capable. It is predicted that as soon as he tires of catering to the masses and the classes, he will concentrate all of his mental energies on surpassing the real works of his ancient past.

And all of these are only a few of the mighty men of glorious days long bygone who have wandered into Southern California to dwell in close proximity with each other, both in point of the time and the place. This and the foregoing assertions are made by George Rigas, the famous Grecian actor, who divides his time between serving as an exponent of the dramatic art and delving into theosophy, evolution and kindred sciences, both occult and "open-to-the-public."

The assertions themselves would not command much attention if it were not for the ingeniously scientific manner in which this same George Rigas proceeds to prove his points. Forsooth, no one who discusses the subject with him can gainsay the fact that he can convince most any one on his contentions as far-fetched as they seem at first thought. The intriguing part of it is the proof he offers to make it undeniable that Charlie Chaplin is Democritus and that Thomas Lee Woolwine, at present the District Attorney for Los Angeles County, is Demosthenes without either realizing it! This lack of self-consciousness is accounted for by the mystic evolution of age, which is not today what it was yesteryear, according to the Rigas version.

It is a historical fact that biographers agree Democritus was called "the laughing philosopher," because he laughed at the follies of mankind. Charlie Chaplin's philosophy of life is identically the same thing excepting he indulges in his mirth in such an ingratiating way as to inspire the countless millions of people everywhere to laugh with him at the same follies! "Had that thought ever occurred to you?" Rigas asked the writer. No, it had not. But hearken ye further—

Historians agree that Democritus resigned his high office at the head of public affairs because he was indignant at the follies of Aberites and retired to solitude to devote himself exclusively to his philosophical studies, appearing before his fellows very seldom thereafter. How many people know that Charlie Chaplin has done the very same thing? Indignant at the efforts to dictate to him as to how he should promulgate his philosophy-teaching art on the screen by certain officials of a certain film-releasing concern which held a contract over him, he retired to seclusion and refused to make more comedies for them for a period of something like a year. He took the high ground that he was a public servant and should be free to serve as his sense of judgment dictated. Under the modern laws it was impossible for him to remain inactive, professionally, for he was very active in his studio during that year, and hence he was obliged to finish his contract with some modifications in order to be free to do the things he wanted to do in the future.

Chaplin is one of the most diligent and most profound students in all movieland. He is today regarded as an advanced thinker just as Democritus was in his day. The latter caused something of a furore among the Greek populace some time around the 500 B. C. period by claiming the discovery of an infinite number of invisible and indivisible bodies or atoms, which differ from one another in form, position and arrangement, and which have a primary motion such as brings them into contact, and forms innumerable combinations, the result of which is seen in the productions and phenomena of nature. In this way the universe was created fortuitously, without the interposition of a First Cause. The eternal existence of atoms (of matter in general) he inferred from the consideration that time could be conceived only as

Big Figures, Censors and Rumors

By RAY H. LEEK

This is the season of the year when picture producers talk in big figures. Annual budgets, programs for the new year and sums that stretch themselves out into unbelievably long lines of ciphers seem to go hand in hand.

But once in a while one finds a fact of unusual significance in these statistical stories. Such is the item just published in Los Angeles newspapers setting forth that J. G. Bachmann, treasurer for both the Al Lichtman and Preferred Pictures Corporation, has arrived here with an appropriation of $7,500,000 to be expended in the production activities of the latter company during the coming twelve months.

Even this statement might not be particularly startling but for the fact that it involves the activities of an independent picture producer. Recently there have been numerous stories relating the difficulties of independents in obtaining "first runs" in the big theatres in the key cities. "The trust," it was said, had obtained a strangle hold on the exhibiting end of the industry and was shutting out the independent, to the detriment of both the small producer and the public.

"Just let the censor try writing one himself and then he won't be so careless with his 'don'ts.'"

That has been the cry of the harrassed screen writer since authority to cramp his style was vested in censors years ago. And now a censor has made good on the challenge of the author. Royal A. Baker, of Detroit, has written a story which will be produced as an all-star picture in the near future, under the title, "Frivolity, or When a Woman Reaches Forty."

A glimpse of advance copies of Mr. Baker's story indicates that the censor-author has fooled the writers. For he has shown that a writer can get all the thrills so necessary to a successful screen production into a story without violating any of the well-known censorious "don'ts." It remains to be seen how Mr. Baker's brother uplifters will accept his promising effort.

Who will go around the world with Doug and Mary? The announced intention of the two stars to make a round-the-world trip with a circle of, say, fifty or one hundred friends, has caused more than a passing ripple in picture circles. It is expected that the ship—chartered for the purpose of encircling the globe—will bear a passenger list that will look like a Who's Who of the movies.

What will the players do abroad? Will some enterprising foreigner attempt an unprecedented all-star picture? Until Doug and Mary decide to answer these questions themselves numerous well-known stars who are hoping for an invitation to make the historic trip will continue to hope.

Katherine MacDonald still heads the army of stars who must carbon copy their denials of engagements to be married. For the most beautiful player on the screen would be the most married woman in the world if even a small percentage of the reports of her engagements came true.

A New Classical Venice Is Arising in California

There Is the Element of the Startling in Revelations of the Work of a Great Sculptor Now Concentrating His Artistic Talents in the Popular Beach City, and His Praise of Motion Pictures Is Encouraging.

It is a safe venture to guess that very few people have the slightest idea of the strong possibility of California ever having a Venice the equal of or superior to the Venice of Italy from an artistic standpoint. A little delving into the situation obtaining at this well-known and popular beach resort reveals an astonishing movement towards the achieving of unprecedented artistic heights in the processes of so-called ordinary municipal beautifying improvements. That the development of the cinema as a fine art has tended to encourage a general installation and expansion of various fine arts in Southern California seems a foregone conclusion. The sensational artistic triumphs of various ambitious photoplays undoubtedly has had the effect of attracting many masters of other forms of art to the locale in which the photoplays are so generally known to be made, and, explicitly, the world-wide distribution of these screen classics has filled the air with the conceding knowledge of the art possibilities of this locale literally and actually.

The Union Polytechnic High School of Venice, California, for instance, will conjure up in the minds of people merely thoughts of an institution of learning dealing with subjects a trifle higher in the scale of learning than the common variety of school. The conjecture will be incorrect for, not only is this little city, set upon the far edge of the United States where the waters of the broad Pacific Ocean ebb and flow at her very feet, the namesake of that most romantic of Italian cities but her prototype in various ways. The Venice Union Polytechnic High School and its art instruction is an excellent sample of the likeness of Venice, Italy, and Venice, Cal.

In a recent contest this school captured first honors for having the best kept and most artistic high school campus in Southern California. And it is a thing of beauty. One eminent critic, S. Fred Hogue of Los Angeles, recently said: "Venice is a city of romance. When I view it in the sunset glow from the heights to the east, it brings to my mind the materialization of the dream of an artist. The citizens draw their inspiration from the landscape, the sky and the sea; and it is not by mere chance that the Venice Union Polytechnic High School resembles less a public educational institution than an art museum.

"It was so that art was taught in Athens; and I shall be sadly disappointed if some of the names now enrolled on the high school register do not find a place 20 years hence in the list of famous American painters, musicians and sculptors.

"At the Venice High School are pupils imbued with a love of the beautiful, studios where they can learn the technique of the fine arts, and an instructor who teaches alike by precept and example, for he is one of the first among California sculptors.

"Three things are necessary to make an artist; that rare germ called genius in the breast of the pupil, an environment of the beautiful in nature, and a master. In the studios of the Venice High School I found them all."

Harry F. Winebrenner is art instructor of the Venice High School and designer of the numerous pieces of statuary and urns that decorate the campus, which were instrumental in bringing the coveted contest award. They include one massive group that would be a credit to any art institute. Mr. Winebrenner is a graduate of the Chicago Art Institute, and secured a scholarship in the British Academy of Rome. Before becoming affiliated with the Venice institution he had done some praiseworthy work. A life-sized statue of Ruth Muskrat, a noted Cherokee Indian, has attracted national attention and commendation by the severest critics.

The group referred to above is the center of a beautiful fountain. The central figure is posed with feet resting on a ball, supported by a wave rising from a mammoth seashell. This figure has been termed a "modern Psyche," and appears to be standing on tiptoe, with head thrown back, arms stretching backward and down until the finger-tips appear to find support on the uppermost curl of the wave. The lightly draped bust and torso are thrust slightly forward and the impression is that Psyche is gazing through the purple mountains in the distance. Crouched at her feet is the figure of a robust youth—"The Manual Arts"—a typification of a combination of mental and physical efficiency. At the back of the figure sits a girl, turning the pages of a book—"Knowledge"—a study in concentration. The whole is a most satisfying sight, a monument to the master, to his pupils and to the forethought of the citizens of Venice—an infant among cities, being but 15 years old and with a population of scarce 15,000—in securing such a talented instructor and being willing to support such an institution.

The work on this group and on the other smaller pieces scattered around the campus and through the school building are the work of Mr. Winebrenner and his pupils of the art department. According to the head of the department of art "this is merely the initial step and the most difficult work has been accomplished—the initiation. The future holds bright promise. Bright from the standpoint of an instructor and bright from the standpoint of the community, for a knowledge of art and a love for the artistic is bound to produce a better citizenry."

Another group under way will be placed in the surf directly off the famous Venice pier, consisting of a number of sea nymphs at play on the crest of a breaker. This, as yet, is in the rough and will not be completed until the next school year.

It should hardly be necessary to state that the pupils are most enthusiastic over their art instruction, and such enthusiasm cannot fail to develop ability and uncover talent.

Mr. Winebrenner is among those capable judges magnanimous enough to give the motion picture industry full credit for the strides it has made as well as for the influence it has wielded in inspiring just such ideas as those which now seem to be taking form to make the Venice of California a second Venice of Italy. Recently he voluntarily made a thorough-going investigation of the artistic side of picture-making and he issued the following statement after becoming familiar with the real work now being done to enhance the art values of photoplays:

"The great need in education today is the development of beauty in art as a means to human happiness. The schools and colleges everywhere are stressing science to the detriment of aesthetic subjects. Science does not necessarily promote human happiness. An appreciation of the truly beautiful in art, in the schools, and in the motion picture industry will tend to quiet human restlessness and increase happiness which is the greatest social problem of today.

"When I was told that Professor Armstrong was at the head of the research and advisory department of the Cinema Mercantile Co., which concern supplies art for films, I was so interested that I made a visit to their new library. This library represents a lifetime work of Professor Armstrong. His collection represents gems of real art backed up by real aesthetic drawings, pictorial compositions, and harmony of colors, which is the fundamental principal back of all great art.

"I had no idea that the motion pictures had instituted anything so splendid. I find that the movement for better pictures is really a serious undertaking and I congratulate Professor Armstrong and the Cinema Mercantile Co., on bringing true art to the screen as an enterprising fundement.

"These old pictures are indeed illuminating; verbal descriptions of Queen Elizabeth cannot compare with the vivid pictorial representations of the artists of her day. Interpretation of the classics demand authentic settings if the picture approaches a classic, and that is what the research of Professor Armstrong can do with its unsurpassable collection of original drawings and etchings.

"A group of Professor Armstrongs' original prints and etchings can be seen in the new art gallery of the Venice Polytechnic High School. The Venice Art Gallery is showing the drawings and sketches of Douglas Fairbanks' 'Robinhood' by Edward Langley from January 8th to 20th, 1923.

THE SILENT TREND

Gloria Swanson in adventure romance, replete with melo-dramatic intrigue and hot Latin temperament, all with an attractive South American back-ground. This is the bill-of-fare in this Paramount star's latest starring vehicle, "My American Wife." As a Kentucky girl of considerable vim, Miss Swanson is somewhat different in this picture. She does not play her part in her usual slow tempo and she probably will be accused of not being quite so exotic as is her wont. We think it is to her credit that she is more like the American heroine in this release and she seems far more consistent. She is most fortunate in having a supporting cast par excellence: a cast the members of which carry big shares of the burdens in making this a really successful entertainment. Especially deserving of praise is Walter Long, who, despite the fact that he has a small part, threatens "to steal the picture," as they say in the parlance of the film world. Mr. Long is one of those sterling actors who can always be depended upon to give a brilliant performance and he is one of the few who knows how to make his histrionic work so outstanding that it is remembered above the efforts of stars although his contribution may be only a bit. Antonio Moreno as a spirited Latin hero is happily cast and he gives a faultless characterization. Eric Mayne, another one of those seasoned actors who never falls below a high standard of true artistry, makes an unforgettable impression while Josef Swickard and Edythe Chapman are excellent. Jacques D'Auray and Geno Corrado also deserve special mention. In fact, this is well-nigh a perfect cast, one which will help prodigiously to make the general public like "My American Wife."

Those who like an honest-to-goodness red-blooded story, filled to the brim with exciting sea adventure, no doubt will be entirely satisfied with "All the Brothers Were Valiant," a late Metro special. It is a happy combination of a good story and most divertingly clever characterizations. Besides, there is an extra added attraction in the form of an extraordinary scenic feature—an actual animated photographing of a school of real whales befitting the situation in which they are used. Harpoons are hurled into the mammoth bodies of several of the finny giants and to cap the climax a daring stunt man manages to leap onto the back of one, sending a spear to a vital spot amidst the most terrific swishing of huge "whale tails" and the consequent swirling of great waves of the disturbed ocean. It makes no difference how these "shots" were obtained, for they are none the less remarkable even though they might have been faked in part. Right now we would like to predict that "All the Brothers Were Valiant" is going to wield a direct influence to bring onto the screen a veritable tidal wave of sea stories which will sweep aside the avalanche of society pictures which have been having their inning. Irvin V. Willat has achieved much in his directing of this photoplay and he has succeeded in inspiring several brilliant photoplayers to reach a high pitch of dramatic enthusiasm in carrying forward action of importance. Especially worthy of praise are Lon Chaney and William V. Mong, two of the screen's greatest and most versatile character men. It is a joy to watch them live the characters they portray so adeptly. Malcolm McGregor as a young whaling skipper is convincing and

Just how far wrong a producer can go in selecting his featured players on a strictly merit basis is given eloquent demonstration in the case of "Hearts Aflame." The one artist to whom the picture belongs is Craig Ward, the leading man, and yet he is not even mentioned in the daily newspaper advertising although four or five others are displayed prominently. The old tendency of giving the credit to players known as "big names" to the exclusion of those who do the best work is bound to wane since the American public is interested in the spirit of watching the best man win in all lines of endeavor. Some day producers will learn that good acting has more box-office value than merely a "big name."

The public sentiment against keeping the ban on Sunday movie shows seems to be growing rapidly. Scarcely a week goes by without some small town breaking into print by making known its decision to eliminate extreme "blue laws." Wabash, Indiana, is the latest acquisition to the ranks of wide-open cities. The mayor announces he has discovered the populace does not want shows closed on Sunday and therefore he has granted his permission for them to open again.

The cinema zephyrs all blow in Southern California's direction more than ever. The initiative of Selznick in moving its entire distributing organization to Los Angeles and closing its New York offices completely and the coming to this man's town of a second big distributing company seems to be the start of an inevitable centralization of all film activities right here.

Independent production activities are on the upward bound. In fact, the launching of such units is enjoying an unprecedented run just now. It all means keener competition, which is sure to resolve into being a great spur to the importance of everyone making better pictures. Without plenty of independents the whole film situation would be hopeless.

offers one more proof of his consummate skill as a make-believe artist. Robert McKim maintains his reputation as a faithful delineator of character while William Orlamond deserves approval. Billie Dove and Shannon Day, the representatives of the gentler sex in the story, are satisfactory. In conclusion, it is worthy of citation that exhibitors will be justified in billing this one as different. Good business should result since the American public is manifesting more avidity than ever in its quest for the different.

"The Power of a Lie" rings true and it has the power of a first-class box-office attraction. Here is one of those smaller pictures with an impressive bigness in its natural human note. It serves a useful purpose in convincing most anyone of the inadvisability of being guilty of circulating even a seemingly harmless prevarication, showing as it does that mountains of trouble can be caused by a tiny mole-hill of untruth. The plot is carefully handled under a steady directing hand, that of George Archainbaud, who has done a good job of it keeping realism to the foreground. So far as the cast is concerned, David Torrence as the husband in the case stands out most memorably of all. Mr. Torrence is one of those highly capable actors who never overlooks a chance to make his part convincing and this is not the first time he has displayed histrionic ability which enhances story values, for as Elias Graves in support of Mary Pickford in her new "Tess of the Storm Country," he offers one of the exceptional characterizations which won special mention as one of the high spots of dramatic achievement during the year of 1922. Earl Metcalf, Mabel Julienne Scott, June Elvidge and Maude George all arise to their opportunities.

One thing B. P. Schulberg can be sure of, the title of Katherine MacDonald's latest starring vehicle, "Money, Money, Money," is a rich one! Besides it is far from being a poor picture! Forsooth, it is one of the best of recent times. The title though is the happiest thought of all since it impresses with such triple force one of the most magic of American words and suggests one of the constantly most interesting of all subjects with every mortal. In addition to being a story that engrosses, it is one of those well-directed productions, thanks to Tom Forman, who is making long strides towards the goal of directorial greatness. In Miss MacDonald it has a beautiful star at her most beautiful. Above all, it is a film of the variety which will prove one of the powerful antidotes to poisonous censorship propaganda since it is scrupulously clean and delightfully wholesome. Even though the acting might not always be quite up to the standard, the story is of such calibre and presented in such a way as to hold the uppermost position in the average mind.

A new screen hero has been welcomed cordially into the fold. His name is Craig Ward and he is one of the best bets to make an advent into the silent drama for several moons, according to several high authorities. His brilliant performance in Reginald Barker's production of "Heart's Aflame," now current, has aroused both the theatre-goers and critics to a high pitch of enthusiasm. The Los Angeles Times is generally given credit for hitting the nail on the head when it declares that "Craig Ward grows on you." This sterling actor possesses that elusive something which intrigues. He shows a spark of genius in the easy grace with which he lives the character he is interpreting and the accurate regard he shows for dramatic proportions and admirable repression. The Los Angeles Evening Express credits him with being excellent and therein lies another revelation, for it happens Mr. Ward is an excellent gentleman, sincere and serious. It is the sincere and serious artist for which there is a most pronounced need. It is not a very wild prediction, therefore, to include Mr. Ward's name in the list of future-greats in the realm of filmdom.

WALLY REID'S DEATH IS SIGNAL FOR WAR TO BRING DEATH PENALTY ON DRUG RING

As the populace of the Hollywood film colony recovers from the severe shock of the unexpected announcement of the death of Wallace Reid, one of the foremost stars of all screen history, there is evidence of an augmented determination in all quarters to renew the present war on the vicious drug ring with even a greater zeal than ever before with the set purpose of destroying it at any cost. The fact that Mr. Reid's untimely demise is due directly to the machinations of dope peddlers, employed by monsters called men who are much higher up, has had a most revolting effect and there is open demands for such summary action as will insure a complete success of the movement to obliterate this illicit traffic. There are even demands for legislation such as will enact laws imposing the death penalty upon any man or woman found guilty of participating in any way in the sale and distribution of drugs to unfortunate addicts. Incarceration in a state prison for a brief term of years is regarded by many as inadequate as a staying hand to society's brazen foes who dare flout every human interest in plying their dastardly trade.

According to various statements made in recent times by members of the late Mr. Reid's family, dope peddlers harassed him day and night when it became generally known that he was using drugs. All manner of persuasion and all possible alertness failed to keep these vultures from pouncing upon their prey, and, of course, once a slave to narcotics, the popular star was powerless to combat the deplores of his health and happiness since the craving had gained the upper hand over his natural desires. Considered in a strictly logical light, every man or woman who sold him drugs was directly responsible for his death and can be classed as a murderer. Therefore, those who still believe in capital punishment argue that it is a fallacious and dangerous policy to concede such special consideration as mere prison terms to those found guilty of dealing in drugs unlawfully in any way.

It will be everlastingly his glory that Wallace Reid manfully and of his own volition resolved to free himself from the habit and the courageous battle he waged to retain the breath of life without the aid of such artificial means deserves unlimited admiration. That he died in his noble attempt makes him a martyr to the cause of the now universal protest against a further supine yielding to the presence of the drug evil as a thing immune to riddance. All signs indicate this tragic result of the unbridled operations of the ring controlling the narcotic traffic will arouse the whole people to such an extent as to bring about a clean-up campaign which will leave none of the enemies to society at liberty to further spread woe and death. It is felt the beloved Wallie Reid will not have died in vain if he has thus served to give impetus to a war which will result in better conditions such as will spare others of the present and future generations from the villainous encroachments of the hell-bent drug octopus.

FAIR EXTRAS SACRIFICE TO BOOST EXPOSITION

An example of loyalty worthy of emulation on the part of all who really have the welfare of the motion picture industry at heart is furnished by four young women, ranking as "extras," who have abandoned temporarily their struggles to win fame and fortune as screen artists in order to devote their whole time to co-operating in important work coincident to the gigantic preparations for the forthcoming American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. These fair loyalists are: Milicent Hogg, Margaret Scott, Ruth Owen and Lucile Franklin and they constitute a special sales squad operating under the supervision of E. F. von Yeast, director of sales for the Exposition, in the personal campaign to sell the patron's certificates for the opening of the great event to people within the industry. These young women receive no commissions of any sort for their work and each is paid a salary considerably less than she is capable of earning as an "extra." It is entirely a display of motion picture patriotism with all of them and consequently they are making enviable records in the matter of helping

MAX LINDER FALLS 1000 FEET IN ALPS CREVASSE AND HOVERS NEAR DEATH

ADMIRAL SEES "SHOOTING" OF FILM

After making a tour of various motion picture studios in Hollywood and witnessing the actual "shooting" of scenes for the films Wednesday, Admiral Edward Eberle, commander of the Pacific fleet of the United States Navy, expressed himself most enthusiastically over the possibilities of the constantly increasing usefulness of pictures as a public benefactor.

"The motion picture is the greatest educational instrument and medium in existence today and in years to come children will be taught many studies almost exclusively with the use of films," the admiral said. "Both the army and navy will surely make more and more use of motion pictures for various purposes as time goes on."

Craig Ward, screen star, hero of the sensational photoplay triumph, "Hearts Aflame," served as guiding escort to the admiral and his party and started their sight-seeing trip auspiciously by taking them to the Pickford-Fairbanks studios, where Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks entertained most cordially.

Next Mr. Ward escorted the distinguished navy chief to the Lasky studios, where Adam Hull Shirk acted as official host. After watching the filming of several productions there, they went to the United studios to be guests of the Selznick company. The day was concluded at Universal City, where "Curley" Stecker "starred" by offering an impromptu exhibition with his troupe of lions.

"It was a most enlightening trip and convinced me more than ever that this is one of our nation's foremost industries," Admiral Eberle declared.

to insure the complete success of the Exposition by personally selling certificates to the many who need such a solicit to be reminded of the combination of duty and pleasure involved in thus supporting the enterprise.

While on a farewell pleasure trip in the Swiss Alps prior to departing from Europe for Hollywood, where he has arranged to resume his picture-making activities, Max Linder, France's premier cinema star and one of the world's foremost screen comedians, was overwhelmed by an avalanche of ice and snow which swept over a precipice into a crevasse one thousand feet below. Unconscious, he remained in this precarious position for several hours before his dog, which had escaped the onrush, attracted mountaineers by its barking.

When, after great difficulty, Mr. Linder was rescued with the aid of ropes and he was removed to a hospital in Lausanne, the attending physicians thought at first the actor's neck was broken but X-ray examination revealed the vertebrae as uninjured, although the muscles and tendons were dangerously twisted and caused the patient most excruciating pain.

The first cable despatch received in Hollywood indicated that the doctors entertained very slight hope for saving Mr. Linder's life and stated that his neck had been broken. Consequently, his many friends were shocked immeasurably. However, a second cablegram the following day announced that although he continued in a critical condition, it had been ascertained definitely that his neck was not broken. However, both of the star's arms were fractured and he sustained serious internal injuries, the outcome of which is still in grave doubt.

It had been Mr. Linder's plan to arrive in Los Angeles about January 26th in order to get his next production under way by the middle of February. Now it is uncertain as to when he will be able to travel. He has been in France for several months, having gone there with the idea of making a picture. However, inadequate studio facilities and unsettled political conditions precluded the possibility of his carrying out his plans, and he had made all arrangements to return to the Southern California field when the unfortunate accident occurred.

Little Philippe de Lacey has been cast to play the leading child role in the current Douglas McLean picture.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Some of This Week's Film News You May Have Overlooked.

Lester Cuneo has just finished "The Zero Hour."

King Vidor's first production under the Goldwyn banner will be "Three Wise Fools."

William Fox has engaged Eva Novak to play opposite William Russell in that star's next vehicle.

Douglas MacLean's next starring vehicle, "Going Up," was started this week at the Hollywood Studios. Incidentally, this is Doug's first independent production.

Warner Brothers will produce "David Copperfield," "Little Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr.," in which Wesley Barry will be starred.

"The White Frontier," the First National feature production starring Dorothy Phillips, has been changed to "Slander the Woman." Allan Holubar is directing.

Paramount stars are resting these days, Agnes Ayres, Betty Compson, Jacqueline Logan, Pola Negri, Julia Faye, Jack Holt, Walter Hiers and George Fawcett are all between pictures.

That Jack Dempsey, king of heavyweight boxers, has signed a contract to star in a feature production for Robertson-Cole, which will be filmed in New York, is the latest report on the Big Fellow.

"Too Many Lovers," Baby Peggy's latest special Century production, is finished. This picture, which has Joe Moore, Edna Gregory and Billy Franey in the cast, also used all the boys Neilan used for his "Penrod."

Mr. and Mrs. Perley Poore Sheehan, were recent dinner hosts to Thomas Patten, western representative for Will H. Hays, and Mrs. Patten, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eytan and Irving Thalberg, Director General of Universal.

William H. Clifford, veteran director and author, has been engaged to direct the initial Sanford production, "Power." An all-star cast including Pat O'Malley, Cleo Madison, Otto Lederer and others, has been selected.

Zane Grey, popular American novelist, has signed a contract with Famous Players-Lasky, thus giving that concern exclusive screen rights to his current and future work. Filming will be started soon on the screen version of his story, "To The Last Man."

Bayard Vellier, famous playwright, has been added to the editorial staff of the Cosmopolitan Corporation. Mr. Vellier's best successes were "Within the Law," and "The Thirteenth Chair."

According to present plans, Paramount's notable re-production of "The Cheat" will be started January 29th, as a George Fitzmaurice production, starring Pola Negri with Jack Holt featured and Charles de Roche in support.

Actual filming of "Tea With a Kick," Halperin Productions' latest story based on prohibition, will start this week at the Fine Arts studios. Erle Kenton, formerly director of Mack Sennett comedies, has been engaged to handle the megaphone.

"The Tinsel Harvest," the first feature of a series of six productions to be produced by the Regal Pictures Corporation, has just gotten under the course of production. Madge Bellamy will be starred and John Bowers will head a strong supporting cast.

Upon the completion of "Grumpy," William de Mille's latest Paramount production, Bertram Johns, who plays in this picture, will have worked in thirty-one Paramount pictures, ten of which were filmed under the direction of Mr. de Mille.

The town of Englewood, Kansas, boasting a population of 750 inhabitants, made known its decision to favor Fatty Arbuckle's come-back by presenting a petition to that effect to the local newspaper. Every person in the village capable of writing a signature signed the petition.

Gale Henry, who for three years was star and producer of her own comedies, has been cast for one of the principal roles in "Knighthood in Hollywood," a comedy-drama being produced by Fred Caldwell at the Fine Arts studios. Vic Potel, another well-known funster, is also in the cast.

Hobart Bosworth has completed the continuity of "The Silent Skipper" from the original story by E. C. Maxwell and Harry E. Dunham and plans to produce the virile tale of the Gloucester fisher-folk, following the production of "The Blood Ship" by Norman Springer, the latter of which Conan Doyle says, "Is the best sea story ever written, which only Hobart Bosworth can transpose to the screen."

Betty Blythe is now working on her third Whitman Bennett production "The Garden of Desire." An eminent cast supports her, in which Will Carleton is leading man, while Tyrone Power is also cast in a prominent role.

Latest rumors from Chicago have it that Muriel McCormick, daughter of Harold F. McCormick, wealthy Harvester magnate, and grand-daughter of John D. Rockefeller, oil king, will not enter the motion picture field as previously reported, but will devote her time to the legitimate stage.

Blanche Sweet will play the title role of Marshall Neilan's production, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which will be in production within the next six weeks. Various scenes of the picture have already been filmed in England and will be developed at the Goldwyn studios, where the picture will be made.

Charlie Chauvel, Australian actor, has lately left the comedy field for drama. Mr. Chauvel played in "Captain Fly-By-Night," after which he joined "Snowy" Baker's Australian act. He has since been playing a character role in "His Last Race," a Phil Goldstone production featuring Baker.

Jess Robbins is preparing to start work within the next two weeks on a new comedy-drama for Vitagraph release. His latest picture, "A Front Page Story," is winning favorable criticism from reviewers of the country and considerable praise has been given Edward Everett Horton for his brilliant work as the star.

Charlie Chaplin will receive $10,000 and ten percent royalty on a phonograph record he will make for one of the largest concerns in the business. It has not been announced just what Charlie will do, but it is understood he is equally accomplished at the violin, piano and cello, as well as being exceedingly proficient in various European dialects.

Agnes Ayres will return soon from a short vacation trip and is scheduled to start her new Paramount picture, "Contraband," on January 22nd under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. "Contraband" is from a magazine story by Clarence Buddington Kelland, and is being adapted by Albert Shelby LeVino. It is said to be filled with action and with an interesting set of characters, while the romantic interest is strong.

Joseph M. Schenck has engaged two prominent directors, Sidney Franklin and Vic Heerman, and both will direct Constance Talmadge in her next starring vehicle. Mr. Franklin directed Norma Talmadge in "Smiling Through" and Constance in "East is West."

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," starring Mary Miles Minter, with Antonio Moreno in support, is progressing towards conclusion, and it is believed will be one of the most pleasing Paramount offerings of the year. It is an adaptation by Will M. Ritchey of the story by John Fox, Jr. and the play by Eugene Walter and is directed by Charles Maigne.

Marie Prevost denies the rumor that she is engaged or ever intends to marry Kenneth Harlan. According to Miss Prevost only a strong bond of friendship exists between them, and that this certainly does not imply an "engagement." Miss Prevost and Harlan play the leading roles in the Warner Brothers picturization of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned."

Rodolph Valentino has asked the courts to prevent his former wife, Jean Acker, from using the name of Valentino. It appears that both his former wife and his present one, Natacha Rambova, have a vaudeville act in preparation, and that both are desirous of billing themselves as "Mrs. Rodolph Valentino." Wife No. 2 resents sharing Rodolph's popular name with his former spouse, hence the lawsuit.

Irving G. Thalberg, director-general at Universal City, has assigned Robert F. Hill, director of "Robinson Crusoe," "The Radio King" and "Around the World in Eighteen Days," to direct a new chapter play of the business game starring William Desmond, the hero of the last named serial. The chapter play scenario department under Robert Dillon has prepared a story of tremendous dramatic power.

Work was started last Monday on "The Rustle of Silk," Herbert Brenon's first production for Paramount, in which Betty Compson and Conway Tearle will be featured and which was adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's novel by Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere. In addition to being published in book form, this story also ran as a serial and achieved great popularity. It is full of romance and possesses a certain naive quality so far as the feminine leading role is concerned.

MOVIES ON TRAIN PROVE BIG SUCCESS

Railway passenger service enterprise, according to accounts printed in Illinois and St. Louis newspapers, has proved the utility of free motion picture shows aboard limited trains and in terminal waiting rooms. Credit is given to the Chicago & Alton Company for bringing the initial experiment to a successful issue. Pathe quotes direct reports to the same effect—the C. & A. screen program shown in a dining car of a limited Chicago-St. Louis train on December 12 consisting entirely of Pathe pictures.

George J. Charlton, veteran passenger traffic manager of the C. & A., is on record as "father of the dining car movie show." He was in charge of this original experiment, assisted by other officials of the road. The dining car projector was operated by A. B. Craven of the DeVry Corporation. It was specially constructed to overcome vibration, regardless of rough tracks or rolling waves.

Referring to the train being late at Springfield, the Illinois State Journal's account, printed on Dec. 13, said: "But the passengers were not worried. The first railroad movie show had been in operation in the dining car, and the passengers had been enjoying the novelty of a complete screen program—Harold Lloyd in 'Grandma's Boy,' Aesop's Fables, the animated cartoon—the whole works minus advertisements of coming releases and the tailoring establishments. They didn't care whether they ever got to St. Louis."

The arrangements for the show were admirably simple. Between meals the tables in the dining car were removed, the chairs were arranged to form a miniature auditorium, a screen was hooked in place, and the neat, compact machine was mounted on a table at the other end of the car. Then the shades were drawn, the lights turned off and the reel put in motion.

Lesser in New Studios

The Principal Pictures Corporation, under the supervision of Sol Lesser, will film twelve elaborate productions during the current year, it was announced this week. The first picture to be made will be George M. Cohan's "The Meanest Man in the World," which will be followed by screen versions of some of the most popular stage plays and novels of the season. The Lesser organization has abandoned their quarters at the United Studios and will confine their activities to the King Vidor Studios. It is said that more than one hundred thousand dollars will be spent in remodeling and reconstructing their new studios.

ONE OF STAGELAND'S GRANDEST ARTISTES MOVES TO FILMLAND

Stageland is poorer and Filmland is richer for the decision of Lucy Beaumont to forsake the former for the latter. Lucy Beaumont is one of the grandest dramatic artists the stage has developed in the last quarter of a century and there is a place on a high pinnacle for her in motion pictures. She is truly a valuable acquisition, because she is of that calibre capable of contributing the kind of new influence to the photoplay that tends to promote its general welfare.

It was only last Monday that Miss Beaumont arrived in Hollywood from New York with her mind made up and her plans laid for a most methodical attempt at artistic conquest in a field with which she is unfamiliar due to the fact that with the exception of a brief interval a few years ago, she has concentrated her whole attention upon delineating principal characters in Broadway productions of the speaking stage. From the inception she is playing the game on a system by placing her whole professional affairs in the managerial hands of Lichtig & Rothwell and pursuing a hands-off policy in dabbling in any way in the matter of engagements.

There may be some folks in the film world who do not know Miss Beaumont, but there is no one in stage circles without full knowledge of her many brilliant histrionic triumphs and her fame is as widespread in England as it is in America. To list the great successes in which she has figured during the last twenty years amounts to a veritable compilation of a Blue Book of Modern Stage Hits. She has shared in the top laurels in so many plays that even though she possesses an excellent memory, she has to refer to her diary to recall many of them.

Perhaps her biggest success abroad was scored in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." In her debut on the American stage in "My Lady's Dress," she won the admiration of David Belasco to such an extent that he engaged her especially to support Frances Starr in "The Little Lady in Blue," which recognition, coveted by so many artists, tended to start all of the New York managers in a lively contest of bidding for her services, a tribute within itself of such eloquent proportions as to tell the whole story as to what kind of a dramatic genius this little lady is in reality.

Subsequently she created the

role of Mabubah in the original production of "Choo Chin Chow" and was under the management of Comstock & Gest for a prolonged period of time. Later she contributed two notable character studies of mother roles to the stage, two accomplishments which the most erudite and blase critics declare will live in the memory of theatre-goers for many years to come. These successes were attained in the New York Theatre Guild's unforgettable production of "John Ferguson" and "The Monkey's Paw" in which she proved a sensation in her support of Tyrone Powers in the run at the Belmont Theatre, New York.

Miss Beaumont is far from being uninitiated in the technique of the screen as a result of her playing prominent parts in two pictures. Her first one was "Sandy Burke," a serial in which she supported Louis Bresson, and, her second flyer into the cinema world was with June Caprice in "What Every Girl Knows."

Still another stage distinction which belongs to her is that she is the only character woman to remain in the Repertory Theatre, founded by A. E. F. Horniman in London, for two consecutive years. She has specialized in mother roles for the greater part of her career and intends to continue in this line of parts in motion pictures. She has long since been praised as the greatest mother on the stage and she says she aspires to duplicate a few of her best performances before the cameras.

AUSTRALIA SENDS ANOTHER TO AMERICA'S FILMLAND

After a long and successful career on stage and screen in Sidney, Australia, and with Vitagraph at Shepherd's Bush, England, David A. Dunbar has taken up his residence in the Hollywood film colony where he is winning popularity with local producers. Dunbar is a most capable character artist and that he has ability to play straight roles as well is evidenced by the fact that for three years he appeared as leading man with a stock company in one of the leading theatres in Sidney.

PICKFORD SOLVES ONE PERPETUAL MOTION

When Jack Pickford stepped off the train yesterday to start work on his next picture, he calculated that he had broken the world's amateur travel record for a man of his age. He admitted that possibly a few railroad conductors, steamship pursers and adventurers who plied back and forth on the Atlantic might have covered a larger mileage but these people fell into the professional class and were therefore disqualified. Jack has just returned from another visit with his newly married wife, Marilynn Miller, whose performance in the title role of "Sally" is now winning new laurels by captivating Chicago.

Since Mr. Pickford's marriage last summer to this popular musical comedy star, his life has been just one transcontinental journey after another. The problem of attending to his work in Hollywood and getting occasional glimpses of his wife has been answerable in only one way, and that has been by making his home in a Pullman car.

Mr. Pickford explained that his life of travel had not started with his marriage, but had simply received a fresh impetus. He began traveling, he said, when he was six years old, with a road show, and had been at it ever since. With his innumerable trips across the continent, a journey to Europe, and his constant trips back and forth from "location" on various pictures which had taken him north, east, south and west, he figured yesterday that he had by this time achieved the remarkable record of nearly half a million miles or a large part of the distance to the moon. After a few moments' calculation he decided that he had traveled since he was six years old an average of five hundred miles a week or about three miles an hour day and night.

"It seems," said Mr. Pickford, "that I have completely settled the problem of perpetual motion."

Headed For S. A. Wilds

Fourteen members of the Northern California Photoplay Corporation left for Guayaquil, Ecuador, last Monday, starting on an expedition and exploration tour which will take the group through every city of that country. Aboard the vessel upon which they embarked, was a ferocious bull which will be used in a series of comedies, to be filmed at various South American cities. J. J. How has been engaged to accompany the outfit as a guide through the wilds and the party will be under the command of Jerry Bolton, cameraman.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

Expose yourself as an active supporter of the Exposition!

Usually the fellow who is always waiting for tomorrow wasted yesterday.

If you are for the best interests of the whole motion picture industry, Camera! is for you.

No few men should control so important a factor in American life as the screen. Instead the screen should control many men of useful power.

Everybody is Coue-ing it now. David Bader, the Century press agent, adds his "parody" to the maze of them by announcing he is getting Bader and Bader.

Let talent and ability count more and more in the studios and the odium of having it believed that undue "pull" is the thing will be removed automatically.

Someone has just praised Valentino on the theory that the actor is fighting for a principle. Someone else immediately replied that he was fighting for a principal—and interest. Take your choice.

Now that the quantity of pictures is assured of a considerable increase, it is to be hoped that no one concerned in creating the increase will overlook the importance of increasing the quality too.

What will be the next fad so far as the type of photoplays is concerned? We don't care particularly what it is so long as it is not an attempt to force the contention that Bulgarian or Peruvian or Singalese romance is superior to the straight American brand.

New faces are more welcome on the screen today than ever before. This thing of every producer assembling casts in which several of the same names figure has long since become a source of monotony to many "fans" instead of constituting box-office values as too many imagine. No one wants the same set of players so often. It is an innate American spirit to want to see what others can do.

Big pictures are demanded. Big pictures do not have to cost a million dollars, a half million or a quarter million. Big pictures, however, must cost big men much mental energy and not so much of the verbal variety or the gesticulations of erratic temperament, a disposition fostered for effect and to appease ego in a majority of cases. True bigness bears no relation to big talk or big money.

There are plenty of indications that 1923 will be the biggest producing year in the annals of motion pictures and in order to make this a twelve-month of universal prosperity and contentment, it behooves every mortal in the whole field to contribute toward the promotion of complete peace and harmony—a condition entirely devoid of all petty differences and excessive zeal in the matter of gaining "the inside edge" in the eternal struggle born of competition. It is the propitious time for the disgruntled to become worthy of classification among the magnanimous; it is a golden opportunity to forget the very word "enemy."

EXHAUSTS

From Al Martin

The boy stood on the burning deck,
Absorbing fire flames by the peck,
The director yelled, "Now do your stuff
I'll tell you when you've burnt enough."

Penryhn Stanlaws claims that Betty Blythe has muscle-bound hips. There's one thing worse than this and that is a muscle-bound head.

E. W. Borman and Ted Lorsh are now known as "The Candle Brothers." They go out together.

Viola Dana's "Five Dollar Baby" has nothing to do with the Service Bureau.

Von Stroheim made one picture in a year and Neely Edwards made thirty-five. Well Neely, that makes you thirty-five times as good as Von.

Now that everything is getting better and better, the after dinner speakers cannot use, "The picture business is still in its infancy."

Did you ever try to convince a casting director that you are getting better and your salary should be better?

Fritzie Ridgeway is now featured in a play by Charles Dickens. This film will not be made under the author's supervision.

I met one vaudeville performer who did not pal with "Charlie" when he was in "A Night in an English Music Hall."

Sign in Theatre: "Last six days of Foolish Wives." Some foolish wives last longer than that.

Wallace Beery is known as "The Oil Actor" because he makes three-in-one.

Critics all over the country, reflecting the sentiments of their readers, are becoming more discriminating constantly in their frank declarations of choices between good and bad pictures. There is ample evidence of this fact. Therefore, it becomes a natural consistency for producers to move their discrimination standards up a few notches in their selections of stories and methods of filming them always with the object of improving the quality.

If you ever find yourself being mute when you should be speaking right out loud, don't be immutable.

NEWS NOTES ABOUT THE

MIDNIGHT MUSINGS

It is a glaring fact that most of the so-called "fan" magazines miss the mark of genuine usefulness and sufficient representation of the true spirit of the cinema art and it would be a splendid idea if all editors of such periodicals would alternate regular visits to Hollywood with serious efforts to develop visions by which it will be possible for them to see and comprehend what it is all about. As for the average film trade journal, there is too much evidence of palpable favoritism to one clique or another and this regrettable proclivity smacks of highly reprehensible vulnerability to influences other than the welfare of the industry in its entirety. One trade paper is fighting to enthrone one group of interests while another is endeavoring with the might of the desperate to save its masters from being forced to abdicate. The screen deserves one truly great champion and mirror in the form of a national magazine second in influence to not even a Saturday Evening Post.

Camera! being of the motion picture industry, by the motion picture industry and for the motion picture industry shall insist upon doing its best to repel attacks upon the motion picture industry from without and to exert its every influence to expel its unscrupulous enemies from within. Camera! will grind no axes for any one group or faction and it will concentrate its attention upon reconciling all in dissension to divert all fighting energies to a constructive campaign for the benefit of the motion picture industry as a whole. Free from all entangling alliances and immune to subsidizing in any form, Camera! feels confident of its position being an ideal one in which to perform conspicuous services for the entire industry and all the worthy people engaged in it. To serve in a manner to win general approval is this publication's highest aim.

Never before has Los Angeles been promised an epoch-making amusement and educational event of such surpassing brilliance as the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition is sure to be. Never before did the individual in every department of the industry have a more golden opportunity to prove his or her fealty to the cause of the great art the cinema represents. If there is anyone who is not thoroughly conversant with the fundamentals of the momentous Exposition enterprise, that person would commit a grievous error in failing to take the trouble of not only ascertaining the facts, but discovering how best to do a big bit towards insuring the whole affair a complete success.

ENGLISH STAR IS THANKFUL TO DESTINY

Claude King, who enacted the role of Dr. Isaacson in "Bella Donna" with Pola Negri, is convinced that there is a destiny which shapes our ends. Just before the end of the War he had been certified as unfit for further service overseas. Two and a half years in the trenches had culminated in a complete specimen of trench fever, and he was seconded for service with the Foreign Office, attached to the British Embassy in Washington, where he arrived in November 1918, just after the Armistice was signed. His duties took him on a speaking tour through the Virginias and Maryland, and it was during that time he came to the conclusion he would like to take up his post-war life in this country.

During this stay in America he received an offer to do work in commerce, which offer haunted his mind when he was demobilized on his return to England. But his old profession of the theatre was re-opened to him, and it was playing opposite Lillian MacCarthy at the Kingsway Theatre, London, as Holofernes in Arnold Bennets "Judith" that led the late Alf Hayman to him with the suggestion that he should come to this country to play Rudolph Solomon in "Declassee" with Ethel Barrymore.

This Mr. King agreed to do, and made such a success that he decided to reconsider his proposed commercial career. Looking around the American theatre, he began to feel it is full of very real vitality and initiative, and he decided it would be foolish to leave the work at which he had spent so many years in gaining proficiency. The commercial career was therefore definitely abandoned, and he has had no reason to regret his decision.

He says he thought he knew what hospitality was from his travels in the British Colonies in which he spent six years as a leading man playing all sorts of parts, but now he is convinced that American hospitality is the greatest in the world.

Mrs. King, who came to California with Mr. King, sacrificed an important engagement to make the western trip. As Evelyn Walsh Hall she is known as one of the most successful women on the English stage. At first identified with strictly classical roles she later won fame in the most modern of characterizations.

Jimmy Adams, famous for his excellent comedy performances in Educational comedies has been signed by Julius Stern to co-direct, play and write for Century Comedies.

NOW FOR A TRIBUTE TO THE MUCH-NEGLECTED CHARACTER ACTRESS

Why do critics overlook the character woman so habitually? Why are her praises so seldom sung? Does her very versatility work against her? Is the neglect of her due to the fact that if she really is an all-around character woman, she is kept busy playing villainous roles with more frequency than she does the sweet mother parts? Verily, the character woman of the screen presents a curious anomaly in the matter of receiving recognition for her histrionic achievements it makes little difference how remarkable they might be. A good-looking leading man with slender dramatic ability, but with an appealing personality or a leading lady who makes 'em gasp with her fineries of raiment will monopolize the space ninety-nine times out of a hundred, and, there seems to be no particular reason for it. Certainly no one is deliberately discriminating against the character woman.

A case in striking illustration is the brilliant career of Martha Mattox, one of the truest dramatic artists on the screen today; one of the few who display marked signs of possessing actual genius. Although she gave the cinema art one of the most amazing characterizations in all its annals in the Universal picture, "Conflict," in which she supported Priscilla Dean, it is a safe guess that not more than one per cent of the people who saw that picture would be able to recall hers as the name of the woman who gave that portrayal, and it is all because the critics throughout the country failed to lay any stress upon her work on account of needing most of their space to dwell upon the star, direction, story and other elements. True, a few reviewers enthused over her performance, and one in a Los Angeles newspaper declared she never would be forgotten if she never appeared in another film the rest of her life. However, they did not Valentino her en masse.

Even more impressive of the point here raised out of a spirit of intercession in behalf of all-encompassing fair play, is the more recent instance of the showing of Reginald Barker's "Hearts Aflame" at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, and in which production Miss Mattox draws an outstanding characterization of high merit. Only one critic out of a dozen or more, who witnessed this premiere and wrote a review of the picture, did more than to mention her as being merely among the members of the supporting cast. Of course this was not intentional. The majority of the critics no doubt regarded other members of the cast and other features of the film more deserving of their attention, but just the same the performance of Miss Mattox is one of the fine highlights of the whole entertainment.

Despite the fact that she must suffer to be overlooked by the press like most other character women, Miss Mattox is one of the most popular and most-in-demand actresses in all filmdom, and she is always assigned most important parts in the biggest productions. She has just finished playing the part of a villainous Bolshevik in "The Attic of Felix Bavu," which title has been changed to "Thundering Dawn." She also has a vital role in the Gasnier production of "The Hero," soon to be released.

Miss Mattox started her screen career back in the days when Harold Lloyd was first starting as a comedian. In fact, she was present when Mr. Lloyd signed his first starring contract. One of her earlier triumphs was scored in "Huckleberry Finn," which was made for Lasky by the late William Desmond Taylor.

Lately there have been several prominent authorities somewhat in the limelight by predicting Miss Mattox would ascend the ladder to that top rung called stardom within the new year, and she is quite generally regarded as one of the most likely possibilities as the next "great character woman" to grace the stellar firmament. Thus comes to her tribute despite the frequency with which her name is omitted from the reports of pictures in which she interprets the silent drama in such masterly manner.

Belasco Coming Here

David Belasco is planning to come to Los Angeles in the near future to personally supervise the filming of "The Gold Diggers," "Deburau" and "Daddies," the three plays of which he controls the copyrights. The stories have been purchased by Warner Brothers at a reported sum of $650,000, the first story of which will be under course of production about March 1st.

FAMOUS BROTHERS AT "ODDS" ON "U" LOT

Slumming in the Court of Miracles and finding one's own brother as King of the Thieves and Beggars was the experience of David Torrence when he went from the set where he is working in "Trimmed in Scarlet," which Jack Conway is directing to the reproduction of fifteenth century Paris at Universal City.

For the first time in their careers the noted Torrence brothers are now working at the same studio and in as dissimilar roles as may be imagined. Ernest Torrence portrays Clopin, in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is directing, attired in the disreputable costume of the "Emperor of Thieves."

His brother is playing the role of a gentleman of the first water in "Trimmed in Scarlet," and recently they posed for a photograph in their respective working clothes.

Ernest Torrence's characterization of the beggar king in Victor Hugo's classic, marks a new highwater mark in his portrayal of striking types. He is called upon to create a character of the most hardened and brutal instincts. On the other hand his brother is called upon for the most delicate portrayal of a man of gentleness and the finer emotions.

"It is remarkable that the first time we should work on the same lot it should be in such different characters," declared David. "However, it is probably as well, for I feel the family honor is at stake. I shall endeavor to show that one brother can be as good in pictures as the other bad."

Important scenes of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," are now being filmed in Clopin's haunt, constructed near the Court of Miracles set. Players who are appearing in scenes with Torrence are Braden Hurst as Jehan, Eulalie Jensen as Marie and Raymond Hatton as Gringoire. Lon Chaney will play Quasimodo.

Takes Dangerous Job

Bud Mason, "The Stunt King" who has the reputation of having done 244 stunts and spent only four weeks in the hospital, has been contracted to do all the stunts in the Bob Horner picture "The Midnight Hummer." He has agreed to do the stunt which caused the death of Jean Perkins, famous stunt man, including climbing down a rope ladder from an aeroplane onto a moving train beneath. Bud just finished the stunts for the Neal Hart company, doubling for Hart.

Rollie Totheroh, A. S. C., is filming "Destiny," starring Edna Purviance and directed by Charlie Chaplin.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, will make his debut on the New York speaking stage soon.

Ethel Grey Terry has completed her engagement in "Brass," Warner Brothers latest production.

Myrtle Stedman is playing the mother role in the Lambert Hillyer production, "A Temporary Marriage."

Bessie Love, now playing in Marshall Neilan's "The Ingrate," plays the ukelele and sings jazz songs with great eclat.

Arthur Stuart Hull is supporting Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law." Mr. Hull will appear in the role of the lawyer.

Harry Milton and C. B. Steele have been added to the cast supporting Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Theodore Roberts will be seen sans mustache and bushy eyebrows in the William de Mille Paramount production of "Grumpy."

Watt L. Parker has been engaged to take charge of the advertisement department at Warner Brothers' New York offices.

Eva Novak has been engaged by William Fox to play the leading feminine role opposite William Russell in his next production.

Following a season's playing as leading man in "Six Cylinder Love," the stage play, Kingsley Benedict will once more return to picture activities.

Claire Windsor is playing in her third Marshall Neilan picture, "The Ingrate." The other two were "The Strangers' Banquet" and "Fools First."

Lieut. Tom Berrin, Naval officer, stationed at the Submarine Base, has been engaged as a technical director by the William Fox company.

Frank Urson, director for Marshall Neilan at Goldwyn, is in the Grand Canyon, selecting locations for Mr. Neilan's production, "The Ingrate."

George Dumond, for several years manager of a local theatre, has been engaged by Warner Brothers as exchange representative. He is expected here soon from New York. Dumond left here in charge of the Wesley Barry act which was under the supervision of Warner Brothers.

Cullen Landis is playing the leading juvenile role in a special Vitagraph production featuring Earle Williams and Wanda Hawley.

Hank Mann, hero of many comedy productions, has been cast for a comedy role in "Desire," Louis Burston's new production.

Watt L. Parker, well-known in advertising circles in the east, has been added to the Warner Brothers staff in New York. He will be in charge of the advertising.

Helen Ferguson and Betty Francisco have returned to Universal City and will support Edward (Hoot) Gibson in his next starring vehicle, "The Poor Worm."

Dorothy Saey and Marguerite Kosik, two clever child actresses, have been signed for an eight weeks' engagement with Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Hazel Deane has been engaged by the Christie organization and will appear in comedies directed by Al Christie. Miss Deane's picture experience has been of less than a year's duration.

Max Graf has returned to Hollywood after spending two weeks in San Francisco preparing for the filming of "The Fog," which will be his next production. It will be made at the San Mateo studios.

Lillian Hackett has just signed a contract to play the leading feminine role opposite J. B. Warner in a Clifford S. Elfelt production. Miss Hackett recently played "leads" in Jack White comedies.

Mae Murray has completed her work in "Jazzmania," Robert Z. Leonard's newest production for Metro, in which she is starred, and has gone to San Francisco for a short vacation before starting her next picture.

Henry J. Macpeake, formerly special representative for Wobber Brothers of San Francisco, has joined the staff of the American Historical Review and Motion Picture Exposition in the capacity of comptroller.

Louis Calhern, formerly of Hollywood, has returned to the screen for an interval to play in J. Parker Reade's latest picture. Mr. Calhern has gone to Miami with a company of New York players, including Doris Kenyon, Henry Hull and Louis Wolheim, to work under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Myrtle Stedman will play opposite Kenneth Harlan in the Sacramento Pictures production, "Temporary Marriage." Lambert Hillyer is directing.

Allan Dwan, director of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," has signed a contract with Famous Players-Lasky to produce a series of Paramount specials.

Now that Marie Prevost has solved the "poison pen" problem and "foiled the plotters" she is taking a well-earned vacation from Warner Brothers studio. Her next starring vehicle has not yet been selected.

Al Willey, formerly with the Ince studios, is shooting second camera with Sacramento Pictures Corporation at the Fine Arts studios. Johnnie Stumar is first cameraman and Lester Manter is the assistant director.

Sid Andrews will leave soon for Fort Worth, Texas, where he will be affiliated with the Denver Dixon Productions company. Mr. Andrews will assist in the directing of "The Man from Tall Timbers," and other productions which Mr. Dixon will produce.

Edward Connelly, Metro's veteran character actor, has been cast for a prominent role in "Desire," Louis Burston's newest production, which Rowland V. Lee is directing. In this picture Mr. Connelly will enact the part of a violin teacher.

Kenneth Harlan is playing the leading role in the initial Sacramento Pictures Corporation production, "Temporary Marriage," now being filmed at the Fine Arts studios. Mr. Harlan made his advent into the motion picture field some years ago at this studio, then known as the D. W. Griffith Reliance studios.

Huntley Gordon is completing his third picture since his arrival in Hollywood. The first was a Fred Niblo production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair;" the second was a Metro production with Enid Bennett called "Your Friend and Mine" and the third, now nearing completion, is Viola Dana's starring vehicle, "Her Fatal Millions."

Marjorie Warfield, having just finished a part with the Carter DeHaven Company in "Say It With Diamonds," in which she has an opportunity to display her skill at golf and other modern accomplishments, now turns by contrast to the characterization of a little Puritan girl in the Charles Ray production of "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Ted Stewart is playing a pilgrim in the Charles Ray production, "The Courtship of Miles Standish." After finishing with Mr. Ray, Ted will go to Fort Worth, Texas to appear in the Denver Dixon productions.

Henry MacRae, veteran director and independent producer, sailed from San Francisco today for China and the Orient where he will film a series of motion pictures revealing the intimate customs and traditions of the peoples in the Far East.

Bobby Mack, who is playing the character of Uncle Billy in Mary Miles Minter's Paramount production, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," has been engaged to portray a hunchback crook character in Wesley Ruggles' next feature for the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

Myrtle Stedman, having completed the title role in "The Famous Mrs. Fair," is at work on another "mother" picture at the Fine Arts studio. Mildred Davis, Stuart Holmes, Tully Marshall and Kenneth Harlan are also in the cast. The picture is being directed by Lambert Hillyer.

Grant Carpenter, the man responsible for the adaptation of "Brothers Under the Skin" and "The Pride of Palomar," has been signed by Warner Brothers as part of their scenario staff. Carpenter is well-known in newspaper circles on the coast, having spent some years as dramatic critic and in other capacities on the San Francisco papers.

Monte Moles, the English comedian, has just returned from San Diego with the Hamilton White company, where atmosphere scenes for their next comedy were filmed. Monte wears a funny mustache in this picture which he says was suggested to him by a very eccentric English colonel in France during the recent World War. It is said to have a very humorous effect. However, Monte doesn't intend to patent it.

George Siegmann, recently seen as Bill Sykes in "Oliver Twist," is playing another "heavy" in support of Dorothy Phillips in "The White Frontier." Produced by Allen Holubar for Associated First National Pictures, this unusual Canadian Woods story gives Siegmann an interesting opportunity in the portrayal of Scarborough, a ruthless frontiersman, whose size and physical prowess give him transient authority in a land where might is right. Mayme Kelso is also in the cast of this picture.

CHAPLIN FREE OF CONTRACT GETS MORE ACTIVE

Free of entangling contracts Charlie Chaplin is now launched on the biggest and most important picture of his entire career following the delivery of his latest four-reel comedy, "The Pilgrim," to the First National Exhibitors. Some delay was occasioned in the delivery owing to the fact that the picture was a multiple reel, one which the existing contract with First National did not cover and special financial arrangements were necessary. But agreement has been reached and the negative delivered to First National's west coast representatives.

The delivery and the final closing of a contract which has been running five years has given added impetus to the activities at the Chaplin studio in connection with the production of Edna Purviance's first starring vehicle which attains utmost importance in the motion picture world owing to the fact that it was written and is being directed by Charlie Chaplin himself. However, Miss Purviance's present serious illness has delayed him greatly in his plans.

The termination of the First National contract lines Chaplin up solidly with United Artists for all his future releases and for those of several subsidiary companies which will be launched under his direction. The contract with First National at the time it was made was considered an astounding one in that it provided for the payment of a million dollars for eight two-reel comedies, a price that was revolutionary at the time.

The First National contract was signed and work started early in 1918 and "A Dog's Life" was the first picture delivered. It was a sensation and is now being revived again with as much success as its original showing. Closely following this came "Shoulder Arms," a permanent piece of cinema literature, possibly the highest comedy achievement of all time. Then came "Sunnyside," "A Day's Pleasure," "The Kid," "The Idle Class," "Pay Day" and finally "The Pilgrim."

According to the contract with First National all of these pictures are leased to that organization for a term of five years and at the end of that time all rights in them revert to Mr. Chaplin. The rights to "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" revert to Mr. Chaplin during the current year. On all of these pictures fresh negatives have been kept in the Chaplin studio vaults and when released again at the end of the five-year period the prints will be in the same condition as when issued originally.

A.D.A. PLANS YEAR OF RAISING FILM STANDARDS

That the Assistant Directors' Association is out to co-operate wholeheartedly in the vital work of raising the standard of motion pictures by increasing efficiency among members of their department of the industry seems assured judging by the sentiments expressed at their regular meeting last Thursday night, which is the second of the new year. Plans for a more active participation in helpful discussions of ways and means to facilitate and simultaneously improve their share of the tasks have been made. The assistant directors are among the most enthusiastic believers in the future greatness of the screen and they show themselves to be eager to contribute much toward the hastening of perfection in production work. Charles Stalling, production manager of Universal, who was elected president January 4th, is a progressive heartily in sympathy with all progressive ideas as is also Pete Gerald, the newly elected secretary-treasurer, and Harry Tenbrook, the new corresponding secretary. Every member of this year's Board of Governors is a leader in his field, being composed of such men as William V. Crinley, James Dugan, L. A. Howland, Thomas C. Reagan and James C. Whipple.

BOY ACTOR, 6, IS 109-POUNDER AND HEROIC

There is one young man in the picture industry who is making greater strides in the acting line than many old-time stage actors backed by years of experience. It seems he has weight with the industry—his weight is 109 pounds at the age of 6 years! He has played in five pictures (and is cast for a sixth) since his entrance into the game in October. This young enthusiast's name is Thomas (Fatty) Hicks; he idolizes Bill Hart and wants Mary Pickford for his sweetheart when he grows up.

Fatty's first work was in the "Merry-Go-Round" under Rupert Julian, then he played in a Universal "Monkey Picture" under the direction of Colin Campbell, after which followed parts with Slim Summerfield at Fox, and he has been going strong ever since.

Fatty is a happy little boy just now because Horace Williams, "the goodest director of all," is going to give him a real part at the Ince studio as soon as he is ready.

But above all these accomplishments shines the fact that little six-year-old Thomas Hicks is stepping into his father's shoes and proving himself the man of the family. His father, an engineer, was thrown from his engine while averting a train wreck, saving the lives of hundreds of passengers. His neck was broken, and now he is totally incapable of work. Now this manly little fellow is carrying on the good work of his father.

Miss Evelyn Kenyon, a sister of the noted playwright, Charles Kenyon, has signed a contract to write the screen stories series being produced by the Woman's Home Companion. A survey of the scenario field finds three women in the forefront of this unusual profession—June Mathis, Jeanie MacPherson and Evelyn Kenyon.

HEREIN IS SUBTLE JAB AND HOW AGE AIDS

A desire for realism in the making of a picture was responsible for Anders Randolph, who is in the cast supporting Richard Barthelmess in "The Bright Shawl," making his debut as a motion picture actor. Mr. Randolph when not acting before the camera and causing people to desire to "get at him" and enjoying seeing his ignominious end, because he is considered to be the best "villun" in pictures, is a celebrated artist with the brush.

"When the pictures were in their infancy," he said, "I conceived the desire to be a director in the belief that owing to my understanding of effects as an artist I could be valuable. When I made my proposal to the producer he looked askance at me, saying that he could not entrust the production of a picture to such an inexperienced head. So he engaged as a director a man who had been originally a clerk in a haberdashery store, but on account of his personal appearance had become a movie actor.

"This director, though, thought that realism was necessary and evolved the idea that instead of having an artist painting a picture with his back to the camera it would be better to have the easel facing the camera so that the audience could see the artist making his strokes with the brush. A number of actors were tried out, but even this director could see they were decidedly crude in wielding their brushes. Then he sought out a real artist. I was selected. That was my first appearance in pictures. I evidently made good in it, because I have been in pictures ever since then."

Baby Peggy is due at the Century studio in ten days, at which time she will start on her next Century. As yet it is not known who will direct her.

STAR SAYS SCREEN FOLK STARTED COUE IDEA

"Every day, in every way, I am getting better and better," may be applied to health by the famous French pharmacist, Coue, but it is not a new principle in its application to the upbuilding of a successful career, thinks Leah Baird, who is starring in "The Destroying Angel," the second of the Leah Baird Specials now being completed at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City.

"It has long been the key to success among struggling artists. They may not have said it in the very words of the French scientist, but they have applied the same principle of self-confidence, which everyone realizes, is half the battle.

"It is largely on the order of the famous saying, 'If you believe it, it's so.' If an artist tells herself daily that she is getting better and better, she will improve in her work. By saying such a thing she admits there is great and ample room for improvement. Only those who think there is no room for improvement remain at a standstill.

"You may be able to say to some one else that you are getting better and better when you know you are not. But when you say it to yourself you are fooling no one, because you can't fib to yourself or your conscience and get away with it. If you tell yourself you are improving, your conscience will make you endeavor to really improve and you will find that day by day you are improving.

"This principle as applied to health may be self-hypnotism, but when applied to work it means it must be backed up by your best endeavors."

Comes to Engineer Move

In line with the recently announced intention of the Selznick company to move its entire distribution organization to Los Angeles, thereby starting a pioneer movement in this direction, F. B. Cole, assistant to the vice-president of the company, has arrived in Los Angeles from the East to assist Vice-Presidents David O. Selznick and A. George Volck, in the preparatory work of making the big change of residence. Mr. Cole, who is a new member in the Selznick organization, comes to the film industry after a long and successful career in the services of the Government and one of the big Eastern railroads. During the war he held the position of Chief Engineer of the Northern Atlantic District of the Shipping Board, and was later chairman of the Organization and Efficiency Board.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Abandons the Dance

Beth Rayon has been signed by Universal for an important role in "Jewel," which Lois Weber is directing. Miss Rayon, who will play the part of Suzanne, is well known on the legitimate stage and lately played on the Orpheum circuit. She is a professional dancer as well as an actress and for two years was with Denishawn. Miss Rayon supported Sessue Hayakawa in "The Swamp," and also played a leading role in "A Kiss In Time."

Ingram's Aides Arrive

John F. Seitz, cameraman, and Tom Storey, laboratory expert for Rex Ingram, have arrived in Hollywood from New York. Both Mr. Seitz and Mr. Storey worked on "Where the Pavement Ends," Mr. Ingram's newest production for Metro which was made in Florida. Mr. Ingram and the other members of his company will arrive in Hollywood next week and will start work immediately on "Scaramouche," Mr. Ingram's next production for Metro.

Gaston Faces Squad of 'Em

The next picture in which Gaston Glass will essay playing the hero for B. P. Schulberg is "Mothers-in-Law," the production of which will start soon under the direction of Louis Gasnier, who is due back to Los Angeles from a flying trip to New York within a few days. Gaston declares he faces "Mothers-in-Law" unflinchingly, confident he will escape with the greater part of his life.

May Break Tradition

Louise Fazenda has let out a secret. The comedienne, who will complete in a few days a Fazenda Special for Educational under the supervision of Jack White at United studios, is doing her first situation comedy. There is some slapstick, but none of the violent sort, the bulk of the fun being secured from the angle of surprise and the unexpected. Furthermore, she has contracted to do in this comedy the same difficult action that in all the history of the screen has gone exclusively to male comedy stars, because the tradition has existed that a girl could not accomplish anything hazardous. Falls, among other things, have always been taboo for any comedienne, but Miss Fazenda in this latest picture, has a number to her score and does them with consummate ease, it is said.

New Lens Successful

Some very interesting and unusual night effects have been screened by Clifford Eلفelt and Joseph B. Walker in the new Eلفelt production "Danger," now being photographed by Walker at the Fine Arts studio. An effect of misty moonlight, such as one sees when the moon is obscured by clouds or fog, has been obtained with reality, and is well illustrated by a scene in which a night raid by horse thieves is made on the ranch which figures prominently in the story. The stolen horses pass before the camera like phantoms, the white ones having a particularly ghost-like appearance. These interesting effects were obtained with a new lens invented by Walker and certain unusual lighting arrangements perfected by Walker and Eلفelt during the production of the picture.

Jinx Is Victor

Fire destroyed the negative of "Grandma's Girl," the Baby Peggy comedy which was held up once by the starlet's illness, and then by director Alf Goulding's necessary departure to the mountains for a rest. Although the negative was under 500 feet, due to these two illnesses, the much-hooded comedy has died a valiant death.

Benedict Hiers Returning

Walter Heirs will return from his wedding tour around next Monday and will begin work immediately on his new Paramount picture, "Seventy-Five Cents an Hour," under the direction of Joseph Henabery. Jacqueline Logan will be again featured in support of the new star. This picture is said to possess a very unusual comedy element and was written by Frank Condon expressly for Mr. Hiers. It is interesting to note that the continuity is by Grant Carpenter, one of the best-known short story writers, as well as scenarists, in the profession.

Whole Medical Corps Needed

The theatre house physician becomes a comparative nonentity alongside of the medical staff motion picture companies are now requiring. Allen Holubar, in the making of "The White Frontier," starring Dorothy Phillips, for First National release, on a recent trip to the snows of Truckee, California, took with his troupe not only an M. D., but an osteopath, an oculist to relieve snow blindness and Klieg eyes, an affection common to players before the high-powered lamps, a chiroprapist to give foot comfort after days of standing on the frozen ground amid sleet and ice, and an ear, nose and throat specialist to keep the organization free from colds. Although the salaries of these experts ran into four figures, Holubar considered it a wise investment for the loss of time if any player has become incapacitated would have tied up the company at a terrific overhead expense per day.

Another Recruit From Stage

Walter Fenner, well-known portrayer of "heavy" characters on the stage, arrived in Los Angeles this week from New York with the intention of entering motion picture work. Mr. Fenner's most recent stage engagement was in "Here Comes the Bride" during its New York run. Previously he appeared in such successes as "The Rosary," "The Common Law," "Guilty Man" and "A Pair of Sixes." He is also well-known to devotees to vaudeville, as he toured both the Keith and Orpheum circuits for several seasons. Mr. Fenner is registered at the Continental Hotel.

Filmers Needed Protection

Military protection was necessary in order to take scenes of the Muharram, a Mohammedan religious ceremonial held annually in Basrah, Mesopotamia. The scenes, which are part of the film, "Dates from the Garden of Eden," were photographed from a balcony, beneath which were stationed soldiers with fixed bayonets. This was the only time pictures had ever been taken in Mesopotamia of the Muharram, which marks the anniversary of the death of Houssain, son of Mohammed.

Comedian in Serial

Lewis Sargent, Universal comedy star, has been drawn from the comedy ranks to play the juvenile leading role in support of William Desmond in the new Universal chapter play of business and the money game, "The Phantom Fortune," which will enter production immediately under the direction of Robert F. Hill. Hill just completed Desmond's starring serial, "Around the World in Eighteen Days." The messenger boy comedies starring Sargent are meeting a strong market demand, and are popular with playgoers who crave laughter.

Fox Finishing Special

Work is going forward rapidly on "The Eleventh Hour," an all-star production now in the making at the William Fox studio. The picture is now in its fourth week and indications are that Director Bernard Durning will bring it to completion within two more weeks. Shirley Mason and Charles Jones are the stars in this picture, with Edward Martindel leading a strong cast of supporting players. Louis Sherwin wrote the scenario.

Madge Kennedy to Japan

Before beginning work on her second Kenma production following "The Purple Highway," Madge Kennedy will make a trip to Japan on the American steamer, "Resolute." She has just completed a successful Broadway run of John Golden's play "Spite Corner," and also plans to return to the stage on her return as well as starting work on her second screen production. It is rumored that her next stage production will be a musical comedy in which Miss Kennedy's soprano voice will be introduced to the public for the first time.

Wilson to Title U Film

Paul N. Wilson, well-known short story writer, has been engaged by Universal to title and edit the recently completed production, "Nobody's Bride." The story, which was written by Evelyn Campbell, was directed by Herbert Blache. Wilson recently finished the titling and editing of three other pictures for Universal, "One Wonderful Night," by Louis Tracy, "The Power of a Lie," by Johan Bojer, and "The Midnight Guest," an original story by Rupert Julian. The last two pictures were directed by George Archainbaud, who is now directing the Selznick production of "The Common Law," at the United studios.

ERIC MAYNE HAS OWN

PRACTICAL PHILOSOPHY

Eric Mayne, whose latest successful screen characterizations are drawn with such finesse in support of Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" and in "My American Wife," starring Gloria Swanson, and which latter picture will be the opening attraction at Grauman's new Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles, is another one of those sterling actors capable enough to enact important roles in as many as sixteen pictures in a single year's time and yet to be comparatively little heard of by the general public because of the common penchant of the day to idolize only the young leading men and the beautiful leading ladies to the almost complete exclusion of the character artists in the supporting casts. However, Mr. Mayne says he is perfectly satisfied with his lot and will continue to be so long as he is permitted to work a lot! Practical philosophy this.

SMILING BILLY FOSTER, PIONEER FILMER, DIES

William C. Foster, known as "Smiling Billy," a pioneer cameraman, died January 17th at his home, 5536 Harold Way, Hollywood, after an illness of four months. A general nervous break-down was assigned as the cause of his death. He was 42 years old and is survived by his wife. Mr. Foster started in the motion picture business with Selig in Chicago. He was chief cameraman at Universal for a long time.

Baby Muriel MacCormac, the four-year-old screen luminary who holds the record for having worked in more screen productions than any child artist of her age, surprised her friends and film associates recently when she presented them all with a large calendar, upon which was mounted a large picture of herself. Under the photograph of the baby star, which incidentally, was a pose of the little actress with a delightful smile on her face, was the caption, "Keep Smiling Throughout the Year." Baby Muriel has worked in thirty-four prominent productions during her career of two years, and will next be seen in Louis Gasnier's "Poor Men's Wives."

Dorothy Manners is completing a long engagement with Shirley Mason whom she is supporting in "The Eleventh Hour" at the William Fox studios. This will be her second appearance with Miss Mason, she having an important role in that star's "Pawn Ticket 210."

eternal and without beginning. He applied his atomical theory, also, to natural philosophy and astronomy. Even the gods he considered to have arisen from atoms and to be perishable like the rest of things existing. In his ethical philosophy Democritus considered the acquisition of peace of mind as the highest aim of life.

"There are plenty of people, personally well acquainted with Charlie Chaplin, who recognize his theories as coinciding with those of Democritus, excepting the man now known as a premier comedian employs the more modern form of expression, commonly called visualization, rather than writing," Mr. Rigas points out. "For instance, what is the one greatest effect of the Chaplin artistry on the screen? The answer is simple: to help people acquire peace of mind by laughing away their troubles, all of which are follies! And, whoever thinks Mr. Chaplin pursues his motion picture screen solely for pecuniary gain does not know the great Charlie at all. There are plenty of men and women of standing who will vouch for this comedian being far more concerned in social and mental uplift than he is in the accumulating of money. In fact, he reminds me of a most delicate shell attuned to every sound of human woe, attuned so as to echo back a cause for arousing mirth in the face of every adversity. Though comparatively frail of body, Mr. Chaplin is one of the strongest men mentally and he is thoroughly scientific in his methods of working out comedy conditions which will be so general in their influence as to control all the atoms to the extent of making them blithesome instead of lugubrious while they are parts of the human physiology for the passing moment. In the course of evolution extending through the vista of future time, this effect will be inborn with generations to come centuries hence, surviving the decades of passing through the state of clay, the state of the animal kingdom and finally back to the human flesh again just as Democritus is back with us under the new name of Charlie Chaplin."

The up-to-date personification of Euripides has not gone so far in making his impressions nor can they be so readily traced back to his old self, according to the Rigas discussion of the case of Lon Chaney, just now approaching his heyday as a true tragedian of the silversheet. Yet, in a single photoplay, "The Penalty," Mr. Chaney made ancient history repeat in the modern setting of a movie studio by enacting a tragic role so much like Euripides enacted his tragic roles that his identity became unmistakable, at least to this firm believer in actual reincarnation. The mere fact that Euripides enacted his tragic situations with the aid of the pen, while Lon Chaney enacts his as an actor does not alter the fundamental similarity in trend of two minds, one ancient and one of today, for, as Mr. Rigas asserts, Mr. Chaney creates by physical acts before the camera the same effects Euripides created in the plays he wrote, the spirit being precisely the same. "No one can deny Mr. Chaney is a master of tragic situations and pathos and that he shows much knowledge of human nature," continues Mr. Rigas. "Ability covering only these few points is all the claim Euripides has to immortal fame. He is the same now as he was before."

Perhaps the most convincing evidence of the survival of the theory of reincarnation is offered by the living example of Peter, the Hermit. He looks the part. He is an ancient in every appearance standing out like a cameo in all this ultra-modern setting Hollywood has acquired through being a fashionable suburb to the cosmopolitan Los Angeles and a most important art center because of the centralization of film-producing there. One of the first local characters to become a familiar sight to most every tourist in this mecca for all manner of artistic characters is Peter. Ever afoot and walking with a long swinging stride, as his hand rests on his inseparable staff and his head bobs continually with energy, Peter is a most interesting sight to the uninitiated. But, his greatest charm is his voice, mellow in its universal kindness and love, and inspiring in the words it always chooses, for Peter never converses with anyone more than a minute before he has expounded some of his philosophy, which is identical in every way with that of the revered Socrates.

Now behold a convincing and startling parallel cited by Mr. Rigas.

Following the promptings of "an internal voice," of which he spoke frequently, Socrates declined to participate further in public affairs and he retired to train himself to coarse food, scanty clothing and indifference to cold or heat and brought into thorough subjection his natural impetuosity. But, though a sage, he was entirely removed from gloom and he remained more witty than ever. Anyone who knows Peter, the Hermit, of Hollywood, upon reading the foregoing two sentences would conclude it referred to Peter. And so it does—he is exactly like that: he lives in a humble foot-hill cabin, eats only uncooked vegetables, fruits and nuts, abstaining from all meats or prepared foods; his complete wardrobe, summer and winter, rain or shine, consists of one outer shirt and a pair of thin white trousers, he always going bare-footed and bare-headed and never wearing any under-clothing of any kind; in even frosty weather he never chills and in torrid heat occasionally swept down upon Hollywood from adjacent deserts he never shows any sign of discomfort.

"Socrates, under his modern nick-name of Peter, is still doing as he did in the fourth century before Christ around Athens," Mr. Rigas declares. "In the old day he mixed freely with men in any place of public resort to question and suggest the right path to real knowledge. Ignorance and pretense could not be hidden when his cross-examination came to bear on them. Peter frequents the motion picture studios and the various clubs of film folk to accomplish the same purpose and I venture the assertion more people gain more real knowledge of vital importance from him than is possible from any other source although he does not pretend to be a college-bred man."

There is one outstanding feature of Peter's philosophy which occasions unrestrained astonishment at times. As an example, not so long ago, he chanced to discover a little boy lying helpless on a roller-cot out in the warm California sunshine. Forthwith Peter declared there was no sound logic for this boy continuing to suffer longer and after expounding the rudiments of the logic he referred to, he levelled a benign smiling gaze upon the lad. "Get up and play with the rest of the lads, you're all right," was all Peter said. Instantly, according to the report which was widely published at the time, the boy did get up after being a life-long cripple and he did immediately begin to play as other children play, and, he is now considered as well and sound as anyone. Peter took particular pains to deny that he had performed a miracle. "Just plain, strengthening logic is needed to remove human ills of mind and body," he declared.

"Is there anyone, savant or ultra-savant, who can offer any evidence in rebuttal to the effect that Peter is not the great Socrates back to earth again?" asks Mr. Rigas. "If there is anyone courageous enough to try to disprove it, I would like to make contradictory answer."

With his next "witness" offered in evidence to prove his claim, Mr. Rigas drives home an impressive point.

Douglas Fairbanks, a household word in all movie fandom, is one of Charlie Chaplin's closest friends and is probably his most devoted admirer. The writer has heard the popular Doug laud the great Charlie as his most inspiring mentor. "To me Chaplin is always a source of instructive reflections of vital points of life in which I am interested," Fairbanks has said. And the latter's theories of cinema art, for instance, are based on some of the former's theories. Recall history here: Epicurus based his philosophy upon the atomic theory of Democritus! Epicurus founded the Epicurean school and became equally famous with all other masters! "Need I even add that Douglas Fairbanks is merely the present-day screen name of Epicurus, come back from Athens and the third century before Christ to perpetuate his great philosophical works in the similar environments afforded in Hollywood?" Mr. Rigas asks.

Epicurus added somewhat to the philosophy of Democritus and even improved it, authorities state. For instance, Epicurus taught that peace of mind, based on meditation, is the origin of all good. "If you doubt that Douglas Fairbanks is any different in this regard, you have but to see his matchless achievements in his picture version of 'Robin Hood,' in which a meditation of the peace-building elements of the Twelfth Century forms the crux of the whole entertainment fabric of the story he has caused to be told in film," Mr. Rigas says. "Moreover, the very fact that Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Chaplin are such boon companions offers something to think about since every mortal must agree that if Democritus and Epicurus should meet at the same place in this same modern time, they would be inevitably the same kind of boon companions."

There are enough pictures which fall far short of the standard which can be termed professional, but there is occasionally one so palpably inferior that it should never have been released. Of this latter class the most glaring mistake of recent times was the Metro production of "The Infamous Mrs. Revell," starring Alice Lake. We can attention to this one in particular because it ranks with the very worst films ever revealed to the public and the effect of it is so detrimental to the cinema art that every effort should be exerted to discourage any attempt at repetitions of such hopeless productions. If there was anyone in charge of affairs who knew anything about pictures, he missed an opportunity to do the screen a great service by suppressing it before it could be circulated to do the harm coincident to calling down upon the movies the scorn of thousands of fans rightfully disgruntled over having wasted their time and money on it. Dallas Fitzgerald's direction of "The Infamous Mrs. Revell" was reprehensible enough, but Miss Lake's performance was truly pitiful. She photographed badly and acted worse. Any deluded girl aspiring to gain a chance in pictures would naturally be convinced of it being easy to get onto the silversheet as a result of watching Miss Lake's almost amateurish characterization. If she was ill at the time this picture was photographed, we are sorry for having even alluded to her work, but would divert our criticism to Mr. Fitzgerald in that case. The big and vital point is, the issuing of such a photoplay as "The Infamous Mrs. Revell" injures the screen almost irreparably in some quarters. The effect upon anyone after watching it is a feeling of conviction that the motion picture art is deteriorating and this is a tendency no producer or releasing organization can afford to encourage. There are two practical ways to prevent this dangerous tendency: either do not produce such pictures, or, if they are produced, do not release them.

Elaine Hammerstein seems to have an unquestioned and almost unanimously approved hit at last. It is "One Week of Love," which has taken blase New York by the proverbial storm. The New York American says: "It is extremely well done" and that "Elaine Hammerstein displayed dramatic power" while the New York Morning World gives her credit for being "distinctly Broadway calibre." The New York Journal adds as its tribute that it is "excellent film romance." The New York Globe, speaking of the situations, described them as "very alive and tense." It seems certain "One Week of Love" will have an extended, prosperous vogue and it looks like a good selection for exhibitors with any class of house.

The motion picture industry is playing host to the world here next summer. People are coming from many far places, from many foreign nations to see the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. It will be the greatest entertainment of its kind ever given. It is an opportunity for the motion picture industry to give the outside public a newer and better conception of its infinite possibilities, and of its sincere desire to become even a greater force in national life. This Revue and Exposition not only will be a month of incomparable entertainment attracting tens of thousands of new visitors to Southern California. It will be a great patriotic celebration appropriately commemorating one of the greatest events in American history—the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine. It is a project in which our sister nations of Central and South America are going to participate with the greatest enthusiasm, an event for which President Harding himself has bespoken the support and interest of the whole United States.

The formal opening of the Revue and Exposition—The Premiere—will make Exposition history. Southern California, Los Angeles, Hollywood—are accustomed to unique and brilliant fetes. But this Premiere will surpass in magnitude and interest anything ever attempted before. President Harding has accepted the invitation of Los Angeles to be the city's guest of honor on this occasion, if national business permits. He will be accompanied from Washington by many other high officials and by Latin American diplomats. When the time comes every resident of Southern California will want to attend this Premiere. But attendance at the formal opening will have to be limited. It will be restricted to holders of Patron Certificates. These Certificates are now on sale at $10 each. Purchasers get $12.50 worth of tickets to the Revue and Exposition, including a ticket to the Premiere, with each Patron Certificate. Don't put this off until it's too late. Fill out the application blank printed elsewhere in this issue of Camera! and mail it with your check today to 1005 Hollingsworth Building, Los Angeles.

We endorse every honorable move which gives any promise of moving pictures!

Valentino declares one Antonio Muzii is no brother of his. Muzii be forever denying things?

Deal death to deadly drugs! Let live at liberty no leprous lizard who deals in it illegally! Come, crusaders, and clean 'em up!

Goldwyn's production of "The Christian" is being proclaimed a masterpiece by eastern critics. Good! We rejoice to know "The Christian" is so good, as he should be.

If Dame Rumor is on the right track and there is no disconcerting switching of plans—and if a lot of other things—Charlie Chaplin and Pola Negri will be married next month.

After Eric Von Stroheim finishes "McTeague" he will make a film version of "The Merry Widow," the famous Franz Lehár operetta. So Von is going to continue to waltz around quite pertly—directorially speaking.

It is a favorable time to do things towards a potential upbuilding of film-making, both as a business and as an art. You are not DOING when you "knock." Why deliberately be an iconoclast when by being such you cannot last?

Lillian Gish has gone to Italy to film "The White Sister." It is not to be assumed that she went all the way to that kingdom for realism in spaghetti back-ground since most of the best Italian spaghetti comes from Hoboken, New Jersey.

"Let them all have a chance!" This is the slogan of Camera! And, when we say all, we mean the little and the big, the renowned ones and the unknown ones. It all encompasses an evolution which must never be stopped by mortal selfishness. Filmland can well afford to be the land of freedom of the opportunities.

And now Henrietta Crosman has crossed over the footlights to wax dramatic before the Kleig lights in George Melford's picturization of Earl Derr Biggers' story, "Broadway Broke." If this exodus of artists from the stage continues, it bids fair to develop into a veritable debacle out of which the screen is liable to emerge quite submerged with much talent.

The latest effort to come back is that of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Do you remember them? Well, they have signed up for a Whitman Bennett production and all things being equal, they should be equal to an auspicious return to the screen. Incidentally, this talented duo will serve to help decide the question as to whether the fans want old faces back or new faces introduced.

The crying need of the present cinema period is more of the really stalwart championing of the best interests of the whole motion picture industry and less petty selfishness. Why let a need cry on interminably? Is it not better for each individual to lay aside his hammer with which he "knocks" and his axe he seeks to have ground? Is there anything easier of accomplishment than a yielding to a spirit of constructive friendship towards all fellow-men? Or are we still too far away from a simple idealism long since overdue?

With Grauman's new Metropolitan theatre open and none of the other almost countless moving picture houses anything like closed for want of patrons, Los Angeles makes more strides towards ranking with New York and Chicago as an amusement center par excellence. It is indeed fitting to pay tribute to Sid Grauman's showmanship since this quality of his has counted more than any other single force in making this metropolis so admirably metropolitan in this respect.

We doubt the oft-repeated assertion that there is an insidious movement on foot to form a motion picture trust. We do not believe there is any man or any group of men in the field with enough temerity to attempt any such impossible monopolizing. And, frankly, if we ever do discover convincing evidence of any such scheme, we shall do our best to knock the whole plan into a cocked hat, because if there ever was a business too democratic to be shackled by restraint of open trade, the film business is that business.

Several readers have asked why Camera! does not publish a department of instruction in photoplay-writing. Our answer is, we do not believe a magazine even with almost unlimited space can teach aspirants how to write acceptable screen literature. This is a task for a highly organized school with facilities for conducting a scientific course—such an institution as the Palmer Photoplay Corporation conducts for instance and—successfully. To ask a periodical of any sort to teach so intricate a subject is like asking it to provide a Yale or Harvard course in any of the classics. It simply cannot be done with any degree of genuine helpfulness.

AMERICANISM RETURNING

By ROWLAND V. LEE

Contemporary English critics, with an understanding perspective of American life, complain that true American characters are not being represented in current motion pictures—that productions made in this country do not reflect typical American life to the outside world.

If such criticism is true, then the cause probably lies with the varying production eras which have followed each other since motion pictures became popular a decade or more ago. With many steps between, the vogue has changed from the early Westerns to that of the costume offering which has had its inning in the past year; comedy likewise has evolved from slapstick to feature.

But has there been a vogue of films which represent the contemporary American life? That there has not is no doubt due to the fact that we regard the general environment in which we circulate from day to day as commonplace, and, regarding it as such, we do not care to have it presented to us on the screen when we seek relaxation.

Now that the various vogues and fads have had their day, there will be a growth of productions with all-American themes. I do not mean that there will be a precipitous rush of such productions, but I do mean that the number of motion pictures devoting their subject matter to the contemporary age—really and truly concentrating on this age—will steadily increase. What we believe to be commonplace will not appear so with careful and patient direction, with sincere adaptation and with intensive acting (not over-acting). Such productions as these will be the sort which will preserve a faithful record of the present years for future generations. By the sense of sight, they will supply what the most brilliant of present-day writers on present-day subjects won't be able to command among their unborn readers. Such a production as "Alice Adams," based on Booth Tarkington's Pulitzer prize novel, will assist the future writer, who writes in retrospection, from depending too much on his imagination for facts and customs concerning the bygone age—our present age. We must remember that what would appear drab and ordinary to us today, will appear romantic a hundred years hence.

Martha Mattox, who has just finished playing a villainous Bolshevik in "Thundering Dawn"

HIS COMPETITORS WILL BE FEW

If you had a coat that you believed lucky, would you have enough faith in it to venture into a tiger's cage with the garment about you, expecting it to keep the beast away?

The chances are, you wouldn't.

But Jack Geddings has such a coat. Geddings was once one of the best known "stunt men" in motion pictures. Now he has abandoned the stunt field and is playing big roles in regular fashion.

He possesses a big coat that he wore in some of his most daring stunts, from which he escaped unscathed. When his role in the production of "The Tiger's Claw," a Paramount picture, demanded that he go into a tiger's cage, he refused unless privileged to wear the "lucky coat."

The funny thing is, the tiger didn't even growl at Geddings. Maybe the coat worked.

Virginia Brown Faire, is now playing an important role in "The Cricket on the Hearth"

AMERICAN DARKY HUMOR

Gaston Glass, romantic hero of the screen and a French hero of the recent World War, declares it would be difficult to select the funniest story he has ever heard and he frankly denies having any ability to create jokes. He gives a negro dough-boy of the American army credit for amusing him most with deliberate attempts at humor and in connection with this dusky laugh-provoker he recalls a lull after a fierce skirmish on the French front during which Mr. Glass, as an officer of the day, was making a tour of inspection of some trenches the Boche troops had only just vacated.

"I was surprised to find this colored American soldier alone in one of the trenches engrossed in scratching himself most vigorously.

"What's the matter, dough-boy—cooties?"

"No sah, ah ain't got no cooties, sah," he replied. "Dem things what I'se got I calls worse'n cooties."

"What could be worse than cooties?" I asked.

"Dem things what I got—math'matical bugs, I calls dem."

"Mathematical bugs! What are they like?"

"Dey am l'ak," the negro replied, still scratching with all his might. "Well boss, a math'matical bug am a bug what subtracts from yo' happiness, divides yo' 'tention, adds to yo' misery an' multiplies like de devil."

Gertrude Astor, who will play in a second picture in the East, after finishing "The Ne'er-Do-Well"

THE BROTHERS-IN-ART

Both educated as artists. . . One the actor, the other the interpreter of "Faust". . . Both writer-directors, and both designers of their own sets. . .

These are the bonds of artistic brotherhood between George D. Baker, who is writing the script for "The Easiest Way," and Ferdinand Earle, who is directing it.

At the outset of his career George D. Baker earned his living as an illustrator. For years he exhibited paintings and designs. He took many prizes in composition.

Ferdinand Earle studied painting under Bouguereau and Whistler, and exhibited in the Paris Salon.

Baker took to the stage and played in "Faust." His first role was Valentine. Afterward for an entire year he starred as Dr. Faust himself.

Earle long dreamed of an extraordinary motion picture—the entire "Faust" of Goethe, interpreted in terms of beauty and motion. Work on it is proceeding now.

Then Baker took to the screen. He wrote plays and directed them and acted in them—and had a lot to do with designing the sets and setting the lights!

And when Earle made his first film ("The Rubaiyat") he all but acted in it. And he designed every set and directed its lighting.

"With his vast experience, Mr. Baker is peculiarly fitted to write my present script," Mr. Earle says. "He made Nazimova beloved to screen fans through his masterly production of 'Revelation' He is now working in harmonious accord with David O. Selznick and me to do for Theda Bara what he did for Alla Nazimova."

Filmdom's Exposition to Have Queens Galore

Seven counties of Southern California and the lower portion of the San Joaquin Valley extending as far north as Fresno, will be given an opportunity to select a Queen to reign for a day, to be set apart and advertised as her day, at the first annual American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, to be given in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, next summer in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine.

The seven counties asked to select from among their fairest daughters Queens to preside at the Revue and Exposition on the days given over to feting each respective county, are San Diego, Imperial, San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange, Ventura, and Santa Barbara. The lower portion of the San Joaquin Valley is the eighth district from which a Queen is to be chosen to preside at the big celebration on the day given over to that district.

The keenest competition is anticipated in this contest, for in addition to the honor attached to its winning, a cash prize of $200 will be given the lucky girl elected Queen in each of these eight districts. Prizes of $100 and $50 will also be given respectively to those who are second and third in each district. Each Queen may give a ball in honor of the interest of geographical district she represents. She will also be eligible for the grand prize of $500, competition for which is open to the winners of all classes, although the lucky girl winning this grand prize will not be eligible for a class prize.

The Queen of the Premiere, or formal opening of the Revue and Exposition, will be chosen from within the motion picture industry, since the industry is sponsoring the entire event. Those of the film industry who have subscribed for Patron Certificates will select the most popular motion picture star from their numbers. A great deal of rivalry among the various studios is expected in this contest. While the Queen of the Premiere will not be eligible for any of the cash prizes, she will be highly honored on the opening night. She will ride in state in the electrical parade on the eve of the Premiere; with her court she will accompany President Harding and other famous guests of the Revue and Exposition on a tour of inspection of exhibits and concessions; she will lead the grand march with the President or some other high dignitary at the Stars' Ball; she will press the electric button to ignite the opening bomb of a pyrotechnic display announcing to the world the opening of the great event, immediately after the President's proclamation; she will act as hostess at the Exposition Breakfast immediately following; and will officiate at such other functions as may be added to the program.

Plans are now taking form for the operation of from three to seven transcontinental trains to bring theatre owners to the Revue and Exposition from all parts of the United States. In addition to this there will be a special train running from Washington to Los Angeles and return, via many of the principal cities of the United States, bringing to the Premiere the Presidential party, Latin-American diplomats, and the United States Marine Band. The coming event is expected to attract the greatest congregation of world famous men and women that Southern California has ever seen.

From U to You By MALCOLM S. BOYLAN

"Merry-Go-Round" is finished.

After eight months' steady work Rupert Julian has finished the production of the Viennese story for which some of the most elaborate sets ever built at Universal City were used.

One of the largest casts of well-known players ever assembled for a single picture, appear in "Merry-Go-Round." Principal players in the all-star cast are: Norman Kerry, Mary Philbin, Caesar Gravine, George Hackathorne, George Siegman, Dale Fuller, Lillian Sylvester, Spottiswoode Aitken, Dorothy Wallace, Al. Edmundson, Charles L. King, Penwick Oliver, Sidney Bracy, Anton Vaverka, Joseph Prichard and Maurice Talbot.

Jack Sullivan, Julian's assistant, is now working with Wallace Worsley on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," on which he and James Dugan are the assistants.

Gladys Walton's current vehicle in production at Universal City under King Baggett's direction, "The Chicken That Came Home to Roost," a Cosmopolitan magazine story published two months ago, is all about "the town scandal," involving principal characters of the story. It's a tale of chorus girl life, a small town and a few other common elements of life.

"The Town Scandal" is an expression that really embraces everything in the story, while "The Chicken That Came Home to Roost" would cause a panic in the electrical sign business if used. So what could be more natural than that "The Town Scandal" should be selected for the title? It has been, and it will be a lot snappier name than the old one.

Neely Edwards' current comedy starring vehicle at Universal City, where he has been making the "Nervy Ned" series with the support of Bert Roach, Gertrude Olmstead and others, is called "A Hard Boiled Yegg." It is not a story of a Sunday school picnic or a convention of Coue fans.

The Fourth Street viaduct, Los Angeles, furnishes one of the thrill scenes for "The Phantom Fortune," the chapter play of success and business acumen which Robert F. Hill is directing for Universal with William Desmond in the starring role and Esther Ralston opposite him.

Preparation on "Up the Ladder," the Broadway play by Owen David in which Reginald Denny and Virginia Valli will be co-starred by Universal, is nearing its close and production will start within two weeks.

Hobart Henley, featured Universal director who handled the filming of "The Flirt," will direct. A. P. Younger is preparing the scenario. Willard Louis, Dorothea Wolbert, Bert Roach and other players will support Miss Valli and Denny.

Elizabeth Alexander wrote "The Self-Made Wife" as a serial for the Saturday Evening Post, and the Universal Pictures Corporation has purchased it for production as an all-star film play.

While Clopin does his worst villainy in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the Universal-super-Jewell special starring Lon Chaney, and Esmeralda dances her way through tragedy under the gloomy eye of the hunchback, Raymond Hatton, cast in the role of Gringoire, the poet, withdraws himself from the juggling rhymster's garb to play a perfectly modern role in "Trimmed in Scarlet," the all-star production which Jack Conway is directing. There is a stretch of four or five weeks during which the poet is free from his fifteenth century character and may play the dress suit dub to his heart's desire in the Conway effort.

Other players in the filming of the stage play, "Trimmed in Scarlet," are Kathryn Whyfore of Tall Heroes, Gaston's Beard, "Et Al"

By RAY H. LEEK

Pursuing the columns of that indefatigable seeker after film truths, Grace Kingsley, we discover the tiny heroine of yesteryear is rapidly giving way to her taller and more statuesque sister.

While this obviously is true we beg to differ, humbly but none the less insistently, with the reasons advanced by Miss Kingsley for this change in the style of feminine favorites. She is convinced that it is because some of our little favorites have grown up, because the foreign play requires the taller heroine and, generally, because the trials and tribulations of the older and more mature woman are just as poignant and interesting as those of the flapper.

But isn't it a fact, Miss Kingsley, that the real reason rests with you girls?

Can't this change be traced to the fact that you are demanding that your heroes be taller and taller?

And—if you give us the ultimate low-down on this intimate question—isn't it true that all of your sex prefer to be able to stand within convenient reach of your particular hero at the moment of the fade-out clinch that is the ultimate goal of romance, either in real life or on the screen?

I need not tell one who is all-seeing as you, Grace, that Elinor Glyn really spoke for all her sex when she named Orville Caldwell—the tallest actor now working before the camera—as the "most physically perfect man on the stage or screen."

And I probably tell you nothing new when I suggest that the ever increasing popularity of such six-footers as Tommy Meighan, Orville Caldwell, Kenneth Harlan and Elliott Dexter, is largely due to your demand for height as well as fascinating personality.

As you know, Grace, you and your sisters always have chosen our screen idols. The movement for the taller heroine seems to be a direct result of your demand for girls who will better match up to your male ideals.

Now 'fess up. Isn't that the truth?

One of the favorite fictions of the playwright or author is that of the stage heroine who turns a weary face from the glamour of the footlights to yearn for a duck farm on Long Island, or a country store across in Jersey.

Which makes the discovery of such an individual in real life all the more interesting. Truly Shattuck, whose brilliant career on the vaudeville and speaking stage has made her name a familiar one wherever the lights burn brightly, admits to have nourished a secret ambition of her own.

It is to make practical use of all those choice recipes for roasts, puddings, salads and cakes, which she has been collecting throughout her professional career.

And now realization of her dream has come. Miss Shattuck has changed the sign that hangs over the cozy cafe on the Schulberg studio lot to announce that she will preside over its destinies in the future.

So the famous folk who dine there daily—practically all of whom have laughed and cried with Truly from one side of the footlights or the other—now will have an opportunity to consume the products of her gigantic range.

Note the return of that vamp of all vamps, Theda Bara. Although Theda has submitted to the direction of a man who might be expected to know much about vamping himself—none other than Ferdinand Pinney Earle—it is said that she will go in for more human and less artificial roles than those that marked her former screen activities.

To the writers of "why-do-they-do-it" letters to the magazines it may seem that picture players scramble through their roles with no regard for little details that jar the tender sensibilities of the theatre goer. But the facts are the reverse.

A straggly beard, so often required when an actor is pictured as being away from his favorite barber for an indefinite period, once was suggested by dark blue grease paint.

Cesena, Italy, is going to stage a homecoming celebration next May and Monty Banks, the popular comedy star, who was born and reared there has been invited to be a special guest of honor and to deliver a speech on the opening day. Mr. Banks is trying to figure out a way to get away from his Hollywood film duties long enough to make the trip, as he says he has had a speech stored up in him for the last year, and anyway, he would like to see his mother, who still lives in far-away Cesena.

Alan Hale, who in his earlier career made long strides on a start up the ladder of fame as a grand opera singer, but who was forced to abandon his ambition because of losing his singing voice, has just regained sufficient vocal power to "hit" the notes of the upper register after five years, all of which is the result of an operation he had performed on his throat recently. However, Mr. Hale indicates he prefers to remain in pictures permanently.

Here's another chance for Dame Rumor to circulate a lot of wild stories. Muriel MacCormac was the guest of Mickey McBan in over a recent week-end in his fine home situated in fashionable Laurel Canyon of Hollywood. But, the chance is short-lived since the mothers of both were also present and also in view of the fact that neither of these screen artists is much more than four years of age. They are boon companions as a result of playing together in Gasnier's latest picture, "Poor Men's Wives."

Leon Bary, the popular French star who has just returned from Truckee, Calif., with the Colin Campbell company making a big William Fox special, says this is the first time in three years he has walked in snow and that this time he walked over and through it where it was nearly thirty feet deep. He says old-timers in that section told him the snowfall this winter was the heaviest in twenty years there.

When Louis Gasnier returns to Los Angeles from a business trip to New York next week, he will start immediately to film "Mother's-In-Law" in which Gaston Glass will be the featured player. Mr. Glass says when it comes to the art of make-believe he is willing to tackle anything once, but he is not so sure of his inclination if he were to be confronted by mother's-in-law in real life, and, he fought in the World War with distinction and everything, too.

Helen Kesler, Jimmy Aubrey's leading lady who recently took a flyer into the dramatic field by playing in two Rupert Hughes pictures for Goldwyn in succession, does not claim to be a designer of gowns, but she has "invented" a new style of dress for milady. It is a combination affair with features suggesting the sartorial tastes of several nationalities and is said to be quite unique as well as attractive. Miss Kesler's idea is that such a dress will be becoming to American girls since America is the melting-pot of the world and her women should dress accordingly.

Lloyd Hughes, who expects to start soon in his first starring vehicle for Thomas H. Ince, has been utilizing the spare moments of a week's vacation to catch up with the job of answering his fan mail, and, he claims that with the aid of a secretary, he succeeded in getting into the mails a grand total of 850 letters in six days. Evidently this thing of being popular is not entirely devoid of its draw-backs if one will take into consideration the fact that it is a lot of work to reply to so many letters in a single week.

Gloria Hope, whose portrayal of the character of Teola Graves in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country," stamps her as one of the best emotional actresses of the screen, is worried because someone started going the rounds of the press a story to the effect that she had been a school teacher prior to making her advent into motion pictures. As a matter of fact, Miss Hope was only fifteen years old when she made her debut on the screen and she was scarcely through with her own schooling let alone being ready to teach anyone else

By One of the Men

Man born of woman is of few days and full of movies. He goeth forth in the evening full of joy, seeking entertainment at the picture emporium, and afterward he returneth to his roof tree sad of heart and feeling that he hath spent his kopecks in vain. He taketh with him on these jaunts the wife of his bosom and the children of his heart because they prefer the movie before ice-cream cones and salted peanuts. It is a joy to him to read aloud the sub-titles to his heirs in order that his neighbors may be bored and made peevish. His pleasure increaseth because the intelligent usher placeth him where he rejoiceth not to be and the speed fiend in the projection booth keepeth the film racing along on high so that he hath to get an aeroplane to keep up with it. Yea, the poor old fish spendeth his guilders for entertainment, and instead he is handed a pickle and a stale pretzel.

He putteth up in patience with such treatment for many moons, and then after his edges are all frayed he goeth to the manager of the movie show and hollereth his head off in the hope that he may get a hand dealt from the top.

The manager telleth him speedily where to head in, and the poor old carp considereth the world hard and stony, yea he weepeth briny tears and groaneth in the spirit.

Then he curseth—all movie shows and all movie folk and dammeth the man who invented film, but to no purpose. He getteth himself all peeved and his temperature ariseth as a batch of buckwheat, but it profiteth him nothing.

Then cometh the day when he goeth to the theatre at a net cost of eight slats for himself and family, and there he seeth a bunch of junk that would take all the joy out of a Pharasee funeral. For three hours he listeneth to the mournful pleasantries of ancient Chaldaea; he filleth his lamps with the gyrations of a parcel of frowsy old Janes; he mauleth his ears with much rag-time and delighteth not in voices that give forth music like the horse-fiddle and the hurdy-gurdy, the sack-but and the psaltery. He goeth to his home sore in body, lean of pocket, and perturbed in mind. And so he mopeth around until the next night, when with a joyous heart he fareth forth into the fairway to find a movie show.

There, surrounded by his family, the weary old dog sitteth himself comfortably in the cloistered light of the picture house and with joy and gladness in his busted old heart he listeneth to the soft strains of the organ and giveth his soul to peace. He looketh at the silent figures as things come and go upon the screen and admireth the fresh charm of the landscape and the panorama of beauty and loveliness it unfolds before his enchanted gaze. His ears are not offended by the maudlin tones of cracked and frazzled voices, and he noteth with joy that no ancient but worthy cronies cavort upon the screen. He chortleth, with glee and giveth thanks that he liveth in the days of the movies. Yea, he breaketh forth in a blithesome roundelay of praise that man born of woman cannot do better than keep himself full of movies, for in so doing he keepeth himself not full of other things. Selah.

Jacques Tyrol, well known director and producer of his own pictures, has organized his own company which will be known as the Jacques Tyrol Productions, Inc. He is now selecting his organization for production. His first two stories will be "Renunciation," and "The Criminal," which will be done in Germany and Italy.

Bill Bailey to his friends, William to the public, will appear next week at the Little Theatre, Forty-fourth Street, in a new play called "Polly Preferred," by Guy Bolton and Winchell Smith. Bill is one of the old-timers who frolicked at Essanay in the early days.

Nazimova has made a sensational hit with her new production, "Salome," at the Criterion Theatre.

Eugene V. Brewster, the motion picture magazine magnate, in a hearing at court this week, admitted paying all of Miss Corliss Palmer's bills and living expenses. His wife is suing for a divorce.

Lefty Flynn is playing the leading male role opposite Alice Brady in her newest Paramount picture, "The Snow Bride."

The Selznick Picture Corporation is going to remove its headquarters to Los Angeles and close its offices here. This will be the first attempt of any big cinema concern to transact all its business outside of New York City.

THE SILENT TREND

Although replete with old-time dramatics of the variety devoid of the power to ring true, "Pawn Ticket No. 210" is far from being a bad picture and it contains enough entertainment value to satisfy the average audience of a popular-price house. Shirley Mason, the star, gives a pleasing performance and has little trouble in dominating every situation in which she participates, not having serious competition from members of her supporting cast. However, the manner in which Dorothy Manners handles a small part, which figures unpleasantly in the plot, makes one wish the powers that be at the William Fox studios had given her more to do, because she displays very promising possibilities as a character delineator of keen and contagious intelligence.

"The Hero" should prove a ten-strike for both Louis Gasnier as a director and B. P. Schulberg as a producer. It should also serve to enhance the popularity of Gaston Glass, John Sainpolis and Martha Mattox as inspired photoplayers nor will it injure Barbara La Marr and Doris Pawn. In fact, this picture is blessed with a well-balanced cast of players, who seemed prone to vie with each other for highest honors in histrionic quality. "The Hero" is a story which in the processes of filming has been humanized to such an extent as to have quite universal appeal. It is a picture which few will be able to criticize seriously since it approaches the flawless class. When such finished artists as Mr. Glass, Mr. Sainpolis and Miss Mattox figure in so many compelling situations as abound in this picture, one is forced to admit that the matter of interpreting the silent drama has become a true art of unbound potentiality.

Helene Chadwick takes first honors in Rupert Hughes' "Gimme." She once more proves that in her line of parts, she cannot be easily excelled. Never before has she shown so much of that magnetic personality which first won recognition for her. As Motion Picture News agrees: "Never has she appeared to better advantage." As a photoplay "Gimme" ranks with "Dangerous Curves Ahead," and, like that previous Hughes success, it is more of an absorbing study of an interesting phase of life than it is a story. It contains one mistake—the great and the big Henry B. Walthall in a minor small part. This great genius should never be humiliated to do so little in any picture. A "bit" actor should have been engaged to play his role.

There seems to be no doubt as to the status of the Goldwyn production of Hall Caine's great story, "The Christian"—it is as the consensus of opinion proclaims: a cinema masterpiece. It is a motion picture which tempts one to exhaust the supply of laudatory adjectives. It is a contribution which seems sure of focusing attention upon the screen as the ideal medium for expressing exalted human feeling in the midst of dramatic expression. Maurice Tourneur is conceded a victory in proving his right to a claim to genius. Richard Dix and Mae Busch will be received with acclaim such as never has been their lot before. At least a dozen others in the cast cover themselves with glory, notably Gareth Hughes, Mahlon Hamilton, Claude Gillingwater, Phyllis Haver and Joseph Dowling. "The Christian" will do a great service for the motion picture industry.

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

The most outstanding tendency of the moment is the signing of long-term contracts with the Goldwyn and Schulberg interests showing the most avidity for "tying up" the services of talented people. This is a healthy tendency since it indicates a strong confidence in the future prospects of the cinema as an industry.

There seems to be no halting of the movement towards special feature productions with a consequent gradual abolishing of so-called program pictures. Universal, Fox and Lasky are the only concerns producing program reels in any considerable quantities and they are concentrating most of their best efforts on specials. The day of doom for the old-time series of photoplays in one machine-like tempo seems at hand.

That the photoplay has won its place in the sun is shown in a recent survey which revealed the fact that most all the most conservative newspapers in the world are giving a worth-while amount of space to screen news and gossip after a majority of them had held so aloof for years as to justify accusations of ignoring the whole industry. The generalizing and intensifying of public interest in the movies is responsible for bringing to bear a pressure that even the most conservative publication could not combat or flout.

The popularity of all-star casts in marked preference to the single star attraction is approaching a high and commanding public crest on the wave of public approval and the new policy has reached a point where it is common practice to assemble a dozen or more recognized stars in one cast. If this means anything, it means the public wants no more performances of mediocre ability on the screen.

Censorship as a weapon for advocates of all kinds of "blue" ideas is well started on the toboggan at last. The last election weakened the hands of reformers. Simultaneously it strengthened the common people's chances of choosing their own screen fare as seems to be their constitutional right.

Optimism is on the upward bound now more than ever before. Judging by announced preparations, studio activities will be record-breaking in the Southern California field ere 1923 has run its course.

William DeMille's best directorial points are revealed in "World's Applause" in which Bebe Daniels stars. In this picture is unfolded a fascinating story of the life of an actress. The exciting piece-de-resistance is evolved cleverly by logically entangling this heroine in the amazing skein of a murder mystery. Here is a case of the original story, written especially for the screen, comes into its own. Clara Beranger has provided a worthy structure of material with an even balance of picture value and literary strength. She shows once more that it is a combination which can be conceived and developed with the latitude and the limitations of camera angles in mind. In short, this photoplay is a source of buoying encouragement to the advocate of the elevating of original stories to greater importance. Lewis Stone, who does good work as a matter of habit now, offers an unusually impressive characterization. Kathryn Williams adds to her laurels in a successful handling of a difficult role, that of a victim of consuming jealousy, who, in a fit of anger, kills her husband. Adolphe Menjou displays his usual finesse in drawing a characterization which is cameo-like in its effect, and, he further insures his prestige as a master of the dramatic art. Last but not least, Miss Daniels gives an excellent performance in which she shows a versatility in the art of running the whole gamut of emotions.

If Hoot Gibson's popularity grows by leaps and bounds, he will deserve it. He is stepping along at a lively pace in his graduation from the class of cowboys. He is proving himself to be a splendid actor and never has he demonstrated his susceptibility to augmenting his knowledge of a fine artistry more than he does in "Kindled Courage," his latest Universal picture. He is the biggest asset of this production and his work in an ingratiating role is the element you remember when you go away from the attraction. Most any audience will like the irrepressible Hoot in this one, because he succeeds in transcending every other element without seeming to try. He is naturally natural, as it were. "Kindled Courage" is a western story which does not seem as hackneyed as the average one with such a locale. Hoot does no riding or shooting as has been his wont for such a long time. Through sheer acting ability he succeeds in creating plenty of dramatic tension without resorting to wild action. It would seem advisable for Hoot to continue to pursue his present course, which is an innovation certain to increase his following.

Seldom have disparaging rumors been so rife as has been the case during the protracted interim between the completion of Jack Pickford's picture, "Garrison's Finish," and the pre-view of it. No one seemed prone to concede this feature the slightest redeeming quality and it had been freely predicted that this return of an old favorite to the screen after two years would result in only dismal failure. Now that the leading critics have been given opportunity to see it and pass judgment it comes to pass that Jack has a starring vehicle which passes muster after all! The review published by this week's Exhibitors Herald is typical of the spirit in which this new Pickford effort is greeted by most of them. "One of the best vehicles Jack Pickford ever had," this trade paper admits. "He fits into the part of the little jockey as though it was written especially for him." It seems reasonably certain that this production will fall far short of serving to ruin Jack as so many seemed to think it would. All the more credit is due the star because of the fact that the direction is not marvelous and his support is not perfect. Madge Bellamy, who plays the leading feminine role opposite him, is

DOPE OCTUPUS HAD EYE ON STUDENTS

The war against the drug ring is gathering momentum and for the first time in the recent history of this country, there seems to be really bright prospects of the forces of law and order accomplishing the extermination of this very worst bane to society. That the activities of the dope peddlers center in Los Angeles and environs because of the presence of so many prosperous people, including hundreds of high-salaried motion picture artists is recognized by no less an observer than the United States Government and is evidenced in the marshalling of official leaders here. United States Prohibition Commissioner Royal A. Haynes and Col. L. G. Nutt, head of the narcotic division, have arrived from Washington to get firsthand information of conditions in Southern California and there are strong indications of their work presaging a sweeping, nation-wide probe of the liquor and drug situation by Congress.

It has been known by many that drug peddlers have experienced little difficulty in plying their nefarious trade in especially Hollywood and there are startling rumors to the effect that up to the time of making public the cause of the late Wallace Reid's illness, a crew of these criminals was concentrating efforts around cafes frequented at night by older high school students out for an innocent good time in the meeting-places of film folks with the hopes of brushing shoulders with them. Undoubtedly there has been some high-handed attempts to increase an illicit patronage by starting more unfortunates on the downward path of being addicts to narcotics. Meanwhile there are some former addicts in the film colony who could do humanity a great service by informing the proper authorities of the details of the simplicity of getting drugs illegally delivered within a few minutes after making a telephone call.

A review of the activities of foes to the drug evil reveals William Randolph Hearst prominently in the foreground as a leader in the fight. The power he is able to wield through his many big publications should count prodigiously in putting the whole drug ring to rout. Many congressman and several United States senators have indicated their intentions of going to the front in this battle royal and if a proper zeal can be maintained long enough to allow for a devising of a way to ferret out the men higher up, the rich men who finance the whole drug smuggling enterprise, and, if politics can be kept in abeyance, it is certain some gratifying results will come soon.

All elements in Filmland are a unit in demanding summary action to oust dope peddlers from the center of film producing activities.

Providing Chinese Spirit

Tom Gubbins is acting as technical advisor to Director Tod Browning in the making of "Drifting," a Chinese story featuring Priscilla Dean. Mr. Gubbins started his career in pictures back in 1915 with Universal and has been affiliated with practically every big producing unit in the Southern California field since.

BLONDE BABY STAR IS HIT IN BRUNETTE ROLE

Rowland V. Lee wanted a Chinese child who could do some real acting in an important episode in his new picture, "Desire," which is now in the course of production at the Metro studios. The director's desire for "Desire" brought a motley array of Mongolian juveniles to the studio, and, one after another was given a try-out, but all failed to register the thought desired. Finally Mr. Lee was obliged to give up his plan of having a real Chinese child and sent for Muriel Frances Dana, the popular, little four-year-old starlet who had just finished a long engagement with Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory." Little Miss Dana is a blonde and bears no facial resemblance to the yellow race whatsoever, but she has a reputation for possessing an ability to act with true understanding of dramatic proportions. Therefore, it became a matter of make-up to fit the type. Very soon the baby blonde blossomed forth with jet-black, straight hair, almond-shaped eyes, high cheek bones and in the attire of children of China. It is said she really looked more like a Chinese than most Chinese do! And, for several days of this week, she was kept busy by Director Lee "putting across" a part, which though small is vital to the story. Her artistic performance was such as to inspire many expressions of admiration in Metro circles, according to reports.

"SUZANNA" BRINGS MACK SENNETT A $10,000 SUIT

Mack Sennett will be the defendant in a suit for $10,000 brought by Linton Wells, who declares he is the author of Sennett's current screen success, "Suzanna," and who complains that credit as such has been denied him and that all authorship rights have been credited to Harry Sinclair Drago. Wells, in his complaint, says he was engaged by Sennett to write the novel, based on an agreement that he was to receive a certain amount for the screen rights and also a bonus and all royalties accruing from the sale of the book. He declares he has received neither compensation nor authorship credit for his work, and that Mr. Drago's work on the story was limited to only a few minor changes.

EXPO TEMPLES WILL RISE SOON

Architects are now engaged in working out preliminary plans for the buildings to be erected at Exposition Park for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, to be given here next June under the auspices of the motion picture industry in celebration of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial. While permanent structures are not permitted by the nature of the event or the place where it is to be held, a permanent administration building is being planned near the entrance of the huge Los Angeles Coliseum now nearing completion. It will remain for future use after the Revue and Exposition.

The general architectural plan is said to be one of striking beauty and originality. The Spanish motif has been decided upon in compliment to the Latin-American nations participating in the event. The entire technical facilities of the motion picture industry will be available for the Revue and Exposition engineers.

It is likely that a building, or series of them, for the exclusive use of women during the celebration, will also be erected. Some of the leading women of Los Angeles have volunteered their services to aid the motion picture industry in giving this huge international celebration suitably to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine's promulgation. At a conference this week, Frank B. Davison, director general of the Revue and Exposition, outlined the plans to portray in pageantry the high lights of the New World's history. This will be done in conjunction with a month of entertainment such as only could be given with the wealth of artistic and dramatic talent of the local film colony. It was agreed that in this series of pageants, the part women have played in the upbuilding of the Western hemisphere should receive particular attention. It is likely that the many influential women's organizations of Southern California will be represented at the month's fiesta.

Several studios are already reported to be grooming candidates for the election of Queen of the Premiere. The Queen for the opening night will be selected from within the motion picture industry.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Some of This Week's Film News You May Have Overlooked.

Gertrude Claire has been engaged for the Nat Ross picture under production at Universal.

Louise Fazenda will play the Swedish maid character in "Main Street," Warner Brothers' forthcoming production.

Metro Pictures Corporation announces that in addition to distributing the Fred Niblo productions presented by Louis B. Mayer, is will serve as the releasing agency for Reginald Barker's productions, another important unit of the Mayer forces.

The most recent addition to the rapidly growing Goldwyn stock company is Raymond Griffith, who, it was announced yesterday, has been signed to a long-term contract, coincident with the announcement that he will play Sheridan Scot the "crime defector" of "The Rear Car," which, in Carey Wilson's screen version is entitled "Red Lights," to be directed by Clarence Badger.

"The Eleventh Hour" is rapidly drawing close to the "zero hour" of production. The climax of the big Fox production, starring Shirley Mason and Charles "Buck" Jones, has been built up by Director Bernard Durning and the powerful situations, lived by a strong supporting cast headed by Edward Martin-del and Alan Hale, are rapidly nearing conclusion. It is expected that the picture will be completed in the early part of February.

Rowland V. Lee has entered the fourth week in the direction of "Desire" at the Metro studios. This production is planned to be one of the highlights in Metro's recently expanded program of releases as indicated by the cast which is appearing under Lee's direction — Marguerite de la Motte, Estelle Taylor, David Butler, John Bowers, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Hank Mann, Chester Conklin, Joseph Dowling, Ralph Lewis, Lucille Hutton and Edward Connelly.

Thomas Geraghty, one of the most prominent figures in the motion picture industry, arrived in Hollywood from New York last week, and has announced he will immediately commence to prepare the scenario for "Hollywood," the spectacular James Cruze production. Mr. Geraghty has been permanently assigned to the western studios of the Paramount organization, although it could not be ascertained as to what position he will fill. It is generally understood, however, that he will fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Frank Woods, former chief supervising director.

Albert Lewin, former professor of English in the University of Missouri, has been added to King Vidor's production staff at the Goldwyn studios. Vidor's first picture under his new association will be "Three Wise Fools."

King Vidor has just completed writing the last sequence of his screen version of "Three Wise Fools" which will be the first production he will make for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation under his new contract with that organization.

Warner Brothers are to have the largest interior motion picture stage in existence, according to the report. It will measure 140 feet by 370 feet. They expect to have the new stages and executive offices finished by the first of March.

According to current rumors, Guy Bates Post has severed his connections with Richard Walton Tully, because of Mr. Post's contention that he was neglected in the matter of enjoying credit for being financially interested in photoplays produced by Mr. Tully, and that he was publicized only as the featured player.

Fifteen photoplay critics will pre-view the Universal production, "The Merry Go Round," within the next week. Director Rupert Julian will present this production for criticism before it is cut, and the film will run about twenty reels in length. Following suggestions from the audience of critics, the film will be cut and will be about twelve reels when released.

M. Coue, apostle of auto-suggestion, will appear in a two-reel educational film which will be produced by the Motion Pictures Arts Corporation of New York. The story, written by Elmore Leffingwell, will advance the outstanding points of Coue's theory of self-healing by auto-suggestion, and the proceeds of the picture will be applied to the founding of a Coue Institute in New York City.

The artistic performances of Mae Busch in "The Christian" and in "Brothers Under the Skin," have prompted the Goldwyn organization to insure themselves of Miss Busch's services, via the contract route. As a result, Miss Busch will concentrate her histrionic efforts at the Goldwyn studios for the next five years. At the present time she is playing the leading feminine role in Rupert Hughes' "Souls For Sale," which will follow the releasing of "The Christian." It is announced Miss Busch has recovered from her injuries sustained when she was struck by an automobile recently.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has announced the purchase of theatres and film exchanges formerly controlled by the Southern Enterprises, for approximately $1,900,000. The exchanges and playhouses are operated throughout the southern states, with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia.

Three prominent figures in cinema circles have been selected for the cast which will enact Eric Von Stroheim's "McTeague." Sylvia Ashton, known internationally for her characterization of mother parts, will portray the role of Mrs. Sieppe. Dale Fuller, who won recognition in Von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives," will play the part of Maria. Jean Hersholt, the villainous Ben Letts of Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country," will have the important heavy role.

"The Meanest Man in the World," the celebrated George M. Cohan stage success, will serve as the initial production to be made by the Principal Pictures Corporation, recently organized by Sol Lesser. Bert Lytell will be seen in the title role of this picture, supported by either Eileen Percy or ZaZu Pitts. It is rumored Mr. Lytell has signed a contract with this producing unit, to star in a series of Harold Bell Wright pictures, of which Mr. Lesser has purchased the screen rights.

Big things are happening around the Joseph M. Schenck camp. Last week it was announced Frank Lloyd had been engaged to direct forthcoming Norma Talmadge productions, and that Willard Mack, famous stage and screen writer, had been signed to act in an advisory capacity on all pictures starring both Norma and Constance Talmadge. It was also announced that "Ashes of Vengeance," a romantic French story written by H. B. Somerville, will serve as Norma Talmadge's next starring vehicle.

There seems to be a mystery regarding the present whereabouts of Mabel Normand. Although she was scheduled to start enacting the starring role of the next Mack Sennett picture about three weeks ago, and that she was expected to be present at the premiere showing of her current screen success, "Suzanna," at the Mission Theatre, no word of explanation has been received regarding her delay in arriving in Los Angeles. Friends of the comedy star say she is in Berlin, Germany, and Mr. Sennett says she is making arrangements to leave for Los Angeles to start work on her next picture, "Mary Ann."

Frank Mayo, who is playing the character of the movie idol in Rupert Hughes' production, "Souls For Sale," now being filmed at the Goldwyn studios, was forced to discontinue his endeavors last week when his eyes became weakened by the piercing glare of Kleig lights. His condition is said to be very serious, and it is possible that Mr. Mayo's eyes have been affected to such an extent that he will be prevented from making an early return to his work.

The film colony received a surprise last Tuesday when Helene Chadwick filed an injunction against the Goldwyn company, asking that they be prevented from hindering her in securing engagements with other film companies. Miss Chadwick states her contract has expired with this company, but that in spite of this fact, the Goldwyn Corporation continues to represent themselves as employers of her, thereby making it impossible for her to secure a contract with other producers.

Rodolph Valentino is going to marry Winifred Hudnut again even if he hasn't got a job. At least, that is the announcement made last week. Rudy and his bride-to-be, you know, were married once before about a year ago, but the judge ruled the marriage illegal, inasmuch as his divorce from his former wife, Jean Acker, would not be in effect until January 9th, 1923. The famous actor will be married again February 4th, the reports say.

Jean Haskell, petite favorite of Seattle society, and the daughter of one of that city's richest bankers, is the latest ingenue to sign a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Miss Haskell won a beauty contest, conducted by the Goldwyn organization, but she could not decide for some time whether or not to grasp the opportunity. She is receiving her first screen experience under the tutelage of Rupert Hughes in "Souls For Sale."

Katherine Kavanaugh has been added to the Goldwyn editorial staff and will act as personal assistant to June Mathis, the newly appointed Editorial Director. Miss Kavanaugh received her first training under Miss Mathis, and for four years they successfully collaborated on screen stories. Many of her stories were used as starring vehicles for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. She also wrote "The Wheel of the Law," "Will o' the Wisp" and "The Winding Trail," the latter of which was written in collaboration with Miss Mathis.

IF BELLES DO NOT REBEL, GOODBYE EYEBROWS

"Have you had your eyebrows removed?"

This is a question being asked by smart London women since the publication of the story that Lady Diana Manners, who for years has set so many London fashions, had had her eyebrows shaved off in order to appear more like Queen Elizabeth in the film, "The Virgin Queen," just completed by Mr. J. Stuart Blackton.

There has been much comment on this self-sacrifice by Lady Diana, as she is known to have unusually beautiful eyebrows of a soft, silky quality. The editor of The London Daily News was moved to write this editorial letter:

"There is a touching application of the saying that one man's gain is another man's loss in the story that Lady Diana Manners sacrificed her eyebrows in order to impersonate Queen Elizabeth for the films. When the cinema villain suffers untold agonies, the sensitive cinemagoer can always persuade himself that it is not real; but if leading ladies of the film insist on making such sacrifice, only the most hardened and ungallant will be able to contemplate the painful results with equanimity. It is a barbarous thought that a good-looking girl should be required to make hay of her eyebrows for the sake of an unpleasing historical fact. If the public had been asked to declare between a literal resemblance and a Shagpat shaving, they would have willingly sacrificed truth to beauty. Something may surely be left to the imagination even in the picture house. Let us be thankful that Lady Diana has been allowed (so far) to keep her teeth and her hair."

Lady Diana, as a matter of fact, did not entirely remove her eyebrows. She discarded the lower part of them, leaving the upper rim, which, with the aid of make-up she arched and gave a height that added much to her resemblance to the historical Elizabeth. This Lady Diana did most gladly, as she was eager in every way to make her appearance and interpretation as near as possible to that of the Elizabeth in her early days as a Queen.

The question as to whether William Duncan will appear in serials in the near future has been raised by the announcement that he is conducting negotiations to purchase a Vitagraph release. Since leaving the serial field, Mr. Duncan has been making western productions, co-starring with Edith Johnson.

LAUDS HOLLYWOOD AS A REAL PARADISE FOR THE ARTISTIC

"If only a majority of the people of the east and of England could have the opportunity of seeing California, there would be so many of them moving to this state that every square mile of its expansive land would be crowded," declares Eric Mayne, the distinguished English actor, who, since 1914, has been prominent in American motion pictures. "I speak from experience, because after my first few days in this land of golden opportunity and sunshine, I had decided it was the place for me."

Mr. Mayne discovered the attractive merits of the Golden State quite by chance, he having been a featured player in the Drury Lane production of "The Whip" which was sent from New York into this far west for an extended tour. After playing up and down the Pacific coast in this memorable stage success, he refused to be lured back east with it and settled in Los Angeles to devote himself to playing in pictures. Now he says he is "put" to stay and his several years' residence in Southern California has removed all desire to ever return to his native England.

Mr. Mayne has an enviable record to his credit so far as studio activity is concerned. Last year he played leading roles in fourteen different big feature photoplays, working twenty weeks in the Mack Sennett production of "Suzanna" alone. Incidentally, his dramatic work in support of Mabel Normand is one of the highlights of this late screen success.

Eric Mayne

He has another current personal triumph to his credit in Harold Lloyd's "Doctor Jack" and still another in support of Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife," which picture has the distinction of being the opening attraction at Grauman's New Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles and which playhouse, the finest in California, cost more than three million dollars.

"Count me as an Englishman by birth, a New Yorker by first adoption, but a Californian by final decision for permanency," Mr. Mayne says.

Another Railroad Drama

Emory Johnson has started production on a big railroad drama, "Westbound 99," at the Film Booking Office studios in Hollywood. The story was written by his mother, Mrs. Emilie Johnson, noted screen writer, and is enacted by an unusually strong cast, headed by Ralph Lewis and Ella Hall. Other principals in the cast include Claire McDowell, Johnny Harron, Taylor Graves, Wedgewood Nowell, Red Kirby, Richard Morris and Jane Morgan. Charles M. Watt is assistant to Johnson, with Ross Fisher behind the camera.

Miranda Breaks Records

Since December 15th, Thomas N. Miranda has broken records in title editing, having completed writing the titles and screen editing for the following: G. M. Anderson's burlesque, "When Knights Were Cold;" Hawks-Morosco special, "Boots and Saddles;" Emmett J. Flynn's special "Hell's Hole;" Jack Ford's special, "The Face on the Barroom Floor;" Johnnie Walker's special, "The Fourth Musketeer;" and Tom Mix's "The Golden God."

To Film in Orient for Year

Somewhere in the middle of the Pacific on the "Empress of Australia," sails Henry MacRae, director and independent producer, who, with his staff, is bound for the Orient to make a series of motion pictures whose themes find their inspiration in the environment, present and past, of the inhabitants of China, Siam, Japan and the Philippines. MacRae will be absent the better part of a year for the making of these productions. His staff numbers Robert Perry Kerr, co-director; Dal Clawson, cinematographer, and Edward Bermudy, assistant director.

Victor Gibson Joins

Victor Gibson has been added to the forces of the Robertson-Cole studios and placed in charge of the comedy scripts for the Carter DeHaven comedy unit. Gibson has just completed a year's engagement with the Tom Gibson-Ranger Productions at Long Beach. "Twin Husbands" and "Keep 'Em Home," two recent releases of the DeHavens, were written by Gibson and "Say It With Diamonds," their current production, was also from his pen.

CUBAN PRESIDENT IS INTERESTED IN SCREEN

Richard Barthelmess, the famous screen star, called on Alfredo Zayas, President of the Cuban Republic, while he was in Havana, filming the exteriors of "The Bright Shawl," which will follow "Fury" as his starring vehicle. Mr. Barthelmess was received in the $2,000,000 home Cuba provides for its President. This call was considered to be an unusual honor to be paid to a screen star for the President had been in ill health and has been denying himself to all visitors. However, upon learning that the story dealt with the early struggle for Cuba's independence, the President was most anxious to cooperate to see that everything was portrayed true to history.

"President Zayas is a scholarly executive who shows himself deeply concerned with the affairs of his republic," said Mr. Barthelmess. "My interview with him was most pleasing. He is interested in the screen as a great art and inquired most solicitously as to how we were faring in getting historical backgrounds. When I told him that we were that day working in the Cathedral Square, using an old building, he was especially pleased."

"That house is the oldest there is in Cuba," he told me. 'It was the first stone place built here, dating back to 1552. When the French pirates burned Havana that was the only building to withstand the flames.'

"President Zayas was most concerned about the political situation in this country. He spoke most encouragingly of Cuba being able to pass through this financial crisis and was eager for news from Washington in regard to floating a fifty million dollar loan. He said that everything pointed to a big sugar crop which would again bring prosperity to Cuba."

Lasky Starts Two Monday

Next Monday will mark the start of several new Paramount Pictures at the West Coast studio, among them being "Contraband" in which Agnes Ayres will star under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, who recently finished Walter Hiers' first star picture for Paramount, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime." "Contraband" is an adaptation by A. S. LeVino of a story by Clarence Buddington Kelland. Another picture starting on this date is Walter Heirs' second star comedy entitled "Seventy-five Cents An Hour," directed by Joseph Henabery, in which Jacqueline Logan will be featured in support. Grant Carpenter adapted the original story by Frank Condon.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-up

Let's dive in and drive notorious dives out. Let's have a land in which no unsafe places exist.

It is an ideal time for thinkers and doers in the motion picture world. It is no longer a deal of a time for dullards and laggards.

Apropos the situation in Germany at present, we would not be surprised to see somebody make a picture called "The Dis-sipation of a Nation."

What does a newspaper reporter do when he hasn't anything to do?

Answer: He creates a story about Charlie Chaplin and Pola Negri being married, going to be married, wishing they were married, denying they are married or ever intending to be married.

In the passing of Wallace Reid the screen loses one of its most brilliant stars and if the drug ring does not lose its tenacious grip on the throat of society as a result, the full reward of Wally's martyrdom will not be attained. He was felled by beasts called dope peddlers. Shall those beasts be left free to fellothers?

The motion picture industry is on the threshold of its greatest, most artistic, most profitable era so far as the producing field of Southern California is concerned. All of those who fail to rise to the demands of greatness—even though the individual may not be actually great—will probably fall by the wayside ere the new era has run much of its course. Nor is it far-fetched to predict that the big names of a couple years hence are totally unknown now. Men and women of true genius will monopolize the lime-light to the exclusion of all others. There are many such genuises in the field at present, but there will be more of them henceforth.

That the educational value of motion pictures is increasing with amazing rapidity is shown in the fact that there are thirty per cent more schools and colleges using films in class-rooms than there were one short year ago. The long-haired, long-winded reformer who persists in his short-sighted, short-brained denunciations of pictures in general would do well to consider what this growing popularity means. Just for fear that any of them might muff the meaning of it, we will volunteer the information that it indicates strongly the development of this means of expansion as the most important single agency for educating the masses and classes ever extant in all the history of the world.

IN RESENTMENT OF PUBLISHING "TRASH"

That the real devotees to the motion picture art are staunch in their defense of it and ready to bravely resent aspersions cast upon it is a fact well known to any editor in close touch with the reading public. That the unsavory policy of the Movie Weekly, a New York publication, which dedicates itself to lurid presentations of scandals in any way connected with picture people, is in decided disfavor in many quarters outside of the film industry is also well known and it is the concensus of opinion that unless its publisher does discontinue his present destructive editorial attitude and substitutes one replete with constructive ideas, his hopes for attaining general popularity will not be founded in genuine prospects.

A striking example of the manner in which the loyal picture-goer takes the trouble to join in protesting against such periodicals as Movie Weekly is furnished by the following letter recently sent by Mrs. Lorenza Stevens, 711 Superba Street, Venice, Calif., to the editor of that publication:

"Editor, Movie Weekly,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

"Whatever in the world has come over Movie Weekly to publish the trash that it has been running for the past two months or so? It is positively disgusting to read such rubbish as "The Agonies Of A Movie Director's Wife," and all the divorce "news" that you can rake and scrape. And besides, it seems to me that there are some very catty remarks aimed at some of our good motion picture people who stand high in the industry. I think you are making a very grave mistake in using that kind of material.

"The Agonies Of A Carpenter's Wife," or "The Agonies Of A Cobbler's Wife" wouldn't be very interesting reading would it? Well, neither is the former. There is too much good, wholesome material to be used in a magazine devoted to motion pictures, without them stooping to fill its pages with such trash!

"I really cannot support a magazine that fails to support the motion picture people. The idea of making capital out of their private affairs, which do not concern us at all, is deplorable to say the least.

"The motion picture people are human beings just like the rest of us; their private lives are no different. To expect them to be better, or to make it appear that they are worse is indeed, very unfair, very unjust.

"I realize fully that your little magazine has been but a short time in the field, and that you are endeavoring to please your readers as well as to commercialize, and I will always be very glad to support any good magazine that will support the motion picture people in a fair way, but when a magazine fails to do that I can no longer give it my support.

"You neutralize every good supporting article by turning around and printing something just the reverse. Without motion pictures there wouldn't be any motion picture magazines, and I think that you are only driving nails in your own coffin when you print trash and scandal.

"You are free moral agents to print anything that you choose, I won't dispute that for a moment, but don't expect the support of fair-minded people who have the interests of the motion picture industry at heart if you print articles that are injurious to them.

"Sincerely yours,

"MRS. LORENZA STEVENS."

MIDNIGHT MUSINGS IN MOVIELAND

Sagacious people do not undertake to win by foul means. Make sure you possess sagacity.

The fellow who rocks the boat is the very fellow who would scuttle the ship if he had a chance.

Latent talent is like valuable mineral—it abounds most everywhere if you will only dig deep enough.

People who draw conclusions too impulsively soon draw their own finish in a very unfinished condition.

An aptitude for turpitude is best dealt with in prisons, but then, of course, we haven't enough prisons!

Stick to a doctrine of optimism and you will be happy, it makes no difference how unsuccessful you might be.

People who want justice should be sure that they do not give just ice when they are asked for a little of the warmth of fairness.

Investigate what is at the core of each encore before flattering yourself.

The fish in selfish is of the "sucker" variety. Truly foolish is the selfish.

EXHAUSTS

From Al Martin

Under the spreading chestnut tree

The Smithy's daughter was picking on me,

She was the Star so I filled with glee

For I was playing the part of the tree.

Monte Banks denies the report that he is engaged to one of Singer's Midgets.

Just because a man wears these Valentino trousers is no excuse to throw the bull.

Chuck Reisner claims that the idea for "The Storm" originated in a scenario department.

Al Alt and George Williams are going into vaudeville for a change. Get the change, boys.

Virginia Brown Faire's suggestion to fat men. Have your clothes made by "Omar the Tent Maker."

Joe Rock is learning how to play poker. He took fifteen dollars' worth of lessons the other day.

Monte Brice is figuring how to play "Puss in the corner" in a round-house. What do you get if you win?

A butcher went to see "Brothers Under the Skin" thinking it had something to do with Hot Dogs.

Bob Marks writes a letter from Universal City asking how things are in Hollywood. He says he has been waiting out there four weeks to see Wallace Worsley.

Dan Tobey of Hollywood Stadium fame announced that Douglas Fairbanks was arrested for Robin Hood. Cut the comedy, Dan, I'll write this column.

Lewis Mason claims that he originated the "gag", "It won't be long now." Between you and Coue there's nothing left for me.

Judging from the increase in the number of dramatic and comedy artists from various foreign countries now active in the studios of Los Angeles and environs, there must be a veritable debacle of stage and screen people out of especially Germany, France and England. Incidentally, the Hollywood colony is becoming so cosmopolitan that half of the time one would think he is in London and some of the time he would think he is in Paris. Then if by chance one gets into a certain cafe at the right hour, he would swear he is in Berlin.

The faculty of knowing just what to do and how to do it—savoir-faire, as it were—is simply a highly developed species of common sense. Therefore, above all, if you lack it, acquire it and you will be tactful enough to foil any man-made fate.

ACTOR INVENTS NEW KIND OF MAKE-UP

A new kind of make-up powder for motion picture use, which he believes is destined to simplify make-up and do away with the "flatness" common to close-ups, is being experimented with very successfully by Edward Martindel, now engaged in a leading role in "The Eleventh Hour," a William Fox production starring Shirley Mason.

The same facing of grease is used as with the ordinary make-up, according to Martindel, but in lieu of the usual yellow or orange or pink powder, he is experimenting with a very light shade of green.

Green, he declares, absorbs the glare of the powerful lights and retains the curves of the face to a remarkable degree on the screen. This effect is not possible with lighter make-up powder because they reflect, rather than absorb, the lights. It is much the same effect, Martindel says, as a house in the sunlight. If it is painted a glaring white, it blinds with its reflection. On the other hand, if it is tempered with cream and the glare is taken away, it absorbs, rather than reflects, the sunlight.

Martindel is making use of the new make-up powder for scenes in "The Eleventh Hour." He enacts a leading role in this picture and the experiment with powder will be given an ample opportunity to prove or disprove itself when the picture is completed.

POLICE SAVE $200,000 WORTH OF FILM AT FIRE

Flames, believed to be the result of spontaneous combustion in the laboratory of the Bennett Studios at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, destroyed structures and film equipment to the extent of $200,000 early Wednesday morning. The fire was discovered by a studio employe about 3:30 o'clock in the morning, and due to a defective fire alarm, Hollywood and Los Angeles fire departments did not arrive on the scene until much headway had been made by the flames.

The rapid and effective work of the fire-fighters checked the spreading flames from destroying the Fine Arts Studio, which adjoins the Bennett Studios.

The heroic work of a squad of policemen under the command of George K. Home of the Hollywood police station, saved films valued at $200,000 which had been stored in the studio vault.

Immediately after the fire had been extinguished, Capt. E. H. Enos, who is in charge of the fire prevention bureau, started an inquiry to learn the exact cause.

CHAMP JAP SHARPSHOOTER LEARNING TO "SHOOT" PICTURES

Sangi Fujii, champion sharp-shooter of Japan, who expects to wield the megaphone in his own production at the United Studios, and M. C. Levee, president of the United.

Teaching the cutting business is one of the best things that Frank Lawrence of the United Studios does, for Frank has the name of having started more men in this interesting work than any other cutter in the business. Lawrence says that one of the most interesting students he has ever had is Sangi Fujii, the Japanese producer, who is in Hollywood for the express purpose of learning how Americans make motion pictures.

"You've got to hand it to Mr. Fujii," says Lawrence. While he seems to be aware of the magnitude of the job ahead of him he is ready and willing to tackle anything he is asked to do."

Fujii, who expects to start shortly on a Japanese-American picture, says he does not intend to become a cutter, but that he wants to learn every angle of the production business. He is spending a part of each day at the United Studios studying the different branches of the work.

Fujii, who is a member of one of the oldest revolutionary families of Japan, has the backing of a strong Japanese syndicate which expects to produce pictures in which Mr. Fujii will star. The first picture which Fujii has written will be based on the theme relative to Master and Man, with exhibitions of the star's ability as a sharp-shooter. Fujii is the champion sharp-shooter of Japan and has won many medals in this country.

To Film Belasco Play in Utah

Edwin Carewe and Louis Jerome, his business manager, are in Milford, Utah, to seek locations for his First National production of "The Girl of the Golden West." The director will be gone for nearly a week, during which time he will visit Zion National Park and other national forests in that state. So far as is known the mountainous territory of Utah has never been photographed for a feature picture. As soon as Carewe returns the company will depart for the picked location. Work on the script, which is an adaptation from David Belasco's stage success, is progressing rapidly and will be completed before Carewe's return.

More of Glorious Gloria

A variety of incidents in Greenwich Village, in a great gambling establishment and elsewhere, have been made for "Prodigal Daughters." Sam Wood, who is producing this Paramount Picture, starring Gloria Swanson, believes he has an exceptionally powerful story and a well-balanced cast. The smashing climax will round out a picture filled with the modern spirit with which young people of today are imbued. It is an adaptation by Monte M. Katterjohn of the Joseph Hocking novel. Theodore Roberts, Eric Mayne, Vera Reynolds, Ralph Graves, Louise Dresser and others appear in the cast.

L. A. GAINS 2nd DISTRIBUTING COMPANY

Westward the course of Empire takes its way, and westward the great migration of film releasing organizations starts.

On the heels of the announcement that the Selznick organization was removing to Los Angeles, comes the announcement that the Burr Nickle Productions have established their main office and releasing headquarters in the Story Building in Los Angeles.

Burr Nickle, president and general manager of the company, will be remembered as one of the old-timers in the picture business. After seventeen years successful work he retired some three years ago with more than a million dollars. But the call of the screen would not be denied, and he was finally prevailed upon to undertake the active management of the company.

Quietly working for months, the Burr Nickle Productions has eight features ready for release. Many of the stories are by world-famous authors—E. Phillips Oppenheim, A. M. S. Hutchinson who is well-known for his two novels, "If Winter Comes" and "That Freedom," E. Temple Thurston and others of like calibre.

Having made eight of the twelve pictures they are to release during the coming year, and having cut and titled the first three, the organization turned its attention to distribution. A careful study of the existing releasing conditions in the industry, with the big releasing centers some 3,000 miles away in New York, convinced the directors of the company that it was time for Los Angeles to make a start in the direction of becoming a releasing center.

As a result, additional capital was brought in and Robert A. Brackett, formerly with the Selznick releasing organization, was appointed sales manager.

Burr Nickle Productions has been busy establishing its own releasing organizations in the twenty-seven key cities, on a franchise basis. Its first release is a mystery drama entitled "Sunken Rocks," which will be followed by "Tansy," a pastoral drama of love, intrigue and loyalty in the wide open ranges of the sheep country. The third release is "Bargains," a screen adaptation of the stage play of the same name.

Negatives for "Once Aboard the Lugger," "Kinsman," "Cobwebs," "Reputation" and "Aylwyn" are now in the cutting-room and are being titled. Production on the last four of the series of twelve will start immediately so that the company will always be four to six months ahead of their releasing schedule.

Richard Dix is buying furniture for his new house.

Jack Malone has returned to Los Angeles from the East.

John Harron has completed a part in Emory Johnson's production "Westbound 99" at the R-C studios.

Roy Del Ruth has been signed by Jack White, producer of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, to direct Lige Conley.

Milton Sills is a good-natured "cop" in the lead he is doing for John Gorman. He should be finished next week.

Cleo Madison was called back to Los Angeles from New York to play the lead in the current Clifford-Sanford production.

Wesley Barry, the popular boy star, is winding up his personal appearance tour in the East and is expected back here soon.

Anna Q. Nilsson has started work in the Herbert Brenon production for Paramount, "The Rustle of Silk" with Betty Compson and Conway Tearle.

Ashley Cooper has been added to the cast supporting Harry Carey in his next starring vehicle, "The Man From the Desert," being filmed at the Robertson-Cole studios.

Al Herman's first Century Comedy for 1923 is finished. It is known as "A Spooky Romance" and stars Jack Cooper.

Max Asher, well known comedian, is playing the part of Stephen Hopkins in Charles Ray's classic, "Miles Standish."

Harry Lamont has been playing a Gypsy in the Lasky production of "The Law of the Lawless" with Dorothy Dalton as the feminine lead.

Forrest Robinson and Edith Yorke are playing Mr. and Mrs. Steddon in Rupert Hughes' "Souls For Sale" at the Goldwyn studios.

Antonio Moreno has just completed work in the Paramount production, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," starring Mary Miles Minter.

Maude Wayne will portray "the other woman" in the Madge Bellamy picture which William Seiter has started to direct at the Ince studios.

Carmel Myers is breaking her return trip from New York, by doing a picture with the Blair Coan productions in Chicago. Incidentally, she is wearing some of the new creations, the making of which originally took her East.

John Bowers still has a couple of weeks shooting in Louis Burton's Metro production "Desire." As usual, his work is a source of favorable comment.

D. Ross Lederman, who has been active in San Francisco for the past few months, has returned to Hollywood as assistant to Director James W. Horne.

Carmen Phillips is a member of the featured aggregation assembled by Harry Cohn and Director Ed. LeSaint for the forthcoming production "Temptation."

Eric Von Stroheim, who recently signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn, will have Ernest Traxler as production manager and Ben Reynolds as first cameraman.

Freeman Wood is rapidly becoming an institution in San Francisco. He has first call in juveniles in pictures produced there. Gerson productions were the most recent producers to avail themselves of his services.

Hugo Ballin, who has just finished the final editing of "Vanity Fair," is making preliminary preparations to begin work on another big production which will be the second of a series of productions which he will make here for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Katherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell, title editors of the Goldwyn studios are editing and titling a big foreign production starring Pola Negri in the role said to be her most seductive. The picture will be released under the title "Mad Love" the last part of February.

Protean Arts has loaned Cecil Holland and Raymond Cannon, star and director respectively of Protean Productions, to the Fred Caldwell Productions for the comedy drama "Knighthood in Hollywood." Violet Schram and Gale Henry compose the feminine portion of the cast. Vic Potel is also playing an important part.

Edith Lee Grant's "The Log Jam," is nearly finished. Miss Grant wrote this two-reel comedy, and is also playing the leading feminine role for Harry Takiff, a producer.

James Morrison is helping Blair Coan put Chicago back on the picture map. He is playing the lead in "The Little Girl Next Door." We may expect him with us about February 15th.

Edward Kimball is once more "butling." He has signed with the Hugh Dierker productions to play the butler in "The Other Side." Production will begin at the Fine Arts studios about February 6.

MUCH ILLUMINATION IS PLANNED FOR LUMINARIES

The Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles' far-famed hostelry, within whose classic walls cinema deals involving billions have been planned and consummated, will be illuminated as never before for the annual ball of the Motion Picture Directors' Association to be staged there on February 17, an event which the "400" of Hollywood, America's film capitol, are eagerly anticipating. Inside and outside it will be lit up by the highest salaried electricians in the world, the Motion Picture Illuminating Engineers, headed by Harry Brown, their president.

Gowns totalling hundreds of thousands and jewels aggregating millions will be on exhibition at this event, which is to be made even more spectacular than ever by Philip Rosen, the Lasky director who made several of Wallie Reid's greatest successes, and who is director-general of the affair. Associated with him on the committee are James Hogan, of Goldwyn; William Worthington, who directed Sessue Hayakawa to international fame; Joseph de Grasse, the man who made Charles Ray famous, Roy Clements who showed the world how pictures were made at the recent Pageant of Progress; Wally Van, Fred Thompson, Murdock McQuarrie, and Lottie Pickford as honorary member to give the necessary feminine slant to the decorations and preparations.

FRIENDSHIP FOR A BEAR BEARS GRIEF FOR ARTIST

They used a big grizzly bear in some of the scenes in the Vitagraph comedy, starring Jimmie Aubrey, this week, and, therein lies a story with a moral.

Helen Kesler, who is Aubrey's leading lady, took a fancy to this particular bear and proceeded to make a pet of it from the first day. Seemingly she was making fine headway towards ingratiating herself with the big brute until the final day of their "friendship," when the latter made known its full disapproval of all amicable advances by giving the actress a mean hug and then cuffing her in the face and bowling her over for a couple of goals. The result was, Miss Kesler had to be taken to the studio emergency hospital for some mending of a few scratches and lacerations.

The further result was, the bear became so furious in its sudden ire that not even its trainer could subdue it and the filming of the picture was held up one full day while the animal was regaining a slight semblance of its former good humor.

"That's the first time in my young life that I've had my friendship so ruthlessly rejected by man or beast and it only goes to show that you can't be too careful in selecting your friends," Miss Kesler says.

THEY CAN GO SKATING ON ICE IN HOLLYWOOD NOW

Ice skating in Hollywood is now a reality! The first ice rink to be built in the film capitol has been constructed on a large stage at the United Studio and was used first in the forthcoming Allen Holubar production, "Slander the Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips.

The script of the widely read Jeffrey Deprend novel as filmed by Holubar calls for a few important ice skating scenes and as there is no rink of this kind within a radius of many hundred miles of Los Angeles, the director-producer ordered one constructed at the studio where he was producing for release through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The rink is eighty-five feet in length and fifty-five feet in width. Over eight thousand feet of inch and a quarter black pipe and seventy-six-inch valves were employed in the construction of the set while an enormous ammonia compressor distributes the freezing fluid over the large sanded surface.

Late Arrival Gets Busy

Fred Esmelton, well-known star of the stage and of Frank Bacon's immortal story of "Lightnin'" when produced in Australia, has just arrived in America from a two years' stay in the Antipodes. Esmelton is now trying to be in two places at one time, because he is with Ethel Clayton in "The Greater Glory" at the F. B. O. studios and is also appearing with William Russell in the latter's current production, "The White Cross."

Less obtuse conversation and more keen efforts will augment the chances of success.

Every time you feel like excoriating someone, excoriate yourself for feeling that way.

CHAMP LADY DIVER DIVES INTO WRITING

The occasional death through accident of people who take the risks of doubling for actors in doing stunts fraught with dangers to life and limb is about the only reminder that the film world has its full quota of quite remarkable performers whose names are almost totally unknown to the general public. In this connection it is interesting to note as an example that one of the most daring women divers in the world, one of the very few who take the chances coincident to diving into dangerous waters with all of her street clothes on, is among the most useful of doubles in the Los Angeles picture field and that this same accomplished aquatic wonder is a literary genius with several successfully published stories to her credit. Her name is Edla Laurance and her latest stories, "The Successful Wife" and "Human Destiny," both published by the New York Journal, are well on their way to acceptance for motion picture production soon, according to report.

Miss Laurance is the proud descendant of five generations of Americans, the daughter of a well-known New Jersey physician, Dr. James N. Faulkner, one of the veteran G. A. R. men, and a descendant of Lord Faulkner. She moved to Hollywood from the east about a year ago with the determination to devote all of her energies to motion pictures.

She began her literary work as a compositor and proof-reader on the Louisville Courier-Journal, received personal references from the late Col. Henry Waterson and was transferred to the magazine department of the New York Tribune.

While employed there she married a promising young engineer and inventor, who went to England and became a consulting engineer with Lord Kelvin.

Her life and talent while in Europe brought her in contact with one prominent person after another, both in a social and business way. Sixteen years were spent in travel in Europe. When the war became a fact, she devoted all her time and money for the benefit of the boys in Base Hospital No. 16, in New Haven. Great concerns like the Remington Arms of Bridgeport collected thousands of dollars and gave it to her to spend on the boys.

Verbosity will convert the would-be author into a curiosity. Save words! The political spell-binders need them anyway.

The real upper classes are down among the masses. Those who disagree with this are cautioned not to confuse the word "snob" with "upper."

AMERICAN CINEMA GENIUS LEADS IN ENGLAND

According to the London Times, Denison Clift, former Lasky scenarist and Fox director, has achieved the premier position as Director of British pictures.

"A Bill of Divorcement," starring Constance Binney, is rated as the best British picture of the year.

"This Freedom," the great A. S. M. Hutchinson novel, has just been completed in London, and will be ready in March to compete with the Fox production of "If Winter Comes" the other Hutchinson best-seller.

Mr. Clift is now directing "Out to Win," founded on the London stage success, and upon its completion he will produce his own version of the "Mary Queen of Scots" story, using the great castles of England and Scotland as backgrounds, and with Fay Compton, the loveliest of England's great actresses, as the ill-fated Queen. The original scenes of the story will be used, notably Lochleven, Stirling, Holyrood and Fotheringay. Huge sets, a cast of the greatest of English actors, lavish costumes and historical accuracy will make this one of the most stupendous foreign pictures. The resources of the British Museum are being used for story, costumes and backgrounds, and a group of experts are already preparing for the opening shots of the picture.

Upon the completion of this production in London, Mr. Clift will return to Hollywood.

SWICKARD HEADS ALL-STAR CAST FIRST TIME

Director Lorimer Johnston, formerly of the American Film company and Vitagraph, is coming down the home-stretch at Universal City in the filming of "The Cricket on the Hearth," the Charles Dickens classic, for the Paul Gerson Corporation of San Francisco. This feature marks the initial appearance of Josef Swickard as a star. Mr. Swickard will be remembered as the beloved Marcelo Denoyers in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." In "The Cricket on the Hearth," he plays the role of Caleb Plummer, the toy-maker. An all-star cast is supporting him, among the better known players being Fritzi Ridgeway, Virginia Brown Faire, Paul Gerson, Joan Standing and Paul Moore. A. L. Thompson, formerly of the executive staff of the American Film company, is general manager of the Gerson organization and Joseph Kerr, formerly of First National, is publicity director.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

"Grumpy" on Home Stretch

William deMille will bring his Paramount production, "Grumpy," to an end early in February and will have completed, it is believed, one of the most interesting pictures he has done in a long time. The element of mystery which enters so strongly into this play by Hodges and Percival and which Clara Beranger adapted, is always fascinating and wonderful characterizations are being achieved by Theodore Roberts, May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel, the featured players, as well as by Casson Ferguson, who plays the heavy role; Charles Ogle and others.

Serial Title Changed

Pathe announces change of title of Ruth Roland's next serial release from "The Riddle of the Range" to "Haunted Valley." The Roland serial is scheduled to follow "Plunder," with Pearl White, which will be released on January 28. "Haunted Valley," it is stated, has already been liberally booked under the now discarded title of "The Riddle of the Range."

Blanche Sweet as Tess

Marshall Neilan will film "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," on a tremendous scale, with Blanche Sweet in the title role. Ever since the announcement by the Goldwyn company that Mr. Neilan would make a picture of the Thomas Hardy classic, speculation has been rife as to who would play "Tess." When a company was sent abroad under Frank Urson's direction to make in England "atmospheric" exteriors and what are known as "established" shots of the Dorsetshire country, interest was increased. Miss Sweet retired from the screen for a time, but soon after her marriage to Mr. Neilan returned in a big production of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Orlamond Wins Goldwyn Contract

William Orlamond, character actor, has just been signed by Goldwyn to a long-term contract, a mark of favor won by his work in such exacting parts as that of the motion picture director in "Doubling for Romeo," as the inventor in "The Sin Flood" and, most recently, as Lord Fryingham in Rupert Hughes' production of "Souls For Sale." Mr. Orlamond started pictures in 1918, and has appeared in many productions, including Nazimova's "Camille," in which he was the father of Armand, and in "Boys Will Be Boys." He hails from Denmark.

Marie is Loaned

Marie Prevost, Warner Brothers' popular star, has been loaned to Goldwyn to appear in "The Rear Car." Immediately upon the completion of that she will return to Warner Brothers' lot and start on her next picture for them.

Tying Up a Galaxy of 'Em

Warner Brothers are signing 'em up rapidly. Lately they have tied up on long-term contracts Harry Meyers, Monte Blue, Marie Prevost and Grant Carpenter, well-known scenarist. They have also signed William Beaudine, the director responsible for the "Heroes of the Street," the last Wesley Barry picture, to direct the popular boy star in "David Copperfield," "Little Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr."

Rapf's Warner Schedule

With the departure of H. M. Warner for the east announcement was made that Harry Rapf had been signed to produce for Warner Brothers for two years.

Rapf's first picture under this new arrangement will be "Wolf Fangs," the scenario of which is being done by Frederick Myton. This production will feature the popular German police dog, Rin-tin-tin. The direction will be in the hands of Chester Franklin. Immediately after launching "Wolf's Fangs" into production Rapf will start on the filming of "Lucretia Lombard" from the book by Kathleen Norris, the adaptation being done by Sada Cowan. Following these two pictures will come "Broadway After Dark" with Marie Prevost as its star.

Back to Grease Paint

William Worthington, who organized the company and directed Sessue Hayakawa in his first starring vehicles, is to return to the screen as an actor after an absence of six years, during which time he has directed many of the best known stars. Mr. Worthington will play an important role in "Red Lights," adapted from the stage play, "The Rear Car," which Clarence Badger will direct for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Among the stars directed by Mr. Worthington have been Mae Marsh, Bryant Washburn, Edith Storey, Edith Roberts, Herbert Rawlinson and, more recently, Frank Mayo, whom he has just guided in seven pictures.

From Tropics to Arctic

Having only recently returned from Hawaii where she played a principal role in "The White Flower," made by Famous Players-Lasky, Arline Pretty scarcely had time to doff the make-up required for that clime when she was whisked by the Fox company to Truckee, for some snow scenes in Dustin Farnum's latest picture being produced under the direction of Colin Campbell, for which Miss Pretty has been engaged as leading lady.

Unit System for Goldwyn

An important change in production policy has been announced by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Hereafter the unit system will be employed in making the big feature pictures to which the company has committed itself. Each director will have his own staff and will be given every facility in putting into his productions his own individuality and personality. He will have the co-operation of the department heads of the Culver City studio, but each unit will be separate unto itself. The announcement was made by Abraham Lehr, Vice President in charge of production, following conferences with President F. J. Godsol and Vice President Edward Bowes, both of whom have just returned to New York after spending several weeks at the studio.

It's a Mammoth 'Script

Here's one for the lovers of statistics! Wallace Worsley hands it out for digestion. He states that when the Universal handed him the scenario for "Notre Dame," they gave him the biggest script ever handed a director. "It is large enough to choke a horse," says the director, "and it is not only cumbersome, but is a real source of trouble to everyone who has to handle it." For instance, the 446 odd scenes and 172 titles required 188 pages of eight and a half by thirteen legal size paper which weighs over four and a half pounds. To date 17 star players, headed by Lon Chaney, have been cast, and the camera work will require more than four months time.

Sacrifices Ease for Career

Daughter of one of San Francisco's wealthy business men and daughter-in-law of the world's largest landholder, Aileen Pringle has given up money and leisure in order to make a place for herself on the motion picture screen. She has cut off the allowances from her husband and her father in order that she may feel that her professional advancement is earned by her own work. Miss Pringle is the daughter of George W. Bisbee, president of the Pioneer Fruit Company of San Francisco, and the wife of Charles M. Pringle, son of Sir John Pringle, former governor of Jamaica and owner of most of the land and industries on the island. The Goldwyn Pictures corporation has given Miss Pringle a long-term contract following her excellent work in "The Strangers' Banquet" and "Souls For Sale."

Titling "Drivin' Fool"

"The Drivin' Fool," E. D. Newman's comedy-drama of automobile thrills, has been completed after two months of camera work in scattered locations all over the western states and the picture is now being titled by Walter Anthony, who is an author of notable literary attainments and was formerly a dramatic critic in San Francisco and Seattle. Wally Van is featured in "The Drivin' Fool." Seen with Van in the coming production are Patsy Ruth Miller, Alec Francis, Wilton Taylor, Ramsey Wallace, Jesse Aldridge, Rosa Gore and other well known players.

More "Juice" Need

Frank Urson, director of Marshall Neilan Productions, has returned from the Grand Canyon, where he has been scouting for locations to be used in Marshall Neilan's production, "The Ingrate." Urson found weather conditions in the Canyon unusually favorable for picture work at this time of year. However, one prohibitive condition he discovered was the lack of high tension lines carrying sufficient voltage to light the El Tovar Hotel in which Mr. Neilan had planned some dramatic scenes for "The Ingrate."

End of the "Trail"

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," starring Mary Miles Minter with Antonio Moreno in support, has been completed. Director Charles Maigne has made a decidedly thrilling and a strong heart-interest drama of this old favorite which was adapted by Will M. Ritchey from the book by John Fox, Jr. and the play by Eugene Walter. The cast includes besides the two win Brady, Cullen Tate and Frances Warner. As the little mountain heroine, Miss Minter, it is said, has done some of the best work of her career.

Bans Word "Dead"

A change in the title of the forthcoming Tourneur production has been announced by Maurice Tourneur. The new title is to be "The Isle of Lost Ships." The picture was adapted from Crittenden Marriott's novel, "The Isle of Dead Ships." Tourneur's policy is not to change the title of a picture unless it is absolutely necessary from the exhibitor's standpoint. It was after serious consideration that the ban was placed on the word "dead." "The Isle of Lost Ships," in which Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Frank Campeau, Walter Long, Bert Woodruff, Aggie Herring and Irene Hunt are being featured, is now in the hands of the cutters.

While "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is being produced at Universal City, with a cast of hundreds being carried through the picture and one of the largest staffs in the history of motion pictures working on the one angle of research alone, the workers of sixteen other producing units populate the six hundred acre film city, with the most spectacular activity in its history. Seven months' preparation and rehearsing and one month's shooting have gone into the million dollar classic, with many months to go.

"White Tiger," a picture of the upper strata of the underworld starring Priscilla Dean and directed by Tod Browning as a Universal-Jewel attraction, is receiving its final editing.

"Bavu," the dramatic story of the bloodless first year of the Russian revolution, with Wallace Beery, Estelle Taylor, Forrest Stanley and one of the biggest all-star casts of the year, has just gone into the hands of the editorial experts. Stuart Paton directed.

"Nobody's Bride," starring Herbert Rawlinson, "Gossip," starring Gladys Walton, "Single-Handed," starring Edward (Hoot) Gibson, and several other features of high grade entertainment value are being edited as those stars commence work on new achievements.

James Cruze, with Walter Reed, cameraman, and Carl Brown, technical director, spent Thursday in San Francisco en route from Eureka, where they have been on location.

Joseph Schenck and Reginald Barker spent part of last week in San Francisco on business.

Gilbert Pratt, returned to Los Angeles after a few days here.

King Vidor and David Howard are in San Francisco for "atmosphere," and getting in shape a story soon to be filmed by Goldwyn.

Ernest Traxler spent the week-end in Los Angeles, and returned to San Francisco today, to resume work on the preparations for "McTeague," soon to be "shot" by the Goldwyn company under the direction of Eric Von Stroheim.

Bull Montana arrived in San Francisco on Tuesday to join Von Stroheim.

Gordon Pollock, cameraman with the Mission Film company, drove to San Francisco last week on a little vacation trip.

"The Plum Centerpedes" finished, on Saturday, the twelfth and last Plum Center comedy at the old Gerson studio on Tenth Street. Dan Mason, star of the company, his daughter, and Wilna Hervey leading lady, will leave for New York about Feb. 1st. It is possible that a second series of Plum Center comedies may be made here later on.

A. H. Giebler, scenarist for the Plum

Center comedies, will go to Los Angeles soon.

Craig Hutchinson and his company have nearly finished work on the first of the series of two-reel pictures being made by the Paul Gerson corporation from Peter B. Kyne's stories. The picture is called "The Blind Goddess." Orral Humphreys is being featured and the company includes Evelyn Nelson, Freeman Wood, George Webster and Rupert Brunn.

William O'Connell of Hollywood, spent part of last week in San Francisco.

NEWS NOTES OF FILM-DOM'S JUVENILE STARS*JACKIE COOGAN—MILLIONAIRE

To amass a fortune of over a million dollars through his own ability and efforts before his eighth birthday, is the remarkable record made by Jackie Coogan, film-dom's king of baby starlets. As a result of his signing a contract with the Metro organization, Jackie received a cash bonus of $500,000, and will further receive a sixty per cent share of the earnings of the four pictures he will make for this concern during the next twelve months. By terms of the contract, Mr. Coogan Senior will have the privilege of picking the stories and casts for his youthful celebrity, and will personally supervise each production.

PLANS HARMONY POLICY

When Billie Lord, filmland's handsomest child artist, was born four years ago, his father, who is one of the most prominent travelling salesmen in America, decided that his boy would follow his daddy's footsteps when it came time for him to start on a commercial career. However, Billie's mother decided he would be an actor, and so—he is an actor! Little Billie is aware of his father's desire and whenever the subject is mentioned, Billie declares, "Never mind daddy, when I grow up, I'll be a travelling salesman in all my pictures." At the present time, however, Billie is playing child parts to the utmost satisfaction of filmland's most notable directors.

But the conscientious actor of today raises his own beard, even when it requires a delay of weeks in the "shooting" of a picture.

Gaston Glass sought his first shave in many weeks the other day after growing the most realistically ragged of beards for his part in "The Girl Who Came Back." And, since some scenes in this unusual production called for the straggly growth of beard and others for the smooth cheeks with which followers of Gaston were accustomed, Glass spent many a day doing nothing but growing whiskers—and remaining indoors.

"But no beard is more convincing than one you raise yourself," said Glass, as he sought the back streets and another dash of hair tonic.

Speaking of those who find flaws in the movies recalls a predicament of Eve Unsell, that versatile screen writer who found time

ARE THE STUDIO EMPLOYEES HEARTLESS?

- if they "trim" a light.
- if they "undress" a set.
- if they "throw" a spotlight.
- if they "dress" the stage.
- if they "shoot" a scene.
- if they "break down" film.

to compose a song when not otherwise engaged as literary editor for Preferred Pictures, Inc.

Miss Unsell wrote the song, "Ching, Ching, Chinaman," to accompany the film version of Wilbur Daniel Steele's short story masterpiece of the same title. The screen production now bears the title, "Shadows," but the song retained the title of the Steele story.

"How do you get this way?" wrote a correspondent in Louisiana who had read the announcement of the song. "The lady may have written a song, but 'Ching, Ching, Chinaman' belongs to 'The Geisha' and is about thirty years old."

Miss Unsell pleads ignorance of "The Geisha" song, since her memory is subject to the usual feminine limitations involving a period of more than a score of years, and argues that the relation to the story of the same title ought to justify the use of "Ching, Ching, Chinaman" on her effort.

The most recent of the engagement reports published here involves a San Francisco broker. Before that it was a picture director who was named as the fortunate man. In view of the fact that Miss MacDonald's leisure is divided between her mother and the home she is building for her mother, on the one hand, and her picture work on the other, the numerous accounts of her threatened romances excite as much interest on her part as that of newspaper readers.

"I am not engaged to anybody and have no interest that can approach my screen work—at present," said the star when the engagement problem was broached to her.

An answer that does not seem to bar future marrying possibilities.

The fact that a man is one of the handsomest players on the screen doesn't make his work any easier when he attempts to satisfy the demands of an exacting director. This is a discovery just made by Kenneth Harlan, whose six feet of masculine perfection probably would be sufficient to interest most feminine theater goers, no matter what he did.

But Gasnier, who has cast Harlan for a fighting role in "April Showers," selected him because of his ability as an athlete, as well as his appearance.

The hero of the story is called upon to handle the boxing gloves in a convincingly expert manner. Harlan, who is a dangerous adversary at almost every known out-of-door sport, admitted to but a passing acquaintance with the gloves.

"But if you'll give me a few days I'll try to master the intricacies of the game," said the obliging star.

The few days have been given to Harlan, with the result that he has spent practically all his waking hours in the hands of one Spike Halloran, who wields a mean right. At the hour of this writing Kenneth may not have developed sufficient skill to defeat his trainer, but the latter exhibits considerable respect for the ability he has already shown.

not quite all that could be desired in her interpretation of an attractive character. She seemed too anxious and self-conscious. Clarence Burton as the villain is too much the old-time mellerdrummer bad man of the old ten-twenty-and-thirty days. Ethel Grey Terry gives the best performance of any of the supporting cast. Dorothy Manners has very little to do, but she does it well and photographs beautifully, displaying a remarkably fine screen personality. Jack Pickford in "Garrison's Finish" will be a winner if given a fair chance.

So far the records pro and con show there is no such a thing as a sound argument against exhibiting motion pictures on Sunday. Quite on the contrary, it daily becomes more obvious that any community desirous of enjoying this wholesome diversion on the Sabbath is entitled to the liberty, and no other community, adjacent or distant, has any moral right to stand in the way of such a privilege. As we understand it the first object of law is to conserve the public weal, and it is no part of the spirit of law to subjugate subjects in unreasonable ways. Therefore, it is patent there is not even a lame excuse for essaying to prevent the inhabitants of any neighborhood from seeing helpful photoplays on Sunday if such happen to be their preference. If the church people are worried lest there be too much competition in the matter of attendance, they are worrying most needlessly, because those who want to go to church will do so just the same, whether there are movies available or not, while those who wish to be uplifted via the cinema route (and who have as much right to this pleasure as those who go to church have the right to be edified by the pastor's sermon) will be left free to enjoy real personal liberty, to which they are entitled under the irrefragable constitution of the United States of America. Let Sunday movies become national and the whole nation will be better off.

THE SYNTHESIS OF PHOTOPLAY

No form of manufacture relies upon more component parts than the making of film, and, we fear, there is no industry more beset with intricacies which could either be converted into less expensive simplicities or eliminated entirely. There is no doubt as to the existence of amazing wastefulness in the studios. Four-fifths of this positive extravagance is in the form of excessive purchases of reputations, which constitute a more negative quantity than the producers have been courageous enough to proclaim thus far. Overhead expenses have too often been the dregs in the cup of most industries and they are decidedly dangerous in the case of the creators of our present day screen fare.

Another baneful part of the whole menace now confronting the motion picture business is the proclivity of the captains to talk about the necessity of reformation in policies, without any of them taking the initiative to act. In their public utterances the executives unanimously agree that any trust-like amalgamation is undesirable, but they all solicit more harmony.

While the men should institute remedial measurer procrastinate a nefarious group of would-be usurpers of power is busily engaged honeycombing the fundamental ground-work of the industry with all sorts of schemes for self-aggrandizement without the slightest regard for the ruinous effect of their impecunious malfeasance.

Now it behooves the governing heads to desist their carping and to concentrate their whole attention jointly and amicably on the big part of photoplay—the continuance of that original cost of production which made possible the low admission prices which in turn made the cinema the one great democratic entertainment it is today. No serious harm has been noted yet, but it is patent that producers are "going a pace" they cannot maintain—a pace which is not necessary for the important part called quality.

Of course abnormal conditions preclude the possibility of making pictures at the old prices, but war conditions are not responsible for the ridiculous increases in the salaries paid to artists. Herein the producers err grievously. They admit it is a harmful mistake and the next minute they contribute to the boosting processes by attempting to outbid competitors for the services of so-called drawing cards.

Conclusively, the worst part of all parts is the consumers: the fans will have to pay the costs of all this managerial folly with ever-increasing regularity, and this should be the chief concern of the producers, because the public is capable of effectual reprisals; free people can govern their own patronage with too much facility to make lethargy on the part of the "merchants" at all safe. Whatever is wrong with the producing system should be corrected without further delay. It is manifestly a time for action and a cessation of the issuance of statements of grave warnings. The leading film firms can very easily co-ordinate their interests to an extent which would safeguard all parts of the whole, and the formation of a trust is not called for in the premises, either. Now, gentlemen of the film world, now get together and hold together the parts which will make photoplay more securely entrenched. It can be done. Why isn't it?

FIGHT!——with advertising

Advertising is the education of the public as to who you are, and what you have to offer in the way of skill, talent or commodity. The only man who should not advertise is the man who has nothing to offer the world in the way of commodity or service.

MOROVICH may be the Charlie Paddock of the turf, but it will take more than speed alone to win all the honors at the biggest horse show the West will have ever seen—the assembly of thoroughbred horses arranged for the second week of The American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition in Los Angeles next summer. The aristocracy of two continents will be there, both human and equine. But this horse show, as big as it will be, is only one of the many things that will make this Revue and Exposition the greatest month of entertainment Southern California has ever seen. It's the Motion Picture Industry's chance to show the world how big an industry it is, what it can do when it wants to. It's your show, people of Hollywood! Help put it over right! In a Little Closer Focus

The outlook for motion pictures was never better. Hence it is a good time for a look-in for the much needed "new blood."

One of the producers announces he will make no more pictures with unhappy endings. It might be well to make sure there are no unhappy beginnings, too.

Let's let the oft-scuttled friendship sail as it never sailed before—straight by the compass of magnanimous reconciliation to the shores of universal harmony. Or, without such a lot of words—be pals to everyone!

Camera! heartily and whole-heartedly agrees that the motion picture industry is an institution of service, and hereby reiterates its determination to push the principles herein involved forward constantly as one of its most important policies.

Once more it is declared by a high authority that motion picture conditions in Europe are improving. But, every day the newspapers convince us that if this is so, all other conditions are not improving. Hence, it is difficult to grasp the logic of the situation at all.

Some English journals are spoofing because American film producers seem so adverse to unhappy endings for stories. And those same English journals would probably "cry their eyes out" if such finales were made the rule. The answer is, nobody can please everybody.

"Nothing succeeds like success" may be true, but it is truer still that nothing succeeds in bringing brick-bats one's way like this same success. Envy began with the first human family, and it will survive even unto the last family. Why? There is no reasonable reason.

It is high time for the exodus of would-be axe-grinders and indiscriminate hammer-wielders. There is a noticeable influx of construction people in Filmland nowadays, and their advent is inevitably the impressive signal for the iconoclasts to lay down their destructive tools and reform or get out.

Now that the world knows Charlie Chaplin and Pola Negri are engaged to be married, it will just naturally shift its interest to speculating on when some other prominent couple will do likewise. Meanwhile, congratulations, Charles and Pola. May the world of joy be ever at your feet, just as cinema-lovers are at your feet!

If reports are true, Metro has contracted a bonus fever all its own. After giving Jackie Coogan a half million dollars as a gift for signing a contract, it is said this firm gave both Buster Keaton and Ramon Navarro substantial sums for the same reason. It's a safe bet that most World War veterans would be pleased to have Metro placed at the head of our national government long enough to show some of this bonus inclination in behalf of the soldiers. Now if somebody will only nominate Metro for congress, the presidency, or something!

It's a four-cylinder, high-powered family machine, is that Warner Brothers group. There are four boys from the same parental domicile doing big things for motion pictures in the same film domicile. It's almost like saying the alphabet to call out all their initials. It's equally almost like tearing whole pages out of the Blue Book of Contemporary Literature to name the great works they are placing on the screen. It all goes to prove once more that in families or otherwise, united they stand—and advance in the standing! Now that we have praised them, we suppose someone will jump up and call 'em all crooks.

The Chicago Tribune wants Will Hays to persuade Douglas Fairbanks to play Romeo, Mary Pickford to interpret the character of Juliet, and Rodolph Valentino to portray Mercutio, in an elaborate screen version of Shakespeare's masterly "Romeo and Juliet." It is more than likely that it will be most unlikely that Mr. Hays will enjoy being picked on in this fashion. Between settling Valentino's difficulties with Paramount and settling his own status with Doug and Mary, Mr. Hays would not be in anything like the midst of joys, if indications are true.

Our supreme faith in the certainty of all things working out for the best makes us happily immune to all forms of propaganda unfavorable to us. Nor do we bear malice towards those who are perhaps unfortunate enough to be unfair in their words and acts. Moreover, we have no fear of them or anything. We believe this is the ideal age for mortals to start thinking seriously of making a reality of the comity of humans as a logical forerunner of a more general comity of nations. And, more to the point, now is the time for the birth of motion picture patriotism—for a zeal in serving the industry for the benefit of the whole rather than this thing of wasting time on trivial personalities and giving vent to petty animosities and jealousies. Verily, things WILL work out perfectly.

AUTHOR PICKFORD SELLS HIMSELF A STORY

Jack Pickford has just proved that as an author, he is a great salesman. Mr. Pickford has always been interested in writing. A few years ago he produced on the screen a story of his own creation and since that time, he has been more and more concerned in the preparation of his own photoplays.

The other day he mentioned his interest in authorship to a writer friend who had gone through the mill and was fully acquainted with the hazards of the writing profession. This skeptical man voiced the opinion that Jack couldn't even write a two-reel comedy, if he took a year off in order to prepare it.

"Is that so?" said Jack, considerably affronted. He paused for an indignant moment. Then, "I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. "I'll bet you a hundred dollars I can write a story tonight and sell it for a good price before tomorrow noon." The skeptical friend promptly took him up.

The next day they met for lunch. "Well," said the friend, "hand over the money."

"No," answered Mr. Pickford, "you pay me. Last night as an author I wrote a story for the screen. This morning I submitted this story to myself as a producer, and after giving it a careful and critical reading found that it was full of merit. So I purchased it at once. In fact, it was such a good story that I gave myself five thousand dollars for it!"

SCHENCK NOW CONTROLS BIG UNITED STUDIOS

In order to realize his ambition to produce more and larger productions, Joseph M. Schenck last Wednesday purchased the controlling interest in the United Studios, involving an expenditure of $2,500,000. At the present time, Mr. Schenck is producing pictures starring Norma and Constance Talmadge, but with this new deal consummated it is understood he will sign several other stars with whom he has been negotiating for the past two weeks. The personnel affiliated with the organization under the old regime, including the art director, head electrician, costume director and other technical heads, will remain.

A Caesarian born baby girl arrived in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barthelmess, Wednesday, February 1st, at the Sloane Hospital of New York. The child will be christened Mary May, the name by which Mrs. Barthelmess is prominently known on the stage and screen.

PARAMOUNT TO START TWO MORE FILMS NEXT MONDAY

Monday, February 12th, has been set as a starting date for two new Paramount Pictures. The first of these is "Hollywood," which will be a James Cruze production for Paramount, adapted by Walter Woods from the novelette by Frank Condon. Mr. Woods will also be production editor. "Hollywood" will boast one of the greatest all-star casts ever seen in a single film. It will include Pola Negri, Gloria Swanson, Jack Holt, May McAvoy, Agnes Ayres, Jacqueline Logan, Conrad Nagel, Walter Hiers, Theodore Kosloff, Lois Wilson and others.

The second picture to start on that date will be "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," a Sam Wood production for Paramount starring Gloria Swanson, which was adapted by Sada Cowan from Charlton Andrew's adaptation of Alfred Savoir's play. Julia Crawford Ivers will be production editor.

BABY PEGGY WILL STEP UP TO FEATURES

It is very probable that Baby Peggy's appearance in two-reel comedies will soon be over. Like the other infant prodigy, Jackie Coogan, Baby Peggy will soon be going in for the big league stuff and preparations are being made for securing some of the greatest stories with the biggest dramatic punches for suitable vehicles for the Vitaphone Juliet. She will soon be starred in a series of five-reel features-de-luxe.

Dickens' "Ye Olde Curiosity Shop" is being considered for Baby Peggy by J. Travers Montgomery, her father, and Julius Stern of the Century Comedy studios with which organization Baby Peggy is now under contract.

The officials of the Universal Film Exchange in London are now negotiating with Maurice Maeterlinck, the famous Belgian poet, for a special story to be written expressly for Baby Peggy. Mr. Montgomery announced that negotiations have practically been closed with Maeterlinck for the child story. If this is secured in time it will of course be given preference over any story that may come to hand.

The Cinema Players have resumed rehearsals on their four-act play, "Within the Law," scheduled to open the first week in March. The production has been delayed owing to two members of the cast going away on location. Ben Sharpe is handling the direction.

Jacqueline Logan returned to Hollywood this week to play the featured feminine role opposite Walter Hiers in "Seventy-five Cents An Hour," a Paramount picture which Joseph Henabery is directing. Miss Logan had been away for two weeks on a vacation trip to Colorado Springs, Colo., her old home town.

Molly Gordon, a pretty little blonde of 14 years, is playing in "Seventy-five Cents An Hour" at the Lasky studios, as the sister of Jacqueline Logan.

FINE ARTS PLANT WILL SOON BE IMPROVED

According to plans which have been completed recently by the officers of the Fine Arts Studios, many changes and improvements in this plant will be made within the next thirty days. A new enclosed stage, with 95 feet by 275 feet floor space, is now in construction at the east end of the "lot" and as soon as this is made ready for occupancy the entire row of wooden structures now facing on Sunset Boulevard will be razed.

In their place a row of cement buildings of Spanish architecture will be constructed for use as stores, operated by private individuals. These buildings will extend from where the Chester Bennett laboratories now stand to Lyman Place, a distance of one city block. The entrance to the studios will be in the center of the block. The studio buildings will be 75 feet back from the street and occupy a space covering twelve and one-half acres of ground.

According to John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of Fine Arts, the new improvements will greatly facilitate production and make the studio one of the most up-to-date film plants on the west coast.

Harry Todd, having just finished in Jack Ford's latest Tom Mix picture, has been cast by the Halperin Productions in their all-star feature, "Tea With A Kick," now in production at the Fine Arts.

Sada Cowan has been engaged by Paramount for six special productions. At the present time, she is preparing the script for Gloria Swanson's next vehicle.

J. L. Frothingham announces he has loaned Marguerite De La Motte to Louis B. Mayer for the leading feminine role in "Captain Applejack," the next Fred Niblo production. This will be Miss De La Motte's fourth picture with Mr. Niblo, the other three being "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "The Three Musketeers" and "The Mark of Zorro."

"HAZEL" FILM IS A SATIRE ON HOLLYWOOD

Three hundred members of the Hollywood Business Men's Club caught a glimpse of the new world-famous Hollywood seen from a comedy vein when the girls of the Studio Club showed them a special preview of Christie's latest production, "Hazel From Hollywood," a satire on the movies.

The business men, who are accustomed to view Hollywood Boulevard from the point of view of so many dollars per front foot, saw their city, made famous by the movies, as pictured in a little town of the Middle West, where Hazel, pride of the Nutt family, tears away without a pang of parting from her old folks at home and hies her to the cinema capital to become a noted star.

One of the big kicks in the picture is the scene of "Hazel" hashing in a Hollywood Boulevard cafe, while writing her "sap" lover back East that she lunches daily with Rodolph Valentino, Mary Miles Minter, Gloria Swanson, et cetera. The Hollywood men saw their town—at least the motion picture part of it—kidded a little, but they took the joshing good-naturedly as they realized that the funny side of picture-making had been caught on the celluloid.

The first showing of "Hazel From Hollywood" was given as part of the Hollywood Studio Club's entertainment of the business men and was appropriate because the Studio Club's membership is made up partially of girls who are breaking into the pictures.

Miss Marjorie Williams, executive manager of the Studio Club for the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., is in charge of the campaign to enlarge the scope of the studio girls' organization, and she declared after the preview showing that every girl who hopes to come to Hollywood and get into the movies should see this picture, but that she should not take it too seriously as a real picture of breaking in. Christie's "Hazel," in other words, is purely for amusement, and while the experiences of a movie struck maiden getting a job in a Hollywood studio are more or less enlightening, it is not to be supposed that every girl can get into the movies as easily as does the "Hazel" of the satirical comedy.

Alvin Wyckoff, pioneer cameraman, resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky forces last week and signed a contract to photograph "Captain Applejack," Fred Niblo's next production. He has been connected with Paramount for the past eight years.

The Lure of Latin Life to Live in L. A.

The choicest exhibits on display at the great international exposition now in progress at Rio de Janeiro will be brought to Los Angeles for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to be held here next summer in commemoration of the Monroe Doctrine's hundredth anniversary. This announcement was made this week by the Revue and Exposition management, which is already making plans for Spanish-American participation in Los Angeles' great event.

All South and Central America, as well as Mexico and the West Indies, are represented at the huge celebration of the hundredth anniversary of Brazilian independence, which is to close March 31. Efforts are now being made to get all the nations and private interests participating in that event to move their exhibits to Los Angeles for the Revue and Exposition here a few months later.

The interest of Central and South American republics in the Monroe Doctrine and President James Monroe is indicated by the fact that the Brazilian Exposition erected at Rio the Monroe Palace, probably the most beautiful building ever constructed in South America. Diplomatic representatives of these countries have already bespoken their countries' hearty co-operation with Los Angeles and the motion picture industry in staging an international event suitably observing the Monroe Doctrine Centennial.

Spanish-Americans, accepting the invitation of Los Angeles, to come here next summer for the Exposition, will find themselves at home among people who speak their language, serve their own food, play their own music, and who dispense the same wonderful hospitality for which the genial residents of Latin America and old-time California are noted.

The architectural motif of the entire Revue and Exposition is Spanish Colonial. Warships and troops of several Central and South American countries will participate in the Historical Revue, which will portray episodes from the history of South America as well as that of the United States, Boliver, Sucre, Don Pedro and other South American immortals will receive due recognition, as will great Spaniards who, like Magellan, added lustre to the history of the New World.

A special group of buildings will be erected at Exposition Park to house Latin-American exhibits. Arrangements are being made for continuous entertainment of Latin character that will give this section a constant atmosphere of fiesta.

Local Spanish participation will be in conjunction with this and will be in the capable hands of Spanish-American organizations and individuals of Los Angeles and Southern California, who have done most to preserve the spirit of Spanish Colonial traditions in California.

A casa of Spanish Colonial or Mission design to house the activities of this group is a part of the plan of the Exposition management. From this casa will be dispensed a lavish hospitality typical of the Mission days. This building will include, in addition to the room set apart for administration and purely social activities, a restaurant, theater and museum, all typically Spanish.

In this casa descendants of old Spanish families of California's history will receive their brothers and sisters of the South and celebrate the fiestas with all the dignity, beauty, charm and color of the days of the Dons and Donnas. In the restaurant the delectable dishes of Old Spain will be prepared by cooks and served by señoritas who know how to cook and to serve, while the best singers, the most expert dancers and celebrated string orchestras of both local and foreign fame will entertain night and day.

In the theater appropriate entertainment will be given and in the patio visiting Latin-American bands will play, the idea being to maintain an almost continuous holiday atmosphere. An interesting part of this plan of local Spanish participation is the museum of Spanish Colonial Antiques; objects for this museum will be lent to the Exposition by owners of private collections. In this connection house-keeping methods of old Mission days will be shown together with arts and crafts of Mission Indians. For these treasures California will be ransacked from garret to cellar. A Pageant and perhaps a play representative of Spanish Colonial history are also scheduled as features of this department.

It is hoped to have several Presidents from the Latin-American countries as guests of the Exposition. Many distinguished diplomats, army and navy officers, special commissioners, men and women educators and artists of stage and screen are already planning to be present.

Seeking a Voting Majority for Better Films

An invitation is extended by the National Committee for Better Films to every person in the United States who wishes to learn about and patronize the best pictures. It is extended particularly to schools, churches, libraries, women's clubs and social agencies, as well as to parents and all individuals or organizations using motion pictures or otherwise interested in seeing that the production and exhibition of fine films are encouraged.

The National Committee for Better Films, which is affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, with headquarters at 70 Fifth Ave., New York, asks all these people and organizations to help it in its work of furthering the Better Films Movement by joining as Associate or Co-operating member under its new plan of membership. All members are supplied monthly with the committee's three major services Photoplay Guide of Selected Pictures for the family group and special young people's entertainments; "Film Progress," the committee's organ of the Better Films Movement; and "Exceptional Photoplays," critical reviews of the finer productions, issued by the National Board of Review. Reports on many interesting informational films suitable for either school or community exhibition as those for religious education, are included in these services. Members also receive a certificate of membership and the Membership Creed, which it is believed everyone joining will be heartily glad to endorse.

It is the committee's contention, which has been tested and proved by experience in Atlanta, Cleveland and other cities, that a marked influence can be exerted on the character of local motion picture entertainments by community cooperation in support of the good films. When the good films are well supported, the exhibitor is led to book more of that kind. Investigation shows, conversely, that in many communities the exhibitor is discouraged from booking the unusual and artistic film because, when he has ventured to do this, his regular audience has on the whole been unable to appreciate it, and the very people who would have gone out of their way to see it had they known about it, have stayed at home.

"Every ticket dropped into the box at the entrance of a motion picture theatre is virtually a ballot," writes the secretary of the committee, "a ballot that reaches not only the exhibitor but the producer. The one gauge of 'success' and 'what the public wants,' which exhibitor and producer inevitably recognize, is box office receipts. Attendance at a certain type of film means that more films of that type will be produced and exhibited. Indiscriminate attendance or no attendance at all is misuse or neglect of the motion picture voter's power.

"There are artists in the film industry who three-fourths of the time produce hokum and one-fourth let us glimpse what they can really do. Promptly the movie audiences through the box office says 'Go back to the old stuff that we're used to from you and like. We don't want any change of fare.' And so the old dishes are served up again with new names and garnishings and the habituated masses consume, while those with taste and discrimination remain unsatisfied—when they do not go entirely without.

"What we want to do is to create a voting majority, or at least a determining minority, of motion picture goers who are sufficiently epicurean to make the honest, worthwhile, artistic picture surely pay. They can learn of these pictures as they are produced, from the National Committee for Better Films; they can learn to appreciate these pictures by attending them and reading the critical and interesting reviews in 'Exceptional Photoplays' which is furnished to members. They can, if they will, engage in a fascinating activity by organizing community support for these films, and cinema study clubs, among lines already in vogue in many cities as reported in the pages of 'Film Progress.'"

"Every community should develop without delay a faithful and energetic nucleus of members of the National Committee for Better Films who can be depended on to arouse interest in and enthusiasm for the finer, more significant productions, extend a knowledge of the National Committee's services, and also cooperate with the exhibitor in building up audiences for family and young people's entertainments."

News from New York

New York, Jan. 29.—Chas. Giblyn is back among us again and glad of it. "Holland does well enough, but there's no place like 'the Friars Club,'" says Charlie.

Marguerite Courtot, once upon a time known as the "Little Kalem Girl," but now grown up, is recuperating in the Newark Hospital from an operation for appendicitis. Miss Courtot was taken there a week ago following a severe attack at her home in Jersey.

Argyle Cambell, well-known New York stage director, is writing the stories for the Ray McKee Comedies. Felix Adler is the "gag" man.

Ivor Novello, who comes to the American screen via D. W. Griffith's latest production, "The White Rose," is the author of the song, "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

Joe Smiley is walking Broadway with his nose in the air and a satisfied look in his eye. When asked what it was all about Joe lifted his eyebrows, fixed his tie and remarked: "Tisn't ripe yet, so long."

Wyndham Standing has returned from Holland where he starred in the independent feature, "The Hypocrites."

A bogus Anna Q. Nilsson made a personal appearance in Milford, Conn., two days ago and almost got away with it. The lady's real name is Bertha Anderson and it seems she has a weakness for being someone else "alla time." She breezed into the office of the manager of the Milford "Opry" house with a million dollar smile and offered her services for the evening. In ten shakes the town-crier had announced the great news and long before opening time the country roads were dotted with buckboards and Fords enroute to the "Thee Ater." In due time "Anna" made her appearance amid much applauding and whistling. Then someone, probably the town "slick," chirped, "She's a fake." The lady was taken into custody and was quizzed at the station house. Finally she convinced the authorities that she was the Anna Nilsson, and was then dismissed. Which only goes to show, you can't fool the law.

Our original Sheik Ruddy, has appealed to the Supreme Court for a rearrangement of the injunction restraining him from "earning his living." According to Valentino the injunction has prevented him from an offer to appear in a Tango for a cabaret which offered him $6,000 a week and other opportunities.

Francis X. Bushman, who has just completed two years of very successful vaudeville appearances on the Keith circuit, is back in town with the announcement that he will soon start production on a series of high-grade photoplays which will co-star his wife, Beverly Bayne and himself.

Jeanie MacPherson is enjoying a brief vacation along Broadway.

Fatty Arbuckle's first "come back," "Fatty and Mable," is playing in and around New York. There was no comment on the film.

Mary Anderson, named as one of the stars in C. C. Burr's all-star comedy release, has left that organization to make personal appearances with her last feature, "Wildness of Youth."

Raymond McKee and Charlie Murray are doing the exteriors of their latest comedy in St. Augustine, Florida. A flying trip.

A bill was introduced yesterday in the New York Legislature which, if passed, will make it a misdemeanor for anyone to pose as an actor or actress who is not one. The

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, Calif., Jan. 29, 1923.—The Belasco Productions have opened their own distributing offices in New York at 1600 Broadway. They will handle their own productions for world-wide distribution, also other pictures considered worthy of being given to the world under the famous name of Belasco. An efficient sales force has been formed and service will begin at once with "The Eyes of Love," the first picture made by the Belasco Productions, and which has been given a most enthusiastic reception by the film men of New York. Edward Belasco has just returned to San Francisco from New York and work on the company's second picture will begin at once.

Monroe Salisbury, formerly star for the West Coast Films in their picture, "The Great Alone," has signed a forty weeks' contract to appear in the famous Mission play at San Gabriel.

Ted Taylor, publicity man for Goldwyn, arrived in San Francisco a few days ago to be added to the staff assisting Eric Van Stroheim in the preparations for the Goldwyn production of "McTeague."

Cullen Landis and Robert Lewis have been signed by Max Graf for the forthcoming production here in San Francisco of "The Fog."

Jackie Coogan arrived in San Francisco this morning and after a few days' stay at the home of his grandmother, will leave, with his mother, for a month's trip to the east for rest and pleasure.

Craig Hutchinson, director, and his company have started work at the new Gerson studios on Page Street on the second picture of the series of twelve two-reelers being made by them from Peter B. Kyne's stories. The title of this picture is "The Tiberious Tinker, Press Agent," and the cast includes Orral Humphrey, who is being featured, Evelyn Nelson, Carl Kroenke, George Webster, Rupert Drumm, Olaf Skavlan, and others.

Peter B. Kyne will arrive in San Francisco in the very near future, as he is titling the pictures being made from his stories himself, and having a personal supervision over the productions. Joseph Roach did the continuity for this second picture, also the third of the series soon to be shot.

Raymond Hitchcock, famous star of the screen and stage, arrived in San Francisco yesterday, jumping from New York with only a way stop at Kansas City to head the week's bill at the Orpheum. He will present himself in an unusual and unique act such as Hitchy only can put over.

The Northern California Photoplay expedition to South America has been reported safe as far as Balboa. Four more men sailed on the Columbia to join the expedition with supplies, rifles, ammunition, material for building boats, a second camera, and film. In two months the company will also start a picture-making expedition to the Congo district of South Africa.

Marshall Neilan came to San Francisco on Sunday for a few days' stay on business.

Mark McDermott, pioneer actor of the silver screen, is at the St. Francis.

Hobart Henley, director from Universal City, is in town for the opening of "The

Another week of work on the magnificent Gondelaunier set.

That is the schedule of Wallace Worsley who is directing "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at Universal City.

Already more than a week of rehearsal and shooting has been staged on the replica of the noted fifteenth century Parisian mansion. One hundred and ten couples, all carefully selected character people, have been engaged each day for the brilliant ball scenes and an orchestra has been on the set constantly.

Perley Poore Sheehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr., who adapted the Victor Hugo romance and Lon Chaney, who plays Quasimodo, are at Worsley's side during every minute on the set, aiding him in directing the dancers.

Kate Lester plays the haughty Madame de Gondelaunier, and other players include Patsy Ruth Miller as Esmeralda, Winifred Bryson as Fleur de Lys, Harry Van Meter as Monsieur de Feuchatel, Brandon Hurst as Jehan, Ernest Torrence as Clopin and Raymond Hatton as Gringoire.

Priscilla Dean is giving to the screen one of the strongest characterizations of her career. Supporting her are Anna May Wong, the Oriental actress of splendid dramatic ability who is mentioned in the last issue of Photoplay Magazine as having given the best individual performance of the month to the screen; Wallace Beery, Matt Moore, Tully Marshall, William V. Mong and others. Two hundred well chosen Chinese types are used in atmospheric shots.

A stage play of fine screen possibilities, "The Co-respondent," written by Rita Weiman and Alice Leal Pollock, is one of several new stories that Universal has purchased for special film productions, and which are being prepared in scenario form at Universal City now.

Another is "The Way of the Strong," by Octavus Roy Cohen, a writer of detective and dialect stories of strong dramatic punch.

Both of these stories will be made into all-star productions. The authors behind them are widely known and their names are an assurance of the quality required for the new all-star ventures Universal is planning for the new year.

What does the average wife demand of her husband?

Fidelity, of course, is an important item, more or less. Gentleness, attentiveness and unvarying courtesy are attractive qualities. Is money-making ability an essential? Manners and ability to dress? Understanding and sympathy?

"What Wives Want" is the title of a story which will be filmed as an all-star special at Universal City. Perry Vekroff, director and scenario editor, is the author. The story deals in no uncertain way with the problems of marriage and the qualities which result in perfect mating of couples. Edward T. Lowe, Jr., is preparing the continuity and Universal is seeking a director of the type necessary to handle such a story.

Tod Browning is getting into the biggest dramatic sequences of the Universal-Jewel special, "Drifting," adapted from the Brady stage success and presenting a remarkable story of a white woman stranded in China.

Laura LaPlante, who has been "in training" at Universal City for nearly two years, playing chapter films, western and comedy leads, is now playing her first feature leading role for Universal opposite Edward (Hoot) Gibson in "Katy Didd," a story written, scenarized and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

This opportunity for Miss LaPlante comes as a result of hard and consistent service in every kind of role, and it recalls the fact that half the favorites of filmdom have, at one time or another, gained valuable experience at Universal City. Miss LaPlante's last two performances at Universal City were the feminine leading roles opposite William Desmond in the Universal chapter plays, "Perils of the Yukon," and "Around the World in Eighteen Days."

Universal is preparing an all-star production to be directed by Jack Conway, based on "The Six-Fifty," the New York stage success written by Kate McLaurin. "The Six-Fifty" offers more than anything else three or four remarkably human, every-day characterizations.

Doris Schroeder has prepared the scenario. Conway is busy now with the cutting of "Trimmed in Scarlet," William Hurlburt's play, in which he directed Kathlyn Williams, Lucille Rickson, David Torrence, Robert Agnew, Roy Stewart, Phillips Smalley and others, and will initiate production on "The Six-Fifty" as quickly as the editing of "Trimmed in Scarlet" assumes releasing shape.

The significance of the title lies in the loneliness of a farm home where two who found unhappiness in the city, went for rest and relief; the "6:50" whistles over a nearby crossing every evening with a mournful hint of the spirit of life in the city beyond.

DIRECTOR OF NEW SCHOOL

Julian to Act in Next Picture He Directs

"Help! Help!"

No one is in distress.

It's merely a story that Rupert Julian, director of the spectacular "Merry-Go-Round," has written for Universal. Arthur Statter, a "cosmopolitan" character like Julian, politician, scenario writer and world traveler, is preparing the screen continuity. Charles Kenyon, a scenario supervisor, will supervise the production when the story is prepared and shooting commences.

Rupert Julian is going to play the lead as well as direct his next big production.

This clever character star has decided to appear once more on the silver sheet and is now looking for a story to do next. A few years ago, before going into retirement, Julian was one of the outstanding character stars of the cinema.

He directed and played in such productions as "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "The Fire Flingers" and "The Bugler of Algiers." There is a possibility that he may remake one of these stories.

Julian went into retirement a few years ago, but "came back" to direct "Merry-Go-Round." He is now cutting this picture which will be released in the fall as a Super-Jewel Special Production.

C. William Joy, popularly known as Billy Joy and also as Leatrice Joy's brother. He is a director with new ideas and a bright future therefore.

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

One man's opinion is as good as another's, but of course a consensus of opinion is better than that. Therefore, Charles Ray has much to be gratified over in his venture back to an old fold in "The Girl I Loved." The praise accorded him for giving to the world this classic inspired by James Whitcomb Riley's poem has been practically unanimous and spontaneous. No critic seemed prone to await the view-point of anyone else, but instead gave expression to unstinted commendation forthwith. "It is a role Ray can portray better than anyone else," declares Motion Picture News. "It adds to the glory of the screen as a medium for wholesome thought," admits a prominent magazine editor. There are many admirers who have felt Mr. Ray made a mistake in abandoning temporarily the line of characterizations which made him famous and popular and these same admirers are a unit in welcoming him back in his delightful portrayal of John Middleton in "The Girl I Loved." It does seem like the Charlie Ray of old, and, the Charlie Ray of old was much beloved as a sturdy upholder of many of the best traditions of the dramatic art. In dressed-up parts and in pictures which had to do exclusively with trivial parties of the smart set and football games of the elite colleges, he never seemed to be fulfilling his mission. There is more than one sincere advocate of cinema uplift who will earnestly pray that the truly great Charlie Ray will remain identified with just such characters as the revered Riley drew with such fine human touches.

One of the first evidences of Doctor Coue providing dramatic inspiration is to be found in the Paramount picture, "Dark Secrets," in which Dorothy Dalton stars, and, because it is so up-to-date as to be a first call, it is likely to enjoy wide popularity. The story visualized in this feature was unmistakably suggested by Coue's auto-suggestion theories. It all has to do with a girl crippled apparently for life by being tossed from the back of a spirited horse. After all medical aid had failed completely to restore her to physical normalcy, a mysterious and mystic Egyptian promises to cure and does cure through auto-suggestion impressed by some superfluous "laying on of hands." It is highly probable that many people, skeptical and otherwise, are going to brand this story as being absurdly improbable. Yet, if a small percentage of the reports are true, the aforesaid Coue is duplicating such healings daily. Casting aside all the pro and con the theme of "Dark Secrets" can arouse, this picture must be given credit for accomplishing high purposes in the matter of providing sustained dramatic situations such as grip. Those "fans" who dote on drama that impels a bit of squirming around out of sheer excitement will not be disappointed in this one.

"Not so good" seems to be the verdict so far as "While Paris Sleeps" is concerned, and, Lon Chaney, advertised as the star, does not have enough to do to justify exploiting him as such in this instance. As we understand it, this picture was made some time ago, and, it is likely its belated release is the result of Mr. Chaney's increased prestige of these recent times. It would have been at least "just as well" if the release had been deferred permanently! In the first place, "While Paris Sleeps" is extremely lurid melo-drama with unsavory

The motion picture industry is in the midst of a shifting of its executive, directorial and stellar personnel. Seldom before has there been so much changing affiliations and realignments as have been taking place in the last two weeks. It seems to be an indication of a settling process—of individual quests for grooves best fitted to individual inclinations and talents.

Improvement in the quality of photoplays continues to obtain with reassuring momentum, it being obvious producers as a general rule are awake to the fact that the day of real irreproachable screen literature is here. Out of a total of eleven new productions which got under way this week not a single one was based on a story with the slightest semblance of a salacious or delicate subject. This is especially notable and worthy of commendation since it is undeniable that there was a time when "possible objectionable stories" were in the majority.

This tendency to pay stars bonuses for signing long-term contracts is not one deserving of full approval, according to the consensus of opinion since such bestowals of opulence constitutes a waste which the public will be called upon to pay later. If a demand for bonuses becomes general among those artists in a position to make such a demand, the producers guilty of starting it will be to blame and such a condition will not be a healthy one nor will it tend to ingratiate the motion picture industry with the public. Meanwhile no one can blame anyone for accepting a bonus.

There is a surprising apathy in regard to the desirable work of improving the screen technique, it being the general proclivity to follow the well-blazed trails. As a matter of fact, very little has been added to the "inventions" D. W. Griffith gave to the screen nearly a decade ago. Could there be any doubt as to the cinema offering a wide latitude for the trying of the experiments of men with genius for improved technique; for a better way to unfold a story; for a more distinctive manner of dramatic expression?

vengeance as its chief motive. In the second place, it projects and magnifies an abnormal love which leads the unrequited one to plot terrible things such as should be kept remote from the public mind and could be if the newspapers and the screen would co-operate to ban all such "exploiting" of human weaknesses of character. There is enough of the good and wholesome in life and in fiction to keep every mind occupied and therefore there is no excuse for wasting time upon "distasteful escapades in bad taste," either if they actually happened or some fiction writer devised them. Jealousy of the militant variety should not constitute the crux of the situation of any photoplay since jealousy of this sort is a force for evil all forward-thinking people are striving to obliterate from human life. If it is used to drive home a powerful object lesson and is handled by a master hand in a masterly way, some good can be accomplished. Such beneficial results could not be achieved by anyone with such material as has been provided for "While Paris Sleeps."

Sure-fire is inevitable when Charlie Chaplin is on the job before the camera. That is what his latest comedy, "The Pilgrim" is and the mortal who could watch it without the heartiest kind of laughter is immune to any kind of humor or burlesque. Most critics declare "The Pilgrim" is not in the class of "Shoulder Arms" or "The Kid," but we do not think it misses earning this classification by a very wide margin. One thing certain, Charlie is just as funny as ever in this new role of his, for as the escaped convict who masquerades as the parson in a small town he has created a situation which lends itself to inspiring an excess of excruciatingly funny stunts such as creates mirth in quantity. Once more in this latest screen contribution, Chaplin proves himself to be a genius in a class by himself; once more he serves his usual high purpose of lightening the burdens of humanity; once more he gives a demonstration of the fact that true art enters into his every move as an interpreter of comedy. Conclusively, if this premier fun-maker never advanced one step further in his development of human humor and acceptable burlesque than he does in "The Pilgrim," his reputation would not suffer one iota and he could go on indefinitely. However, needless to add, he is yet to do his biggest things for the silversheet.

There is no doubt justification for accusing William Fox of being too eager to continue "cashing in" on variations of "Over the Hill." He has done the stereotyped mother love story all over again in "The Custard Cup" and at times as the reel is being whisked on, one is prone to imagine it really is "Over the Hill" after all. We are of the opinion that the said mother love theme has earned its regular vacation and that later when it returns, it will enjoy as much popularity as ever, especially if it comes back in a new and novel setting as it probably will. For the present there is no need for immediate repetition. True, "The Custard Cup" has its interesting human touches and its moments of tugging pathos. Mary Carr in the mother role evidently worked with all her might to be convincing, but, of course, Mary Carr is not a great actress and the stale sameness of this story served to thrust additional hardships upon her. Herbert Brenon directed this picture, but he was not in his usual form or else he found it too difficult to get his enthusiasm stirred up. However, it did achieve one thing worth mentioning and that was in providing most appropriate atmosphere for his story.

"Drums of Fate" serves impressively to finesse. It would seem that Fate alone is so keenly regret to see Mary Miles Minter

MRS. REID AND INCE RUSH PLAN FOR ANTI-DOPE FILM

According to the latest announcement from the Thomas H. Ince Studios of Culver City, plans are being advanced rapidly for the production of the spectacular anti-dope photoplay, Dorothy Davenport Reid proposes as her initial effort to continue the fight her late husband, Wallace Reid, started against the drug evil. The famous widow's idea is to present through the medium of the screen the true story of the narcotic menace, going into dramatic detail as to how it is being forced upon humanity by vicious men bent on amassing fortunes at the terrible cost of countless lives.

Immediately upon learning of Mrs. Reid's determination to undertake this commendable propaganda work in behalf of the common welfare, Mr. Ince volunteered his fullest co-operation with the result that an arrangement was made quickly whereby she would direct the filming of the picture at his studios.

"I don't think there is anyone who knows better than I do the heroic struggle Mrs. Reid made to save her own home from the drug evil and I think the entire nation has been inspired by her splendid fortitude," Mr. Ince says.

"There are many of us in the industry who would be glad to give of our time and experience in the building of a picture story that would at once hold the attention of all America and yet would drive home a warning against this terrible drug traffic which appears to be the most serious menace that has ever confronted the American people.

"I have talked with a few leaders of the industry here concerning the support in a big way of the Wallace Reid Memorial, an institution that would provide a scientific foundation for the elimination as far as possible of the drug habit.

"The facilities of my studios, the services of my studio staff and my own time and experience are at her disposal. I have so informed her by telephone today for I would consider it a great honor to have a hand in bringing to the screen the big dramatic story and the lesson that Mrs. Wallace Reid has to give. And I am convinced that the screen is the most powerful medium of expression there is in the world today to be directed against a menace of this kind."

WARNERS "CORNER" GRAND ARRAY OF PLOTS

Warner Brothers, one of the biggest independent producing companies haven't been letting any grass grow under their feet when it comes to buying the greatest stories in the country for filming. Their list for producing in 1923-24 has been completed and it includes "Beau Brummel" and "Lover's Lane" both well-known stage plays by Clyde Fitch, "Babbitt" the popular follow-up book of "Main Street," now under production by Warner Brothers, both by Sinclair Lewis, "Being Respectable" from the book by Grace H. Flandra, "Irene" the popular stage success of a season ago.

Two popular George M. Cohan plays which William Beaudine will direct with Wesley Barry in the leading role "Little Johnny Jones" and "George Washington, Jr.," both of which will be adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson, "Lucretia Lombard" from the book dealing with the intimacies of a woman's heart by Kathleen Norris which Sada Cowan will adapt for the screen, "Wolf Fangs," a story of the northern snows which Chester M. Franklin will direct, "Broadway after Dark," by Owen Davis, "Age of Innocence" from the book by Edith Wharton, "Cornered," the stage play in which Madge Kennedy made such a success on Broadway written by Dodson Mitchell and Zelda Sears, "How to Educate a Wife," a new book by Elinor Glyn, and "Shadowed Lives," by Justin Adams.

Warner Brothers are busy at present lining up well known novels and play successes which they will buy to follow the above pictures.

Elfelt Finishes "Danger"

Clifford S. Elfelt completed the photographing of his latest independent six-reel feature, "Danger," Monday after a four-week siege of night-and-day filming at the Fine Arts studios. J. B. Warner is starred in this picture, which unfolds a semi-western story, said to be replete with thrills.

Betty Giles, child actress from New Orleans, is playing a pilgrim at the Ray studio.

FRENCH AVIATRIX READY FOR BIG U. S. FLIGHT

Negotiations are under way whereby a specially constructed aeroplane, designed to withstand the rigors of a transcontinental flight, will be placed at the disposal of Andree Peyre, Pathe player and aviatrix, in her forthcoming attempt to fly from New York to Hollywood, according to a telegram received here from Mlle. Peyre.

The aviatrix left Los Angeles for New York several days ago for the execution of personal business at the conclusion of which she has begun preparations for her flight across the continent.

Mlle. Peyre, an experienced flyer holding licenses both in this country and France where she is known as "the most daring woman in the world," will pilot her machine herself.

Her purpose of essaying the transcontinental flight, the difficulties of which,—such as have prevailed over Lieuts. Kelly and MacReady for the time being, she fully realizes, is to seek to hasten the day when the aeroplane is popularly regarded as a means of conveyance rather than as a novelty. The fact that she is one of the "weaker sex," Mlle. Peyre declared before leaving Hollywood, should not militate against her success.

By police orders Mlle. Peyre was virtually driven from her native city of Paris because she refused to discontinue her daring aerial exploits. Thereupon she was starred in a series of productions made in Vincennes and later came to this country where she has made her debut with Pathe.

Pearl White Mystifies

Has Pearl White decided to quit the screen for good? This is the question in the minds of her Los Angeles friends as the result of her forsaking the life of a screen celebrity to seclude herself within the walls of an Alpine convent. One report indicates Miss White has entered the convent to enjoy a long rest and regain her health. Another has it that she is brooding over the mysterious disappearance of her husband, Waldo McCutcheon, who has never been located.

Eva Novak has completed her engagement at the Fox studio where she played opposite William Russell in a feature production.

SPECIAL COINS FOR EXPO ASSURED

President Harding's signature to Senator Hiram Johnson's bill providing for the coinage of 300,000 half-dollars commemorating the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, has removed the last possible obstacle confronting the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition in obtaining the fullest government co-operation for the motion picture industry's project of staging a huge international celebration here next summer. The event, lasting a month, will be a great patriotic observance of the Monroe Doctrine's hundredth anniversary.

It is expected that the first of the new half-dollars will be in circulation early in March. The coins will be distributed through local banks and will be sold for $1 each, the proceeds to be used in financing the Revue and Exposition.

The design of the new coin will be worked out by the National Commission of Fine Arts in New York. The dies will be cast in the East, then probably sent to the government mint at San Francisco, where the half-dollars will be turned out for immediate shipment to Los Angeles. According to the tentative design for the new half-dollar, it will bear the heads, in profile, of President James Monroe and his Secretary of State, John Quincy Adams, on one side; and on the other an outline of North, South and Central America, the territory whose integrity has been protected by the Monroe Doctrine for the past century.

President Harding has given his fullest approval to plans for the Revue and Exposition. He is said to be planning a trip to the Pacific coast this spring so he can attend the formal opening of the event.

A. D. A. Hears Tax Talk

At the last bi-monthly meeting of the Assistant Directors Association of California, held on Thursday evening, Feb. 1st, Miss J. M. Berger, Income Tax Specialist, gave a very interesting and instructive talk to the members on Income Tax. The Association was highly honored by the attendance of Roy Stewart and Herbert Rawlinson. Two very clever vaudeville skits were put on by talented members of the Cinema profession. The next meeting will be held Feb. 15th.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Some of This Week's Film News You May Have Overlooked.

The William Russell starring vehicle at Fox is practically finished. Eva Novak is playing the leading feminine role.

Eddie Gribbon, formerly of the Mack Sennett forces, has completed a picture with "Hoot" Gibson. The title is "The Poor Worm" and Eddie plays the heavy.

Roger W. Fowler, cinematographer for D. W. Griffith, and Miss Ruth Lux, a non-professional, were married Sunday evening on the top of Lookout Mountain, back of Hollywood.

Agnes Ayres' new starring vehicle for Paramount, "Contraband," adapted by A. S. LeVino from a story by Clarence Budington Kelland, was started last Monday. Wesley Ruggles will direct.

Actual production on Edwin Carewe's next First National attraction, "The Girl of the Golden West," has started. J. Warren Kerrigan, Sylvia Breamer and Russell Simpson head the cast of talented players.

The new Myrtle Stedman production, "A Temporary Marriage," is nearing completion. Lambert Hillyer is directing and the all-star cast includes Mildred Davis, Kenneth Harlan, Tully Marshall and Stuart Holmes.

"The Talisman," Scott's immortal novel of the crusades, will serve as "a next starring vehicle" for Douglas Fairbanks. Rumors to the effect that Doug would film this picture in England were denied by the star, this week.

"Bumps" is the title of a forthcoming Educational-Cameo Comedy featuring Jimmie Adams. Sounds like rough stuff, but it is nothing more than the adventures of the new owner of his first flivver.

Huntley Gordon is playing the male lead opposite Katherine MacDonald in the B. P. Schulberg production, "Chastity," which, incidentally, will serve as the last picture in which Miss MacDonald will work, as she is retiring from the screen.

Helen Broneau is the latest player to be signed by Universal for an important character role in support of Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Miss Broneau had just finished a role in "Merry-Go-Round." Other feminine players engaged for the Victor Hugo story include Patsy Ruth Miller, Eulalie Jensen, Jane Sherman, Gladys Johnstone, Eva Gordon, Kate Lester and Winifred Bryson.

Miss Shirley Kellogg, noted English cinema star, has arrived in Los Angeles from London, to study the American process of producing motion pictures. She expects to return to her native country in April to establish her own studios.

Thomas H. Ince is rapidly finishing the cutting, editing and titling of four productions which will follow "The Hottentot," as First National attractions. They are "Scars of Jealousy," "What a Wife Learned," "The Sunshine Trail" and "A Man of Action."

According to reports from New York, George J. Gould will sell his pretentious Gregorian Court estate, at Lakewood, New Jersey, to Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, for a settlement of $5,000,000. Does this indicate Hollywood will lose its Mary and Doug?

Jackie Coogan is in New York, enjoying a vacation which will occupy his time for the next four or five weeks. After visiting all the Zoos and show places of Gotham, Jackie will return to the grease paint to start his first production under the Metro banner.

The organization assisting Director Frank Lloyd on Norma Talmadge's next First National attraction, "Within the Law," is of old-time standing. Again Tony Gaudio and Norbert Brodin are the cinematographers, and Walter Israel, the costume designer.

Keeping up his intention of showing new girl's faces in the Educational-Mermaid Comedies in which Lige Conley is featured. Jack White, the producer-director, has engaged Lily Mae Lyle, a noted beauty, to portray Lige's screen sweetheart in his forthcoming comedy.

Herbert Brenon is on the third week of his first Paramount production, "The Rustle of Silk," featuring Betty Compton and Conway Tearle. Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere wrote the screen adaptation from the novel by Cosmo Hamilton. Among others in the cast are Anna Q. Nilsson and Cyril Chadwick.

Hugh Deirker Productions have started work at the Fine Arts studios on the first of a series of feature pictures, which they will present with an all-star cast. The American Releasing Corporation has contracted for the pictures. Mr. Deirker, who will direct the series, is remembered for his production of "When Dawn Came," which was proclaimed one of the twelve best pictures produced during 1921.

Reports from Gotham indicate Bebe Daniels, who underwent an operation for appendicitis last week, is recovering "most satisfactorily," it is said the room which Miss Daniels occupies while convalescing is literally packed with flowers sent by friends and admirers.

At last, folks, we have been given the low-down on the Chaplin-Negri nuptial question. Both Charlie and Pola have blushing admitted they are engaged to be married—and in the near future too. Now we can all say, "I knew it all the time." Sure had us guessing, though.

Danny Cupid's side-kick, Dame Rumor, tried for a knock-out this week, but failed utterly in the attempt. What was believed to be a reliable report became circulated to the effect that Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis were engaged. Reporters learned Harold was "out for the evening," and Mildred just gasped and said, "It's too ridiculous!"

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an examination for candidates wishing to obtain motion picture laboratory employment, which will be held March 7, 1923. Those desirous of entering the Civil Service in this capacity can secure application blanks from the Civil Service Commission, Hall of Records, Los Angeles.

James Young is back from Santa Barbara with the completed script on "Wandering Daughters," his first independent production for Associated First National Pictures. Young expects to have completed this film in time to direct "Tribby" for Richard Walton Tully, with whom he was also associated on "The Masquerader" and "Omar, the Tentmaker."

The Ramon Icaez productions finished "Movie Mad," the first of a series of six pictures, last Saturday. They will start on their second feature at the Court Studio immediately. It is a burlesque on "Broadway Rose," entitled "Broadway Mose," featuring Ramon Icaez supported by Lucile de Bois. H. W. Hughes is the director. The series will be released through State Rights.

Victor Seastrom, Sweden's greatest author, actor and director, has been signed by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, according to reports from New York. Mr. Seastrom has just arrived in the eastern city from his native country, where he has recently finished what is said to be a sensation in film circles, "The Stroke of Midnight." He will confine his activities to the western studios.

Metro has just signed Paul Powell, veteran newspaper man and for the past twelve years one of the most prominent directors in the Southern California field, to direct a quarter of a million production for Max Graf. He will picture "Fog," a William Pelley story, and has selected Cullen Landis, Ralph Lewis and other prominent artists for the principal roles. The picture will be made at the San Mateo studios.

Patrons at the opening performance of "My American Wife," at Grauman's new Metropolitan Theatre last Friday, were astonished to gaze upon the screen and witness the scenes of the mass of people crowded about the new playhouse, taken as they had made their entrance. The reel, two hundred feet long, was filmed, developed and flashed upon the screen in the amazing short time of two hours and twenty-five minutes.

Walter Hiers and wife are in our midst once more. The newlyweds arrived from an extensive tour of the east following their wedding at Syracuse, New York, the former home of the bride. Walter has already started work on his second starring vehicle for Lasky, "Seventy-five Cents an Hour." Jacqueline Logan will play the feminine role in support. Clarence Burton will be the villain and Ricardi Cortez will make his start as a Lasky player in an important role.

A thrilling and realistic electrical storm sweeps through some of the scenes of "Westbound 99," Emory Johnson's third spectacular production to be filmed at the Film Booking Office studios. Ralph Lewis plays the featured role, with Ella Hall as the feminine lead. The supporting cast includes Claire McDowell, Johnny Haron, Taylor Graves, Wedgewood Newell, Red Kirby, Richard Morris and Jane Morgan. The story for "Westbound 99" was written and adapted by Mrs. Emilie Johnson.

It has been confirmed that Paramount has corralled another star. This time it's in the person of Richard Dix, who signed a contract last week with the Famous Players-Lasky organization in consideration of a salary reported to be several thousand dollars a week. By the terms of the contract, which was offered and accepted immediately after he completed his performance in support of Agnes Ayres in "Racing Hearts," Mr. Dix's histrionic efforts will belong to the Paramount company for the next five years.

SECOND KID GETS CHANCE FROM CHAPLIN

Is Charlie Chaplin going to be the means of making two great child stars of the films?

Four years ago, Jackie Coogan, totally unknown, broke into the public eye when he appeared with the comedy king in the First National film, "The Kid."

A month after the release of that picture Jackie was the best known child in America and since then has become the best known child in the world.

From a salary of $75 a week supporting a star, Jackie is now one of the highest-paid screen artists in the world and is a star of the first magnitude.

Dinky Dean's footsteps seem to be pattering along the same little path trod by Jackie. He is Charlie's pal in the comedian's latest First National release, "The Pilgrim," and like Jackie is the son of an actor. Dinky is now four years old—the same age at which Jackie appeared in "The Kid."

Dinky's real name is Dean Franklin Reisner and he is the son of Chuck Reisner, popular song writer, and a principal in the casts of many of Chaplin's great films. Dinky was born while his dad was supporting Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" and Charlie promised then and there that he would give Dinky a part in his pictures some day.

Dinky's natural gift of acting won him the part in which he now appears in "The Pilgrim." It looks like the future holds stardom for Dinky just as it once did for Jackie Coogan.

Shriners Show "Smile Again"

Hazel Madelin Lindoft, composer, and Zolla Zorana, European actress, are putting on a musical comedy for the Shriners' Club House benefit, to be held in the T. D. and L. theatre at Glendale, February 8, afternoon and evening.

Miss Lindoft rewrote the play and music from her original manuscript which she wrote for production at the Gamut Club seven years ago. Zolla Zorana is assisting Miss Lindoft in the direction as well as playing the leading part of "Lorna," a little Hawaiian girl.

"Big Handsome Bill Sykes" of Hollywood is playing "Duane Dunstan," a college football hero. A select chorus of girls under nineteen has been organized. Virgie Elii has been handling their direction. Rosa Rehn has designed costumes for the show, which will also include a Fashion Revue.

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., producers of "Queen of the Moulin Rouge," have started the filming on their next production, "Wife In Name Only" at their Astoria, Long Island, studios.

HERE'S PROOF THAT FATE TRAVELS IN CIRCLES

It has worked out just as a certain Los Angeles student of psychology predicted many months ago. When Mary Pickford announced her intention of starring in "Tess of the Storm Country" for a second time in her brilliant career this prophet immediately declared that whoever happened to be fortunate enough to be assigned the role of hero in the revival would emerge from performance a star in his own right. Lloyd Hughes was subsequently selected and now he has entered upon his career of stardom precisely as predicted. All is in readiness at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City for this debonair, young screen artist to start his first stellar activities before the cameras in a picture, the working title of which is "Atonement."

Something like nine years ago Miss Pickford made the original film version of "Tess" and the late Harold Lockwood, then comparatively unknown, was chosen to play the leading male character opposite her. No one had any idea of there being in existence the slightest semblance of a possibility of any actor transcending the handicap of playing his way to stardom while in the inevitable position of yielding to the influence of such a dominating artist as the inimitable Mary. However, Mr. Lockwood stepped directly from this engagement to the stellar strata and was accepted as a star of the first rank from that time on to the day of his untimely death.

In the case of Mr. Hughes he was in such demand long before he completed his engagement at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios that he was tempted into accepting featured roles in two other productions which intervened between the time of ending his engagement with Miss Pickford and the date set for his debut at the Ince studios as a full-fledged star. One of these productions was B. P. Schulberg's "Are You A Failure?" in which he is said to score a distinct success. The other was as leading man to May MacAvoy in a picture, the tentative title of which is "News." But, the one element which played the vital part in bringing to him an offer to star, was his histrionic achievement in support of Miss Pickford just as this was the one quality which focused sufficient attention upon the revered Mr. Lockwood to make possible his ascendancy to the top rung of the cinema ladder.

When pondered seriously, the whole coincidence suggests all sorts of mysticisms relative to the occult forces behind the incessant evolution of Fate's decrees in its unending swing around the same circle upon which mortals tread helplessly at its mercy.

NOW EVEN OLD DOBBIN REJUVENATES

Dr. Carl Clevenson's experiment on "Mohawk," Hobart Bosworth's favorite bay stallion, which he rode in the first western motion picture ever made in Los Angeles, has amazed the veterinarians on the Pacific Coast with the success of this, the first equine gland transplantation. When Mr. Bosworth learned of Dr. Clevenson seeking an aged thoroughbred for his experiment he ordered "Mohawk," who is twenty years old, brought in from the Bosworth Rancho. The editor of Western Horseman states that "Mohawk" looks good for twenty years more, after seeing the old hurdler clear a five-foot hurdle with the ease and grace of a three-year-old.

If the commercially inclined would have more regard for the artistic and the artistically inclined would keep more cognizant of the importance of the commercial side of it, a better balance might be struck. In an occupation wherein art and business are so intermingled out of sheer necessity, it becomes a matter of importance for everyone concerned in it to develop a versatility. There are a few men with lop-sided ideas remaining pre-eminently active in the field and we hope they read this and that they read it as it is intended: as a helpful suggestion.

The seven days starting tomorrow have been named as Anniversary week of Associated First National. More than 5,000 theatres throughout the country who use First National pictures have arranged an all-First National program, especially selected for the observance of this anniversary.

"CLIMBING" MADE QUICK CLIMB TO SCREEN

That the Los Angeles stage is now being depended upon by motion picture producers for much of their screen material is evident from the fact that John M. Stahl has selected "Climbing," the Lee Hutty success at the Majestic, as the vehicle for his next all-star production for Louis B. Mayer, in preference to the many plays which he viewed during his recent visit of several months in New York.

Paying a price said to be far above the figure brought by the average eastern stage offering, Mr. Mayer has completed negotiations for "Climbing." It will be transferred to the screen as a First National release, under the personal direction of Mr. Stahl who has steadily come to the front as one of the able directors in the industry. "The Dangerous Age," "One Clear Call," and "The Child Thou Gavest Me" are among his latest triumphs.

Based on the argument that there is only one class of people in America, some more fortunate than others, but all spiritually equal and entitled to the same rights and same consideration, "Climbing" has a theme that will blend well with the fine type of pictures being made by Mr. Stahl.

"Next to clean pictures, I believe that the public's greatest desire is for productions which are human, productions which stir the emotions in a good, wholesome way and that, above all, entertain," said the director in discussing the purchase of Miss Hutty's play. "There is enough of the drab and desolate in our everyday lives without mixing it in with our recreations. Both Mr. Mayer and myself were attracted to 'Climbing' through its poignant human quality. It not only gets humor and drama out of its scathing arraignment of artificiality, but it also drives home a strong lesson without the disadvantages of preachment."

It is probable that "Climbing" will soon make its debut in New York where Thomas Wilkes is now engaged in the selection of a cast and theatre for the play.

Did You Know—

That Marguerite De La Mott began her career as a dancer? At the age of fourteen she made her debut at a Los Angeles theatre in a solo dance created by herself.

That William V. Mong, noted character actor, is a successful scenario writer? He is preparing the continuity for a big special to go into production soon.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-up

If Mary, Doug, Charlie, Pola, et al., do take that trip around the world in a chartered ship, it is a foregone conclusion that Great Britain will cease to rule the waves "for the nonce" so far as the interest of most peoples will be concerned.

Saloons are gone. Remember the old saying: "They never come back." It's true. Saloons won't. But light wines and beers purchasable at the family grocery store—well, that's different. They have a chance with Edwards and Copeland leading a healthy bloc in the United States Senate.

People who try to convince others that motion picture people are worse than people in other professions and trades, don't know what they are talking about. So why pay any attention to them? The one mortal it is a waste of time to discuss anything with is the misguided one who does not know what he is talking about.

The day is coming during this generation when the motion picture will be developed to the high point of being recognized as the American form of artistic expression. And, the great genius who will achieve the masterly triumph destined to place the cinema on that basis is now probably in oblivion struggling to avoid ridicule for venturing to give utterance to so-called wild ideas.

There is a constant demand for more action in pictures. Pretty soon they'll be wanting more action than a camera can catch. It's a swift age—too swift perhaps. Is it not better to give a picture a chance to score an enlightening point, a cheerful hope, a human touch of sheer delight or most anything worth-while rather than a surfeit of breath-taking, hair-raising action which means nothing except excitement?

The motion picture industry never has essayed an enterprise as commendable as the forthcoming Exposition in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. Failure to give the project unstinted and substantial support is not only a matter of overlooking an opportunity to ingratiate the screen with the peoples of the three Americas, but it is virtually a shirking of a duty. If there ever was a proposition deserving of unanimity of helpfulness, the Exposition is that proposition and no producer, director, photographer or technical man should fail to arise to the auspicious occasion with auspicious co-operation.

MY IDEAL CINEMA

Triumphant and right is my Cinema. The mecca of liberty-loving millions, a broad expanse of home grandeur, a huge hive melliferous in its joy-infusing output of unsurpassable genius—Cinema, the source and resource upon which all civilized mankind depends for salvation from life's drabness, for the right to have and to hold the fruits of glorious diversion. Where natural desires to live and let live are gratified, where justice attains its greatest heights, where men are virile enough to sacrifice their all in order that the proposition, all people are created equal, may survive, and where women are so far possessed by fortitude that they refuse to succumb to grief when it is imperative to be up and doing—where countless blessings predominate—ah, yes, the Cinema of unlimited opportunities to see and understand views of life which edify as they divert, that's my Cinema where I live and where I love to live my leisure moments as pleasure moments.

Avast! Mortals! We should exult! As a peerless people we have generally chosen the right which is beyond the reach of metamorphic influences of the volatile sort. We have seldom espoused a wrong cause—we have a record above reproach; we are the proud devotees to the greatest fine art in all history. We are as altruistic as human beings could be. We are as devoid of clandestine motives as the guiding stars of a clear firmament. We do not know how to perpetrate intrigue—we only know how to combat and nullify it. We believe in upholding the best traditions of true Christianity and we never permit personal ambition to interfere with our straight, unrelenting purpose of respecting the Creator above all things else. We will condone no breaking of faith or law which designing monarchs attempt to commit under the pretext of abiding by a constitution. We are the modest but firm defenders of the weak, the invincible opponents of the unscrupulous strong. We, the devotees to the Cinema, strive to be all that is required to make this life a glory, and, the Cinema which will help us be all these things and do all these things, the Cinema which shall always be forging ahead in universal uplift of art, literature, ideals and morals—that is my ideal Cinema.

Meet Extreme Danger with Extreme Defence

Filmland arises to land a knock-out blow on the drug ring. Here's hoping no mercy whatsoever will be shown to even the measliest dope peddler. Incidentally, let it be impressed the present law does not impose sufficient punishment. Nothing short of the death penalty will suffice to stamp out this vicious evil which threatens to undermine our very government. This may sound radical, but the brazen machinations of the promoters of this illicit traffic have grown

If the screen is to progress as it should, some of the leaders must discontinue their tactics of dollar-chasing and political by-play, both of which have retarding effects.

The rainy weather may help the crops, but it doesn't help the making of pictures much. But the weatherman is like anyone else—he cannot possibly please everybody.

The resignation fever seems to be epidemic at Universal City just now. Even the lions in the zoo show restive inclinations such as precede resignations.

Now that we are having an era of marriages among motion picture celebrities, let us pray earnestly that there shall be no succeeding era of divorces. We don't want to separate from all this rejoicing.

Someone suggests that Camera! start a campaign to—but what difference does it make? There is an over-abundance of campaigns on perennially anyway and this magazine does not consider it imperative to increase 'em.

The only way to make dope peddlers behave is to put them in prison for long terms and destroying the drug traffic so completely that when they are released, there will be no such trade for them to resume plying again and if the authorities cannot round up the gang, incompetence and inefficiency will be at fault since it is undeniable sufficient public pressure has been brought to bear.

Rumors to the effect that he had changed his attitude regarding his decision in the "Fatty" Arbuckle case, forced Will Hays, generalissimo of filmdom, to issue a denial last week. "I have not changed my position in regard to Roscoe Arbuckle," Mr. Hays said. The erroneous reports were the upshot of Arbuckle's announcement that he would abandon plans for producing pictures because of the storm which has arisen since his reinstatement.

EXHAUSTS

From Al Martin

Tom Mix is doing "Modern Monte Cristo." Atta boy, Tom, now you can say, "the world is mine."

Suggestion for advertising "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." See the song—sing the picture. Foolish, ain't it?

Baby Peggy's latest picture for Century is "Too Many Lovers." When you grow up, Peggy, you'll laugh at that title.

Jimmy Adams has been signed by Julius Stern to co-direct, play and write for Century comedies. Jimmy will not photograph these pictures, however.

Helen Feguson must be playing a bird in her picture with Edward (Hoot) Gibson. The title is "The Poor Worm."

Bull Montana is making "The Two Twins" supported by Chuck Reisner. When they finish this picture it is rumored they will do a "sister act" in vaudeville.

George Rigas is making personal appearances in John's restaurant. Has she got a friend, George?

Bobby Agnew asked: "Did you go to Grauman's opening?" Jackie Carlyle: "I didn't even know they were closed."

Result—Main event, Hollywood Stadium, Agnew vs. Carlyle.

Wm. Desmond is now working in "The Phantom Fortune." This kind of fortune originated on the corners of Hollywood Blvd. and Cahuenga Ave.

Rollie Totheroh is shaking a "mean" camera on Chaplin's "Destiny." He successfully photographed a gust of wind.

Gladys Walton under the direction of King Baggot is doing the "Chicken." If this one crosses the street, blame her director.

The directors on the Universal lot are singing songs these rainy days. Their favorite number is "Wait till the clouds roll by."

"Fatty" Arbuckle has decided not to return to the screen. It must be great to have other people make up your mind.

Walter Hiers is now at work on "75c an Hour," written by Grant Carpenter. Advertising should read: "Carpenter's 75c an Hour." Result—success.

It is never too late to educate; it is always too early to become surly.

FILMING OF "THE FRENCH DOLL" IS STARTED

Work has been started on "The French Doll," Mae Murray's second production to be made this season in California. It is to be an elaborate version of the play of that name by A. E. Thomas, adapted by the latter from a famous French play for Irene Bordoni. It had a successful New York run and Miss Bordoni is now on tour with it.

Robert Leonard, producer of the Mae Murray pictures for the Tiffany Productions and also Miss Murray's director, has surrounded her with an exceptionally good cast, including Rod Le Rocque, Willard Louis, Orville Caldwell, Madame Rose Dione, Bernard Randall, Paul Cazeneuve and others.

The adaptation of the play for the screen was made by Frances Marion, one of the most noted writers for the films.

The production is being made at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, where the Tiffany Company is leasing space and will be released as Miss Murray's other recent productions by Metro.

Miss Murray's first production turned out at the Goldwyn plant, "Jazzmania," a satirical comedy, very lavishly mounted, is booked for early showing at the Capitol in New York and Loew's State in Los Angeles. The story was written by Edmund Goulding and the picture was titled by Al Cohn. Rod LeRocque, Edward Burns, Robert Frazer, Lionel Belmore and Jean Hersholt have prominent parts.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS ELECT NEW OFFICERS

The Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society held their annual election of officers January 25 at the Cinema Studio Supply Company. The following officers were elected: President, H. M. Ewing; Vice-President, R. E. Nauman; Secretary-Treasurer, R. Hostetter; and Harry D. Brown, chief electrical engineer of Universal, and H. M. Ewing were elected as a committee to meet the State's Electrical Safety Commissioner in San Francisco. Pete Harron was appointed to call on W. J. Reynolds, president of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, to interest him in the San Francisco project, the purpose of which is to present the studio angle of the electrical engineers before the commission.

The condition of John Fairbanks, brother of Douglas, was reported last Thursday as slightly improved. Mr. Fairbanks was the victim of a paralytic stroke a week ago, and was in a serious condition for several days.

TWO NOTED AUTHORS, PELLEY AND VAN LOAN, JOIN FORCES IN FILMLAND

Announcement is made of the association of William Dudley Pelley of New York City, magazine writer and novelist, with H. H. Van Loan, photodramatist and one of the most successful script writers in the trade. Mr. Pelley has arrived in Hollywood and taken offices with Mr. Van Loan in the Security Bank Building.

The joining of forces came about as the result of Mr. Van Loan's adaptation of Mr. Pelley's last novel, "The Fog," which Graf Productions are now screening for April release on the Metro program.

Mr. Pelley has been connected the past two years with the Red Book Magazine where his short story work has appeared regularly. Prior to that he was a regular contributor to The American. He has also appeared in The Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan, a new series of stories by him starting in the latter magazine in April. His two novels, "The Greater Glory" and "The Fog," were extremely popular in the East, the former having gone into four printings and the latter into seven.

About fifteen months ago Mr. Pelley started writing directly for the screen. His first seven photoplays were sold immediately, most of them now awaiting release. His screen success has been so extraordinary that he has taken up his home in Hollywood to be in direct touch with practical studio work.

Mr. Van Loan now has about forty screen successes to his credit and having finished Mr. Pelley's "Fog" is now engaged in putting Jack London's "Call of the Wild" into script form for Hal Roach. Out of more than two hundred published magazine stories, which is Mr. Pelley's record to date, he will adapt about thirty of them for the screen in association with Mr. Pelley.

In outside screen work, however, both writers will preserve their individuality and carry on their activities separately. Wherever collaboration is attempted, the work will be so designated.

Mr. Pelley has written vehicles for E. K. Lincoln, Lon Chaney, Hope Hampton, Viola Dana and his latest work will star Cullen Landis. His latest novel, "The Last Sweetheart," will be published this coming autumn by Little, Brown & Company.

AND ANOTHER ONE QUILTS STAGE TO TRY SCREEN

Ross Forrester, son of Jane Corthope, the eminent legitimate actress, an Orpheum and Keith star, who arrived in Hollywood about six months ago, has achieved much success on the New York stage for the past eighteen years. Ross is from a theatrical family of many years' standing. He played the part of the Artful Dodger in "Oliver Twist" in New York and was with "Lucky Jim," one of the largest vaudeville sketches ever produced. He toured through France, Germany and England for four years and this country for three years. Mr. Forrester played the leading role in "Suspicion" at the Egan Theatre, under the direction of Walter Hast. He also played the juvenile "leads" with the Empire Theatre in Long Beach for four months. Some of the productions which Mr. Forrester has been associated with are: "The Lady and the Cowboy," "It Might Have Been," "Fisherman's Luck," and "Peggy," all New York successes. Mr. Forrester intends locating here permanently to try his luck in pictures.

Winfield Sheehan, vice-president of the William Fox Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles Thursday to make an inspection of the coast studios.

Ann Schaefer has been cast as Mrs. Valborg in Warner Brothers' production of "Main Street."

DAVID BELASCO TO AID WARNERS FILM 3 PLAYS

David Belasco, through a deal closed recently, has been definitely brought to the screen by Warner Brothers. According to the agreement and an understanding reached between Belasco and the Warner organization, the great stage craftsman will aid in the preparation of the scenarios, editing and titling and the choosing of the casts for the first three Belasco productions, "The Gold Diggers," by Avery Hopwood, "Debyrau," by Sacha Guitry, and "Daddies," by Lessing Hubble.

It is stated that a cash advance royalty of $250,000 figured in the deal, and in addition Belasco will share in the profits of the productions. Another feature of the transaction is that all the appointments, costumes and accessories used by Belasco in the various stage productions will be utilized by the Warner Brothers in the making of the pictures.

INTO VAUDEVILLE

Al Alt and George (Zip) Williams, who have just finished a series of "Hall Room Boy" comedies under the direction of Al Santell and Harry Edwards, have signed a contract to appear on a vaudeville circuit for the coming twelve weeks. When this contract expires, they are scheduled to return to Los Angeles and produce another series of comedies.

PAUL POWELL TO DIRECT "FOG" FOR GRAF

Max Graf, Supervising Director of Graf Productions, Inc., announces that he has secured the services of Paul Powell to direct the forthcoming Graf Production, "The Fog," the filming of which will start at the Pacific Studios in San Mateo in the immediate future.

The signing of Paul Powell as director of "The Fog" signifies the calibre of production Graf intends to present as his next photoplay offering through Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Powell is best remembered for the delightful treatment of "Pollyanna" which he directed with Mary Pickford as the star. It is but one of his many sterling contributions to the screen.

During the three years he has been directing at the Lasky Studios, he has made many of the notable successes which have come from the Famous Players-Lasky organization. "Racing Hearts," with Agnes Ayres; "The Cradle" with Ethel Clayton, "All Night" with Rudolph Valentino; "Sweet Laver" with Mary Miles Minter and "The Crimson Challenge" with Dorothy Dalton are but a few of the pictures that have established him among the brighter lights of directorial genius.

When the Lasky Studios were opened in London, Paul Powell was sent from this country to take charge of production activities there. He remained in London for some time and then returned to Hollywood, where he remained with the Lasky forces until secured by Mr. Graf for his present engagement.

Mr. Powell is now collaborating with Winifred Dunn on the finishing touches of the continuity which has been written by Miss Dunn from the adaptation by H. H. Van Loan. Miss Dunn's capabilities as a continuity writer were vividly demonstrated in "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

MARCIA MANON TO STAR IN "THE DICE WOMAN"

J. L. Frothingham will star Marcia Manon in his first production this year, "The Dice Woman," an original story by Harvey Gates. Miss Manon has been a prominent figure on the screen for the last four years. She appeared in Cecil B. De Mille's "Old Wives for New," "Stella Maris" with Mary Pickford, George Loane Tucker's "Ladies Must Live," "The Masquerader" with Guy Bates Post, J. L. Frothingham's "The Woman He Loved" and "Skin Deep," a Thomas H. Ince production in which Miss Manon scored a personal hit.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Newton Hall has been engaged by Jess Robbins for his next production, to be started next week.

Ray Gallagher, who opened at the Orpheum Theatre in Oakland last Monday, spent the week-end in Hollywood with friends.

J. Buckley Russell, Jr., is characterizing the role of the city slicker in support of Neely Edwards, under the direction of William Watson.

Nelson McDowell has been cast for the part of "Sonora Slim" in "The Girl of the Golden West" now in production at the United studios.

Antonio Moreno has affixed his signature to a contract whereby he will play leading roles in Paramount Pictures for the ensuing five years.

Gertrude D. Strickland has joined the continuity staff of the Bob Horner Productions, and will collaborate with Bob Horner on "The Midnight Hummer."

Jacques Tyrol has returned to the Southern California picture field, and has opened offices in the Loew State Building under the name of the Jacques Tyrol Productions, Inc.

William Moran, pioneer legitimate actor, has returned to picture work and will be seen in the Universal production of "Drifting," under the direction of Tod Browning.

"Buddy" East, the canine performer, has been engaged by Director George Jesse for a part in the next Jim Parrott comedy to be filmed at the Hal Roach Studios.

John P. Mills has completed the filming of "Black Gold" at the Long Beach Studios. The action of the story, which was photographed and edited by Elmer Dyer, was written around the Signal Hill oil fields.

David A. Dunbar, who played important parts in pictures made by Spencer Productions in Sydney, Australia, and who later was leading man with a stock company in that city, plays the part of a gambler in Hugo Ballin's recently completed film, "Vanity Fair."

Otto Lederer, who scored as the violinist in "Forget Me Not" and played the part of Solomon Levy in the stage production of "Abie's Irish Rose," has cancelled his proposed world tour with Bankoff, the eminent Russian dancer. They were to travel with a ballet company, and make several photoplays enroute.

Bert Roach, who is at present supporting Neely Edwards in Universal comedies, has been cast for an important part in Hobart Henley's next production, "Up the Ladder."

Leeds Baxter, business manager for Marshall Neilan, has returned to the Goldwyn Studios from New York. He reports that "The Strangers' Banquet" is doing big business everywhere.

Mary Lee Wise, who is appearing as Queen Anne in support of Bert Lytell in "To Have and To Hold," has been re-engaged by Famous Players-Lasky for an important part in Pola Negri's next picture.

Jack Hoxie, erstwhile cowboy star, has signed a long-term contract with Universal to be featured in a series of new serials. Hoxie is a former Montana cowboy and started his picture career portraying cowboy parts in western thrillers.

Anita Stewart will return to Los Angeles within the next two weeks to resume her picture activities as the featured player in E. Mason Hopper's production of "The Love Piker." Miss Stewart has lived in the East for the past year.

Maurice Costello, the first American film artist to be recognized as a star, and who for five years has been in retirement from the screen, will make his come-back in the Allan Dwan Paramount production of "The Glimpses of the Moon."

Creighton Hale, a well known figure on stage and screen, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York to play one of the principal roles in "Tea-With a Kick," a new comedy drama that is to enter filming shortly at the Fine Arts studios under the banner of Halperin Productions.

Wesley Barry, after a four weeks' stay in New York, left recently on a twelve weeks' personal appearance tour in connection with the showing of his latest Warner Brothers picture, "Heroes of the Street." He is due to arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of March.

Sidney Franklin, who recently completed the picturization of the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," has signed a long-term contract to direct for the Warner Brothers under the supervision of Harry Rapf. Mrs. Franklin was also signed for a similar period to assist Mr. Franklin in the preparation of scripts and to act in an advisory capacity.

Baby Peggy's next story is a sort of a family affair, the story having been written by her fond parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Travers Montgomery, with Granddaddy H. Graham Montgomery also wielding a wicked pen in collaboration.

Bruce Guerin, the three-year-old boy who will be remembered for his work in "The Bachelor Daddy," is on his seventh week playing with Priscilla Dean in "Drifting," at Universal, and is eagerly sought by other producers as one of the most natural child-actors of the screen.

Victory Bateman, at one time one of the foremost stars of the American stage, has been added to the cast of "The Eternal Three," Marshall Neilan's production, now under way at the Goldwyn Studios. Billie Bennett, who made a bit of artistry out of a small part in "Robin Hood," will also be in the picture.

According to dispatches from Paris, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., son of the popular "Doug," will make his advent into the motion picture field in the near future. It is reported he has signed a contract with his mother, Mrs. Beth Evans, with whom he will travel to Los Angeles to produce pictures under the supervision of William Elliott.

If present plans materialize, Charles Ray will travel to South America upon the completion of his "Courtship of Miles Standish." A group of South American capitalists are endeavoring to persuade Mr. Ray to produce a picture in their country, and according to reports from the Ray company, there is a possibility that he may do so.

Miss Margaret Seddon, who created the part of the blind mother in Richard Barthelmess' production of "Sonny," is again playing a mother part in a Barthelmess film. She is in the cast supporting the young star in his film version of Joseph Hergesheimer's celebrated story "The Bright Shawl." Miss Seddon, though, does not play Richard's mother in this picture. She plays his prospective mother-in-law.

Joseph M. Schenck has just purchased "Dulcy," the delightful comedy by George Kaufman and Marc Connelly, in which Lynn Fontaine scored such a triumph on Broadway last season, and which is still playing to capacity audiences on the road, as the next starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge. Sidney Franklin has been engaged to direct "Dulcy," and work will be started on this feature production immediately.

Paul Moore is playing the leading role in Paul Gerson's production of "The Cricket on the Hearth" under the direction of Lorimer Johnston, which is being filmed at Universal City. This is the first production to be made by Mr. Gerson in the southern field, and according to reports he will continue to keep at least one company here.

Gladys Brockwell, the former Fox star, made her return to the screen in Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist" production. The portrayal of Nancy Sikes has received considerable praise by the press throughout the land. In each instance, when this Associated First National feature is played, Miss Brockwell is given splendid reviews.

Edward Cline, prominent comedy director, has been engaged by the Principal Pictures Corporation, and will start his first work for this company in their forthcoming production, "The Meanest Man in the World." Bert Lytell will play the title role, and there is a strong possibility of George M. Cohan, the author of the story, coming to the coast to assist Mr. Cline in the directing.

A clever comedy pair that promises to become a famous team, are Gordon Russell and Gunnis Davis, who are in the cast of "Chastity," Katherine MacDonald's latest for First National. These whimsical character men were established as a "happy combination" by Victor Schertzinger, when he was filming "Refuge," the previous American Beauty release, which he made on the Schulberg lot.

Victor Heerman, director of "Rupert of Hentzau," has just been signed to direct Constance Talmadge productions starting April 1st. Mr. Heerman's first picture for Miss Talmadge will be a story by John Emerson and Anita Loos, as yet unnamed. It will be a costume story dealing with the life of Napoleon, in which Constance is to have the role of a little milliner. Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos have returned to New York.

Dorothy May threatens to spring some new and beautiful creations in the way of gowns in the Selznick production "The Common Law," in which she is playing under the direction of George Archainbaud. Miss May has always been known for her modishness, and in this production she promises to fairly outdo herself. The last word from both Paris and New York are included in the five fashionable habits which she wears in "The Common Law."

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

He's a Mother to Them

There are a large number of human female impersonators on the stage and screen, but "Pal," the intellectual bulldog, who has such a prominent part in "Lazybones," Clyde Cook's latest comedy, has the distinction of being the first female impersonator amongst canines, as he plays the part of a mother to four healthy puppies in Carter De Haven's latest production.

Foreign Invasion Friendly

The bugaboo of the foreign-made motion picture is no more; now we are experiencing the more friendly invasion of European players. First came Pola Negri, then director Ernest Lubitsch—and now, Lewis Dayton, British film star, who is leading man for Dorothy Phillips in Allen Holubar's forthcoming First National attraction, "Slander the Woman."

Nazimova Keeps Word

For years Nazimova promised to create a stage play and name it after her dearest friend, Dagmar Godowsky, and on January 15th she held good to her word and opened at the Majestic Theatre, Buffalo, in "Dagmar," written by Louis Anspacher from the well known Hungarian play by Ferencz Herzeg. Miss Godowsky is now playing in the Selznick production of "The Common Law," under the direction of George Archainbaud. Madame Nazimova's attention to the play was caused by the name, and her promise was again remembered. Upon reading it, she found that the leading character was so like her friend Dagmar, that it was worthy of being produced on the stage of this country.

Miss Griffith Signs

Corinne Griffith, one of the screen's most attractive stars, has signed a contract with the Goldwyn Studios to play the leading feminine role in Elinor Glyn's original screen story, "Six Days," according to an announcement made this week. Miss Griffith has just left Los Angeles for New York for a short vacation, but will return early in February to begin work in the Goldwyn feature. There has been considerable speculation as to the star's plans following the termination of her Vitagraph contract. Some of the atmospheric scenes for "Six Days" have already been filmed in Paris under the personal supervision of the author. The story was adapted to the screen by Violet Clark, who is now honeymooning in Europe and who will confer there with Mrs. Glyn.

Jean Cast For Two

Jean Hersholt, actor and director, last seen as the villain

in "Tess of the Storm Country," has been cast in two forthcoming productions. He will impersonate Marcus Schouler in Erich von Stroheim's picturization of Frank Norris' great novel, "McTeague" and he will also be in "Red Lights," which Clarence Badger will direct from Carey Wilson's adaptation of the stage play, "The Rear Car." Dagmar Godowsky, daughter of Leopold Godowsky and wife of Frank Mayo, will play the part of Roxie.

Halperins Start Another

Edward and Victor Hugo Halperin, whose initial offering in the independent field, "The Danger Point," now being released by American, has won them recognition as capable film producers, announce that the second in their series of stories for the screen will be "Tea With a Kick." Actual filming of the story has started at the Fine Arts studios with a cast that bids to surpass in quality any all-star cast assembled for a feature production during the past several months. Such names as Doris May, Kenneth Harlan, Stuart Holmes, Gale Henry, Robert McKim, Victor Potel, Rosemary Theby, Creighton Hale, Noah Beery and others appear on the roster.

Lytell With Lesser

The first big name in the realm of stardom to become attached to the Sol Lesser productions is that of Bert Lytell, who has been engaged to play the stellar role in the proposed screen version of George M. Cohan's New York stage success, "The Meanest Man in the World." Rights to all of Harold Bell Wright's novels have been acquired by the Sol Lesser Productions and it is probable that following the production of "The Meanest Man in the World," Mr. Lytell will appear in a stellar role in either "The Winning of Barbara Worth" or "The Re-creation of Brian Kent."

Hughes Adds to Cast

Every time Rupert Hughes sees an actor out of work he engages him for "Souls For Sale," his big production depicting motion picture life. The latest to be added to the roster are Jed Prouty, Charlie Murphy and Julianne Johnston, talented Hollywood dancer, Gerald Pring and Inez Gay.

Luminaries For "Red Lights"

"Red Lights" is to have a whole constellation of luminaries in its cast. Announcement is now made that Johnnie Walker, Alice Lake, Lionel Belmore, Frank Elliott and George H. Reed will take part in Carey Wilson's adaptation of the successful stage play, "The Rear Car," which Clarence Badger will direct for Goldwyn. It has already been announced that Marie Prevost, of the pre-eminent flapper allure, would have the leading feminine role. Raymond Griffith, who recently signed a long-term Goldwyn contract, will be the "crime deflector," the part created on the stage by Richard Bennett. William Worthington, who has been directing for the last six years, will return to the screen as an actor in this picture.

Fire Consumes "Sure Fire"

When Chester Bennett's film laboratory burned to the ground recently among the film destroyed was 34 scenes of negative belonging to Carter De Haven and part of his present comedy, "Borrowed Trouble." The fire occurred about three o'clock in the morning, and the news of it never reached the studio until 6:30. Al. Nathan was the first to get the bad news and he threw his hands in the air and said, "Ye Gods, there goes 1100 feet of negative, what will Carter say when he hears of it." In about thirty minutes after that Carter sauntered into Nathan's office and the latter reported the loss, expecting him to go into hysterics. Instead of it, Carter laughed and said: "Thirty-four scenes and all of them sure-fire laughs."

Finishing Big New Stage

The new interior stage at Warner Brothers studios is being completed rapidly. The stage will measure 370 feet in length by 140 feet in width and in front of it will be the new administration buildings. When this new addition to Warner Brothers studio is completed they will be able to accommodate six companies and by the time it is completed they will have that many companies in operation. The entire electrical equipment is in the hands of the head electrical engineer, F. N. Murphy.

Pola Negri's Second

On her return this week from her vacation at Del Monte, Cal., Pola Negri made ready to start work on her second Paramount starring vehicle. It will be "The Cheat," a George Fitzmaurice production, adapted by Ouida Bergere from the original story by Hector Turnbull. Jack Holt and Charles deRoche will be featured in support of Miss Negri. "The Cheat," produced in 1915 as a Cecil B. DeMille production, has a record of being one of the most successful stories ever transferred to the screen.

Cortez Starts as Villain

Of general interest is the announcement that Ricardo Cortez has been selected to play the heavy role in "Seventy-five Cents an Hour," Walter Hiers' next starring vehicle for Paramount, which was adapted by Grant Carpenter from the original story by Frank Condon, and will be directed by Joseph Henabery. Cortez was signed to a Paramount contract some months ago when his very admirable screen qualities were noted by Jesse L. Lasky and Adolph Zukor, while he was dancing at the Cocomanut Grove. There has been much interest in his first part for Paramount.

Schlank Back in Town

Morris R. Schlank, president of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., and one of the few motion picture distributors operating direct from Los Angeles, has returned to his Hollywood headquarters after a successful sales trip, touching practically every "key" city in America. He took two months to "swing around the circle." Mr. Schlank reported considerable territory disposed of for the new Hobart Bosworth starring vehicle, "The Man Alone," and for the two-reel features starring little Arthur Trimble.

Louise to "Die" at Last

Louise Fazenda, the comedy queen, is going to die for the benefit of the cinema art. In all her eight years of acting she never realized this great moment would ever come, and now she's going to do the grand finale in the role of the Swedish maid in the Warner Brothers screen version of Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street."

Neilan Signs Orchestra

Marshall Neilan has just placed under a long term contract a most important piece of studio atmosphere—a motion picture orchestra, the "Studio String Quartette." The Quartette is playing Neilan's present production "The Eternal Three." E. E. McGargar, Cecil Crandall, F. D. Pendleton, and Ray S. Martinez comprise the personnel of the portable orchestra, consisting of two violins, a cello, and a bass viol. They have been associated as the Studio Quartette for over six years and have played before practically all the crowned heads of film-land, including Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Mae Murray, Pauline Frederick, Theda Bara, Nazimova, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Rodolph Valentino, William Farnum and Jackie Coogan.

Gloria's Newest Finished

"Prodigal Daughters," the Sam Wood production for Paramount, starring Gloria Swanson, is completed. This is an exceptionally strong story, adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn from the novel by Joseph Hocking. A capable cast, including Theodore Roberts, Vera Reynolds, Ralph Graves, Louise Dresser, Eric Mayne and others, enacts the various roles in Miss Swanson's support. "Prodigal Daughters" is a story of an ultra-modern girl. Greenwich village scenes, a great gambling establishment, a thrilling aeroplane flight through a storm and a general variety of situations, absolutely unique to the screen, add to its entertainment value.

Thalberg Joins Mayer

Irving Thalberg, who at the age of 23, held the position of Director General of Universal City, has resigned from that organization and will henceforth confine his energies to the Louis B. Mayer producing unit. The change is said to be the result of Mr. Mayer's unusually attractive offer given the youthful genius, who, but a few years ago, fulfilled the duties as stenographer for Mr. Carl Laemmle. Three years ago he journeyed to California with Mr. Laemmle as his secretary. Shortly after their arrival, Mr. Laemmle sailed to Europe, where he sent back a cablegram appointing Mr. Thalberg the directing head of Universal productions, the position he has held until this time.

Returns From Orient

Eva Gordon, who played in support of Alice Lake, Viola Dana and Bert Lytell, has returned to Hollywood to resume her motion picture career after an extended tour of the Orient. Miss Gordon has just been signed by Universal for an important role in support of Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Worsley is directing.

Sada Cowan With Warners

The popular novel by Kathleen Norris "Lucretia Lombard," has been purchased by Warner Brothers and will make its bow on the screen as a Harry Rapf production. Sada Cowan has been selected to adapt the book for filming. Miss Cowan will be remembered for her work in doing stories for Clara Kimball Young, also the writing of "Fool's Paradise" for Cecil B. DeMille.

"Jockeys" Choose Trainers

Interest in the great "Three Star Handicap," in which Jack Pickford, Douglas MacLean and Reginald Denny will participate, has been greatly intensified as a result of the three contestants' latest announcement to the effect that they have already chosen their trainers for the coming event. Jack has selected Charlie Chaplin, who says he intends training the horse, and not the rider. Doug has picked out his good-looking friend "Boo" Montana to help him in his efforts, and Reggy says he will enjoy the assistance of Emile Coue, and thereby get the "better and better" benefit.

British Novelist Joins Ince

Talbot Mundy, one of the best known of the British novelists, has joined the writing staff of the Thomas H. Ince studios. Mundy, who has a number of "best-sellers" to his credit is now at work on a book which is titled "The Devil's Own" and which will be adapted into an Ince screen feature for early fall release. The book will be published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company which has contracted with Mundy for six novels to be widely exploited by the publishing house. Mundy, whose best known novel is "King of the Khyber Rifles," has rounded the globe several times and spent many years in India and Africa. One of his biggest achievements was a walking trip of exploration across Africa which took him seven years.

Mayne Makes Record

To be seen supporting four prominent stars in four different prominent productions, shown at four prominent theatres in one city at the same time, is something out of the ordinary. This has been accomplished by Eric Mayne, popular character actor, who supports Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife" at the Metropolitan, Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" at the Mission, Richard Dix in "The Christian," at the California, and Harold Lloyd in "Doctor Jack" at the Alhambra, all of which are in Los Angeles.

Mickey's Been Ill

Little Mickey McBan, interesting child actor and swimming champion, who has been playing a prominent part in Gloria Swanson's latest starring vehicle, "Prodigal Daughters," has been on the "sick list" for a week, during which time Director Sam Wood has switched things around so that the scenes in which Mickey appears have been held over for him. Mickey is now well on the road to recovery, and will be back on the set very soon.

Meeting All Corners

George O'Hara, star of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series, is now engaged at Powers studios on his seventh picture, "The Knight That Failed," for F. B. O., Mal St. Clair directing. Mr. O'Hara, who faces in each production a different ring veteran, has for adversary this time in the fight scenes George La Vigne, who has made a record on the coast.

"The Call of the Wild" is now being cut and titled. The cast for this picture supporting Mr. O'Hara includes Clara Horton, playing opposite, Albert Cook, "Kit" Guard, Arthur Rankin, William Courtright, Marie Astaire, Jack Josephs and "Petie," clever canine actor.

Al to Tour Via Plane

To make a personal appearance tour by aeroplane is the latest plan being considered by Al St. John following the completion of his present series of two-reelers at the Fox studios. Al is an enthusiastic aviator and recently purchased a Pacific bi-plane in San Diego. Dick Grace, well-known stunt flyer, who has been seen in several of the St. John comedies, will accompany the comedian on the tour. Al is at present making a comedy of a South American revolution, with bombs bursting in the air every few minutes and knives hurtling through the atmosphere at frequent intervals, hence sky voyages with an experienced pilot along have little terror for him.

Judge Wars on Gossip

Declaring that eighty per cent of the divorces that come before his tribunal are directly or indirectly the result of malicious or careless gossip about the woman in the case, Judge Summerfield, who presides over the domestic relations court of Los Angeles county, has agreed to write a special article on the subject to be used as propaganda against unleashed tongues in connection with the national showing of "Slander the Woman," the Allen Holubar production, starring Dorothy Phillips, which is to be distributed by First National.

Shy on Flappers

Casting for "Wandering Daughters," the initial James Young production for First National of the United studios. Hollywood, so often slandered as the home of wandering daughters, has not yet offered a "flapper" acceptable to Director Young. Booking agents have sent every young woman they can think of to try for the role and are now wildly tearing their hair because they are unable to find a girl who is the exact type desired.

4-Year-Old Starts 36th Film

Muriel MacCormac, four-year-old, has just started to work in the thirty-sixth motion picture of her career, which started about two years ago. She has been assigned an important role in Thomas H. Ince's production of "Atonement," starring Lloyd Hughes, and is now in Truckee doing her share of the histrionic work in the exterior "shots."

Gets Black Eye at Finish

On the last day of "perpetrating villainous deeds" in the William Fox special directed by Colin Campbell, the popular French actor, Leon Bary, received a black eye in a fight with the hero. "It's a good thing it came last, because I was supposed to be a bright-eyed villain," Bary explains.

Correcting an Error

The published statement to the effect that Lucy Beaumont, the famous character actress, had appeared in the stage play of "The Tailor-Made Man," was erroneous and Miss Beaumont asks that a correction be made. She did support Grant Mitchell in "The Champion," playing the part of his mother, and, probably would have enacted the same role in the Paramount screen version of it in which Wallace Reid appeared had it not been for previous stage contracts, which made it impossible for her to leave New York.

English Versus American

"In England when a cameraman is ready to photograph a scene he turns to the director and says, 'Already, old top, everything is in readiness for the action,'" said Fred Esmelton, who is playing one of the leading supporting roles with Ethel Clayton in her latest production, "The Greater Glory," at the F. B. O. studios. Esmelton said that he could not help comparing the British photographer's remark with the terse command of the American cameraman who says, "All set, let's shoot."

Taking Pains for Realism

Milton Sills, who has the leading male role in the Maurice Tourneur production for First National of "The Isle of Lost Ships," is wearing a "beautiful" black eye, the result of an honest-to-goodness battle with Walter Long, who has one of the principal roles in the Tourneur production. The fight between Sills and Long is one of the most thrilling scenes in the big melodrama said to be one of the best pictures Tourneur has ever produced. Tourneur called for realism for the fight sequence, with the result that Walter's fist landed squarely on Sill's eye.

De Mille Delivers Lecture

William C. de Mille delivered an interesting address to the entire Palmer Photoplay Corporation staff of instructors on the latest developments of photoplay technique, and other subjects of much interest concerning the future of our "infant industry," in the auditorium of the Palmer Building, Hollywood, last week. This is the first of a series of weekly lectures to be delivered by noted producers and directors to the Educational Department of this institution, for the indirect benefit of the Palmer student body.

Back in Old Role

Russell Simpson, the veteran character actor, who has been engaged to play Sheriff Jack Rance in Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West" for First National will create the same role on the screen which he played on the stage for more than a year. A decade ago Simpson was touring the country in "The Girl of the Golden West" and he was playing the part of Sheriff Jack Rance. Because of his ability to play the role Director Carewe engaged him for the picture.

The Silent Trend

leave the screen, if she has determined upon such a course as reported. In this rather artistic picture she is charming and her performance stamps her as a very true artist with an innate petiteness and an ornate finesse. It would seem that Fate alone is responsible for Miss Minter's position on the screen being anything but the absolute top rung. She has within her own talents and physical appearance everything which constitutes the highest qualities for an exponent of the silent drama. Whenever she is a heroine in a story, she is invariably a most winsome one and in "Drums of Fate," she does win some!

"The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest starring vehicle, looks like another winner for her, although it is not up to the standard of "Conflict," for instance. This is an adaptation from Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "That Lass o' Lowries," and, it is vividly picturized, being an attraction well worth the while of anyone liking a gripping story, replete with thrilling moments. Some heights in realism are attained in a series of mine scenes in this picture. Miss Dean's performance is satisfactory and Wallace Beery as the villainous father gives another one of those remarkable exhibitions of acting ability for which he is justly famous.

Flirt," which he directed, and to select some scenes in San Francisco for the finishing touches to the picture he has made from Jack London's story, "The Abysmal Brute."

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is spending a week in San Francisco. It is reported his western trip means the building or buying of a string of theatres to be operated with the new $2,000,000 Oakland Theatre of the Fox Film Corporation and the thirty eastern theatres belonging to the same concern. Mr. Sheehan will go to Los Angeles to arrange the 1923 Fox production program and then return here for the opening of the Oakland Theatre.

Sol Lesser returned to San Francisco this morning on business connected with a big deal put over the past week, by which the West Coast Theatres, of which he is the head, took over control of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, a corporation operating twenty-six playhouses in California. The deal involved the payment of nearly $4,000,000, according to the principals, and most of it was paid in cash.

A Hymn of Understanding By DONALD H. CLARKE

No one denies that the motion picture is one of the great inventions; it may not rank with the spinning jenny or the steam engine as a factor in material progress, but it fairly might be considered in the same breath with printing as a force for universal education.

The printing press made literature the common property of the many instead of the intellectual toy of the few; the motion picture is even wider in its appeal and in its potentialities. It speaks a world language; a photograph does not have to be translated; it is an Esperanto that does not have to be learned. It strikes to the understanding without the clumsy artifice of words.

The motion picture is a foe of misunderstanding and deceit as well among nations as among men; it is an apostle of peace and democracy.

A news reel taken in Oshkosh shows the Bostonian his fellow citizen at work and at play; a news reel photographed in one country spreads accurate information in other countries—to the four corners of the earth.

And it is not only in the news reels, by any means, that the power for good of the motion picture is exerted. Photo-dramas made in different countries must be helping to bring men of different countries to a better and truer understanding of one another.

Rupert Hughes' "The Old Nest," a story of American motherhood, is proving as popular abroad as it already has proved in the United States. The French, the English, the Spanish—all nationalities,—find in it a fundamental truth that hits squarely at their own life experience. Hughes is a producer of what have been termed "typical American pictures"; yet the mother in "The Old Nest" is as international a character as the wife in his latest effort "Gimme," which deals with the world-wide problem of whether or not a wife should be forced to depend upon the capricious generosity of a husband, or whether she should be economically independent. "Gimme" is a comedy drama, but it's a news reel in the sense that it presents intelligently and entertainingly a vital problem that is absorbing the attention of all men and all women everywhere. These are random examples; there are hundreds of others.

The movie belongs to the people, which gives it its tremendous power and accounts for its admitted, but minor, weaknesses. A poor boy or girl can enjoy it as deeply as the plutocrat. It reaches men through their feelings. It is a wonderful new force in the world—the common meeting ground of all races and all ages.

It is clicking, clicking in a million tiny spots of the globe a hymn of better understanding among men.

Cuba, the Isle of Real Flappers

When the female of the species begins her battle for "This Freedom" what is her first line of attack?

Woman suffrage? No!

Property rights? Pas de tout!

Birth Control? Pasta, senora!

Protective legislation, a single standard of morals, emancipation from dish laundering? Nix! Nope! Not on your life!

She begins the battle always, no matter what the land of her habitation, for the thing which lies heaviest on her mind and closest to her heart. In other words—CLOTHES!

We could go way back to the days when Eve donned the fig-leaf to prove this, but instead we'll let Dorothy Gish, that pretty and winsome young miss, introduce you to a new type of flapper, from a land of cloistered women and male domination, to prove the truth of these assertions!

Now, she's back from Cuba, that land which Mr. Volstead has popularized, and which has been the means by which many a song writer has achieved luxurious affluence overnight. Dorothy, who went down with Richard Barthelmess to film the "Bright Shawl," brought back a tale of the Cuban flapper which will kill completely your glowing vision of a nation of enticing ladies garbed in flowing beuffled gowns, veils, laces and tight shoes.

"Yes, the Cuban girls are real flappers," she began. "I was surprised, but it only goes to show that no matter how much authority women conceded men, women will draw the line somewhere—and that line is in the clothes they wear."

"Sort of a clothes line," we suggested.

"Of course I was astonished," she went on, unmindful of the interruption, "Because I, too, had supposed the Spanish influence in dressing had remained down there. I don't want to create the impression that it has died away utterly, for the old delightful costumes are still seen, but the younger generation has put up a fight for American freedom in dressing and has won. It is rather the fashion of Spring, 1922, that they have copied, or else they have refused to follow a style which lengthens short skirts to the impediment of freedom of limbs. Likewise, they are clinging to bobbed hair, and it is very becoming."

The picture which Dorothy draws of the Cuban flapper is alluring—straight little one-piece frocks, low-heeled shoes, long and fantastic earrings, raven tresses trimmed short and boyish, a little swagger to her step and an insatiable desire for knowledge of things in the world outside of her own little island, which characterizes the twentieth century young miss everywhere.

Cinema's Destiny, Thanks to the Eye

By AUSTIN BECK

A successful manufacturer of interchangeable door-handles returns from Europe, stands on the deck of the Aquatania, waves his arms about and tells an anemic reporter from the Associated Press that "the Allies most certainly will pay their war debts." The Majestic docks the next day and the gent who successfully disposed of his patent for the improved dumb-waiter tells the same reporter, amidst similiar gesticulations that "Uncle Sam hasn't a gopher's chance of collecting even a dime from the Allies."

These "scoops" burn up the Western Union wires. This first-hand knowledge is broadcasted.

The unfortunate circumstance is that there are a great number of people silly enough to read and believe such "bunk." And what's more, it's quite reasonable to expect this. The reading public has been systematically fed with such classics as "My Grand Opera Wife" ("Recollections of a Chauffeur"), "Did John Smith Have Six Toes?" and "Count Gregory's Life" (an honest stable boy gone wrong). Can you, reader, conceive anything dizzier than this? Myself, I fail to see any possible value to an insight into the true character of any of these "birds." And I again ask you, reader, have you ever been inspired or moved to strive for greater things after reading any of this "junk"?

The dumb-bell section of the public (surprisingly large) who weekly and weakly devour the eighteen columns of this material invariably pass up the half-column allotted to Mr. Harding when he outlines the newly adopted foreign policy of the country.

The perverting effect of such reading in time renders the reader incapable of discerning the differences between the absurd and the ridiculous.

All of which brings me to this point: Every other day, recently some dramatic critic in a bilious moment steps into a motion picture theatre, sees the second episode of "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," comes out more bilious and tells his large following of readers that "the movies are nothing more than a debauchery of art." This has become chronic of late. The invectives hurled lately at the movies would make Roget's "Thesaurus" look like a handbook for soda fountain clerks.

As things stand at the moment, it is merely a matter of a comparatively short time before everyone will realize the possibilities which lie within motion pictures. In time they will become the medium of education without a doubt.

Under present methods the grown-up illiterate is a total loss. He wouldn't go to school were there a free one on every corner. A close second to this individual is the dull person who does not read intelligently and never remembers anything which he is told. But let these two see anything!

A while back, the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis made a wild statement to the effect that 85 per cent of one's knowledge is gained through the eye (Apropos of this fraction, I once heard him, in Detroit, emphatically state that 7/16 of all the good things in the world were here in the U. S. A. Such accuracy is worthy of Einstein).

In any case a very large portion of our knowledge is gained through the eye. Let the question of Capital Punishment arise in a cafeteria, and instantly the paper-hanger on your left will, amidst a vivid description of the French Revolution, outline the effectiveness of the guillotine as per Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm." The burning question of the Ku Klux Klan always draws from the truck driver the story of its origination, undoubtedly learned from Griffith's "Birth of a Nation." And your ice-man tells you "that guy Disraeli was no slouch," because of George Arliss in the picture of that name.

Innumerable illustrations could be given, the truth of which should be accepted and considered seriously.

As I read these assaults on the movies, almost daily, I rebel, yet they carry their own compensation, in that the ignorance of them is positively refreshing.

YE GODS! HERE IS AN UNKISSED STAR!

Not content with laying claim to the most perfect pair of cauliflower ears in existence, Bull Montana also enjoys the unique distinction of being the only motion picture star who has never experienced the "ecstatic thrill" of a screen kiss!

In all of the comedies in which he has appeared, Bull has proven himself quite the hero, but never has he received an osculatory reward. He is usually the medium for bringing the young juvenile into the arms of the beautiful leading lady, but the fade-out invariably finds him merely the smiling spectator.

Like all true artists, Bull makes many sacrifices for his art, even to hiding his ears with a wig in "Rob-'Em-Good," but there is a limit to all things, and Hunt Stromberg's comedy star is on the verge of revolt.

Not that Bull thinks he is being slighted or anything like that, for he himself says "I save all my keeses for my Bessie," but he is afraid his fans are not yet fully aware of his great versatility.

As a wrestler, Bull was a tremendous success. As a "heavy" in many features, he was a distinct sensation. As a comedian he is now firmly established on the screen. But as a lover! Ah! Is not Signor Montana one of the original Latin lovers of the cinema?

Richard Bennett is in a serious condition in Chicago. He was taken ill while playing in "He Who Gets Slapped."

AL MARTIN
Just finished a picture with Neely
Edwards, and this is it.

(Note below): H. P. L. stands for Hollywood Public Library.

Neely Edwards, comedy star, says: "If there were more people like Al Martin in motion pictures, the business would be entirely different."

William Watson, director, says: "I used Al Martin once and the picture did an awful business."

His cameraman says: "He photographs beautifully, only his nose is always a trifle out of focus."

His leading lady says: "When Al Martin works with me I need no glycerine for my crying scenes."

When I started in the picture business I told Gloria Swanson that if I worked hard I might get to be a janitor in twenty years. At the present time I am five years ahead of my schedule.

I write titles, comical motion pictures, bedtime stories, and have played kissing games in my early youth.

I get to work on time, am not temperamental, and do not give advice to misunderstood wives.

I think Neely Edwards is the greatest actor in the country. But who wants to be in the country?

Any doubt as to my ability, consult previous advertisements.

My phone number is 578-097. Call before midnight as I have a milk route.

Do not call Neely Edwards, he has trouble enough as it is.

Food—For Thought and Appetite

One thing everybody can be rich in is faith. But, did you ever try to buy a meal with it? See how the fly is ever in the ointment!

Universal City seems destined to have an era of universal shifting in high executive quarters. Well, Universal is the trademark out there.

If Will Hays does think he's the big hero of the pictures, it is safe to estimate that there are fully a hundred screen leading men who will dispute the claim.

As proof of the claim that life continues as paradoxical as ever, let us cite the case of Valentino wherein the idol of the screen is the most idle of any of them.

One thing sure is, the first so-called "fan" magazine which changes its policy to reflect the true spirit of filmland, its people and the cinema art they strive to interpret, will deserve a place in the motion picture sun.

It is said Los Angeles boasts more vegetarians than any other city in the world. They eat as many turnips raw as the average populace eats 'em cooked. Oh well, one can get fat on imagination if he can go Coue-Coue enough.

Hollywood's new Montmartre Cafe adds its share of cosmopolitan aspects to the film capitol and the food will add to the avoirdupois of film folks. So, if the leading lady gets too fat, blame the Montmartre.

There seem to be some monkey wrenches in the machinery over in Europe—and some monkeys in high offices, too. Meanwhile it's greater than ever to be in the picture business in Southern California.

The most amazing feature of the narcotic situation is, the authorities know who the leaders of the drug ring are, and when, where and how the smuggling is done, but yet declare it is difficult to stop it. Why is it difficult?

Howard E. Bixby, "the smallest actor in pictures," was married this week. He is less than four feet tall, but he towers above all bachelors in matrimonial achievement. His wife is of normal height, which gives her about a foot and a half of advantage in the altitude record of the family.

The steady progress of the photoplay as an art is sufficient to justify unstinted confidence in its future and it was long since time to forget its past. But, most important of all, is a universal fidelity to the cause of minding the knitting in this vital present. In plain words, diligence should be the watchword now.

One Hollywood cafe man recently retired with a fortune of a couple hundred thousand dollars "accruing from" hungry movie people. Another restaurateur, still active with two busy food emporiums, is known to be worth another couple hundred thousand. It all goes to show there is real money in appeasing the Thespian appetite.

A keen observer makes the assertion that the quality of the character of motion picture people is improving rapidly due to the influx of collegians and men of high accomplishments in other walks of life. This isn't leaving much for the old-timers. But then many of the old-timers are not prone to have much time for the new-timers either. So it works out about fifty-fifty.

Where did Cecil B. De Mille or whoever was responsible for that advertisement, warning against stealing ideas out of "Adam's Rib," get the notion it was such a wonderful achievement? It is simply another Cecil De Mille picture, not of the exceptional class to which "Manslaughter" or "The Whispering Chorus" belongs. Anyway, why insult the whole population of all filmdom about it?

It's queen-choosing time for comedy kings. The announcement of the Harold Lloyd-Mildred Davis engagement follows closely onto the news of Charlie Chaplin's betrothal to Pola Negri, and, rumors emanating from Paris indicate Max Linder will bring a bride with him on his forthcoming return to Hollywood. Monty Banks is yet to be heard from and he is one of the most romantic of them all.

When Cahuenga and Hollywood Boulevard becomes a 42nd and Broadway, Highland and Hollywood Boulevard will have a Winter Garden with a beauty chorus and everything, if the "dope" (not drugs) runs true to form. Then if a battalion of hurdy-gurdy men unleash their mobile tin-pan music, we shall have "all the flavor and the savor" of Gotham in a setting of California foot-hills instead of canyons of sky-scrapers. It isn't such a bad dream either. Hollywood's smoke (not tobacco) bears watching. Her cup is filled with the elixir (not liquor) of youthful "pep" which promises gigantic developments.

Within Filmland's Inner Portals

AMONG THE CAMERAMEN

H. Lyman Broening and Perry Evans are making preparations for the filming of the next Mack Sennett feature.

Norbert Brodin will film the next Constance Talmadge feature. Tony Gaudio and Brodin at present are filming "Within the Law," starring Norma Talmadge and directed by Frank Lloyd.

Rudolph Bergquist is making preparations for the photographing of "Red Lights" which Clarence Badger will direct for Goldwyn.

Ira Morgan has returned to New York from Europe, where he photographed "Enemies of Women" and is filming "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies.

Allen Siegler has joined the cinematographic corps of Cosmopolitan Productions in New York City.

Charles Van Enger will photograph the Goldwyn production, "Three Wise Fools," directed by King Vidor.

Andre Barlatier has left Los Angeles for Chicago to film a production which W. S. Van Dyke will direct.

Jackson Rose has finished photographing "The Last Race," starring Rex (Snowy) Baker for Phil Goldstone productions.

Rene Guissart has completed his contract with the Alliance Film Corporation in England, and has been signed as director of cinematography with Wilcox Productions in London.

W. S. Smith, Jr., is completing filming Vitagraph's "Masters of Men."

Ben Reynolds is in San Francisco for the filming of "McTeague," von Stroheim's first production for Goldwyn.

Steve Norton has been executing special cinematographic work for "The Courtship of Miles Standish," starring Charles Ray.

John Seitz has returned to Los Angeles from Miami, Florida, via New York City. At Miami and in Cuba, Seitz filmed Rex Ingram's production of John Russell's "Where the Pavement Ends."

GOLF CHAMPION BECOMES STAR IN HIS FIRST FILM

Meet Walter Hagen, film star. The only American who ever won the British professional open golf championship faced the camera lens for the first time last week at the Hollywood Studios in a role far different from that he assumed when he became America's ace of the putting green.

Under the direction of Clarence Bricker, who discovered the exploitation and photographic possibilities of Hagen, the golf champ blithely stepped into his new occupation with a reassuring abandon.

According to studio advices, Mr. Hagen will portray the role of a spoiled son of wealthy parents in a story entitled "The Man Who Cheated." It will be a six-reel comedy drama. The cameraman is Ray Rennahan. G. B. Manly is the scenarist. The J. A. Mowat Productions is the name of the firm sponsoring Hagen.

To Film in Oregon

The next Frederick Reel, Jr., production, "The Man From Outside," will start at once, and, according to present plans, will be filmed in lower Oregon, where conditions are best adapted for this particular story.

Stageland's "Greatest Mother" in Film Cast

When the filming of the Mohawk production of "The Man Who Cheated" is started at the Hollywood studios next week, Lucy Beaumont, widely heralded as "the greatest mother on the stage," will be in the cast, playing the mother role—that of Mrs. Eldridge. This will be Miss Beaumont's first picture in Southern California, she having arrived here from New York less than a month ago after abandoning a stage career of twenty years' standing for the sake of embracing the opportunities of the screen in order to reach larger and more audiences.

Kimball in "Other Side"

Edward Kimball, eminent character actor, has been signed for the part of "Williams," the faithful old family butler in Hugh Deirker's production of "The Other Side," now being filmed at the Fine Arts studio. Mr. Kimball's splendid portrayal of "Brock," the valet in Guy Bates Post's screen version of "The Masquerader," was responsible for his engagement. Mr. Deirker paid Mr. Kimball's salary in order that his all-star cast could be complete.

Babyhood, Toppling Starhood and Young Manhood

By RAY H. LEEK

Anybody questioning the statement that this is the land of opportunity has but to interview a certain infant of three days which arrived on this earth to find Old Man Opportunity not merely knocking at his door, but loafing about the crib awaiting his appearance.

It happened this way: Director Gasnier required a new-born baby for a few shots in his new production of "Mothers-in-Law." And he insisted that it be just that—new-born. But finding the right sort of infant, arranging details with its parents and overcoming other obstacles takes time, and that was just what the director wanted to avoid.

So he decided to compete with the stork himself. Through a Los Angeles physician who serves as an agent for that far-famed bird, he learned of a family that expected a visit of the stork during the week he had planned to "shoot" the scenes. As a consequence the life diary of the infant reads something like this:

Monday morning—9:02 o'clock—Arrived on earth.

9:30 o'clock—Was approved by parents and neighbors.

Headed receiving line for remainder of day.

Tuesday, all day—Have been drinking a liquid called milk. If Volstead ever learns how good it is he'll certainly have the lid clamped down on it.

Wednesday, all day—Go away, folks I'm a movie star. I met a director named Gasnier, worked in a picture called "Mothers-in-Law" and showed 'em what a screaming success I am. Say, who is this bird, Valentino? I'll teach him some tricks if they'll just give me time!

Once more filmdom is visibly impressed by evidences of the downfall of the star system.

Katherine MacDonald's apparent retirement from the screen at the conclusion of her contract with B. P. Schulberg last week, coming as the climax of a series of similar moves within the last few months, seems to have shown many tottering luminaries the handwriting on the wall.

What is becoming of our stars of a year ago—yes, even a few months ago? A glimpse of the list reveals the fact that a score or more of stars of a few months ago either have retired from the screen, or are playing in all-star productions.

Without going beyond the most recent history one notes the retirement from stellar honors of Anita Stewart, May Allison, Alice Lake, Mary Miles Minter, Mildred Harris, Bert Lytell, Tom Moore, Lew Cody, Conway Tearle and Eugene O'Brien. Many of these former stars, notably Bert Lytell, Alice Lake and Conway Tearle, are doing their best work in all-star productions.

At the Schulberg studios Miss MacDonald's bungalow dressing room will not be taken over by another star. While President Schulberg is seeking three girl players of star caliber—and this does not exclude girls of no screen experience if they show sufficient promise—he expects to use them only as featured players, or as leading women opposite his three male players, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass and Orville Caldwell.

"Really great stories are the chief requisite of the screen today," said Mr. Schulberg. "If such story material is forthcoming screen masterpieces may be expected, but not otherwise."

Paramount is evidently attempting to patch up its organization of players, depleted through the loss of Wally Reid, Valentino and other notables. Antonio Moreno and Richard Dix have just been announced as the most recent signers of contracts to appear as featured players. Others, it is said, will be added to the list as rapidly as

New York, Feb. 7.—Marguerite Courtot, who was operated on last week when attacked with acute appendicitis, is recovering nicely.

Owen Moore was sued for a garage bill and lost the case. Judgment for $200 was entered against him in the Municipal Court. Moore's defense was that the car belonged to a friend, although he had made arrangements for it being kept at the garage.

John Emerson, president of the Actors' Equity Association, urges a morality clause for the movie manager. "What is good for the actor is good for the manager," says Mr. Emerson.

The Lambs' Midwinter Public Gambol, an annual event of social as well as theatrical interest, will be held February 18 at Charles Dillingham's Globe Theatre.

Nazimova has returned to the stage, and as the high-brow critic says, "We are surprised to note that after the movies, her art is unimpaired." The play is "Dagmar." Nazimova vamps her way through it all, flitting from the arms of one lover to another, as soulless as a toad, and, of course, is killed in the end. Charles Bryant is the killer and does it in quite an impressive manner. All in all an old story told shudderingly with a lot of thrills.

Nat Lewis is recuperating from his Hollywood trip. He just had to show the new wife how well he could resist temptation. Now he is all tired out from resisting and settling in a little vine-covered bungalow.

Buster Collier, popular youth about Hollywood and Jack Alicoate of Film Daily fame, are now Broadway producers. They have a show running at the Longacre Theatre, and so far, it's a success. It's called "Extra," and was written by themselves.

Arthur Housman tells me that he has just signed to play a comedy part with George Terwilliger's Pyramid production, "Wife in Name Only." Housman says he thinks it's another one of those Biblical pictures.

Alan Crosland is casting for his next Cosmopolitan feature. Alan's last was "Enemies of Women," featuring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens.

T. Roy Barnes is now in Hollywood after a hard winter along Broadway filming a Cosmo special, "The Go-Getter." In it "Tom" got everything but pneumonia.

Pauline Frederick appealed to the court in vain when she asked that her father's will be changed. A jury in the superior court last week upheld the will of Richard O. Libby, who left $30,000 to the relatives of his second wife. Referring to Miss Frederick the will read: "I give and devise to my daughter Pauline Beatrice—nothing, and I mention this omission to show that the same is intentional and not a mistake."

With the selection of Alan Hale to play the character role of Bjorstan, Warner Brothers have completed the cast for "Main Street," which is now in its fifth week of filming. Mr. Hale started his enacting of this important role before he had finished with the William Fox production of "The Eleventh Hour," in which he will be one of the featured players, and, therefore, he has had a busy week of it, jumping from one studio to the other.

WAS A STAR AS A CHILD

Doris Baker, formerly one of the most popular child artists on the screen, but now a statuesque beauty eighteen years of age. She is returning to pictures in support of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish" after an absence of several years, during which time she has been successful in vaudeville. She made her debut in the movies twelve years ago and hers was a big name before most of the present-day stars even started. Now, since she is forgotten somewhat, she is back to remind them all.

Helen Kesler has started her second consecutive picture with Jimmy Aubrey at the Vitagraph Studios. Miss Kesler is once more Aubrey's leading lady, a position she held for one year straight. Miss Kesler returned to the comedy field because she says she would rather be instrumental in making people laugh than to help them feel sad in drama.

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, Feb. 7th.—Carl Laemmle of Universal City came to San Francisco last Friday and his nephew, Julius Bernheim, joined him here on Saturday. Mr. Laemmle announces that Bernheim, who has been business manager of the film city, is to be the boss in future, with a new production manager to succeed Irving Thalberg, resigned.

Mildred Harris and Louise Fazenda have been signed by Max Graf for the forthcoming production of "The Fog." For the first time Miss Harris will drop Charlie Chaplin's name entirely.

Theodore Roberts, veteran star of the stage and screen, is spending a few days in San Francisco, his boyhood home.

Antonio Moreno, and his bride, who was Mrs. Daisy Canfield Danzinger, and who inherited $2,000,000 from her father, the late Charles A. Canfield, spent several days in San Francisco the first of last week. They were en route to New York and are combining a honeymoon with business, as Moreno has just signed a five-year contract as a Lasky star. While here they purchased furniture for their new home at Lake Silver, to which they expect to go as soon as they return to California.

John Arnold, cameraman, and his wife arrived in San Francisco a few days ago. Arnold will be head cameraman on the Graf production, "The Fog," work on which will begin at the Pacific studios in a week. Meanwhile he is taking the screen tests at the Loew-Warfield Theatre.

Eric Von Stroheim is still here and hard at work sixteen hours a day dictating to a stenographer the working continuity for "McTeague" from Frank Norris' story of San Francisco thirty years ago. He expects to begin to shoot the picture February 15th.

Every week now brings additions to the Goldwyn forces in San Francisco for the Von Stroheim production of "McTeague." Last week's arrivals include, Ray Moore, technical manager for Goldwyn; Ben F. Reynolds, cameraman; C. J. Rogers, property man, and L. Kolb, chief electrician of the whole Goldwyn lot. A less known member of the force is H. Trevor-Kingsley, assistant technical director, who feels he owes a special debt of gratitude to Von Stroheim. Although he has had wide experience in the cinema world of Europe and six years work with Pathe Freres, he came to Hollywood a stranger, unknown and out of luck until Eric added him to his staff.

The Fisher Production Corporation will begin work in three weeks at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo on their first picture. It will be a screen version of "Youth Triumphant," by George Gibbs, and they will use an all-star cast including little Virginia A. Corbin.

C. Raymond Bradford and W. Wilbur, both motion picture producers of Los Angeles, are at the St. Francis.

Frank B. Good, head cameraman with the Jackie Coogan company, spent several days last week in San Francisco. Good has been loaned to Warner Brothers, while Jackie is vacationing. He went on to the Feather River country, checking up locations for Warner Brother's next picture. It will be called "Wolf Fangs," and will feature Rin Tin Tin, the Belgian police dog.

Chaplin, Public Opinion and a Reply to a Vital Question

Following the receipt of its copyright registration in play form, Charles Chaplin yesterday announced that the title of his first serious motion picture production would be "PUBLIC OPINION."

The production which is already well under way and which has temporarily been called "DESTINY," will be in ten reels and though written and directed by Chaplin himself, it will star Edna Purviance in the leading role and will be released through United Artists.

"Public Opinion" marks a new departure in most every element that goes to make up motion pictures. In story structure, in acting and in theme the production promises to be revolutionary and Chaplin himself is very emphatic in saying that it is by far his most important contribution to the screen.

There runs through it a new form of acting and a new type of construction dealing with the basics and fundamentals of life with a viewpoint that is more of understanding than of preachment. It presents a problem and comments upon it in interesting fashion rather than solving it and throughout the action which vibrates with humor, pathos, tragedy and beauty there is painted an exquisite portrait of a woman's soul naked in its sincerity though clothed in its individuality.

The theme is a startling one made more so because of utter simplicity and warmth of feeling that permeates it and even as it marks Chaplin's own first attempt at serious drama, it also blazes a new trail for the entire motion picture industry and the name of Charles Chaplin already stands for enough to be hailed as a trail-blazer.

Chaplin himself is more intent on this production than any he has ever made. All day long he is at his studio shooting on the picture and frequently he works far into the night with Monta Bell, who is assisting him in the preparation of the production. So intent is he on getting perfect acting that he has spent as much as two weeks on the treatment of acting in a single scene of the picture.

In speaking of the picture, Chaplin says:

"I believe 'Public Opinion' will be the most important work of my career and no one realizes more than I what a revolutionary step I am taking in adhering to the original style of construction which I am using. And I have the utmost confidence in the public. I have never, nor shall I ever try to talk down to the public or up to the public. The public doesn't need such questionable consideration.

"I am trying to portray as far as my ability will permit, an intelligent and sincere story and if I succeed in keeping faith with myself, I have no fears as to the reception of the public. Whether this will be a great picture or just as great a failure there will be originality in story treatment and acting.

"There will be no armies, no huge sets and no elaborate mechanical effects, but through it all will run a poignant note of human suffering, joy, tragedy and humor. I have no idea what the production will cost and won't until it is finished, but I expect to make it as near perfect as I can no matter how much it would cost.

"There have been a number of queries as to whether I intend to act in the picture or not. I am not going to act in it not from any policy, but because in the story as I truthfully see it, there is no place for my character. And I am rather glad there isn't because the story is something that I wish to say without its being stunted by injecting my own character into it. There would always be the temptation to make the story fit my character and as a story it does not concern me, but life. However, I have no intention of giving up acting and as soon as this production is made I intend to start making my own pictures immediately."

Refraining from acting in this story which those familiar with it claim will be the greatest ever filmed, constitutes in itself an artistic achievement worthy of Chaplin. From his sincerity and the tremendous attention being given to the story not the least of which is Chaplin's own time at least six months of which will be devoted to "Public Opinion," it would seem that this production will be Chaplin's answer to the ever recurring question, "What will movies of the future be?"

An answer coming from one of the greatest geniuses the industry has produced is a profound note of utmost importance.

Playing opposite Edna Purviance who is being launched on her starring career in "Public Opinion," is Adolphe Menjou while other important members of the cast include Carl Miller, Lydia Knott, Harry Northrup, Malvina Polo and a number of others well known in the picture world.

The staff on the production end of the picture includes Alfred Reeves, general manager, Eddie Sutherland, assistant to Mr. Chaplin, while Arthur Stibolt is technical and art director. Harry D'Arrast and Jean de Limur are aiding in the picture as advisors on details of the manners and customs of France where the scenes in the production are laid. Roland Totheroh is handling the photography, assisted by Jack Wilson.

From U to You By MALCOLM S. BOYLAN

One half of "Merry-Go-Round," the spectacular film feature of Vienna which was started at Universal City a year ago, is in "first out." Out of the two hundred feet of selected shots, the first half of the story has been roughly assembled and three film editors are working on the rest under the supervision of Arthur Ripley, editorial chief, and Rupert Julian, director. This elaborate screen spectacle will present the new "find," Mary Philbin, together with Norman Kerry, George Hackathorne, Caesar Gravina, Dale Fuller, Maude George, Maurice Talbot, Fenwick Oliver, Lillian Sylvestor, George Seigmann, Albert Conti de Cedassamare, Dorothy Wallace, Al Edmondson and twenty other popular players in a dramatic visualization of a political, social and romantic "Merry-Go-Round" in the proud dominions of the Hapsburgs.

Hobart Henley's Universal-Jewel production of "The Abysmal Brute," a special filming of the Jack London novel starring Reginald Denny, is assuming shape rapidly on the multiple reels of the editorial department. A. P. Younger adapted the story; Mabel Julienne Scott, Hayden Stevenson, Buddy Messinger, Crauford Kent and others support Denny, a star who is growing consistently in popularity.

"White Tiger," Priscilla Dean's last completed starring vehicle, written and directed by Tod Browning, is practically in final shape for releasing. Wallace Beery, Matt Moore, Raymond Griffith and others support her. She is now working on the Universal-Jewel screening of "Drifting," the Brady play of China by John Colton.

"Jewel," Clara Louise Burnham's novel of spiritual-material controversy, directed by Lois Weber and presenting Claude Gillingwater, Jane Mercer, Jacqueline Gadsden, Beth Rayon, Frances Raymond, Evelyn Thatcher, Robert Frazer, Ralph Yearsley and others in themeful impersonations, is getting into such a state in the editorial transition that the remarkable power of the story can be seen.

The biggest current undertaking at Universal City, in fact, the biggest venture in its history, is "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," starring Lon Chaney. Victor Hugo's classic is being transcribed to the screen with dramatic emphasis on the role of the hunchback, Quasimodo, which the inimitable Chaney plays. Patsy Ruth Miller, Winifred Bryson, Kate Lester, Norman Kerry, Tully Marshall, Brandon Hurst, Ernest Torrence, Eulalie Jensen and fifty famous character artists handle supporting roles. Wallace Worsley is directing from the screen scenario prepared by Perley Poore

Sheehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr. More money per capita is being spent on its costuming, which entails the making of these thousand costumes, than on any other similar picture, for the sole purpose of keeping it from being a costume production. First estimates on the cost of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" rank it considerably above the final figures on the sensational "Foolish Wives."

Virginia Valli will soon start work in "Up the Ladder," the play of society climbing written by Owen Davis, directed by Robert Henley.

Jack Conway, having completed "Trimmed in Scarlet," an all-star version of William Hurlbut's play, will start shortly on "What Wives Want," an original story by Perry Vekroff.

King Baggot is supervising the cutting of "The Town Scandal," a Gladys Walton vehicle, and preparing another Walton feature for production.

Edward (Hoot) Gibson is being starred in "Katy Didd," a story written and directed by Edward Sedgwick, who has made several of the best Gibson vehicles including "The Gentleman from America."

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

Johnny. Walker in "The Fourth Musketeer" looms up like a winner. And, William K. Howard deserves much of the credit, for it is well directed, and, he was the man behind the megaphone. We cannot agree with one enthusiast, who branded this picture "the greatest ever." Under the strain of unbiased analysis, it does not stand up under the tremendous burden of the superlative, "greatest." It is a good picture of extensive entertaining value and should have a wide vogue in the popular-price field. At a pre-view given this week, this picture received a 60-40 break in its favor from the audience. There was in the majority the enthusiastic clan; there was a minority not entirely satisfied. One thing sure is, Mr. Walker is making long strides towards ingratiating himself with a very general public and Director Howard has angled himself into a position of advantage to him in an endeavor to do bigger and better things. Explicitly, this star and this director now occupy that position from which much can be expected of them.

After seeing "Adam's Rib" and pondering over it deliberately for an hour after the show, the most natural conclusion in appraisal is: "Well, it's another Cecil De Mille picture," which may mean much or little. One fact beyond the range of doubt is, this is no world-beater nor is there much of the handiwork of a genius discernible. At times this picture entertains royally; at other times it actually bores one. Occasionally, one's mind turns to wondering if the producer has really become too self-confident. Almost simultaneously, one is prone to wish Mr. De Mille would abandon forever many of his ideas of picture-making and either originate new mechanics for creating dramatic power or give more attention to developing story values devoid of reflections of a directorial personality. "Adam's Rib" will satisfy those who like the usual Cecil De Mille fare.

A pre-view of Clifford S. Efeldt's newest six-reel semi-western picture, "Danger," reveals the fact that it is not necessary to spend a huge fortune to get a film of satisfying power as a diversion. "Danger" did not cost Mr. Efeldt much money, but it will afford a big public with a wealth of entertainment nevertheless. It makes little difference whether or not you are familiar with J. B. Warner, the star, he has a role that fits him perfectly and he gives you thrills. It is unimportant whether or not you ever heard of June LaVere, the leading lady, she gives a high-class performance and serves as an embellishment of the story, which gains strength for having been devised solely for picture purposes. We have no idea exactly how much "Danger" cost, but we doubt that as much as $10,000 was spent on it. The amount involved is secondary. Of the first importance is, it appeases one's appetite for sane cinema diversion more completely than many productions costing $100,000 and more.

"The Vengeance of the Deep," an A. B. Barringer production, should not be subjected to the inevitable caustic remarks of critics—it should be allowed to remain in the deep of oblivion. It is to be regretted that the expense of taking a company all the way to Hawaii was incurred only to get so little. The producer was admirably ambitious and it is difficult to understand how

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

This is the open season for censorship bills again and reformers are busy in several states, but there is a noticeable inclination on the part of the public to show signs of tiring of having a few self-appointed men protect their morals. Hence the situation, as a whole, is not one to arouse alarm within the ranks of picture producers.

Carl Laemmle is taking the initiative in the waging of a campaign to bring about a reduction in box-office prices. Lower fees of admission to cinema "emporiums" seems to be a necessity if this form of entertainment is to be kept on its original basis, which was one of a perfectly democratic sort because the price was within the reach of all the masses.

Independent producers continue to make unprecedented progress in the matter of becoming a real power in the world-wide field. There is pleasing reassurance in this tendency since it presages the doom of all efforts to monopolize the great film industry.

There is no let-up in "the mad rush" of most producers to buy published stories and staged plays because of the alleged exploitation value of the "big names" involved. However, the actual starting of the filming of its initial picture places the Palmerplay Company, which dedicates itself exclusively to the original story, in the front ranks of revolutionary pioneers and makes a first dent, a dent of promise.

The fad for signing 'em up to long-term contracts is more rampant than ever. Forsooth, everybody's signing up everybody. What's it all the sign of anyway?

The day has come when the absence of an all-star cast means the average picture must become an outcast. Another day seems likely to come when the story alone will count and then a different kind of a die will be cast!

A studio construction era is on in the southern California field. It is estimated that a grand total of a half million dollars is now being spent on making alterations and improvements in various film-making plants.

he could miss the mark so widely, but he has very little to show for his pecuniary outlay. It may be possible to salvage the film by re-taking the whole last reel, changing in its entirety the ending and by some clever cutting and retitling some of the earlier sequences. However, unless there is some ingenious re-vamping, this picture would serve a better purpose unreleased.

Judging from the results "in the rough," Ethel Clayton has an excellent starring vehicle in "The Greater Glory," her latest. However, it is rumored the title may be changed to "Can a Woman Love Twice?" or something equally as inane. It is to be hoped sincerely that this change will not be made. Frankly, we cannot understand the mental processes of anyone who thinks such a change of title is wise. "The Greater Glory" is an admirable title and it fits this story perfectly. Next to the artistic triumphs of Miss Clayton, the remarkable character portrayal of Muriel Frances Dana, a four-year-old actress, stands out in brilliance. The directing of James Horne deserves high praise.

Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" is a new twist in juvenile genius a la histrionic. In a phrase, it is a masterly performance in a masterpiece. Moreover, it is quite the best thing Jackie has ever offered and it insures him his place in the front ranks of screen stars. Here is a picture which will delight young America and it will satisfy old America. It is Charles Dickens at his best and the literary brilliance of this great English author has been preserved and visualized with a sure hand directed by a brain of understanding. Little Jackie's performance could not be well improved upon and his supporting cast is satisfactory. Especially memorable is the work of Lewis Sargent, who demonstrates the fact that he is a quite remarkable character delineator, who gives promise of notable cinema achievements.

A comedian who is sure to go far is what Monty Banks proves himself to be in his two latest fun films, "Oil's Well" and "Please Arrest Me." Here is another case of picture-making at small cost. Mr. Banks probably spends less per comedy than any other star in his particular field and yet he manages to maintain a standard high enough to keep him popular in first-run houses. He is his own plot-bulider, gag-man and director, and, his pictures are uniformly pleasing. Hence it seems safe to predict a big future for him since he is sure of having more money to spend on his productions some day.

"The Cricket on the Hearth," just completed by Director Lorimer Johnson, is a bright prospect on the photoplay public's horizon. It has all the earmarks of a hit. Besides being well directed on the basis of an adaptation with a soul, it is blessed with a cast of players who give it the maximum of artistic interpretation. Especially worthy of praise is Josef Swickard, the featured player, while Virginia Brown Faire, Fritzi Ridgeway and Paul Moore give performances par excellence. This is a Paul Gerson production and was filmed at Universal City.

WHEREIN A "HUNCH" COMES TRUE

Several years ago when she witnessed a stage performance of "Three Wise Fools," Martha Mattox, the popular character actress, immediately announced to friends that some day she would have a role in the same play whenever it was filmed. Her remark was passed as a joke, but, just the same, the actress meant it, and, at frequent intervals she says the thought—always one of conviction—recurred to her. Now sure enough, she has been cast to play the important role of the spinster housekeeper in the Goldwyn screen version of this great success and, under the direction of King W. Vidor, will start her interpretation of the part before the cameras within a few days. Moreover, the engagement came to her unsolicited, so far as she was concerned—she

COUE FILM WILL BE RELEASED AT ONCE

Emile Coue, the famous French disciple of auto-suggestion, has finished his first work before a motion picture camera. The final scenes for "The Message of Emile Coue," in which he appears, carrying his message of hope to the millions, have been finished. The novel film will be released immediately.

M. Coue was delighted with his experiences in the studio. Directors and cameramen found him an excellent pupil, and in spite of the fact that this was the first time he had faced a motion picture camera, the famous lecturer was as much at home as a seasoned film veteran.

Studio employes remarked at his complete absence of stage fright. The director, John L. McCutcheon, stated that he had never directed a novice who was easier to handle than M. Coue.

The picture is a graphic illustration of M. Coue's theory of self-mastery through conscious auto-suggestion. Many of the examples cited in his books, whose editions are nearing the million mark, are illustrated in this two-reel subject.

M. Coue's theory is summed up in the following statement: "I am not a miracle man. I have never cured anyone. I only show others how to cure themselves. By means of the cinema it will be shown that imagination dominates the will. My theory of consciously impressing the sub-conscious mind, and in that way wilfully mastering the imagination, will be delineated and illustrated by means of players so that every beholder can understand and benefit."

"The Message of Emile Coue" was produced by Motion Picture Arts, Inc.

POST JOINS LESSER

Guy Bates Post last week severed connections with Richard Tully, with whom he collaborated in the production of "The Bird of Paradise" and "Omar the Tentmaker," and shortly afterward signed a contract to appear in pictures for Sol Lesser's newly organized company, the Principal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Post's first vehicle under the new banner will be the picture version of James Oliver Curwood's story, "The Man From Ten Strike" and will be filmed under the direction of Robert Thornby.

DIRECTOR RISKS LIFE TO SAVE FIRM MONEY

The daring of Edwin Carewe in driving 65 miles through a raging blizzard in the mountains of Utah, probably saved his company many thousands of dollars.

Carewe is making "The Girl of the Golden West" for First National and left early this week for Zion National Park, Utah. His company was to follow the next day. On reaching the park Carewe ran into a terrific storm and knew he would have to go somewhere else to make the picture.

Sixty-five miles was the nearest telegraph station, and Carewe drove the entire distance over mountain roads reaching the station in time to file a wire three hours before the company was scheduled to leave Los Angeles.

The director returned here yesterday and left again last night, this time for Sonora, near Sacramento, where he hopes to obtain a desirable location.

CLIMAX OF "ROBIN HOOD" RUN TO BE FLOWERY

The Hollywood film colony is to stage its own flower show soon and the better known satellites of the cinema heavens will offer cups far the best specimens and displays of the different variety of the types of flowers that beautify Southern California landscapes.

The spacious Egyptian forecourt of Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre has been selected as the locale for this pageant of posies, and Sid Grauman has been asked to act as generalissimo of the spring event.

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Dorothy Phillips, Allen Holubar, Al. St. John, Warner Baxter, Jackie Coogan and others have already signified their intention of giving trophies. Jackie Coogan will give his for the best floral display entered by any youngster under fourteen.

It is planned to stage this floral fiesta during the last week of the run of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, as a sort of fitting send-off to the play which has had such a successful run. This final week is not far off, because of negotiations Mr. Grauman has made to other producers to stage their world premieres.

SCHROCK RULES U

Raymond L. Schrock, popular writer in film circles, and who, for the last four years, has held the position of scenario editor at Universal City, has been appointed director general of that company to succeed Irving Thalberg, who recently resigned to join the Louis B. Mayer forces. During the period of Mr. Schrock's reign as scenario editor, he was responsible for the editing of Universal's important productions.

UNKNOWN GETS A CHANCE IN 1st PALMERPLAY

Some revolutionary producing tactics are to be brought to the fore by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation in filming its first series of feature productions, beginning with "Out of the Night," an original story written by Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton of Pittsburg, now being filmed at the Thomas H. Ince Studios. The results of four years of preparatory work in training talented "outside" writers to create a special screen literature are to be tested in this and other Palmer plays. Besides the fact that only original stories will be filmed, it is announced that all authors are to be paid upon a royalty basis, something heretofore unknown.

"We intend to insure a just and adequate compensation for the fruits of creative genius," said Mr. Roy L. Manker, President of the organization. "This is in line with our effort to raise the standard of screen stories in general, by bringing hitherto unrecognized talent into the industry. We have tapped an inexhaustible fount of fresh, virile material. We hope to prove through our productions that good stories well presented will find more favor with audiences than 'adaptations' not so well fitted to the screen, but backed by the names of famous authors."

Director Joseph De Grasse wields the megaphone, while the brilliant and debonair Lloyd Hughes heads the cast as the star. With this distinguished duo is a notable cast consisting of Lucille Ricksen, who plays opposite Mr. Hughes, Myrtle Stedman, George Hackathorne, Claire McDowell, Philo McCullough and others. Frank Geraghty is Mr. De Grasse's "chief of staff." The initial scenes are being filmed on location at Truckee, that well-known abode of snow "atmosphere."

STAR'S OFFER TO REVIVE WALTZ OF YORE

Believing that tangoes and eccentric forms of fox-trotting should not entirely displace the old-fashioned waltz, and that the Hollywood and Culver City film colonies should follow the trend of dancing in the cast in which the favorite steps of our forefathers are again coming into their own, Dorothy Phillips, well-known screen star, has offered a handsome trophy cup for the best waltzers in attendance at the annual ball of the Motion Picture Directors Association to be staged at the Hotel Alexandria on the night of February 17th.

Miss Phillips was a Baltimore society girl before entering the world of footlights and Cooper-Hewitts, and is an ardent devotee to such musical creations for the dance as "Blue Danube," "Every Little Sherry" and similar compositions.

Plans for the ball are going ahead rapidly under the direction of Director General Philip E. Rosen, according to James Horgan, chairman of the publicity committee, and this year's celebration by the megaphone wielders of the industry promises to be the most pretentious ever staged.

Much interest has been manifested in the musical war to be staged between jazz and the classics, with Max Fisher and his jazzing henchmen representing the former and the famous Marshal Neilan stringed orchestra playing in behalf of the more melodious and less syncopated form of music.

Lane Leaves Selznick

Tamar Lane, who came to California a year ago with the Selznick forces as West Coast publicity director, has decided to permanently locate in Los Angeles and with that end in view is leaving the Selznick organization to establish his own publicity offices. Though young in years Lane is one of the oldest members of the house of Selznick and left the post of dramatic editor of the Boston Evening Record in 1919 to join the company. He was also prominent in Massachusetts as an exhibitor. In his new capacity Lane will act as personal and business representative for stars, directors and authors and will devote a great deal of time to special magazine and newspaper work. He will make the United Studios his headquarters.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Some of This Week's Film News You May Have Overlooked.

Sol Polito is filming Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West."

Priscilla Bonner is characterizing the role of an Irish girl in Tom Forman's current production.

The Reliable Photoplayers Association has moved its offices to 4100 Sunset Boulevard. They can be called at the old telephone number.

Perry Vekroff, the director-author's latest is "What Wives Want." Write your own answer to this one.

Vola Vale is playing the part of a vamp opposite Gaston Glass in the Gasnier production of "Mothers-in-Law" at the Mayer-Schulberg Studios.

Cecil Holland and Lucien Littlefield, master make-up artists, have signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn and will appear in protean roles for which they are famous.

Max Davidson, who won high praise for his performance in "Abie's Irish Rose," is enacting an important role in a Christie comedy under the direction of Al Christie.

Edward Martindel is in a serious condition, suffering from "Kleig eyes." An operation may be necessary, and should that fail, it is said he will probably lose his eye-sight.

Myrtle Steadman accompanied the Lloyd Hughes company to Truckee, where the exteriors of Thomas H. Ince's production of "Atonement" are being photographed.

Fred Thompson, who won recognition as leading man to Mary Pickford in "The Love Light," has been signed by Goldwyn to enact roles in their productions for the next five years.

Ralph Faulkner, popular legitimate actor who scored his biggest hit playing opposite Yvette Guilbert in "Guibour," and who deserted the stage to enter eastern-made films about a year ago, has signed a contract with B. P. Schulberg for Preferred Pictures. He arrived in Los Angeles last week.

"Lucretia Lombard," the novel written by Kathleen Norris, has been purchased by the Warner Brothers and it will be produced by Harry Rapf, who made "School Days," "Your Best Friend," "Rags to Riches," and "Heroes of the Street." Sada Cowan is adapting the story for the screen.

Stan Laurel has signed a contract with Hal Roach and will soon begin work on his initial picture, which will be a travesty on "Under Two Flags." Mae Laurel, his wife, will play the leading feminine role.

Vic Potel is hoping the new directors who enter the field will all be named "Vic something." All because Vic Herman, Vic Schertzinger and Vic Halperin have used him in three productions in rapid succession.

Jeanie Macpherson, author of Cecil B. DeMille's latest production, "Adam's Rib," is vacationing in New York, and upon her return will immediately start work on the forthcoming De Mille picture, "The Ten Commandments."

Conrad Nagel last week signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn following his withdrawal from Famous Players-Lasky with whom he has been affiliated for the last three years. He will serve as a featured player in special Goldwyn productions.

Another Hollywood story, "The Deacon of Hollywood," has entered production at the Fine Arts studios under the direction of Fred Caldwell. The principal roles are being portrayed by Gale Henry, Victor Potel, Violet Schram, Ray Cannon and others.

Jacques D'Auray, who is scoring a success in his interpretation of the part of the devil-may-care Gaston in "My American Wife," starring Gloria Swanson, is now playing a similar part, that of the flirtatious French Beau Brummel, with Mae Murray, in "The French Doll," under the direction of Robert Leonard.

Filming of Daniel Goodman's production, "Something for Nothing," is rapidly nearing completion. Elinor Fair, who will be seen in Charles Brabin's "Driven," is enacting the stellar role, supported by Robert Edison, Charles Richman, Mary Alden, Hedda Hopper and Vincinte Coleman. The picture is being produced at the old Mae Murray Studios of New York.

Lloyd Hughes, who is being starred in "Atonement," the first of several productions which the Palmer Photoplay company is planning to film at the Thomas H. Ince studios, is being supported by an unusually fine cast. Myrtle Steadman, Claire McDowell, Lucille Rickson, George Hackathorne, Philo McCullough and Bruce Gordon have been chosen for the principal roles. Joseph De Grasse is directing.

The Mayer and Quinn motion picture exchange of Los Angeles last week obtained the world rights to "The Greatest Menace," Mrs. Angela Kaufman's anti-dope picture. The price paid was not divulged.

Irvin Van Osdell, well-known to baseball fans, having served the past two seasons as outfielder for the Salt Lake club, has been appointed outside property man for the Fine Arts studios, which office has been created owing to increased production activities at the plant.

The all-star cast enacting the important roles in "Trimmed in Scarlet," the Universal production, under the direction of Jack Conway includes: Gerard Grassby, Kathlyn Williams, Raymond Hatton, David Torrence, Roy Stewart, Lucille Rickson, Robert Agnew, Philo McCullough, Eve Southern, Bert Sprotte and Phillips Smalley.

Al Christie has completed the filming of his latest comedy, "A Hula Honeymoon," and has started work on another fun film. Two other companies are busy for Christie. Scott Sidney is directing Henry Murdock, Christie's latest acquisition, and another is being filmed under the direction of Harold Beaudine.

Filming of Rowland V. Lee's production of "Desire" will be completed this week at the Metro Studios. The cast includes Marguerite de la Motte, Estelle Taylor, Russell Simpson, David Butler, John Bowers, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Hank Mann, Baby Muriel Frances Dana, Chester Conklin, Joseph Dowling, Ralph Lewis, Lucille Hutton and Edward Connelly.

William Daniels, who photographed Von Stroheim's productions of "Foolish Wives" and "The Merry-Go-Round" at Universal, has resigned from that organization and will join Mr. Von Stroheim, who recently became a member of the Goldwyn directorial staff. His first efforts under the new banner will be put forth in Von Stroheim's initial Goldwyn production, "McTeague."

With the engagement this week of Louise Fazenda, who will play one of the principal comedy roles in Halperin Productions' latest breezy satirical play, "Tea—With a Kick," Victor Hugo Halperin, author of the story and one of its producers, has announced that a total of 24 artists of recognized prominence are now appearing in the story. Another recent addition to the cast is Ralph Lewis, well-known character heavy.

William H. Thompson, who for more than fifty years has been a prominent character on English and American stages and screens, died in New York last week at the age of 76 years. His death was the result of his developing pneumonia while on "location."

Rumors afloat to the effect that the Vitagraph studios were about to discontinue activities were branded as untrue by general manager W. S. Smith. Three companies are working at the present time and another outfit is being prepared to start "shooting" next week.

Mayron Aye has been selected by Sol Lesser of the Principal Pictures Corporation to play the leading feminine role opposite Bert Lytell in "The Meanest Man in the World," Mr. Lesser's first production under the banner of the new organization. Miss Aye, prior to her advent into the motion picture field, was a favorite subject for several of the world's greatest artists.

When Will Rogers finishes his engagement with Ziegfeld's Follies, he will return to California and immediately commence work on a series of comedies for Hal Roach, who announces a two-year contract has been signed between the comedian and himself. Miss Norma Shearer, recently judged the most beautiful girl in Canada, and Pathe's latest "find," will be brought here to play the feminine lead opposite Mr. Rogers.

Jack Gardner, daredevil "human fly," has arrived in Los Angeles from Geneva, Switzerland, where he was working as a cameraman for a scenic expedition. He has been contracted for by a big producing company of Hollywood and will devote his time hereafter to furnishing super-thrills in picture productions. During the Liberty Loan Drive he distinguished himself by climbing the wall of Gotham's tallest skyscrapers as an advertising stunt.

Jack Mulhall last week signed a long term contract with Joseph M. Schenck at a reported salary of $1000 a week, which is Mr. Schenck's first step towards gathering a galaxy of cinema stars since he purchased the controlling interest in the United Studios. Mr. Mulhall's promotion is said to be the result of his performance in support of Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law." He will play the leading male role in Constance Talmadge's next starring vehicle, after which he will probably be starred in his own right.

HAMPTON RETURNS TO MAKE "THE SPOILERS"

Jesse D. Hampton has announced his plans for the production of a series of Rex Beach stories. He has acquired the rights to all of the author's works and will picturize them on a vast scale.

The first one to go into production is "The Spoilers," Beach's classic novel of the Klondike gold rush.

It was learned that $130,000 was paid for the motion picture rights to "The Spoilers." This is the highest figure ever paid for any story with the exception of "Ben-Hur," "Way Down East" and "Turn to the Right."

Lambert Hillyer, who directed all of William S. Hart's recent pictures, is holding the megaphone on "The Spoilers." He is especially fitted by training and nature for the handling of virile, outdoor drama. Among the pictures which he made with Hart are "Square Deal Sanderson," "Sand," "The Toll Gate," "The Testing Block," "The Cradle of Courage," "Travellin' On," and "White Oak."

The scenario was written by Fred Myton, Elliott Clawson and Hope Loring. June Mathis, editorial director of the Goldwyn Studios, is consulting in the final preparations. Mr. Hampton has spent four months in preparation for the production.

Twelve players of stellar prominence will be in the picture. Virginia Brown Faire was among the first players to be engaged.

Rex Beach will personally assist in the picturization of his story.

DOROTHY MANNERS WINS PROMOTION TO "LEAD"

As a reward for striving diligently for eighteen months during which time she has given as much care to portrayals of "bits" and small parts as any star would give to big stellar roles, Dorothy Manners, proclaimed by many within the industry as "the most beautiful brunette on the screen," has been promoted to a position of leading lady in her own right by Charles A. Bird, general manager of the William Fox studio after she had made unusually favorable impressions in enacting important parts in two consecutive Shirley Mason pictures. Consequently, when Charles ("Buck") Jones starts his new seven-reel feature production next week, he will have Miss Manners as his new leading lady. The working title of this picture is "Snowdrift" and it will be filmed under the direction of Scott Dunlap. Miss Manners will play the part of an Indian girl, whose beauty intrigues the hero and causes complications which go to make up the plot of the story.

THE RESULT OF LIVING NEXT DOOR TO A GENIUS

Back in the days when both were several years younger than they are now, Thomas H. Ince and William Fairbanks were next-door neighbors in St. Louis. By the time Mr. Ince had decided what his life work should be, Mr. Fairbanks had gotten deeper into a quandary as to what occupation he would pursue. When the latter was apprised of the decision of the former to embark upon a career in the show business, he was skeptical of the outcome and therefore he evinced no inclination to emulate him.

A couple years later, Mr. Fairbanks was still puzzling over where to start carving his niche in the hall of fame. At about this same time he was beginning to hear reports of the success being scored by his former neighbor, Mr. Ince, then working assiduously in motion pictures in New York.

Within another year Mr. Fairbanks was forced to recognize what numerous critics had discovered, namely: that Mr. Ince displayed signs of being a real genius in the cinema field. Soon afterwards, the name of Ince became a household word and its owner became one of America's foremost producers.

Then and only then did the full realization of having lived next door to a true genius dawn on Mr. Fairbanks with sufficient force to act as a potential factor in his own personal destiny. In due time he wrote his old friend a letter. The upshot of this was, another recruit joined the growing army of photoplayers in the Southern California field, and, under the banner of Thomas H. Ince, this same William Fairbanks made his debut on the screen in the year of 1911.

The big point is, if Mr. Fairbanks had not known of the start of Mr. Ince so well—and had not lived next door to this genius of a new line of endeavor—he would have become most anything else excepting a motion picture actor. In fact, he had all but launched himself in the mercantile line when he gained the inspiration to ask his old friend for a chance to get in on the ground floor of the film business.

Now William Fairbanks is one of the leading interpreters of stellar western characters of the screen. One of his most notable triumphs was scored in "The Sheriff of Sun Dog" and he has just finished "The Law Rulers." On March 1st, he will start filming his sixth version of a W. C. Tuttle Adventure Magazine story at the Ben Wilson Studios. And, it's all because he once lived next door to Thomas H. Ince.

THIS HARMLESS LITTLE STORY GREW INTO A BIG FALSEHOOD

When Gloria Hope was enacting the character of Teola Graves in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country," she was duly interviewed by the inquisitive company press agent, and, among other things, she told him that prior to her leaving her home in Newark, New Jersey, to pay a visit to Los Angeles she had entertained some thought of preparing to become a school teacher, but that she never had gotten beyond the stage of merely thinking about it. In all good faith the press agent wrote a brief paragraph to this effect.

Now since the release of this picture, various theatre press agents and photoplay editors have rearranged the story and added to it until at last they have printed special feature stories relative to her having taught school apparently for "y'ars and y'ars" before she ever dreamed of becoming a motion picture actress, and, just the other day came the climax to the whole queer hoax when a certain metropolitan paper gave prominence to a narrative in which it was stated positively that not only had Miss Hope been successful as a high school teacher, but that she had bright prospects of being promoted to a chair in the faculty of a prominent eastern university.

As a matter of fact, Miss Hope was less than fifteen years of age when she migrated from Jersey to California and she never had taught school. She would not have had time to prepare herself for this work because she was only around her sixteenth year when she made her debut on the screen and she has been following this pursuit ever since. She has been in pictures about six years, which makes it perfectly plain that she is as yet exceedingly young—much younger now than the average school ma'am when she starts her pedagogic work.

Thus do big trees continue to grow out of tiny acorns, but trees grow out of some reason while falsehoods just grow without rhyme or reason.

FINDS PURSE AND GETS JOB IN ONE DAY

Luck does run in groups! Actor Jack Carlyle is more convinced of this than ever since his latest experience with the whimsical fates. After bumping into most every kind of a setback that can beset a "between-pictures era," Mr. Carlyle started on a leisurely stroll toward the Robertson-Cole studios one day early this week. After walking something like three blocks he picked up a purse containing a hundred dollars in currency. This did not cheer him up so much because he felt sure he would find the loser—his Scotch conscience forbade his keeping the money without making an effort to return it to whoever had been unfortunate enough to lose it.

However, he continued his journey to the Robertson-Cole studios and had not been on the "lot" ten minutes when he collided head-on with an engagement, and, a good one, too. He was the very man they were looking for to play the character "lead" in "Daytime Wives," and he was given a contract at a most attractive salary.

Satisfied with the day as a great one, Mr. Carlyle returned to his Hollywood apartment to proceed to find the owner of the hundred dollars he had found. As luck would have it, he found the man within a couple hours, and, as good luck would have it, the said man proved to be a close friend, and, as a reward, he insisted upon the honest finder retaining half of the hundred as a reward.

"It only goes to prove that it is never time to get discouraged, because you never know when the 'breaks' are going to start in your favor," Mr. Carlyle observes.

"Daytime Wives" will be directed by Emile Chautard and will be the second R-C picture in which Mr. Carlyle has been cast for an important role, the other one being "Wreckage," Robert Thornby's production soon to be released.

And There Was Light

R. Hostetter, secretary of the Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society, put on the lighting effects for the banquet and entertainment given by the American Historical Revue and Exposition for the Hollywood Business Men's Club last Tuesday. Harry D. Brown of the Exposition committee was master of ceremonies. Speeches were given by Dr. E. C. Moore, president of the University of California, Southern Branch, and Dr. Von Kleinsmid of Southern California. The program ended with several musical and dramatic numbers.

An era of unprecedented prosperity is at hand. Let no one be stupid enough to put his foot down on it.

The present coal situation indicates more people than coal are being burnt this winter—especially back east.

Incidentally, good pictures should no longer be accidents. There is a basis of gauging nowadays and also a reason for discontinuing all gouging.

Let us give the reform-crazed "Reds" plenty occasion for getting the "blues" as a result of the futility of their finding any points of attack upon the screen!

The latest "dope" on the dope situation is, the authorities do not seem to have enough "dope" on the dope ring to "dope" many of its members away in prison. It does seem high time for the low-down on what is the matter with officials that they cannot make headway against such a glaring, unmistakable menace.

When the Motion Picture Exposition opens here next June with President Harding and many other notables present, the film-making industry will take on a new importance immediately. This is to be a big project and any industry capable of promoting big, laudable projects is sure of gaining big credit and big achievements for the cinema and its people. Be among them!

So-called temperament—whatever that is—may be serviceable as a subterfuge or an alleged "means" of attracting attention, but it has no place in motion picture studios. Many develop temperament in the misguided belief that it attaches importance and arouses respect, but as a matter of fact those vulnerable to the fallacy are the only ones who do not know that it is human fault more to be pitied than censured. When anyone brags of being temperamental, he or she is bragging of being foolish.

THE TYRO THE WORLD MUST NEVER TIRE O'

When the tyro is eliminated from the theorizing you find you have mighty thin air for posterity. Therefore, the one who is learning to do the big things which are to be accomplished tomorrow must be an essential and all ridicule of such a plodder is as unpardonable as it is reprehensible. There are far too many flippant remarks passed at the expense of the humble aspirant, and we seek with all of our might to awaken the thoughtless to the wanton fallacy of thus knocking the very props from under the future prospects of the race. It is entirely uncalled for and unjustified that an ambitious person should be the object of the slightest mirth under any circumstances, and the less promising one may be the more sympathy and encouragement should be bestowed, because history proves that the greatest of men were often the roughest of diamonds in the rough. The tree of ambition has always been frugiferous and it always will be. Attempts to retard its development or to stultify those of lowly standing who faithfully try to cultivate it are iconoclastic in the extreme, and the happiness of generations yet to come is thereby maliciously menaced. Hence, there can be only the severest condemnation for the contumely of the bigots and imbeciles who blab and laugh because earnest men and women will aspire though they dwell in hovels.

If ever the day comes that the would-do-well fatigues the world, God help His children on this terrestrial sphere. Mongrels will infest the monasteries and the spissitude of degenerate deterioration will stifle the strongest. No one or no thing will amount to the whoop of the emaciated. Mental inertia will resemble typhoons. Morals will lag and sag ultroneously. The ubiquity of don't-care will be appalling, overwhelming. Humanity will have to hypothesize to the shabbiest hawker. Achievement would become an unknown quantity. DO YOU WANT SUCH DISASTERS TO BEFALL US? Of course you don't. Then do not permit anyone to poke fun at the other fellow because he aspires as he perspires! Treat the transgressor who feigns weariness over the aspirations of the meek with unmistakable disdain. Let it be known that you do NOT condone such fatuity. Meanwhile you lose sleep worrying over how you can help the tyro! He or she is as important as the master performers of our contemporary history, and don't let anyone forget it.

Incidentally, all producers and all motion picture magazines adhering to the old policy of ignoring the "new blood" constantly making its advent into the film industry and the cinema art, are destined to be sadly out of step with the true march of progress, a progress which is ever a form of evolution whereby the tyro is incessantly moving up from the rear to the front ranks.

ONE EFFICACIOUS "CURE-ALL"

There are very few physical ailments which can be placed in the incurable class, providing the proper treatment is started in time. The market has always had an over-abundance of nostrums for which cure-all claims are made vociferously, and the people have become so accustomed to quacks that they accept them as an unavoidable nuisance which must be tolerated indulgently. Little did anyone dream that a really efficacious cure-all was within the range of possibility. Still the screen is just that, if taken in time in the proper doses and with sufficient persistency. Excepting a few malignantly contagious diseases, the photoplay can cure anything, through the principle of mind diversion, to the extent of controlling matter! Did the subtle influence of the cinema, to relieve mental distress, ever impress you as being marvelous? It is all of that, and we have ample testimonials proving cures upon cures affected by this joy-infusing medium. You are incredulous? All right, the first time you get a bothersome headache, go see a rousing screen comedy or an engrossing drama and concentrate your mind on the flitting shadows before you. Your headache will vanish in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. Nervous disorders causing mental depressions yield readily to the treatment prescribed by Doctor Photoplay. Many a picture has prevented many a suicide and has cured the ones afflicted with such mania. Pictures aid digestion, too, and they serve as an antidote for the grouch of the dyspeptic. Toothaches are forgotten—yes, the screen is an aid to the dentist. And there is no medicine on earth which will cure the "blues" like the movies do! Moreover, if you wish to remedy untoward physical conditions wrought by imagination, which inflicts all kinds of ills, don't take a pill—take in a picture show at least three times a week, after meals. Pray, dig down underneath the surface of jest and see the serious side of the possibilities of cures à la photoplay, M. D., meaning "Moving Delights."

WHEN NONE WOULD WRESTLE FILMS SAVE HIM

The movies are responsible for almost everything these days. Emilio Mendez, champion light heavyweight wrestler of South America, says the movies are going to prevent his ever taking part in another wrestling match. That is unless there are some awfully good inducements held out.

Mendez, who in five years hog-tied and strung in knots all the contenders in Argentine to say nothing of the champion, Ramon Roha, adds that so far he has not acquired the cauliflower ears popular with the lads of the mat and he has no desire to do so as such ears would very materially interfere with his plans for movie fame.

Mendez won the championship from Roha, January 7, 1921, the first fall taking one hour three minutes and twelve seconds and the second flop being turned in 16½ minutes. When the South American champ first came to North America he tried to get matches with the champions here, but they did not take his championship seriously although he came out first best in a number of preliminaries, throwing such wrestlers as Douglas Parker, Tom Lala, Frank Neoleon and Harry Kelly, not one of the matches lasting over fifteen minutes. Discouraged at winning more wrestling fame Mendez turned to the movies.

He recently had an interesting and "quarrelsome" part in the Maurice Tourneur production of "The Isle of Lost Ships," just finished at the United Studios.

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF MAJOR JUDSON, ACTOR

Sheldon Judson, popular juvenile character delineator, and a Major in the late war, was buried Thursday, February 8th. He was found dead at his home Monday evening. Police officials were unable to ascertain whether the young actor was a victim of suicide, natural causes, or murder. It was later decided, however, his death was the result of some mysterious deadly powders. Two weeks previous to his untimely death, Mr. Judson had completed an engagement in Captain Leslie T. Peacocke's production of "The Midnight Flower."

SHELDON JUDSON

Seeks to Stop East's War on "Westerns"

Because of the growing hostility of censors throughout the east against the showing of motion pictures unfolding stories of the far west, Clifford S. Elfelt, head of the Metropolitan Film Company, Inc., and also of the Clifford S. Elfelt Productions Company, seeks to start a counter-campaign in defense of the so-called "westerns" by asking Mayor George E. Cryer and members of the Los Angeles City Council to pass judgment on his latest semi-western photoplay, "Danger," starring J. B. Warner, and which will be previewed for this purpose at the Ambassador Hotel next Monday evening.

Mr. Elfelt openly takes issue with those several censor boards which have barred films depicting stirring events of the earlier days in the west as well as those of the present and he denies that even the usual kind of gun-play has any detrimental effects upon the morals of youth as is charged so frequently.

"If it is true to life that so-called 'bad men' who have invaded the far west ere now had to be dealt with in extreme ways such as the use of pistols on occasions, there is no reason why this should not be registered wherever required in telling a western story on the screen," he says. "By this I do not mean to infer that there is any necessity for an excess of far-fetched gun-play, but I do mean the same amount which becomes necessary right in the heart of New York City sometimes when the police are obliged to get after gangsters and gunmen."

Mr. Elfelt is making a special effort to interest Mayor Cryer in this proposition as a matter of winning a potential spokesman in behalf of the proposition of putting a stop to the tendency to make it impossible to continue the glorifying of the west on the screen because of the various prohibitive rules of various censor boards in the east.

"This unfair propaganda against the western style of story has reached a point where a producer must sacrifice every element of logic in a worthy form of entertainment simply to meet the demands of a few who try to be the dictators of the morals of the masses of people," he says. "The spirit of the west should not be relegated to the back-ground simply because it is not similar to the spirit of the east. Why, censor boards are even barring historical pictures of the early '50's because they contain scenes of white men defending themselves against the attacks of Indians with guns."

Mr. Elfelt further points out that on account of making Los Angeles the locale of a typical western story of the present and having a few scenes in which officers of the law make a raid upon desert and mountain outlaws with drawn pistols, he has been treated in some quarters as a wilful "corrupter of morals" and he does not think this is fair in any way. Therefore, he wants Mayor Cryer and other city officials to see his latest semi-western feature and pass judgment on it frankly in the belief that it is high time for someone in high position to speak right out loud on the subject.

Thalberg to Aid Mayer in Big Expansion Plan

With the arrival of Irving Thalberg at the Mayer Studio, an immediate expansion program will be inaugurated. Through the acquisition of new companies and new directors, the present production schedule of eight big specials a year will be increased to fifteen with a policy of great stories and all-star casts in effect for each picture. The studio facilities will be enlarged accordingly with more than $200,000 to be invested in new covered stages and equipment.

Mr. Thalberg's meteoric rise in the motion picture industry has been pointed to by bankers and capitalists all over the country as a striking example of the qualities of ability and integrity to be found in the young American business man. During a three-year period he has grown from the position of secretary to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, to distinction as one of the big powers of film-dom.

"11th Hour" Ends in 10th Week

"The Eleventh Hour" was practically completed this week. It is a William Fox all-star production and has been almost ten weeks in the making, under the direction of Bernard Durning. Shirley Mason is the star and reports state that this will be biggest picture of her entire career. Charles "Buck" Jones, Alan Hale and Edward Martin del have the leading masculine roles and have capably enacted the characters given them.

ACTOR DISCOVERS MYSTIC FORCE IN OZONE

The man who has travelled widely and who has been broadened thereby is generally able to get the best perspective on a new community. Eric Mayne, the well-known character actor of the screen, is one of those whose travels have been exceedingly extensive—practically all over the world, to be exact. And, he declares there is some mystic force in the ozone enveloping sunny California, a mystic force which has a tendency to develop the artistic instincts of mortals: to make them more artistic, as it were. This fact, he says, explains the presence of so many leaders in so many of the fine arts in this state as permanent residents.

"Just as they have congregated in Rome and in Greece in past history for the sake of getting into the midst of the proper environments for the artistic indulging, so they congregate in California in these modern days," Mr. Mayne says. "I would not say it is climate alone—it is something more subtle and more conducive to inspiration than mere weather conditions. Just what it is, I don't know and I doubt whether or not a name has ever been selected for it, but, just the same, it acts as a spur to those aspiring to lofty summits in any kind of artistic endeavor."

Many people have been prone to give the motion picture industry the whole credit for attracting noted sculptors, painters, authors and other celebrities of classical bent to especially Southern California, but Mr. Mayne points out that this is disproved in the fact that large numbers of famous personages of artistic achievement have settled in most all other parts of this commonwealth too. He cites the settling of Ignace Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, at Paso Robles as a striking example.

"Whatever it is in the ozone blessing this extreme west coast, it is spread over most of the broad expanse of all California and I know from personal experience that it has the effect of making one do better artistic work than he was ever able to do elsewhere," Mr. Mayne concludes.

"April Showers" Over

"April Showers" are almost over. That is, at least one "April Showers" is. The one is a Tom Forman production under way at the Louis B. Mayer studio. It is a Preferred Picture by the title above mentioned. Colleen Moore enacts the leading feminine role, while the featured masculine parts are in the capable hands of Kenneth Harlan, Ralph Faulkner and Gaston Glass.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Andrew Gunnard has resigned as production manager of Choice Productions, Inc.

Cameraman Otto Brautigan is now with Choice Productions, Inc., and will commence shooting in a few days.

Director Thomas R. Mills, who recently arrived from New York, has joined the staff of Choice Productions, Inc.

Pauline Curley is nearing the completion of her engagement with Director Leo Maloney, who is directing the latest Pathe picture.

Snitz Edwards has been added to the cast enacting Rupert Hughes' production of "Souls for Sale." He will play the part of Mr. Kale.

Ralph Lewis has been signed to enact a part in "The Fog," William Dudley Pelley's story which Graf Productions will film for Metro release.

Phillipe de Lacey has been cast to play the child part which runs through "Divorce," the Chester Bennett production featuring Jane Novak.

Harry Lamont has finished an engagement with Monty Banks, for whom he played the heavy in the latter's latest comedy filmed at the Ben Wilson studios.

Dorothy Cleveland, one of filmland's most promising ingenues who, since making her advent into pictures, has concentrated her efforts in the comedy field, is reported as thinking seriously of entering the deeper drama films.

Jane Sherman and Gladys Johnson are among the regular commuters to Universal City, these days, since they both have roles in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is directing with Lon Chaney as the star.

PIONEER FILM MAN HAS CHAIN OF SHOE STORES

Allen Curtis, who was one of the real pioneers in the film-making field of Southern California, has now become a shoe-store magnate. He was among the first comedy directors the Universal ever put on the job in its first Gower Street studio, and, he was behind the megaphone when such well-known performers as Gale Henry, Billy Franey and Chester Conklin were making their initial fun-making bows before the cameras. Two years ago Mr. Curtis retired from the picture business and embarked on a mercantile career and now he owns and operates a whole Carol Holloway is playing the part of Esther in Clara Kimball Young's current starring vehicle, "Cordelia the Magnificent," under the direction of George Archinbaud.

Jimmie Adams is the latest featured comedian to be engaged by Al Christie. He goes to work this week in "Green As Grass," under the direction of Scott Sidney.

Max Dupont has been assigned to his second engagement at the Ince studio. He is photographing "Lost," under direction of Tom Ince, starring Madge Bellamy.

Ralph Faulkner, ex-favorite of the New York stage, is now in Hollywood. He has been playing a leading role in "April Showers," the Tom Forman production.

Wheeler Dryden, co-author of "Suspicion," which recently finished a five weeks' run at the Egan Theatre, is now playing a Scotchman in "Nancy Stair," the Catherine Chisholm Cushing play at the Majestic Theatre. Mary Newcomb is the captivating "Nancy."

Corrine Griffith has completed her part of the work in the making of the Selznick all-star production, "The Common Law," which George Archinbaud is directing, and the popular actress is already back in New York, where she makes her permanent home.

Major William S. Beranger was among the many prominent people on the Gaundelaunier set in the "Hunchback" at Universal. Major Beranger was formerly a U. S. Cavalry officer and a veteran of the World War, Spanish War and Philippine Insurrection. He appeared as an Austrian General in "The Merry-Go-Round."

chain of retail shoe stores, each one of which is called the Shoe Emporium. These stores are situated in various parts of Los Angeles.

WILL ISSUE ALBUMS AT DIRECTORS' BALL FEB. 17

Stars of the Hollywood, Culver City and Los Angeles film colonies are to go on personal appearance tours all over the world. No, the local studios will not be deserted, but the tours will be made via handsome half-tones on coated paper, bound together in an album and bearing the stamp of approval of the Motion Picture Directors Association.

Mabel Julienne Scott is now completing the leading feminine role in Universal's production of Jack London's great story, "The Abysmal Brute," with Reginald Denny.

Huntley Gordon will play the male lead opposite Clara Kimball Young in her next starring vehicle, "Cordelia, the Magnificent," to be filmed at the Garson Studios.

J. Robert Rubin, treasurer and legal counsel of the Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., has returned to New York after an extended business conference with Mr. Mayer.

Edgar Stein is assistant to Charles Stallings, production manager of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Mr. Stein was for several years engaged in large construction projects in China.

Alta Allen has completed her engagement as the leading lady in "Marriage Chance," which was filmed at the Long Beach studios. Milton Sills and Henry Walthall head the all-star cast.

Vera and Ralph Lewis are playing character parts in Rowland V. Lee's production of "Desire." This is the first time this married couple ever played together in the same film during their eight years in pictures.

F. N. Murphy, chief electrical engineer for Warner Brothers, and Lewis Geib, technical director, are in charge of the building of the new studio. They are inaugurating several new features in studio construction.

Alvin Wykoff, formerly director of photography and special photographer for Cecil B. De Mille's productions at the Famous Players-Lasky studio, has been placed under contract by Louis B. Mayer to take charge of the photography of the Fred Niblo productions for Metro release.

The album is being prepared for initial distribution at the directors' ball at the Alexandria Hotel, February 17th, but the larger apportionment of them will go to every newspaper and magazine of importance in the world, and to all of the Carnegie libraries for reference. The photos will be such as will admit reproduction, and the book is being put out by the directors in the interests of the industry. No advertising is being accepted for the album.

Early reservations indicate that all of the leaders of the industry will be in attendance at the director's annual festivities, which is always one of the big social events of the year in the world's screen capital.

Rosemary Theby is playing the part of the Spanish girl in "The Girl of the Golden West," under the direction of Ed. Carewe. The entire cast is now in Sonora, California, on "location."

Amos Myers will be Rex Ingram's technical director for "Scaramouche," which will be the youthful director's first production to be filmed upon his return to the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Actual filming of the Universal production of "What Wives Want" started last Thursday. Ethel Grey Terry, Vernon Steel, Niles Welch and Marguerite Landis are portraying the prominent parts.

C. J. Overman, of 1350 Wright Street, is receiving congratulations these days because of the arrival of a baby girl at his home. Overman is head of the laboratory department of the Woodbury studio on the United lot.

Rex Thorpe, who directed the John P. Mills production of "Black Gold" at the Balboa studios, announces the cutting of this film has been completed. Ten weeks were devoted to the "shooting" of this six-reel feature.

Val Harris has been added to the Hunt Stromberg staff and will provide "gags" for the Bull Montana comedies. Harris has written and played in many vaudeville sketches, the best known of which is "Jerry at the Opera."

Anna Q. Nilsson, who is working in the Herbert Brenon production for Paramount, "The Rustle of Silk," with Betty Compson and Conway Tearle, is suffering from a severe attack of influenza. She was forced to quit work for several days.

Sidney D'Albrook has finished playing the part of Thyson, the English comedy heavy, with Dustin Farnum at the Fox studio, and is now enacting a similar part in the Halperin production, "Tea With A Kick," under production at Fine Arts. He takes the part of Pietro in this picture, which is being directed by Erle Kenton.

David Butler will play the leading male role in Hugh Deiker's production of "The Other Side," which was started this week at the Fine Arts studios. Helen Lynch will support him in the leading feminine role. Mr. Butler will join Max Graf upon completion of his present engagement to play a prominent part in "The Fog."

BORN, FIGHTING, ACTING AND ASPIRING WHERE MOVIES ARE MADE

Lewis Sargent

Born where the movies are made, Lewis Sargent literally got in on the ground floor. And, as an actor, he has taken full advantage of his opportunities with the result of his being in demand constantly. Just now he is continuing his literal pursuits by actually fighting his way through the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," now in the course of production. Forsooth, he has fought everybody having anything to do with the picture excepting the cameraman and Robert Hill, the director.

The point is, it seems that Mr. Sargent was not only born where the movies are made, but was born to fight his whole life out right in the midst of those movies.

"For the last five weeks I don't know whether I am supposed to be an actor or a pugilist," he remarked. "Incidentally, if the censors decide to bar fist fights too, what will become of the serials?"

However, Lewis Sargent has not always fought in the movies. He has had his opportunities to follow the straight histrionic course so devoid of all fisticuffs. Most notable of his screen triumphs was in the title role of the late William D. Taylor's production of "Huckleberry Finn" and is in the role of Noah Claypool in support of Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," now current. In these two pictures this young artist proves he was born to achieve high achievements in the movies.

However, in other films he generally has been obliged to keep his fists ready for action.

"There is one thing I like about acting and that is, it's not necessary to act to be an actor," Mr. Sargent says. "Sometimes you are better paid as an actor for fighting."

Besides his numerous appearances in important parts in feature productions, he has been starred in fifteen Universal comedies, and, he has a peculiarity, namely: he likes long hair and feels out of his character if he is called upon to have his locks trimmed very short.

Like most every normal human being, he has a single consuming ambition and his is, to play juvenile character parts which serve as comedy relief to dramas and can be played without the necessity (or annoyance) of giving tonsorial artists free rein to keep his dome mowed down to the proverbial minimum.

COMEDIAN WANTS TO HAVE FUN OF FINDING OUT WHAT PICTURES DID TO OTHERS

Seeing that this is the day of suggestions, auto and otherwise, Neely Edwards has one in the form of a new column for Camera! Mr. Edwards tells us that he has been reading a column in the Exhibitors Herald which is called, "What the pictures did for me," the material of which is sent into the publication by various theatre managers telling the cash results of pictures they have played, and also how their audiences liked the different productions.

As this motion picture business is a very serious proposition, even if one is making comedies, his idea is to create a little fun. This fun is in the form of a game and the only cost connected with the whole thing will be a two-cent stamp to be paid on the sending end of a letter. To go on with the interesting suggestion, Mr. Edwards says:

"Many funny things have happened to individuals which no doubt they would like their brother or sister professionals to know about, and so, like Exhibitor's Herald, why can't Camera! run a column and call it, 'What the pictures did to me.' The material of said column can be sent in by people in the business, and it would create enthusiasm by said people in said business.

"To demonstrate what I mean I will now sit down and take my pen in hand and write a letter to Camera! for the column 'What the pictures did to me.' Naturally, I would start it 'Dear Camera!', realizing that it is not 'Dear,' but this is the customary way to start a letter. Then I would tell them that it is Neely Edwards on the other end of the letter, and I wish to contribute material free of cost. When I say free of cost they surely will read further.

"I would then ask them a question as follows: 'I suppose you wonder what the pictures did to me?' and after they wonder a bit, I would continue to write, as they would see, if they read on, and would tell them that the pictures have made a tramp out of me. Now when they read that, I suppose they will 'take it big,' but I will continue and tell them the tramp that I just mentioned is the character I play in the series of pictures I am at present featured in at Universal City."

Mr. Edwards has only made forty pictures in a little less than a year, and it is with his spare time in mind that he is trying to figure out something to amuse himself in between pictures. Before working in the "Nervy Ned" series he worked in dramatic productions mainly for Famous Players company with a studio in Hollywood, which no doubt, many people are familiar with. Before the above studio discovered his unusual ability and begged him to play several wonderful parts in several wonderful pictures he used to work on the stage in the acting end.

"My acting on the stage was A-1 and to prove it I still have the letter of recommendation the manager of the show gave me when he fired me," Edwards says.

"But to go back to 'What the pictures did to me,' of course I don't know how the folks will like the idea of spending two cents to send in 'stuff' for this column, but I think it is a good idea, even if it is original."

The screen beauties may not measure up to Venus de Milo, but they wouldn't have shown so much FORM either if the Ohio Board of Censors had been there.

"I can't see through it," says Paul Powell. "See through what," we asked. The answer of course was: "The Fog."

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

To Film "Darker China"

Reports from Henry MacRae's expedition into China and the Orient carry the information that he and his party, prior to their departure from the port of Vancouver, were lavishly entertained as guests of officials and business and professional leaders of the Canadian city who evinced profound interest in the nature of their undertaking, wherein they will seek to bring to the American screen the heretofore unrevealed habits, customs and traditions of the people of the Far East.

Elaine Quits Selznick

Elaine Hammerstein has severed connections with the Selznick organization, with which she has been affiliated practically all of the time since her advent into motion pictures. Miss Hammerstein refused to divulge the reasons for her action, stating the discontinuance of her contract was by "mutual consent." Following the announcement of the breaking of her contract, a statement was issued to the effect that the former Selznick star would, immediately start work on a picture at the Goldwyn studios. Her services with Goldwyn is contracted for one picture only. Her contract with Selznick still had a considerable length of time to run.

"Kleig Eye" War is On

Producers have combined to wage battle against "Kleig Eye." An exhaustive study will be made to endeavor to combat the glaring lights which so often inflame the optics of players and as a result delay production because of the victim being unable to work when stricken. The initiative in the matter was taken by Rupert Hughes after twenty-five members of his cast were made incapable because of exposure to the powerful lights in one evening.

New Mecca For "Extras"

Announcement is made that The Extra Motion Pictures Player's Association, which has just been incorporated under the laws of California as a protective and benevolent association, will be prepared within a few days to begin supplying talent to the studios. Headquarters for the new organization are located at 921 West Sixth Street, where a five-year lease has been obtained on the entire second floor of the building. No commissions will be charged members for engagements secured for them by the casting department of the Association, it is stated.

Dog Stars at Party

Lillian Leighton gave an interesting dinner party at her home on Edgecliff Drive, last week, Marjorie Warfield and Joseph B. Walker being among the guests. "Mr. Leighton" furnished the principal entertainment, singing several original solos and performing a number of parlor tricks, after which, considering he had done his share, he proceeded to go to sleep in a corner by the fire-place. In order to correct any wrong impressions, we will explain that "Mr. Leighton" is a small Spitz dog and a very privileged member of the family.

Here's a Busy Film Family

Four-year-old Eunice Fay McKenzie is playing the child part in Lloyd Hughes' first starring vehicle, "Atonement." Her sister, Ida May, is playing the blind girl in Edgar Lewis' latest production for Universal. Ida May's twin, Ella, is co-starring with Buddy Messinger in Century comedies. Bob and Eva McKenzie, also well-known photoplayers, are the parents of this talented family.

Goldwyn Signs Bosworth

Hobart Bosworth has signed a five-year contract with Goldwyn and will be featured in several productions now being prepared. The terms of the contract will enable the veteran star to produce one independent picture a year on condition that Goldwyn has an option on its release. Mr. Bosworth's first independent production will be the picture version of Norman Springer's novel, "The Blood Ship."

Gives Safety Orders

The Electrical Illuminating Engineers Society held a meeting Thursday night at the Hal Roach studios when final instructions were given to the safety commission which will go to San Francisco to interview the State Safety Commissioner.

Honesty Still in Vogue

Who said "The whole world is crooked?" Whoever it was, he would have a hard time convincing Monty Banks. Last Friday night following the fights, he discovered he had lost his wallet containing $300 in currency. Saturday morning he received a telephone call from Roy Marshall, manager of the Hollywood stadium, to the effect that his pocketbook with contents intact, had been found by another spectator and turned in to the office.

Publisher is Feted

Martin J. Quigley, publisher of the Exhibitors Herald, one of the two leading motion picture trade papers, devoted to the interests of the producers, distributors and exhibitors, is being made the guest of honor at a number of luncheons and banquets given here by notables of the west coast film colony. Mr. Quigley is regarded as one of the cinema authorities of this country, and is here on his annual tour of inspection of the Hollywood, Culver City, and East Los Angeles studios.

Egyptian Costumes Popular

Lady Page Tilton, wardrobe mistress at Grauman's Hollywood, has been asked by an eastern fashion magazine to permit the reproduction therein of the new Egyptian costumes she recently designed and executed for the usherettes at the Grauman playhouse. Each costume is different, and is symbolic of a certain event in Egyptian history or fable.

May Film Next One East

Allan Holubar and Dorothy Phillips may go to New York to make their next picture as the result of wires received this week from Nathan Burkhman, Holubar's attorney and James Grainger, his New York representative. A syndicate of Manhattan financiers want Holubar to direct and Miss Phillips to star in a story of Gotham society life, showing the defiance of law and order which has resulted among the best citizens from rebellion at the passage of the eighteenth amendment.

Olive Branch Offered Rudy

The Valentino-Lasky spat may be settled, according to the latest developments in this controversy. Famous Players, his former employers, have assured him every concession possible, even to the extent of re-adjusting his salary. However, Rodolph at the present time flatly refuses to listen to their offers and charges their peace offer is nothing but a plan to further ruin his popularity and career. In spite of his present attitude to the Lasky organization, it is said the contract offered him is so attractive it is very possible he may rejoin his former employers.

An Error Corrected

Last week Camera! credited the production of "A Temporary Marriage" as a Myrtle Steadman picture. This is incorrect. Miss Steadman has a supporting role in the all-star cast which includes Mildred Davis, Kenneth Harlan, Tully Marshall and Stuart Holmes.

Looking For an "Unknown"

James Cruze is endeavoring to locate an inexperienced and totally unknown girl to be starred in the Paramount production of "Hollywood" and who will be supported by the most prominent cast ever before assembled in any one production. Every star and director in the Lasky organization will be seen in this picture, which will deal with the events of a middle-western girl who migrates to Hollywood in hopes of finding a place in stardom. Mr. Cruze started his search in department stores and hotels to find the lucky maid.

Ruth in Vaudeville

Ruth Stonehouse is to make a tour of vaudeville in a sketch, "Be Yourself," written by Edward J. Montagne, Selznick scenario editor. This was the sketch which scored such a success at the recent frolic at the Screen Writers Guild under the original title "In the Roaring Forties." Miss Stonehouse is now in San Francisco working in a film production, and upon her return will go into rehearsal for the sketch. She is well acquainted with the part, having played it at the Guild performance.

New Firm Starts Next Week

The H. & B. Film company, an organization of recent formation, has completed arrangements to produce eight five-reel out-of-door type pictures. Cliff Smith will play the leading male role and co-direct. Helen Gibson is signed to play opposite Smith. The company has taken offices in the Horsley studio's new building on Beachwood Drive. Eugene A. Vogt is writing the stories and continuity for the series. The company will be under the production management of K. J. Bishop, who plans to start shooting on the first picture next week.

Swedish Help Wanted

Harry Beaumont, directing "Main Street" at the Warner Brothers coast studios, has struck a snag and wants some help from the screen fans. For two weeks he has been looking for the Swedish equivalent of "Swedish Carnival," to be used in one of the titles. He suggested "yumpscump," but Julien Josephson, the scenarist, said it sounded like a new ground-hog. If you can supply the answer, send it to Beaumont in care of the Warner studios.

CHILD PRODIGY TO TALK

OVER TIMES RADIO SOON

Little Mickey McBan, child actor, who has just finished with Gloria Swanson in "The Prodigal Daughter," is expected to give a series of talks over the Times radio, and will begin with Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Lamplighter." Although only three years old, Mickey has done exceptional work along several lines, having had interesting parts in thirty-five film productions, and having won five medals for amateur swimming.

San Francisco people are much interested in the first showing here this week of the Metro picture, "All the Brothers Were Valiant," as most of the picture was made here a couple of months ago. And the actual killing of the whales was done from the whaling station at Half Moon Bay.

Mark Strong, well-known director, is in San Francisco for a short vacation and to visit his mother. While here he is directing the screen tests being made at the Loew-Warfield Theatre in connection with the Loew-Warfield-Bulletin-Graf screen type contest.

A. H. Sebastian, of the Belasco Productions, returned to New York yesterday to help in the distribution of "Eyes of Love." As soon as some of the details of distribution are out of the way, he and Edward Belasco will decide on which of several stories under consideration they will use for their next picture.

The picture-making expedition to South America sent by the Northern California Photo Plays, has made three comedies on the boat going South. Charlot Molina, matorador, even staged a bull fight. The trained bull, belonging to the outfit, travels in its own special crate on deck. The party is reported as far as Guayaquil in Ecuador, South America.

Stuart Paton is supervising the editing of "Bavu," the special filming of Earl Carroll's melodrama of Bolshevik Russia, and studying the stories from which his next venture will be chosen.

Harry A. Pollard, who has just made an unusual all-star five-reel drama, "His Good Name," will shortly be assigned to a new effort, being prepared in continuity form now.

Robert F. Hill is directing "The Phantom Fortune, a serial of success and the money game in which William Desmond is being starred with the support of Esther Ralston and Lewis Sargent, while Edward Laemmle is deep in history in "The Oregon Trail," in which Art Acord is supported by Louise Lorraine, Duke Lee and others in a film version of a romantic chapter of American history.

Forty new stories are undergoing preparation in the Universal City scenario department of which Raymond L. Schrock is the editor and Paul Bern associate editor.

Samuel Van Ronkle of New York City will enter the film producing field at Universal City with a series of comedies depicting the romantic haps and mishaps of the comic strip family in which Andy Gump, chinless wonder, is the paternal figure. Taking the adventures that Sid Smith has drawn with graphic humor for a big newspaper syndicate, Van Ronkle will engage human counterparts for the figures of the Gump family, a director and a writer, and the transcribing of the Gump romance to the screen will begin. Two two-reel comedies a month will be the schedule. The funfilms will be produced by Van Ronkle for Universal release.

Leon Bary has completed his engagement as the villain in the latest Dustin Farnum picture under the direction of Colin Campbell.

the pulse of the theater-going public can be reached for hints as to the most likely prospects now at large.

To the picture experts who think they have viewed their share of film productions, attention is respectfully directed to W. T. Greig, director general of the Preferred Picture Theatre De Luxe.

Mr. Greig, who sits all day running Preferred Pictures which are complete, partially complete and still in the making, probably has the most exclusive clientele of any picture house in the world. His house seats only seven persons. His audiences include only producers, players and directors. Although he shows only first-run pictures, he has no box office and no waiting line.

He has operated this and similar studio projection rooms for ten years, which means that he has viewed enough film to reach to New York and back several hundred times, leaving a neat ribbon of celluloid to run around the neck of the Statue of Liberty down the bay.

No better evidence of the youth of the screen art could be found than that offered by Irving Thalberg's recent departure from Universal City to become an official of the Louis B. Mayer company.

For Thalberg, at the age of twenty-three, is the only film executive who cannot recall when there were no movies! Twenty-two years ago when Irving probably was making dents in the family teething ring, the first movies were being shown in converted stores as one of the new marvels of photography.

Every other picture producer, as far as is known, can follow the history of the screen without resorting to historical records. They have read of each step forward, or aided in bringing about the march of progress in person.

Monte Blue, who is credited with having a Cherokee Indian chief as a great-grandfather, and who is known as Blue Mountain of the Cherokees, among the red-skins, is turning his interest in his ancestors to practical account.

He has started the circulation of a nationwide petition for the enfranchisement of the Indians. Thus far he is said to have interested many of the picture colony and expects to carry the campaign to every state in the Union.

Monte is quoted as saying that his "votes-for-Indians" campaign is of greater importance to him than his screen career.

was simply selected as the best one to play that particular role.

"Many people are inclined to be skeptical about premonitions, and, I don't pretend to know the occult science involved, but I have often had previous assurance of forthcoming events and never have I noted a failure in the fulfillment," Miss Mattox says. "I have been convinced in my own mind for many months that some day I would play in 'Three Wise Fools,' and, now I am about to do that very thing."

Although she denies having any knowledge whatsoever of hypnotism, Miss Mattox is known generally in the film industry as "the woman with hypnotic eyes" and when she is drawing a characterization before the cameras, those playing in the scene with her admit feeling "strange influences." Miss Mattox admits she forgets all about her own individual self while living the life of a character of fiction.

WHAT TO WRITE ABOUT

By Fanchon Royer

The perpetrators of current American literature who have known their New York, Chicago, and San Francisco ages of popular locale and served them well, do so no longer! After the years of the old regime which credited those cities and those cities only with dramatic possibilities, they have turned to Hollywood for their stories as inevitably as all modern art has turned to Hollywood during the brief seasons which have brought it into the public eye as the most fascinating of communities, the glittering home of a nation's most glittering profession.

Thus it has come about that our best magazines all carry intriguing film colony yarns spun by the fiction favorites of the day besides the regular run of serious articles upon the various aspects of Hollywood life and work. These stories and articles are no longer the unusual thing, but the regular, which has been brought into existence by the increasing demand of the public for information concerning this garden spot of America, a rival of any old world shrine at which romance has ever worshipped.

And since it is true that the drama follows literature closely at all times, it is not surprising to hear that many of these famous Hollywood tales are being prepared for legitimate and film production while several are even now delighting the public. Take for instance "Merton of the Movies," Wilson's Saturday Evening Post serial of the film "extra." We have heard much testimony as to its popularity with the New York theatre-goers for whom it has been lately produced. There have been equally big screen successes and there will be more. "Souls for Sale," a Rupert Hughes novel of the picture studios, is in the process of filming, while it has just been learned for certain that Fred Caldwell who wrote and produced the popular "Night Life in Hollywood," will give over the next few months to the screening of a series of comedy dramas laid in the same locale. The first two of the series "Knighthood in Hollywood" and "The Deacon of Hollywood," will soon be ready for general showing.

It would look as though the hopeful scenarists could find much to occupy them along this line of thought. If they wish to keep abreast of the times, Hollywood is the setting. Perhaps for some of the more inexperienced it will prove indeed the magic word.

The contrast between the spring-like weather of Los Angeles and the wintry blasts of Truckee proved to be too much for little four-year-old Muriel MacCormac when she went to the latter place with the Lloyd Hughes company now filming "Atonement," and she was stricken so ill with near-pneumonia that her mother had to withdraw her from the cast and take her back to the warmth of Southern California to save her life. For several days the baby screen artist hovered between life and death, but early this week, she took a turn for the better and is now on the road to recovery. Eunice Fay McKenzie, another four-year-old child, was rushed from Hollywood to Truckee to take Baby MacCormac's place.

Craig Ward, hero of Reginald Barker's "Hearts Aflame," left the stage to play this one part with the idea of returning to his first love immediately, but now he has discovered working before the motion picture cameras so interesting that he has decided to remain on the screen for a while. If a single "flyer" into the movies has a similar effect on all other stage artists, needless to add, the stage will be deserted soon.

Gaston Glass has resumed his studio activities under the banner of B. P. Schulberg in a picture called "Mothers-in-Law," which Louis Gasnier is directing, and, already the young, romantic actor says he, as a single fellow, has learned things it takes some married men years to learn about the maternal parent of the other side of the house. "Gee, what a wonderful thing it would be if everybody got a chance to play in a picture like this before they took the matrimonial leap," he says.

Max Linder is recovering from severe injuries recently sustained in a hazardous fall down the Swiss Alps and he expects to be able to leave his Paris home for Hollywood in about thirty days.

ROMANTIC OLD CALIFORNIA will live again at the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, to be given in Los Angeles next summer by the motion picture industry in celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. A group of buildings, a theatre, a cafe—a miniature community of Spanish Colonial design will be erected as a part of the huge architectural program now being worked out. This Revue and Exposition will be the greatest thing the industry has ever attempted, the greatest thing Southern California has ever known.

Little Notions Sometimes Are Stored with Big Racket

Fox has released a comedy called "The Wise Cracker." Fire or soda?

Allan Dwan's "Glimpses of the Moon" is finished. Will he never look at it again?

If signs mean anything, they don't mean to assign them to the trash-heap. It still pays to advertise.

Everything is looking up excepting the stars (as a single-handed system), and they are twinkling down to the level of all-star casts.

William Fox announces he has selected a strong cast for "Does It Pay?" Obviously, the object of the strong cast is to make it pay.

The film, "Kissed," starring Marie Prevost, caught on fire at the theatre in What Cheer, Iowa, recently. Marie's burning kisses. Oh, What Cheer!

Now that Camera! has moved into its new home in the Fuller Building, it hopes to build up fuller and fuller if only to live up to its address.

If Coue's philosophy works out successfully, that picture he has just made in New York should "every day, in every way, get better and better," until finally it gets to be a knockout.

H. G. Wells sprung a funny when he selected "The Passionate Friends" as the title of that much-read book of his. Wherein passion and friendship can be hooked up so conveniently is the wherefore which passeth understanding.

An "extra" by the name of Shipp resented the remarks of a whole crowd of real husky cowboys the other day, and in his attempt to whip them all, he got badly beaten up. Thus, in sailing in a Shipp got wrecked.

As Helene Chadwick moves out of the Goldwyn stellar constellation, Blanche Sweet, Corinne Griffith and Marie Prevost move in. Thus you have the "ins and the outs" of an out-and-out moving business always within the inside of the fields of re-enforcements.

Admitting that li'l ole Noo Yawk is O. K., and that the whole world is great, the fact remains: Southern California is the only place on this mundane sphere to make motion pictures, and the sooner the entire producing branch of the industry gets located here the better it will be for the industry.

Three famous women stars of the screen have just survived operations for appendicitis almost simultaneously. Bebe Daniels and Margaret Courtot are convalescing in the east, while Viola Dana is recovering in Los Angeles. Let us pray that this erstwhile fashion in maladies is not attempting a general come-back.

All the human dumb-bells are not out of work. You will find some of the dumbest of them all in some of the highest positions. Why? Most any ignoramus with an ability for button-hole campaigning can rise high in politics. "Brass" often proves more effective than the mettle of true ability. But, what's the difference? No good man can be held down forever.

Now that Roscoe Arbuckle knows he is not going to act on the screen again, he is busily engaged trying to ascertain whether or not he is going to direct for said screen. If the "on" is off, and the "for" is not far from it, there is yet an avenue of escape—he might turn a camera crank in spite of all the other cranks. At that, it cannot be said that Fatty is receiving any of the mercy for which modern civilization is supposed to be famous.

David W. Griffith, seemingly, is determined to change the habit of idolizing juvenile leading men in favor of ingenues. He has three of these vivacious little ladies in the cast of "The White Rose," which he is making in Florida now. This trio is Mae Marsh, Carol Dempster and Jane Thomas. In the meantime, several West Coast producers are wild about filling their casts with character men. If this keeps up, don't be surprised if the young leading men hold an indignation meeting.

Someone has sent out anonymous letters attacking the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition. Well, so long as it remains anonymous the motion picture industry hasn't any cause for worry, because an anonymous dissenter is too much like elusive thin air to be either impressive or effective. The anonymous one in this case might be a reformer for all we know, although the letters are signed "A Producer." This is just as likely to mean a producer of discord as of motion pictures. Meanwhile, it is to be hoped everyone desirous of seeing the film world accomplish a big, notable achievement will co-operate with augmented zeal in the herculean tasks of making the Exposition a success worthy of the industry sponsoring it.

Motion Pictures Will Produce Art Only by Becoming Creative

Art is essentially creative.

Masterpieces of painting, sculpture, music, and drama have all been original in their interpretations of life.

And they have been the work of creators who were thoroughly conversant with the potentialities and limitations of their chosen medium of expression.

Think of the loss to the world had Michelangelo, Rubens, de Vinci or other Masters wasted their gifted brushes and creative genius by revising on canvas the work of great sculptors!

Shakespeare's immortal plays would never have been written had he bent his talent to adapting great fiction to the service of the stage.

Yet What of the Photoplay?

Are there to be masterpieces of photodrama? Is this universal medium for the interpretation of life to rise to the heights attained by the Arts?

It has such possibilities, although its progress toward this highest goal seems slow at times.

May not the reason be that eighty per cent of all the motion pictures being produced today are revised short stories, novels or stage plays?

This material often makes good pictures to be sure. The work of adaptation has frequently been ably done.

But never without original stories, produced by trained creators of photodrama, will this medium win to the highest artistic standards.

There is a Source of Original Stories

During the past few years a source of original screen stories has been gradually developing under the guidance of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

This organization has not only discovered and developed photoplay writing talent, but has also become the largest single clearing house for original scenarios.

We have available every type of story for every kind of picture which is worthy of your consideration.

They are original stories written with a fresh interest furnished by new viewpoints which their authors bring to the work.

They are finer stories written solely for the screen—not material written for other mediums of expression.

They offer to producers, directors and stars new opportunities to produce pictures which have a strong, popular appeal in addition to unusual artistic worth.

Let Us Discuss This Service With You

Many of the largest producers are winning repeated successes with pictures produced from original stories provided by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

Our representatives will gladly tell you of the Palmer successes and discuss with you the merits of original stories which are now available.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIFORNIA

EXCELLENCE UNEXCELLED!

California, as a Place to Make Motion Pictures, Stands Alone, Says Standing

Wyndham Standing, famous actor of stage and screen, has just arrived in Los Angeles from a visit of two years and four months in Europe. During this sojourn, Standing made three trips through Europe. The countries he visited include England, France, Belgium, Italy, Holland and Ireland.

Standing was starred in a number of pictures produced by the Hollandia Film Company of Holland. One of his most successful productions was "Hypocrites," adapted from the stage play which was produced from the story by Sir Henry Arthur Jones at the Hudson Theatre in New York. Other productions made in Holland include, "The Lion's Mouse" and "This Freedom."

Mr. Standing, on his return to New York made two productions in which he was starred by the Syracuse Motion Picture Company. These productions were "The Isle of Doubt" and "The Inner Man."

Mr. Standing says, "I am more than ever convinced that Southern California in general, and Los Angeles and Hollywood in particular are the only places in the world to make successful motion pictures. The difficulties of picture-making that I found in Europe were almost insurmountable. The climate in England is such that only six months of the year is at all suitable for the shooting of exteriors.

"I find that in Italy motion pictures have attained a much higher degree of perfection in the making than in any other country in Europe. The climate of southern Italy might be compared with that of Southern California, as the sunshine prevails during the greater part of the year."

Mr. Standing concludes by saying, "Motion picture actors in England are nearly all recruited from the stage and consequently are filled with the tradition of the stage. This makes the transposition of their talent to the silent drama a feat of no small importance.

"Two of my European directors, Oscar Apfel and Charles Giblyn, said they would gladly give any of their worldly possessions to get back to Southern California and its wonderful climate."

Mr. Standing's latest local release was "Smilin' Through," in which he played the leading masculine role opposite Norma Talmadge. This production was named as one of the finest productions in the best ten of last year.

On Standing's arrival in Los Angeles Wednesday, he was immediately signed by the Robertson-Cole forces in Hollywood to play the leading masculine role in "Daytime Wives," which is to be produced under the direction of Emil Chautard, and will include an all-star cast. Incidentally, Mr. Standing worked with Chautard about five years ago in New York when Standing was playing opposite Pauline Frederick.

IMPORTING BRAINS

By DONALD H. CLARK

There isn't any tariff on brains. Chances are that if there were any way of putting one on, this country wouldn't do it. Anyhow, consider recent developments in the motion picture business, brought to mind by the announcement recently that Victor Seastrom, the outstanding figure of the Scandinavian film world, had signed a contract with Goldwyn to make his artistic pictures in America.

Ernest Lubitsch is in California now preparing to make his exclusive brand of silent drama for Mary Pickford. Pola Negri, the Polish actress, whose latest appearance on the silver-sheet in this country, is in "Mad Love," also is in California going through the proper motions before the camera.

The motion picture producers—Goldwyn with Seastrom, Famous Players with Pola Negri, Charles de Rochefort and Mary Pickford with Ernest Lubitsch and Svend Gade; D. W. Griffith with Ivor Novello—appear to have solved the tariff riddle, so far as their particular business enterprise is concerned. There may be a tax on foreign-made pictures, but there's none on foreign-born players and directors. So they're importing the taxless articles.

It appears that the American motion picture producers are not only set upon continuing to produce the most popular films in the world, but also that they are not satisfied until they are assured no other country surpasses them.

The cry for some time has been against the "commercial picture." Critics have pointed out that the screen productions made abroad, particularly by Seastrom in Sweden and Lubitsch in Germany, have been far ahead of those made in this country in their ideals and aspirations. In his room in the Hotel Plaza in New York, Seastrom, a great, energetic offspring of the sea-harriers of old, with the frame of a Viking, the face of a scholar, and the driving force of an empire builder, said:

"When I made this trip to your country I did not think I would stay, I had heard about 'commercial' motion pictures. I came because Mr. Godsol, president of the Goldwyn company, who had seen one of my pictures, had approached me through the cables and his personal representative. I thought I would return to Sweden soon. My wife, Edith Erastoff, who is playing the leading feminine role in 'Loyalties' in Stockholm, thought, as I did, that I would only be absent for a few weeks. But now it is different. She is coming to join me as soon as her engagement ends in the spring—with our two children. I was surprised by the broadness of vision with which I was received. I have only to turn out the best pictures of which I am capable.

"I love the United States. Coming, as I did, from a little country to this big one I was rather fearful. But I have found that my fears were groundless."

Meanwhile, the great actor-director is going to theatres studying our stage folk, just as he is studying our literature for material for his first American-made picture.

BULL MONTANA LAMENTS!

From Truckee, where the snow is fifteen feet deep and the thermometer persists in staying well below the zero mark, comes the following brief, but nevertheless sincere epistle from Bull Montana:

"Am here and am glad to come back.

My cauliflower ears is froze.

Hunt Stromberg promises some highly original comedy sequences in "An Eskimo Spy," which is the working title of the subject to cause Bull so much worry.

CAMERA! MOVES INTO NEW OFFICES

The business and editorial offices of Camera! have been moved to the second floor of the W. P. Fuller Building, 6318 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. The new telephone number is 439-869. This is the first time the headquarters of Camera! have been moved since the magazine's founding in 1918, the offices having always been up to this time at 4513 Sunset Boulevard. However, the demand for more spacious and more up-to-date quarters, necessitated by the increase in business, made the move imperative.

WHEN THE CASTING DIRECTOR ISN'T

Translated from the Chinese

By AL MARTIN

The hotel that I live in is mainly inhabited by motion picture folks. Not the stars, of course, but the ones that think they should be. The other evening the boys suggested a game of penny-ante poker. Twenty minutes later someone suggested the penny be discontinued, and another twenty minutes later someone else suggested raising the ante. After a while, which was later than the two others I referred to in the proceeding sentence, I ran out of money. Naturally it being a gentlemen's game no one would accept my I. O. U., so I was through.

As I was going to bed talking to myself, I wondered where I was going to promote 15c for breakfast, and, as I wondered, the door was opened by an ex-friend of mine who stood in the doorway. This fellow used to be a very good friend of mine until he borrowed some money from me, therefore from that time on I always referred to him as an Ex.

Naturally I asked him to come in, which he did, and without a moment's hesitation or giving me a chance to hold my breath he said, "Here's the five I owe you."

Thinking the world was coming to an end, and in my delirium, which set in quickly, I told him to get me some poison. I am not particularly fond of poison, in fact I never drank any up to date, but my delirium wanted it, and so to humor me, he made his exit as I had asked him to do.

He returned quite soon with a bottle in one of his hands, but I could tell from the expression on his face that he didn't get what I wanted. Misfortune is liable to come to anybody, so I always said that if I ever get married I would see to it that my wife never got any deliriums, for it's hard to fool people with these things, and it's also hard for me to tell the truth sometimes.

Well, anyhow, he was still standing there with the bottle in his hand, and after I asked him, he told me that he couldn't get any recognized poison, but managed to get some bootleg whiskey which was just as good. Not knowing the difference I drank from the bottle which he gave me, and everything went blank, until—

The next thing I remember I was on a lonely road and a man drove up to me in an automobile, and asked me if I wanted a lift. I answered his question by getting in the car, and he at once started to apologize for the gloomy weather we were having, saying that this was the first time in 27 years the weather was as is, so I realized that I was still in Southern California.

At a small town we stopped for gasoline, and as the car was getting a drink, a hobo came up to me and asked for money. When anyone asks for money I get very hard of hearing, so he went to my friend and asked him. My friend in answer looked him up and down, just as though he was going to buy the suit of clothes the hobo had on, and finally said: "Nothing doing today, have you got a dress suit?"

This meant nothing to the hobo, but to me it did, for I not only recognized his speech as being that of a casting director, but I recognized him as being Steve Gentle, the casting director I had been trying to see for so long.

As we were on our way once again I was thrilled to think of being in the same car with a man capable of holding such a responsible position. Guessing his extreme intelligence I felt at liberty to discuss affairs of international importance and other things I knew nothing about.

Now that I had met him socially he surely ought to give me work in his company. How I wished that I were of the fair sex, so that I might vamp him, and once I could get him in my power, I would see that he would give me work. It is unusual for girls seeking parts or semi-parts to make over the casting king, so I thought that if I were a girl (you realize that I am stretching my imagination at this point) I would smile sweetly at him and that would start things going.

Then he would ask me to dinner, and I would tell him how badly I wanted to work in moving pictures, how far from home, and how lonesome I was. Even a casting director would feel sorry for me after I had "done my stuff" and then after I had had my opportunity to show how good I was in front of the camera, making a reputation as a star, I would refuse the casting director's offer of marriage.

Not being of the fair sex I would have to work my plans from a different angle, but I figured I would be nice to him, and smile on him as if I were what I am not. He then told a joke which was a fairly good one, in fact I have always liked it. I thought this was a good place to show him how clever I thought he was, as it always makes a hit with brilliant men to know they are appreciated.

He went on with his story, and when he came to the place to laugh, I laughed my sweetest. I expected him to admire my smile, possibly compare it with Ruddy Valentino's, but instead of that, he discovered many of my teeth were missing. I then told him I was an actor and of my ambitions both of which surprised him.

When we neared Hollywood he suggested that I see him in the morning, and stopping the car to let me off, I told him that if I could arrange my business satisfactorily I would try to get out to the studio.

Of course, I had no business to take care of, but it is best to make these casting directors think you are busy.

However, I am not so sure Mr. Gentle believed this "gag," but it is the customary line to hand out, and I must be customary.

When I returned to my hotel, the boys all listened to the story of my meeting with his "nibs" and even when they laughed I knew they were jealous, especially when I told them how he begged me to accept the lead in a new picture. I then exchanged my hat with a fellow for a larger one, and told the boys what I would do for them when I became famous.

The morning came at last and it found me at the studio waiting for the telephone girl to come in, so she could announce me to the chief. She came at last, I recognizing her by the way she chewed her gum. After she dismissed her chauffeur, and put on her make-up, she got connected with her switchboard and started operations. I planned right then that she should be fired as soon as I could arrange it, and I laughed to myself, when I thought of the expression on her face when I could tell her.

As I was laughing to myself, she jumped at me with the following remarks, "No! you can't see him." "He will not see anyone." "The cast is all filled," and finally, "Who did you want to see?"

As she stopped for air I explained by signs and speech that Mr. Steve Gentle asked me to please see him, and would she kindly tell him that I was here. She excused herself and left me alone, but I wasn't alone long, 'cause she came right back and told me they weren't going to do the ball-room scene until the next day, and if I wished I could come back in the morning.

I had a lot of explaining to do that evening to the boys as to why I didn't start working, and not only that evening, but every evening for the next two weeks, as the telephone girl gave me the same story each day.

Finally, one day, I was walking in the studio and was just going up to the telephone girl, when Mr. Gentle himself came out of his office and rushed over to me, grabbed me by the hand, telling me how glad he was to see me. As he was doing all the talking, it gave me the opportunity to look over at the phone girl to see if she saw what a wonderful reception I was receiving.

I then told him how many times I had been to see him, and that the girl always mentioned something about a ball-room scene. He explained that he did have something for me in that set, although it was only a small part, but on second thought he figured I was better fitted for star parts. He kept on talking about what a wonderful future I had in motion pictures, what a good type I was to play opposite Mary Pickford, and many other nice things.

As he talked I listened naturally, and although he told me many things I already knew, I hoped he wouldn't stop. I had visions of a nice fat contract, plenty of fan mail, but mainly my return to the hotel where I could give the boys good advice, so that they could become successful.

As I was visioning, a man came out of Making a second ascent of the ladder of film success seems to be a far more difficult task than the initial effort. Faithless theater audiences exhibit little readiness to return to old favorites.

Which makes the accomplishment of Priscilla Bonner, who has won an important place in the big cast for "April Showers," with such luminaries as Colleen Moore, Kenneth Harlan and a long list of lesser notables, a remarkable one indeed.

Slightly more than fifteen months ago Miss Bonner, who had been featured in several special productions, was called from the screen by marriage and prevented from returning to her first love by illness. When she finally answered the call of the camera again she found that new players, new directors and changed methods of casting, had altered the entire outlook.

Just when the former leading lady was prepared to take the first opening as an extra, she was given a small role in "Shadows." In this small glimpse of the blonde player, however, reviewers and theater-goers recognized the qualities that once had made Miss Bonner a favorite. Because of her enthusiastic reception she was given other roles, increasing in importance until, when the "all-Irish-all-star" cast for "April Showers" was being formed, it was agreed to include her among the brilliant list of principals.

Parting with one's appendix seems to be the least popular of the growing modes in the screen colony. When it was announced that Viola Dana and Bebe Daniels had submitted to the painful separation from this superfluous organ on the same day recently, it became known that they had been martyrs to the requirements of their profession for many weeks. Each, knowing that she would be compelled to undergo a serious operation soon, delayed the ordeal solely to continue work before the camera.

Theater-goers nowadays take it for granted that considerable research work precedes the making of every big picture. It is unlikely, however, that many patrons of the film have any conception of the magnitude of this preliminary work. Months have been consumed, for instance, by the experts who will contribute stray bits of knowledge to be used in the screen production of "Ben Hur." A board of military experts was used during the entire period of photographing "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

But it is probable that the most unusual research work ever carried on was instigated by Tom Forman to be used in just one phase of his latest picture, "The Girl Who Came Back." The story has to do with the colorful adventure of a girl who through a strange combination of circumstances becomes a member of that mysterious element in the population of every great city—the horde of "missing girls."

Although this particular episode comprises but a small part of the story, the director decided that it was too important to be slurred over. So he engaged a sociological student in New York to obtain statistics from the city's Bureau of Missing Persons and intimate facts about the causes of such disappearances, the ages of the girls involved and the towns from which they come. It is probable that the complete report of the investigator and his assistants is as exhaustive as many of those upon which municipal bodies base their entire program of activities.

And all of it to be used in scenes that "Mighty Lak a Rose" comes as a boon to the cause of ingratiating the screen with those who demand better pictures. This is a better one. In fact, it deserves credit as a veritable triumph. And, it achieves its greatest heights through its simplicity—its total lacking of complications such as many directors interpolate with the fallacious idea of startling someone and creating the atmosphere of suspense. It has been proven already that suspense, for instance, is not nearly so much of a requisite to a picture success as they used to think. Considerably more important is the element of human touches. In this particular regard "Mighty Lak a Rose" excels. Its story gets right under your skin because it is so much like life as you understand it and is so devoid of the frills and useless trimmings some producers seem to dote on as the means for showing genius. Edwin Carewe directed this picture and thereby convinces the whole world that he is one of the "safe-and-sane directors" who is more concerned in making a good picture than he is in trying for a directorial ten-strike. Although the cast does not seem to strive for any unusual brilliance in performance, it is satisfactory and the characterizations ring true—quietly, unostentatiously. Dorothy MacKail, in the difficult role of blind Rose, does the best work while James Rennie and Anders Randolph contribute a full share towards making the picture a success. Most everybody will like "Mighty Lak a Rose" because it contains most everything everybody does like in their cinema fare and it is so mighty like a screen gem.

Maurice Tourné's "The Isle of Lost Ships" certainly did "knock 'em dead" at its preview here this week. Seldom has a picture overwhelmed members of the profession with such unstinted enthusiasm. As Charles Furthman, the diligent writer of "screen originals," expresses it: "With twists that change smiles to tears and tears into thrills our master director of the foot-hills again puts himself forward as one of the screen's foremost geniuses." Also, as this same discerning Mr. Furthman observes: "There is no getting away from the idea that the blood-and-thunder melodrama is the thing. It is the healthiest, most invigorating and fruitful sort of screen entertainment, and, it fills a longing in the great fan world for mental gymnastics, for heart-quakes and a conflict of emotions perfectly normal, being equally good for the soul and the body." We agree to all of the foregoing provided, of course, the melodrama is presented with the artistic finish which has been attained in this latest Tourné contribution to the silversheet. The preview audience sat almost breathless expecting for occasional hysterical gasps. No one seemed to be able to fathom what could happen next or to anticipate what might happen as the result of what had just been visualized. In sustaining suspense, it is perfect. The play is skillfully constructed; the director has opened his bag of tricks and pulled out a wealth of artistic science! The cast is adequate—Walter Long as the villain is extremely brilliant. In fact, his performance in this picture is one of the greatest histrionic achievements of the last many moons. Frank Campeau also deserves some special mention. Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills in the "leads" contribute precisely what they should contribute in the way of com-

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

They are all all-starring nowadays. 'Tis wonderful when you recall how only a couple years ago most all of them were half-starring.

The proposition of "having a release" is beginning to lose its magnetic charm. Slowly but surely they are learning a fundamental, to-wit: one must have a picture first. It sounds exceedingly revolutionary, reversing the whole course of procedure as it does, but experience has tended to prove something which should never have needed proving, namely: everybody wants a good picture and whether or not there is a prearranged release for it makes no difference whatsoever.

Now that Coue has transferred his "Day-by-Day" to the "Flicker-by-Flicker," as the Film Daily puts it already there has been started a rush among other producers for similar ideas. Just as there must always be a "goat" among us, there must always be many sheep eager to stampede together on the slightest provocation. And, Coue isn't provoking at all!

There is a most marked trend among San Francisco producers to transfer their activities to the Southern California field. This is thought to be the result of discovering the disadvantages and expensiveness of being away from the headquarters of the industry. Three Frisco outfits have come to Los Angeles in the last month to make pictures.

It seems inevitable that Los Angeles will eventually become to the screen what New York City is to the stage—the premier center for all the activities from beginning to end. There being no reason why this should not be, it just naturally bids fair to be.

An inning for a record-breaking supremacy of child stars seems at hand. Wesley Barry was the pioneer in the new movement. Jackie Coogan boosted it along prodigiously and Baby Peggy made a definite boom of it. Now Muriel Frances Dana is in close proximity to the dotted line which will result in her "coming out" as a star in her own right and great things are being predicted for another Muriel—Muriel McCormac. Among others of promise are "Peaches" Jackson, Mickey McBan and Richard Headrick. Among the older children in the ascendancy is Virginia Lee Corbin, now about to start in a feature production of which she will be the star. Verily, it does look like the kid age.

ponent parts to an enthralling entirety. Raymond L. Schrock and William K. Howard were among the notables present who were unrestrained in their declaration of admiration and the phrase "a great audience picture" was what they both used to make known their approval. William McConnell admitted he had not been quite so thrilled by a film in a whole year. Thus, in taking into consideration the consensus of opinion among those who know motion pictures, it seems certain Mr. Tourné has given the First National something worth bragging about.

It is a foregone conclusion that those who see "Java Head" will associate it with the career of Leatrice Joy since her absolutely unique portrayal in this feature is a veritable personal triumph which is sure to endure in the memory of all for a mighty long time. Seldom has there been so perfect a characterization in pantomime—she simply is not Leatrice Joy at all in this picture; she is a native Chinese princess and never did anyone see a native Chinese princess in real life more like one than she is every second she is on the screen moving with sure artistic genius through the various intensely interesting scenes which go to make up this cinema classic. If Miss Joy had needed some great force to complete her arrival at the top of the ladder of thespian fame, this effort of hers would have accomplished it without the aid of any previous achievement. She seemed to have actually inspired the members of the supporting cast, because every one of them gave an unusual performance in close harmony with her interpretation. Especially admirable was Jacqueline Logan while Albert Roscoe proves himself deserving of classification in the category of "actors extraordinary." George Fawcett and Raymond Hatton are also "there" with their unflinching art to endow the whole structure with reinforced strength.

There was an unintentional error in this department last week. In praising Clifford S. Elfeldt's production of "Danger," in which J. B. Warner stars, we ventured the guess that the production did not cost much more than $20,000, but the printers, fallible as ever, made a typographical error which placed our figure at $10,000. We voluntarily correct the mistake because it is so easy to see in "Danger," the expenditure of more than $20,000, which, however, is a remarkably small outlay for a picture of such high entertaining value as this one is beyond a doubt.

Viola Dana is one of the screen's greatest delights. This fact is impressed in every picture in which she stars, and, is one of the few stars who never fails to maintain a certain high standard in her very characterization it makes no difference how many pictures she must make in a year's time. She has just scored again in a story of the South called "Crimoline and Romance" and as Miss Emmy Lou she offers a performance which "has everything." As a romancer she is irresistible in this feature; in the moments for lighter touches, she is the superb comedienne of exquisite finesse; in the dramatic situations she arises to all emergencies with a power which intrigues one. Even though the plot may get thin in spots, Miss Dana carries it along without a single halt in her own vivacious tempo. She is given excellent support, especially by John Bowers and Claude Gillingwater. The direction of Harry Beaumont is without flaws. "Crimoline and Romance," adorned by Miss Dana's artistry, is a winner without doubt since it is a picture which will meet the

PLANS ARE COMPLETED TO MAKE EXPOSITION "SET" THE BIGGEST EVER BUILT

As the work for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition progresses it is evident that the "set" for the ambitious picture in which thousands of visitors will be the actors is to be the biggest and most interesting ever constructed.

The buildings of the Spanish American type of architecture will cover nearly 1,000,000 square feet of ground in Exposition Park. The effect is to be colorful and alluring, for much variety is to be obtained through the suggestion of Aztec and other influences. For instance, the stage 200 feet square, which will be placed in the center of the great Coliseum, is to be in the form of an Aztec temple.

It will have three levels, the topmost being used for the bands and orchestras, which will provide music for the various programs. The second level is to be especially designed for the presentation of ballets and superb spectacles. Beneath this stage will be dressing rooms and from arched doorways the revolving floats will issue for display on the main stage. This lowest level will have an extension on one side where special performances may be given and here, on occasion, dancing will take place. As the decorations of this gigantic stage are to be most bizarre and effective it promises to be a delightful outdoor ballroom and one that affords plenty of room for dancers.

The Coliseum will be approached by a wide Esplanade along which the principal buildings will be placed. On this Esplanade there will be a circular plaza, the Court of the Americas. The plans show tall towers and a fountain of original design.

Bungalows are to house the exhibits and many a novel idea may be borrowed from these quaint buildings. They are to vary in design from picturesque adobe huts and reproductions of early California homes to haciendas and impressive Latin-American dwellings. Semi-tropical plants, luxuriant vines and brilliant flowers will add much to the lovely city which is to exist but for a month.

One of the latest of the plans for exhibition bungalows is a replica of Ramona's home in Old Town near San Diego.

VILLAIN HURT DANGEROUSLY IN "DANGER"

When Clifford S. Elfelt, a producer, tried to make his latest motion picture, "Danger," live up to its title by interpolating a scene in which a team of wild horses was supposed to run away with a covered wagon, the animals took their drama too seriously and in their stampede broke loose from the wagon, leaving it beyond control in a precipitous descent down the Upper Mountain Road of Griffith Park. Before anyone could possibly devise a way to meet the unexpected emergency, the vehicle had careened over an embankment, turning over and over in a fifty-foot drop, and, Bert Apling, who was playing the part of the villain and was inside the wagon, received such serious injuries that he was rushed to the Pacific Hospital, where he hovered between life and death for several hours. Dr. Shoemaker, the attending physician, found that one of the actor's ribs had been fractured and that besides an abrasion of the spine, he had suffered dangerous internal injuries. His condition is still regarded as grave, and, he has not been more than semi-conscious at any time since the accident.

Marilyn Mills, a stunt girl who was doubling for June LaVere, the leading lady of the company, was also in the wagon at the time, but she saved her own life by leaping just in time to avoid going over the embankment. The wagon was almost completely demolished and Apling's injuries had been the result of the crushing force of being underneath it when it landed finally.

Not more than an hour before this mishap, Apling had a close call when his horse, in attempting to run down a steep hill, lost its footing and rolled most of the way down, breaking its leg. In this case, the actor freed himself from his saddle in time to get away from the animal and avoid being rolled on.

FILM TROUPE HAS CLOSE CALL IN AVALANCHE

When Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton of Pittsburgh wrote "Out of the Night," the first Palmer Photoplay Corporation production, she created plenty of thrills, but said nothing about having a team of horses and a sleigh-load of motion picture artists ride down the side of a mountain on a great snowslide. Yet that is just what occurred while the company was on location near Truckee, California. Moreover, as the cameras were aboard the sleigh, the incident is a "behind the scenes matter." The cameramen were also aboard this drifting sleigh, and Director Joseph De Grasse, Assistant Director Frank Geraghty, and four of the most important members of the cast: Lloyd Hughes, the star, and Lucille Rickson, George Hackathorne and Myrtle Stedman.

The "slide" occurred when the company was enroute to a snow-covered meadow where the day's "shooting" was to be done. The passage of the sleigh on a road-way high up on the mountain side started the snow avalanche, which carried sleigh, passengers and struggling horses, all partly buried, but upright, over seven hundred feet to the bottom of the ravine. No one was hurt, but every passenger thought of the Grim Reaper during this breathless toboggan. Miss Rickson was first to speak.

"What fun!" she gasped. "But please, Mr. De Grasse, don't order a re-take!"

LEAVES FARM TO ACT, TO QUIT "ACT" TO FARM

Roy Laidlaw, retired Goldwyn character actor, has given up life on his Kansas farm to play one more role for the screen. He arrived in Hollywood this week after Director Wallace Worsley had combed the U. S. for him. The farmer-actor is playing the role of Maitre Charmolie in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Worsley is making at Universal City.

"I had positively given up pictures," Laidlaw said to Worsley. "The only connection I retained in the past two years of my retirement has been when I paid my little thirty cents to see our neighborhood show, amateurs, country store and everything!"

As soon as he finishes his role in the Victor Hugo story, Laidlaw will return to his farm with Mrs. Laidlaw and their baby daughter.

BERNHEIM, NOT BOUSHEY, IS "U" HEAD

Even up to the very end of this week, there was confusion in film circles as to whom had fallen the real plum of supremacy at Universal City. Now Carl Laemmle comes forward with the final word, which will clarify the atmosphere. Julius Bernheim is, according to this authoritative word, the commander-in-chief with the title of general manager or director general.

Homer A. Boushey, who many think has succeeded Irving G. Thalberg, is in reality only second in command, holding the post of production manager. He will handle stories and the details of production, but the chief executive and financial duties have been vested in Mr. Bernheim.

Under these arrangements, Mr. Laemmle expects Universal to continue to function as heretofore and he contemplates no sweeping changes. It is his plan to give Mr. Bernheim every opportunity possible to duplicate the excellent record made by Mr. Thalberg and he feels Mr. Boushey will prove a valuable right-hand associate to the director general.

"For the future, the policy of Universal will be bigger and better pictures," Mr. Laemmle announces in conclusion.

CONKLIN PLANS TO BE COMEDY RELIEF TO DRAMA

Chester Conklin is not so keen on taking falls in two-reel slapstick comedies as he used to be. Yep, he is another comedian with the drama bee buzzing in his bonnet, but he does not aspire to high honors as a dramatic star. His idea is to fill a niche as a first-class, dependable source of sure-fire comedy relief several notches above slapstick. It is reported he is "up" for such a comedy part in one of the biggest dramatic film productions of the year. Conklin holds to the interesting and logical idea that comedy relief can be interpolated into heavy dramas with better results when it is entrusted to a comedian who has had to make people roar with laughter in order to hold his job.

Arrangements are being prepared to commence work on the initial full-length feature starring Baby Peggy at the Universal Studios.

Boiled Down and Served Up!

Some of This Week's Film News You May Have Overlooked.

The Universal production of "Flesh," filmed under the direction of Rupert Julian, has been changed to "The Midnight Ghost."

Independent production will be at its peak in March if the requests for release contracts through the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., is any criterion.

Frank Borzage, who is to make a series of super-features for First National, is casting at the United Studios for his initial production, a screen adaptation of "Terwilliger," which is to be released under the title, "Sands of Time."

"Tattling Lips" is the title of the third special production which has been written for Madge Bellamy, who is being starred in a series of six big "specials" which are being made by Regal Pictures, Incorporated, on the lot of the Thomas H. Ince Studios.

George Terwilliger, who recently completed a screen version of Eugene Walters' play "The Flapper" for Pyramid Pictures, Inc., which the latter renamed "What Fools Men Are," has been re-engaged by Pyramid to direct the filming of "Wife in Name Only."

San Francisco, Feb. 15th.—Norma Talmadge, Lew Cody, Frank Lloyd, Harry Weil, Tony Gaudio, and ten other members of the cast and staff, came to San Francisco last Tuesday to shoot some scenes for "Within the Law." On Wednesday evening quite a crowd gathered to watch Miss Talmadge (or her double) jump into the dark cold waters of the bay off Pier 46, to be followed in the plunge, and rescued by Lew Cody.

N. Dragomanovich, head of the West Coast Films Corporation, left for Los Angeles on Saturday, where he will remain for a week on business for the company. They expect to resume production in the very near future on a regular schedule basis.

Ted Taylor, ex-publisher of "Camera!" and now publicity man for Goldwyn, left San Francisco for Los Angeles on Wednesday; he will return here in a couple of weeks to continue his work for Von Stroheim's production of "McTeague."

Reginald Denny, successful star of two series of "The Leather Pushers," came to San Francisco on Friday, to make personal appearances at the California Theatre for three days, with the tenth round of the second series of his pictures, now being shown.

Winfred R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is confined to his bed at the Hotel St. Francis, very ill.

Harold Lloyd and his new wife, Mildred Davis, are honeymooning in San Diego, the former home of the popular comedian. They are endeavoring to travel incognito.

Bob Horner, Gertrude Strickland and Charles Anderson are forming a $1,000,000 Motion Picture Corporation. A three-unit plan consisting of Drama, Comedy and Western, will go to make up the program for the coming two years. The release will be independent.

L. J. O'Connor, veteran Alaskan explorer, and considered one of the wealthiest men during the northern gold rush in 1898, has been signed by the Jesse D. Hampton organization to assist in the production of Rex Beach's story, "The Spoilers." Mr. O'Connor was personally acquainted with the characters around whom the story was written.

Production work on "Out of the Night," the first of a series of Palmer Photoplay pictures starring Lloyd Hughes, was temporarily delayed by the illness of Joseph De Grasse, the director. De Grasse was taken ill with an attack of influenza while the company was working on location in Northern California where a number of snow scenes were filmed.

The Anchor is in the market for the distribution of a series of high-class comedy dramas with a society background. Two-reel comedies are also in demand, says Morris R. Schlank.

Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel and wife, left last Wednesday for New York, where the popular actor, recently contracted by Goldwyn, will make a picture for his new employers. The trip will serve as Miss Wilson's initial invasion of the east.

Alfred E. Green, director of Thomas Meighan's last five productions, has just finished filming "The Ne'er Do Well" in New York, and is expected to arrive in Los Angeles within the next few days. He will be a featured director of the Famous Players-Lasky staff, as his pictures will be released under the title of the Alfred E. Green Productions.

Charles J. Brabin, Goldwyn's latest acquired directorial aid, will produce as his first Goldwyn effort Corrine Griffith's next starring vehicle, "Six Days." Mr. Brabin has just arrived from New York, where he sold his latest independent production, "Driven," filmed in the mountains of Georgia and considered one of the best pictures produced during 1922. He has not been active in the local film field for the last five years.

Passengers travelling between Chicago and St. Louis via the Chicago & Alton Railroad, look forward to their trips nowadays. Each evening a complete movie program is presented, consisting of a news reel, feature production and a two-reel comedy. "The Flame of Life," starring Priscilla Dean, was featured in the initial showing, reported as a great success.

George O'Hara and his company have been spending several days at Balboa where scenes have been taken for the water sequences in O'Hara's latest vehicle in the Witwer "Fighting Blood" series "The Knight That Failed." Work will be completed on the production in a few days, following which the star will be ready for the eighth picture "Christopher of Columbus." Mal St. Clair is directing the productions.

Selections are being made for the cast who will appear in the Goldwyn production of "The Spoilers," to be started soon under the direction of Lambert Hillyer. Milton Sills, Noah Beery, Barbara Bedford, Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Edeson, Wallace McDonald, Mitchell Lewis, William V. Mong, Ford Sterling, Alec B. Francis, Louise Fazenda and Kate Price have been cast. Six other names will be announced to complete the eighteen stellar roles.

Flashes from Frisco

C. C. Pettijohn, vice-president Select Picture Corporation of New York, was in San Francisco several days the first of last week on business.

Craig Hutchinson, director, and his company, finished "Tiberius Tinker, Press Agent," Friday, at the Paul Gerson Studios. This is the second of the series of the pictures being made from Peter B. Kyne's stories. Work on the third picture has begun.

Eric Von Stroheim has finished the continuity for "McTeague," from Frank Norris' story, and has gone to Los Angeles for a few days to complete his cast.

Ray Moore, of the Goldwyn forces, was in town last week on business connected with buying from the Pullman works, a private car, to be used as a set in "The Rear Car," soon to be filmed, with Clarence Badger directing.

The Redwood Film Corporation of this city announces that they will begin production the first of March. They expect to work at the new Gerson Studios, and their first picture will be "The Three-Mile Limit," a smuggling story by Walter Montague, with an all-star cast. Sherwood McDonald will direct with Richard Kipling as co-director.

Harry Carey was in San Francisco all last week appearing in a vaudeville stunt at the Golden Gate Theatre on the bill with his feature picture "Good Men and True." While in town Carey did his best to beg or bribe Chief O'Brien into selling him a San Francisco police horse for use in the films.

Phyllis Haver, of the Mack Sennett forces, came to town last week "just to shop," as she said, for she thinks San Francisco is the Paris of the West for styles and shops.

Ernest Traxler, production manager for Goldwyn, spent most of last week at Colfax, and the neighborhood of the Big Dipper Copper mine at Iowa Hill, getting locations for the mine scenes in Von Stroheim's production of "McTeague."

Sir Harry Lauder came to town yesterday and we ran across him, good-naturedly letting some press photographers snap pictures of him in Union Square. Sir Harry looks shorter and stouter and older than on his last American trip, but has the same smile and merry twinkle in his eyes. He is to appear for a week at the Curren Theatre here, and is enroute for Australia.

Emmett J. Flynn, of Fox, is in San Francisco at the Hotel St. Francis.

AGNES KERR CRAWFORD.

"BUTTON, BUTTON, WHO'S GOT THE VILLAIN?"

Elaborate efforts have been made to conceal the identity of the villain in the cast of "Cordelia the Magnificent," Harry Garson's newest production for Metro starring Clara Kimball Young which George Archibald is directing.

It is a mystery play and the real wicked person is not disclosed until almost the final scene. In selecting artists for the various roles Mr. Garson realized the folly of securing a well known screen villain, in which instance every motion picture audience would recognize him and classify his character at once, thereby spoiling interest in the play.

"For instance," said Mr. Garson, "if Sam de Grasse, Ernest Torrence, Stuart Holmes or Walter Long were playing the part every one would know the outcome of the plot before the end of the first reel."

There are three leading male figures in the play, Lloyd Whitlock, Huntly Gordon and Lewis Dayton.

Mr. Dayton is an English actor, new to the American screen, and always has played hero roles.

Huntly Gordon always has appeared as a leading man. During the few months since he arrived from New York he has played opposite Viola Dana, Enid Bennett, Katherine MacDonald and Carmel Myers.

Lloyd Whitlock played opposite Miss Young in her recently completed picture, "The Woman of Bronze." During his screen career Mr. Whitlock has appeared in both villain and hero roles. According to Mr. Garson suspicion is likely to fasten on Mr. Whitlock because of his "record" but—he isn't the villain.

Others appearing in "Cordelia the Magnificent" include Elinor Hancock, Jacques Gadsdon, Mary Jane Irving, Katherine Murphy and others.

DeMille Chooses Leatrice

According to a report emanating from one in a position to know, Cecil B. DeMille has decided to give Leatrice Joy the stellar role in his next super-production soon to be started at the Lasky Studios. Miss Joy's latest screen triumph is scored in "Java Head." She will leave New York next Monday for Hollywood.

Will See Ina's Play

Wesley Ruggles has shaken the dust of Hollywood from his shoes temporarily. He journeyed direct to St. Louis, where he will stop off to see Ina Claire's new play and if he likes it, he will direct the filming of it for Paramount in New York.

FILM FORCES UNITE TO FIGHT CENSORSHIP AND ALLEGED INSIDE SINISTER INFLUENCES

With the arrival in Los Angeles from New York of Dennis F. O'Brien, vice president and general counsel of United Artists, the movement to form a new big film organization to combat censorship and other declared sinister developments in the motion picture industry, began to assume tangible form.

What the ultimate nature of this coalition will be O'Brien and the leaders in the movement now under way, are unwilling to predict.

It is declared that eight of the leading independent producers thus far have signified their intention not only to join the movement, but to fight to a finish along any course that may definitely be decided upon.

These eight, it is further declared, are only the beginning, and it is confidently expected by those who have taken the initiative that eventually practically all of the independents who have proven their ability to maintain their existence without any financial assistance, will openly espouse the new cause.

"We are fighting for a principle," declares Douglas Fairbanks. "We will employ moral force, but we shall fight with money if necessary. It is not a selfish fight, by any means, but one that means much to the entire moving picture industry."

"At present only an association is contemplated, and whether it will later develop into something more will depend upon eventualities."

He stated that thus far he and Mary Pickford, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Harold Lloyd, Charlie Chaplin, Charles Ray and Jackie Coogan and also the Joseph M. Schenck and D. W. Griffith organizations, had signed a declaration for "a movement for our mutual protection against the cliques and forces in the theater business."

"Our further object is to direct our efforts and our organized strength against destructive forces outside the industry, such as censorship and malicious propaganda," Mr. Fairbanks adds.

As a sort of declaration of purpose the following has been adopted:

"We, the undersigned, already united in spirit by a definite constructive purpose and an earnest desire to let nothing defeat the fulfillment of this purpose, possessing unlimited faith in the splendid future of the motion picture industry, provided no sinister influence creeps in to corrode or poison it, and recognizing without arrogance our own power to determine what the destiny of this new art of the screen shall be, do herewith pledge ourselves to an even closer fraternity of mutual confidence and endeavor.

"We do likewise resolve that with our collective strength we will resist the menace of any influence that may arise either within or without the industry. While we make no pretension that we are the sole custodians of the welfare of the industry, we may, with concerted action and a united front, prevent any influence or chain of influences from deflecting us from our avowed purpose, so that this new art may march to its high destiny without the dictation of commercial interests or any consideration whatever save that of our own ideals to which we stand dedicated."

Bob Wagner to Hospital

For the sixth time within a few months, Rob Wagner, noted author, will have his shoulder operated on because of a fracture he sustained while in a friendly wrestling match. He will go to the hospital next Monday and as soon as he is able to get out again, he will start directing his first picture, Walter Hiers in his third starring vehicle for Lasky.

Seeling Back For More

Charles R. Seeling has returned from a business trip to New York City with another contract for a second series of five-reel features starring "Big Boy" Williams. He has signed Katherine Collins to play the leading feminine roles opposite Williams and he will be "shooting" at the Fine Arts Studios soon.

Moreno to New York

Antonio Moreno has left for New York, where he will play the leading role opposite Bebe Daniels in "The Exciters," to be filmed by Lasky at the Long Island Studios.

If 13 is Unlucky, Ouch!

Here's a producer whose career runs in thirteens! And, it proves lucky for him, too. He's Clifford S. Elfelt, who on February 13th completed his latest picture, "Danger" with a cast consisting of thirteen characters and the picture was cut in Cutting Room 13 at the Fine Arts Studios. Wherein is involved some of the good luck coincident to the recurrence of this number was in the case of the recent fire, which partly destroyed these studios. Mr. Elfelt's cutting room—Number 13—was the only one which escaped damage.

Harlan Does Ring Battle

The Hollywood Stadium was used as the scene of action while filming the prize fight sequence in Kenneth Harlan's latest starring vehicle, "April Showers," last Saturday and Sunday evenings. Fifteen hundred "supers" frantically voiced their excitement while Harlan battled an honest-to-goodness fight with Ralph Faulkner. Kid McCoy was in Harlan's corner, serving as his second.

ANIMAL STAR OF MARY'S "SUDS" IS DEAD

The office boy at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios entered the sanctum of W. W. Kerrigan, manager of the Pickford Company, the other day and said, "There's a fellar here that says Miss Pickford's got a horse out in pasture; know anything about it?"

"Sure," said Kerrigan. "What bout it?"

"Well, maybe she HAD a horse n pasture, but she ain't got none now, 'cause he's dead. Died this morning."

And in this cryptic fashion was the demise of "Lavender" announced. Lavender, the ancient white nag which had appeared so many times on the screen, getting his share of laughs, tears and applause along with the other actors. In fact, here were many who said the horse was more human than any of the other players.

Lavender's last public appearance was with Miss Pickford in "Suds," a picture she filmed three years ago. Those who saw this feature will remember well the bony old steed who "sailed with his ears and steered with his tail." The loving care lavished upon him by the little laundry slavey who carefully braided his mane and tail and then made him walk up stairs will not soon be forgotten.

In worming his way into the heart of the slavey, he also beat a path into the heart of the star, with the result that when the picture was finished Miss Pickford pensioned Lavender for life. He died at the age of 26 years at Moor Farms near Sherman, Calif., where he has been living in clover for the past three years. Miss Pickford has decided to erect a headstone, suitably inscribed, at his grave.

Another One to Truckee

Hal Roach is sending the company he has selected to appear in his screen version of Jack London's "The Call of the Wild" to Truckee to do the wild snow scenes. Fred Jackman as director heads the outfit. Walter Long, whose cinema star is just now very much in the ascendancy, has been selected to play the heavy leading character, that of the burly dog-breaker, in this story.

Gloria Starts Again

Gloria Swanson will start her starring activities in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," at the Lasky Studios next week. In the supporting cast will be seven girls selected especially for their beauty. They will portray the character of the Bluebeard's other seven wives.

No one can please everybody, but everybody can please someone.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

Don't let yourself be sensitive. Just be sensible. Any other inclination is senseless.

The buzz of industry is buzzing too merrily in filmland to provide any excuse for anyone to continue to buzz in sleepy idleness.

They say the alleged drug evil in Los Angeles is magnified and exaggerated. Just the same there are still a few dope peddlers and higher-ups we wish they would take into permanent custody.

The undercurrent of business politics in filmland is running entirely too strongly nowadays. Instead of permitting politics to cut such a wide swath, let's cut it out as an unnecessary burden and concentrate undivided attention on the making of better motion pictures.

Patronage of moving picture theatres is increasing rapidly just now, according to a survey of receipts all over the nation. Hence it is safe to declare that if censors ever thought they could kill this great amusement business, they were sadly mistaken. About the only thing censors have hurt is their own prestige.

Jean Acker announces she is going to fight for the right to use the name of Valentino. If Rodolph fights back like he fought bulls in "Blood and Sand," he'll be safe from any harm, for Will Rogers seemed right when he facetiously remarked that the real hero of that picture was the fellow who held the bulls in check.

Give the world more pictures of genuine entertaining value and the world will appropriate more money for pictures, which means the prosperity of the whole film industry will grow. One unpardonably bad picture discourages countless friends of the cinema art from being so steady in their patronage. It is all because of an inherent aversion for being "stung," and, anyway, there should be no more bad pictures released.

There is no doubt about one thing—the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition will attract more favorable attention to the industry than any other single enterprise and it is difficult to understand how anyone within the film field could be opposed to it on any ground. It seems high time for the birth of real Motion Picture patriotism unalloyed by any petty jealousy or fallacious prejudice. Team-work should be the slogan of the present in order to insure the cinema's greater future.

UN-AMERICAN IGNORING

The constant repetition of the publishing of features and pictures of a select few famous film folk to the exclusion of the lesser lights seems to be an unalterable fallacy into which all "fan" magazines have fallen deeper and deeper in the last two or three years. As a matter of fact, the reading public is as much interested in new comers as it is in old-timers. New faces and personalities are coming onto the screen most every day and the "fans" naturally would like to know about them. Yet, every "fan" magazine denies them the pleasure of thus getting acquainted on the absurd theory that space can be given only to a restricted few about whom everybody knows everything already.

It is strange and incomprehensible. Do not the editors of the "fan" magazines recognize or appreciate the spirit of America as the land of opportunity and equality to all? If they knew how many intensely interesting stories of the high human-interest qualities they are missing by their mad scramble for the "playing up" of only "big names" they might find it irresistible to change their policies. If the public should happen to come to a realization of how much reading diversion they are missing on account of this attitude of having recognition granted the aristocratic famous only, an era of apathy might follow and might prove to be a business-losing proposition for the "fan" magazines.

This thing of ignoring the comparative unknown, regardless of his or her superior ability, is not American and ill becomes any American magazine since practically all of the foreign periodicals devoted to cinema affairs show more of the true American spirit than they do by giving unlimited space to any good story concerning any interesting person in pictures, irrespective of the status so far as the climb up the ladder of fame goes. Moreover, Americans do not condone un-American policies indefinitely.

DON'T BE TOO QUICK TO BE SLOW!

It's a curious paradox, but many people are prone to be too quick to embrace slowness—too ready to advance with a rapidity comparable to the meanderings of a snail. Thousands of deluded conservatives take forward steps so deliberately that they are in the throes of impatient old age before they get their feet settled on terra firma for the first time! Haste is not to be encouraged, but consistent safe speed in the right direction is demanded by the times.

We often encounter people who are provokingly slow to accept the principle of helping others. Hesitation or procrastination in this case is reprehensible because of the fact that everyone knows (whether they admit it or not) that there is no

ANOTHER FALLACY

There is a very unfortunate situation in the casting end of motion pictures just now. All producers are clamoring for a limited few so-called "big names" known as box-office attractions and as a result most every cast reads almost alike. Of course it is an extremely silly notion and not until someone with sufficient initiative to "put over" a great screen triumph with the aid of a cast of unknown capable players will there be any change and then, as usual, we shall witness some more emulating of the disposition of sheep, to-wit: to rush madly a-herd in the same direction. The only thing that mystifies us is, why some producer has not long since discovered the money-making value of doing something different in the way of casting a picture.

We have heard several confess that other artists in the ranks of the comparatively unknown could out-play some of those with box-office names, but they are afraid to take the chance on having the exhibitor reject the picture on account of the absence of the much over-worked all-star cast idea. Whoever comes to the front with an efficacious cure for this situation, which is an ailment, will be the doctor triumphant for the motion picture. The roadway is wide open. Who is game enough to traverse a wide-open roadway little used?

Someone with ability for "putting across" successful paradoxes should start a campaign to stop further unjust defaming of the fair name of Hollywood by returning to the energetic use of the impressive "shorter and uglier term" the revered Theodore Roosevelt made famous. To be called a liar point-blank and publicly—and justly—has a remarkable effect upon the scandal-monger who always hates to be tagged properly.

One way to make money is to make friends. Then there are those friends who can help you spend it. So it goes—a friend in need for every "need."

happiness in self-centered selfishness. If no one would help no one, this life would be a drab one, or, would it be more fitting to describe it as a grab one? Frequently people tell us they are too busy to join any movement calculated to help the general cause of human progress and uplift. Thus they abjectly confess they are too empty-headed to know that many others, many times busier than they are at any stage of the game, have plenty of spare hours in which to do a full share to make life better for others. No, we cannot bear very patiently with people who have the temerity to say they cannot find time to help find sunshine which will be enjoyed by the multitudes. They are too slow to be useful.

EXHAUSTS

From Al Martin

Jeanie Macpherson wrote "Adam's Rib" which was produced with a wonderful cast. Then DeMille did it.

Jack Conway is now directing Perry Vekroff's "What Wives Want." The idea is big enough for a serial, my friend.

Mildred Harris is in Frisco with Max Graf in "The Fog." Don't misunderstand this, please.

Conditions in Germany are terrible. The writer of "The Blue Danube" must have been a fortune-teller.

Ethel Clayton made "Can a Woman Love Twice?" Absolutely, that is, if she can't count over two.

Now that Walter Hagen, the golf star, is in pictures, many people are learning golf. Better hurry, folks, the fad may change.

Mr. Hagen's first screen attempt will be, "The Man Who Cheated." The idea was collected from a game of solitaire.

Director Raymaker at Century is now making "Straighten 'Em Out." I saw you last Friday night, Ray, when you got the idea.

Bernard Durning's clock has stopped. He says it is still "The Eleventh Hour." Not so dusty, eh what?

George Rigas was held up the other night. The street car ahead was behind. This is an old one, but then it was an old street car.

Neely Edwards saw the "rushes" the other day and went home sick. They had nothing to do with each other.

Monty Banks has been in Frisco for a few days. I ask you, is every one in "The Fog"?

Jimmy Starr, who hangs out on the Talmadge "lot," is a star no longer. Someone put his lights out.

Theodore Roberts is the strongest man on the screen. You'll agree with me if you ever smoked one of his cigars.

James Young instructed his assistant, Jimmie Ewens, to be familiar with the small part people, for then he will be able to get better work from them. Ewens tried it, hoping he'll get his money back.

Alta Allen has just finished "The Marriage Chance." There are many who envy you, little lady.

CAMPAIGN TO STOP BOGUS POSING IS STARTED

A movement has been started by the Warner Brothers to involve every producing unit in the motion picture industry in checking, insofar as is possible, the many young girls who flagrantly and maliciously style themselves as screen actresses when brought before court justices on charges of disorderly conduct.

The plan, which was started by Sam and Jack Warner, production managers of the Warner Brothers studios in Los Angeles, is to have all bonafide screen players carry small cases containing a photograph and fingerprints for identification purposes. It is said that this idea carried out by every producing unit will prevent any reflection on the thousands of screen players, and will help to maintain the dignity of the picture business.

One of the most recent instances of an attempt to impersonate a screen player was made by a young girl in Milford, Conn., who styled herself as Anna Q. Nilsson. She went to one of the local theatre managers, and he was so convinced by her manner and personality that he consented to have her make a personal appearance at his theatre. When the bogus Miss Nilsson appeared on the stage a dyed-in-the-wool "fan" shouted she was a faker. The cry was taken up by the audience, and later inquiry by the police developed that the young lady had a weakness for impersonating someone she "ain't."

The Warner Brothers idea is said to be meeting with the whole-hearted approval of the Hollywood colony. Marie Prevost, Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Monte Blue, Harry Meyers, Claire Windsor, Pauline Starke and other screen stars are reported to have endorsed the plan.

Champ's Sister in Films

If her big brother, Jack, does not frown on the idea, Elsie Dempsey, sister of the world's champion boxer, will soon become a motion picture actress, having been tendered a long-term contract by Al St. John, Fox comedy star, who recognizes in the talented little woman a rare ability to pantomime and mimic the characteristics and mannerisms of celebrated persons. Recently St. John made a test film of Miss Dempsey and the photographic results were more than satisfactory. The sister of the "iron man" is a striking brunette and although she has had no previous screen or stage experience, it is believed by those who have witnessed her work in the film test, that she has a natural ability for acting.

ACTOR "PUTS ACROSS" THEORY THAT ADAM WAS VERY UGLY MAN

Extensive research on the subject on the part of a motion picture producer reveals a seeming soundness to the theory that Adam, the first man, was extremely ugly and decidedly brute-like in his physical appearance although his disposition was gently human enough. The result of his conclusion is that when A. B. Maescher got ready to film "The Rip-Tide," a soon-to-be-released picture, in which the opening scene has to do with the advent of Adam into the world, Dick Sutherland was engaged to enact the role because he had shown a face in support of Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" which won the championship for intriguing ugliness.

In the episodes in which his characterization figures in "The Rip-Tide," his facial make-up is a marvel, it is said, and, he "puts across" the impression that the first man to tread upon this mundane sphere was an extremely crude specimen of the human being unblest physically by any of the refining processes of civilization through the centuries of progress. He makes an unusual entrance on the screen, coming up head-first out of a pool of sticky mud with his head, face and shoulders covered with grime. His first glances at the world around him are anything but reassuring and the first idea one gets upon seeing his actions is that he will be well able to take care of himself against the onslaughts of beasts or elements.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Sutherland's face has been his fortune in motion pictures although he is an excellent actor besides. Whenever there is the necessity for a character with a face that astounds, he is summoned. Such a necessity arose in the filming of the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," now in production, and, consequently, he is playing a picturesque part known as "the ox" and he is succeeding in looking something like one!

"GIN" BEFUDDLES BOLD BURGLARS WHILE ON JOB

Burglars invaded the home of D. M. ("Cappy") Ricks, popular official of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, at 6852 Alta Loma Terrace, Hollywood, Saturday night, and removed jewelry and silverware amounting in value to $750, according to a report from the Hollywood Police Station. Mr. Ricks himself brings out a fact that adds color—and humor—to the report.

The burglars took a jewelry box from a bureau and left $40 in currency in plain sight. They took a package of cigarettes, some keys and a pocket knife from the mantle, leaving $7 in cash in the same pile of masculine pocket accessories. Also, they took a bottle of cleaning preparation labelled (ghosts of the past!) "Gordon Gin." Mr. Ricks advances the theory that the burglars, having had experience with synthetic "hooch," drank the cleaning fluid under the impression that it was gin, and the eccentricity of their performance was due to its effects!

Menke on "Danger"

H. W. Menke, formerly with David W. Griffith, has been engaged by Clifford S. Elfelt to add some special night effects to the latter's latest picture, "Danger," in which J. B. Warner is starred. This work will be done at the Fine Arts Studios under a new process of Mr. Menke's origin.

The Universal production of "Starland," under the direction of Ward Wing, and in which every Universal star will appear, is rapidly nearing completion.

"SNOW GOLF" IS LATEST GAME FOR WINTER SPORT

The latest in winter sports is "snow golf."

All you need, according to Walter Hagen, golf champion, who is now making motion pictures, is plenty of snow, a pair of snow-shoes, a driver and a ping-pong ball.

Hagen invented "snow-golf" while on "location" at Truckee, California, during the filming of his first starring picture, "The Man Who Cheated." The snow at Truckee was seven feet deep in some spots and deeper in others, so Hagen borrowed the ping-pong ball from a local belle and got busy.

Patent papers have already been filed. Hagen gives most of the credit for the perfection of the game to Clarence Bricker, his producing director.

Hagen has notified a nationally famous sporting goods house, which will manufacture the "utensils" for playing "snow golf," that he will personally exploit the new game, thereby adding a few more dollars to his already overcrowded "sock."

His Last Press Notice

Fred Turner, well-known character actor, died last Wednesday, following an illness of six months. His last screen appearance was made in the King Vidor production of "The Jack-Knife Man," in which he played the title role. Funeral services were held Thursday, February 15th, at the LeRoy Bagley chapel.

The fellow who rocks the boat is the very fellow who would scuttle the ship if he had a chance.

VARSAITY DEAN IN SPEECH LAUDS EXPOSITION

When the management of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition entertained the Business Men's Club of Hollywood recently at a banquet given in the ballroom of the Masonic Temple, Walter J. Reynolds, president of the exposition company, and F. B. Davison, the Director General, explained the plans for the big enterprise. Both speeches were received with the sort of enthusiasm that gave assurance of the most whole-hearted support.

Dr. E. C. Moore, Dean of the University of California, stressed the educational possibilities of the Exposition. He said the fact that scenes from the history of the Americas are to be filmed and sent all over the world would make the people of this country and those of South America better known and better understood. He declared the history of the United States is the most stimulating any nation in the world has ever achieved. The pictures would carry the leaven of liberty to the utmost parts of the world, he said, and added that Yale University, appreciating the importance of picturing history, has projected a great Christopher Columbus film.

Dr. Moore concluded his address by confessing to his "very great eagerness to see the results to be attained next summer." Mrs. Martha Nelson McCann, president of the Park Board, outlined the part the women might play in connection with the exposition.

After the speeches the evolution of the dance was portrayed by dancers under the direction of George Smart and Miss Katherine M. Burns.

Ray and Ray

Ray Hallor, who is playing the part of Richard More, the religious fanatic in support of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," now well into production, was called to the telephone at the Ray Studios one day this week and had the thrill of hearing a voice offer him $10,000 per week if he would give up independent work and sign a long-term contract with one of the larger film concerns. Then came the rude shock—it dawned on Hallor that Charles Ray was the one wanted and not Ray Hallor. "It was the most disappointing mix-up of my whole mixed career," Hallor says.

Bill's Gun-Fighting

William Farnum is in the midst of his new starring vehicle, "The Gun Fighter," at the Fox Studios. Doris May will play opposite Mr. Farnum in this story, which was written by Max Brand.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Milla Davenport has been cast for a character part in the Edgar Lewis production at Universal.

Dick Stanton has returned from New York after an absence of six years. He is stopping at the Ambassador.

Eva Novak is playing a prominent role in a new production, in which Bryant Washburn and June Elvidge are featured.

Carmel Myers has returned to Los Angeles from Chicago, where she enacted an important part in "The Little Girl Next Door."

Robert H. Russell has signed with the Eddie Dillon company at Goldwyn's to play in "Broadway Gold," featuring Elaine Hammerstein.

Mildred Davis has finished work in the Sacramento Pictures Corporation production, "Temporary Marriage," her first starring vehicle.

"Duke," well-known canine actor, has gone astray. H. J. Andrews, of 3186 Verdugo Road, who owns the bloodhound, has offered a reward for his return or information regarding his whereabouts.

Ernie Adams, who played the title role of Lester in "Listen Lester," the musical comedy which played New York's Broadway for more than a year, has been engaged to appear in Century Comedies.

Mickey McBan, interesting 3½-year-old film actor and world's champion baby swimmer, will entertain at a big children's party to be given at the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, on Washington's Birthday.

Margaret Livingston, who has been seen with Charles Ray, Hobart Bosworth and Douglas MacLean and who recently completed a big Universal serial, is soon to be starred in her own productions, says Dame Rumor.

With the departure of Harry Rapf and S. L. Warner for New York yesterday announcement has been made that Sidney Franklin will direct "Beau Brummel," an adaptation from the famous stage-play by Clyde Fitch in which Richard Mansfield starred.

Julia Arthur, distinguished stage actress, has signed a contract to appear in the next Marion Davies production for Cosmopolitan. She will play Queen Elizabeth, according to her announcement made following the closing scene of Hamlet, now playing at Keith's Theatre in New York.

Fritzi Brunette is included in the all-star cast of Hugh E. Deirker's production, "The Other Side," in the course of filming at the Fine Arts Studios.

Stanton Heck has been added to the cast supporting Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish." He will play the part of Captain Jones.

Eva Lewis is back at Universal, portraying her role in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." An accident, in which her arm was sprained, caused a week's lay-off.

Monsieur J. A. Roy is vacationing in Monte Carlo, Monaco, following an extensive tour of France and Italy. He expects to arrive in Hollywood in the near future.

George L. Maryon has been engaged to play the minister in "Main Street" now being filmed by Warner Brothers. He has been contracted for the run of the picture.

Miss Dupont will play the principal feminine lead opposite Walter Hagen in his first feature production. The rest of the cast consists of Joseph Kilgour, Monte Collins, Lucy Beaumont, and George Kuwa.

E. W. Borman, who recently finished an engagement in "The Strangers' Banquet," has been cast for an important part in the Richard Thomas production of "The Silent Accuser," which will be produced at the Hollywood Studios under the personal direction of the producer.

"Poor Men's Wives," the Louis Gasnier production in which Mickey McBan and Muriel McCormac have been skillfully matched as "twins," has opened at the Criterion Theatre in New York, and will soon be seen in Los Angeles at the Kinema.

Evelyn Selbie has signed to lay an Indian squaw in "Snow-drift," a five-reel drama to be made by Fox under the direction of Scott Dunlap. The company will spend several weeks in Truckee to film the snow scenes. Charles (Buck) Jones will be the star and Dorothy Manners is his leading lady.

Mabel Normand arrived in New York last week from Europe, where she has been sojourning for several months. She will stay in the eastern city for a few days and then return to Los Angeles, where arrangements are being made for the filming of her next Mack Sennett starring production, "Marianne."

Helen Ferguson is heading an all-star cast which will appear in Edgar Lewis' production of "The Right of the Strongest." She will portray the role of a school teacher.

Myrtle Stedman has returned from Truckee where exterior scenes for the new Thomas H. Ince feature were made. Miss Stedman is cast as the mother of Lloyd Hughes.

Theodore Kosloff is another Paramount artist who is seeking relaxation in Manhattan, having left this week for the big town in the Hudson. He will be back in two or three weeks.

Taylor Graves, who is playing Charley Bates in "Oliver Twist" has just completed a picture with Emory Johnson. The title is "Westbound 99" and Taylor plays a character juvenile.

Sadie Campbell, eleven-year-old actress, finished with Buddy Messinger in "Teacher's Pest" last week. She is now playing a part in "60c An Hour," featuring Walter Hiers at Lasky.

Frank Whitson is en route from New York City to Portland, Oregon, where he will do three special productions for the Premium Picture Corporation. He is accompanied by Jack Flemming, president of the company.

John Arnold is to photograph "The Fog," the newest Graf production to be filmed for Metro release. Mr. Arnold has been doing the camera work for Viola Dana's pictures for the past few years.

Baby Peggy, the four-year-old Century Comedy star, was chosen by the Lions organization to present the Hollywood branch with the international charter, which was sent from the headquarters in Chicago.

Gibson Gowland, prominent English actor, will arrive in Los Angeles, February 24th, to play the title role in Von Stroheim's initial Goldwyn production of "McTeague," he having been engaged for the part by cablegram. Upon his arrival in Los Angeles, he will be sent to San Francisco where Mr. Von Stroheim is on location.

Gene Sarazen, National and open golf champion has signed a contract with Warner Brothers and Harry Rapf to appear in a series of one-reel pictures. These films although educational to the golfer will be entertaining to others who have not been bitten by the "golf-bug" as they will combine comedy with the golf instruction.

Lillian Leighton has recovered from her recent illness which incapacitated her since last fall. She is now back on the "lot" with the Rockett company now making "Abraham Lincoln."

Victor B. Fisher, supervising director of Fisher Productions, Inc., of San Francisco, is in Hollywood to start work on their story, "Youth Triumphant," and to select a director and cast.

William A. Friedle, the New York bank clerk, who was offered the scenario desk of Century Comedies, has declined due to present affiliations, but will write for Century from New York.

Harry Burns has just completed an engagement with the Goldstone productions. He was playing the part of the manager of a small-town prize-fighter in "Small Town," starring Snowy Baker.

Charles Richardson is photographing Clara Kimball Young in "Cordelia the Magnificent," Harry Garson's newest production for Metro which George Archinbaud is directing. Mr. Richardson was one of the cameramen for "Robin Hood."

Maryon Aye, one of screenland's fairest feminine players, has affixed her name to a contract with Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, whereby she will enact important roles in the forthcoming Sol Lesser productions, the first of which is George M. Cohan's famous stage play, "The Meanest Man in the World," starring Bert Lytell.

George Melford arrives next Monday, according to report, to complete scenes for his new Paramount production, "You Can't Fool Your Wife," in which Leatrice Joy, Nita Naldi and Lewis Stone are featured. The members of the cast needed for the completion of the picture will follow Mr. Melford. This is an original story by Hector Turnbull with scenario by Waldemar Young.

Four units are now producing for Century Comedies. They are the Eugene De Rue company, making pictures with Bobby Dunn; Harry Edwards, directing comedies with Buddy Messinger; Al Herman, producing pictures with Jack Cooper; and Herman C. Raymaker, handling Brownie, the wonder dog. Baby Peggy is expected to start this week, and a director is being signed for her productions.

HALPERIN DECIDES TO STOP ONE STAR PLAN

Finis was written this week to Halperin Productions' latest breezy satire play, "Tea—With a Kick," and the picture is now being edited at the Fine Arts studios under the supervision of Victor Hugo Halperin. A cast of twenty-four artists of recognized prominence was assembled for the principal characters in the story. Those who have previewed the picture in the studio projection room declare that Erle Kenton, in whose hands rested the direction of the story, has produced a subject which excels in quality any of his previous pictures, including "A Small Town Idol," "Down On the Farm," and "Love, Honor and Behave."

The complete cast as announced by the Halperins is as follows: Creighton Hale, Rosemary Theby, Stuart Holmes, Zasu Pitts, Victor Potel, Gale Henry, Harry Todd, Sidney D'Albrook, Dot Farley, Edward Jobson, Ralph Lewis, Dale Fuller, Julianne Johnson, Doris May, Hank Mann, Billy Franey, Earl Montgomery, Tiny Ward, "Spike" Rankin, Irene D'Annelle, Chester Conklin, Snitz Edwards, Roy Atwell and Tom Ricketts.

All forthcoming stories to be produced by the Halperins will be presented with an all-star cast. Such was the announcement made by the company this week. Their original plan was to alternate with a single star and an all-star production. The next Halperin story, which ran in one of the leading magazines of the country, is now being put into continuity form and will enter the filming process within the next two weeks. The title and details of the play are being withheld for the present.

Mayo Joins Goldwyn

Frank Mayo last week signed a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for whom he is now completing the enacting of one of the stellar roles in "Souls For Sale," under the direction of Rupert Hughes. Mr. Mayo recently finished a three-year contract with Universal. His career as a freelance actor was not long-lived. He has not been away from his long-term Universal contract long.

Miss Mills Doubles Again

Marilyn Mills, known in film-land as "the girl with the white horse," has just completed an engagement with Clifford S. Efelit in "Danger." She served as the double for June LaVere in various dangerous scenes in which there is much wild work with wild horses. Miss Mills is considered one of the most daring horsewomen in California.

WAMPAS TO INSTALL NEW OFFICERS AND DO A FILM

With a "High Jinks de Luxe," the recently chosen officers of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers are to be installed for the coming year next Monday night. The new officers are Joseph Jackson, president; Harry Wilson, vice president; Howard Strickling, secretary, and Pat Dowling, treasurer. Retiring officers who will induct their successors into office are Arch Reeve, president; Ham Beall, secretary, and Barrett Kiesling, treasurer.

The festivities will be held at the Elite, and entertainment features will be varied. Sam W. B. Cohn, Ray Davidson, Garrett Graham, Mark Larkin and Jerome Beatty, will be installed as members of the board of directors. Aiding the retiring officials in the celebration is a committee headed by Harold Hurley, including Ivan St. John, Clem Pope, Robert Collier, and Tom Reed. A special motion picture is being made for the occasion and it will be called "When the Midnight Wampas Wails a Wicked Woof," with Pat Dowling as director general.

CHAPLIN "STICKS" TO CHOICE OF YEAR AGO

Carl Miller, who is playing opposite Edna Purviance in her first starring vehicle, "Public Opinion," now under way at the Chaplin Studios, where Charles Chaplin, the great comedian, author of the story, is directing it, was "nominated" by Chaplin for the big role he is enacting when "The Kid" was under production. Miller's work as the father of the "Kid" was regarded so favorably by Chaplin that he told the former one day that at some future time he was going to direct a picture.

"And you will have the leading role," added Charlie.

A year ago Chaplin again discussed his plans for a picture and repeated his promise. Then one afternoon late in November while Carl Miller, unromantically clad in overalls, was cleaning his car, came an urgent call from the comedian, bidding him hurry to his studios. Mr. Miller told him he was covered with grime and in no fit condition to see anyone.

"Never mind," come as you are, but hurry," replied the comedian.

Having not the slightest idea of what it was all about, Miller hurried and the first thing he confronted at the studios after the comedian had smilingly greeted him was a pen and the next one of the most coveted contracts in filmdom which he signed wondering if it could be true.

Mr. Miller has been enacting some highly dramatic scenes with Miss Purviance. He is cast in the production as a poverty-stricken painter who goes to Paris to seek his fortune.

Seattle Debutante Winning

Leonore Field, a newcomer from Seattle and winner of many beauty contests, has been added to the Carter De Haven company. She has played parts with the Harry Carey company as well as "The Fighting Blood" company all on the R-C lot. She is a society debutante from the northern city and came here to try her luck in pictures against her parents' wishes. She is making reassuring progress.

DOUG GIVES WISE MATHEMATICIANS A JOB

If it takes 17 weeks for 255,000 persons to see "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, how long will it take for the entire population of the world to view this sensational cinema?

During the seventeen weeks that the new Fairbanks celluloid classic has been running at Grauman's famous theatre, an average of 15,000 persons viewed it each week, and present indications are that more people will see the show in the theatre in Hollywood than at any other theatre in this country, not excepting the Capitol of New York which is the largest show house in the world.

The Capitol, however, has helped considerably to swell the world attendance. When "Robin Hood" opened there last week for its second metropolitan run, all records for first night attendance were shattered in spite of the fact that a blizzard was raging. The total attendance for the first week amounted to the staggering figure of 101,000 persons. But despite all this, it is believed that the aggregate audience at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian will be considerably ahead of the Capitol owing to the fact that the run will last much longer.

In addition to the showings in Hollywood and New York, the picture is now being presented in Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Washington and Boston. The Boston and Pittsburgh performances are being staged under the direction of Doug's road show organization, while other showings are under the auspices of the United Artists. In each of these big cities, a tremendous attendance has been rolled up and as soon as an average can be struck as to the number of people that pass into these theatres each week, it is believed at the Fairbanks studio that the business office can compute the length of time it will take for all the people of the world—or at least an equivalent of all the people of the world—to witness this delightful photoplay.

WIDOW OF FAMOUS PRODUCER WINS FILM FAME

Unusual interest attaches to the growing popularity of Frances Raymond as a remarkably artistic portrayal of aristocratic matrons and grand dames in modern motion pictures. Very few know she is the widow of David Henderson, the foremost theatrical producer of America twenty-five years ago at which time she was one of the most feted musical comedy stars, being noted as one of the most vivacious and most beautiful soubrettes on the American stage. She was the toast of the town wherever she played.

Now the luxuriant hair which was admired for its golden bloneness is snow-white, though the face is exceptionally well preserved, and, Frances Raymond, as a character actress of the screen, is making rapid strides towards achieving a different kind of fame, but a fame comparable to that which was hers in those years bygone.

She is just starting in an important part in support of Duston Farnum in the William Fox production, "The Grail," which will be something like her fortieth picture engagement since she settled in Hollywood three years ago. Among the more notable forthcoming releases in which she will appear in brilliant roles are: "Money, Money, Money," starring Katherine MacDonald; the Lois Weber production of "Jewel"; and "Noise in Nuboro," starring Viola Dana.

David Henderson, her deceased husband, was one of Chicago's most successful newspaper men before he entered the theatrical field. He was managing editor of the Chicago Daily News and later founded the Chicago Herald. As a theatrical producer he won most of his fame and fortune on account of his elaborate all-star presentations of Gilbert and Sullivan operas and spectacular extravaganzas, which served as the guiding standard for Ziegfeld's "Follies."

Cortez to Pose

Because of his extraordinary facial good looks and striking physique, Ricardo Cortez, now playing the role of the villain in support of Walter Hiers in "60 Cents an Hour," has been selected by Rob Wagner, author, painter and picture director, to pose for his study in oil paints of a Greek god, which he will paint as soon as he recovers from a minor operation. Cortez recently won a long-term contract with Paramount because of his unusual debonair appearance and ability as both an actor and a dancer. He is generally regarded as one of the sure bets for early stardom.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Von Stroheim is Starting

Eric von Stroheim has finished writing the script for "McTeague," his first picture under his recently signed contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The director arrived in Los Angeles last week to complete casting for his picturization of Frank Norris' novel.

Von Stroheim wrote the script in San Francisco on the scenes where the story takes place. After completing his cast the director will return to San Francisco. Actual photography of "McTeague" is scheduled to start next week in the junkyard in the alley back of McTeague's Dental Parlors.

Starts "Three Wise Fools"

King Vidor has begun production on "Three Wise Fools," the first of a series of productions which he is to make for Goldwyn. The screen version of this story follows the story of the stage production very closely. Several of the original cast of players have been engaged to play in this film. Claude Gillingwater, who created the role of Findley, will appear on the screen in this same role. Fred Esmelton, a well-known New York actor, also in the original cast, will appear in the Vidor production. Others in the cast are Martha Mattox, John Sainpolis, Brinsley Shaw, Alec Frances and Pat Hartigan.

Betsy is Back

Betsy Anne Hisle, popular 4½-year-old picture baby, has just returned from a holiday with her grandparents in Seattle. Betsy is one of the Denishawn dancers. While in the north she danced for several charity affairs, and a number of receptions and parties were given in her honor. She also appeared in a little original sketch, written especially for her, at the Strand Theatre there.

Betsy Ann may be remembered as one of the first prize winners in the Best Baby Contest held by the Hollywood News last November. She also holds the distinction of being the youngest member of the Motion Picture Division of the Red Cross, and the youngest official worker during the drive this past winter.

In Two Films on One Stage

Raymond Griffith is engaged in two productions on the same stage at the Goldwyn studios. His characterizations are the "crime deflector" in Clarence Badger's "Red Lights," and the spendthrift, adopted son of a famous surgeon in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three." The companies are working side by side in order to facilitate Griffith's changing of characters. He has a portable dressing room between the two sets.

Lou is No Kin of His

Michael Teilegen, who has been playing heavy bits on the stage and screen in the east and in Hollywood, is in no way related to the famous Lou, nor does he claim to be. For some time he worked under the assumed name of Economan, so people would not think he was attempting to capitalize the name of the eminent Greek actor. Upon the advice of friends, however, he is now using his real name, and is determined to make it mean as much in his particular sphere as that of the great stage lover means to the footlight realm. In facial contour he resembles Lon Chaney to a slight degree.

Viola Dana Convalescent

Viola Dana is at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles recovering from an operation for appendicitis performed by Dr. Maurice Kahn. The little Metro star had been ailing since the death of her mother several months ago. Upon her complete recovery Miss Dana will resume her work before the camera at the Metro studios. Just a short time before going to the hospital Miss Dana signed a new long term contract with Metro whereby she would appear in special productions only.

Scenario Editor at 24

Winifred Dunn, 24, has assumed the duties of scenario editor at the Metro studios. The appointment was announced by Joseph W. Engel, first vice-president and general manager of that organization's West Coast studios.

Miss Dunn is believed to be the youngest scenario editor either here or in the East. She came to the coast more than a year ago to take charge of the scenario department for Sawyer-Lubin productions for Metro. She assisted in editing and titling "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Tourneur Has New Story

After months of search covering the reading of hundreds of original manuscripts and scores of novels and plays, Maurice Tourneur has at last decided on the vehicle for his next production which is to be presented by M. C. Levee through First National release. The story selected is "The Brass Bottle," by F. Anstey, well known English author. "The Brass Bottle" ran for three years on the London stage. The continuity for the Tourneur production is being written by Charles Maigne. Tourneur's contract with First National calls for four big feature productions, the first of which is "The Isle of Lost Ships," just been completed and which will be released early next month.

Dusky Star With "Bull"

Hunt Stromberg has engaged Douglas Carter, perhaps the best known colored comedian on the screen, for a prominent role in "An Eskimo Spy," the next Bull Montana comedy for Metro. Carter, better known to the studio as "High Pockets," is hailed as the Bert Williams of the screen, and recently scored a personal hit in several Owen Moore features, notably "The Poor Simp," "Love is an Awful Thing" and "Modern Matrimony." Florence Gilbert and "Chuck" Reisner are also cast for important roles in "An Eskimo Spy."

Rehearsed by Chaplin

Carl Miller, supporting Edna Purviance in her starring vehicle "Public Opinion," written and directed by Charles Chaplin at his studios, is being rehearsed by the famous comedian in the sequence that ushers in scenes of great tensity. The photography is to be taken next week. Mr. Miller, in the production, is a painter and will shortly be active at his easel in painting the portrait of Miss Purviance.

Walked Away With Dance!

Jack Pickford and Alice Lake walked away with the Ambassador's Dancing Contest Silver Trophy at the Cocoanut Grove on the evening of February 6th, thereby winning over May McAvoy, Bessie Love, Katherine McDonald and a host of other well-known stars. Jack had been defeated in the semi-finals the week before, when he danced with his sister Lottie, and came back determined to win the following week.

Blanche Sweet is Back

Blanche Sweet has returned from her short vacation on a dairy farm, having gained fifteen pounds. A large production company is said to be soliciting her services to appear in a well known story before she appears in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" under the direction of her husband, Marshall Neilan.

To Get Views Before Cutting

When should a picture be criticized? Rupert Julian, Universal's super-jewel director of "Merry-Go-Round," has invited all the critics of Los Angeles to answer this question at a special preview of the film to be held within the next two weeks. Julian is of the opinion that a picture should be criticized before the final cutting so the director can obtain the reviewers' notes before the picture is shown to the public. "Merry-Go-Round" is now in about 100,000 feet and Julian is rushing the cutting so the film will be reduced to between fifteen and twenty reels for the first preview. It will be twelve reels in length when released.

Veteran Finishes New Film

Belle Stoddard, wife of the late Paul Meniffee Johnstone, and aunt of Frank Mayo, well-known film star, has just finished a four-week engagement with the Paul Gerson Co., playing the part of Mrs. Dot in "The Cricket on the Hearth." Years ago Miss Stoddard played "Bertha" with the veteran actor, Joseph Jefferson on the legitimate stage.

Hope Becomes Bright Hope

At the end of his search for an unknown girl to play the leading role in the Paramount production of "Hollywood," James Cruze, who will direct the feature, found Miss Hope Drown, daughter of Clarence Drown, manager of the Los Angeles Orpheum. Miss Drown has had no picture experience. However, she has played ingenue leads in stock in San Diego, where Mr. Cruze discovered her. This young lady, who has received the most flattering offer ever extended an "unknown" performer, will be supported by every star in the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

Satire on Phone Service

Hugh Hoffman has finished another scenario for Gladys Walton, and production begins immediately. This time it is a telephone story entitled "Crossed Wires." King Baggot is the author of the story, which is a satire on the present-day brand of telephone service. Mr. Baggot is also the director. Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Baggot are a strong team, and their work, with Gladys Walton as the star, is attracting wide attention.

Ann Little to Star For "U"

Ann Little is playing the lead in the Universal serial of "The Eagle's Talons," which will be produced under the direction of Duke Worne. This is the seventh chapter-play Mr. Worne has been assigned by Universal and it will serve as the initial serial in which Miss Little has had a part for that organization, although she has worked for Mr. Worne in other productions, including "The Blue Fox," and "The Man of the North," both serials. Al Wilson has been engaged to supply the aeroplane thrills which will figure prominently in the new picture.

Another in "Red Lights"

Charles B. Murphy has been added to the cast of "Red Lights," a Goldwyn production, directed by Clarence Badger. The cast already consists of a list of celebrities including Marie Prevost, Raymond Griffith, Johnnie Walker, Alice Lake, Dagmar Godowsky, Lionel Belmore, William Worthington, Jean Hersholt and Frank Elliot.

The preview of the Clifford E. Elfelt production of "Danger," starring J. B. Warner, has been postponed until Monday evening, February 19th. It will take place at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, and there will be two showings, one at 7:30 and the other at 8:45 o'clock.

Monty Banks has just completed a flying round trip from Hollywood to San Francisco in his speedy motor car. The object was to talk to a couple of millionaires about a picture project in which the popular comedian is interested. Although he is reticent, his smiles indicate all's well.

Lloyd Hughes has been chosen as "the typical model American leading man of the cinema" by a prominent Australian film magazine.

demands of any downtown, uptown or community house.

We like everything about "What a Wife Learned" excepting the title. It is plainly a title calculated to make a bid for the patronage of the public still swept off its feet by the "Why-Do-Girls-Leave-Home" promise of seeing some sensational secrets revealed. It surely is high time for producers to discontinue hanging up hopes on this sort of unadulterated buncombe. It not only is undignified, but places good pictures on the lower basis of the dime museum. "What a Wife Learned" is a title which indicates the presentation of some choice morsels for gossip on delicate subjects, and, it will attract on this score. Yet, when the curious see it, they will be disappointed, because it is, in reality, a clean picture of good purpose. It has to do with the complications which follow the marriage of a girl ambitious to achieve a literary career and it presents in an interesting way the clashes possible under such circumstances. There is a big spectacular thrill, too—a flood scene which is quite realistic. Marguerite De La Motte deserves the bulk of the credit for putting the human side of this story across. She proves the kind of a heroine who never loses anyone's fullest sympathy. Milton Sills and John Bowers are satisfactory in their respective roles.

"Poor Men's Wives," as it is finally released with a footage of 6900 feet, is not Gasnier's best work by any means. On the contrary, it is entirely too ordinary to serve as an index to the extraordinary Gasnier. The fault may lie somewhere else—most probably in the department where the Schulberg stories are selected and prepared for the screen. At any rate, despite its shortcomings, especially its triteness and antiquated methods of treatment, "Poor Men's Wives" will undoubtedly have a quite wide vogue in popular-price circles and it deserves something better than flat failure. It is worth the price of admission, just to see Barbara LaMarr and David Butler work with two unusually clever child artists, Muriel MacCormac and Mickey McBan, who, if given a little leeway, might have almost stolen the picture, for little Muriel displays some remarkable dramatic ability and little Mickey amuses royally. The story unfolded is one which will appeal to those who find life one unending series of grappling with problems wherein shortage of coin of the realm is involved much to a natural annoyance. It will not displease anyone of any class, but it will not be proclaimed a Gasnier masterpiece.

It is being freely predicted that Jackie Coogan's production of "Oliver Twist," now current, is going to "make" several of the artists in the supporting cast and in this connection Lewis Sargeant is mentioned most frequently. He plays the part of Noah Claypool in the picture and his work has elicited special comment from the reviewers. Sargeant will be best remembered for his portrayal of the title role in the Lasky production of "Huckleberry Finn." One of his next notable screen appearances will be in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune."

Actual filming of the Mowat production of "The Man Who Cheated" has been started at the Hollywood Studios. This forthcoming production is especially interesting for the reason that it will serve as the medium for a screen debut for Lucy Beaumont, noted as "the greatest mother on the stage," who recently quit the footlights to become an exponent of the silent drama.

one of the offices, and I recognized him as being Mr. Wild, the general manager. Well, I might as well meet him now as later thought I, but before the casting director could introduce me the general manager came right up to Mr. Gentle and said, "When I tell you to get out of the studio I mean it," and proceeded to throw Steve out.

I was surprised at this display of acrobatics, and went out to Steve who was lying on the sidewalk. He picked himself up with my help, and explained that he resigned his position just before he met me in the front office.

I then told him what I really thought of him, talking to me when he wasn't working himself. There is nothing more useless than a casting director who is unemployed. The fact is, it is a funny profession. You take an actor, even if he isn't working he is still an actor. The same thing applies to any trade, but you take a casting director, when he isn't working, he is nothing.

I was very angry over the entire affair, and got more angry when I heard the phone girl laugh. For the second time I wished I were a girl, but this time because I wanted to cry, my heart was broken. I don't mind a broken heart, but what got me mad was as I was leaving the studio grounds I heard the telephone girl say, "The ball-room scene is tomorrow."

Coming Back

will consume less than half a reel of film!

Speaking of "Ben Hur," calls to mind the interest in the selection of the cast for this picture which is being exhibited in the film colony here. Actors who have no ambition to play the title role themselves are keenly interested in knowing which of their co-workers will be given the coveted part.

A group of studio workers were commenting upon the long delay which has preceded the making of the picture the other day, when Gaston Glass, happening along, heard the last of their remarks.

"Why, of course, they are delaying and for a very good reason," said Gaston with a knowing wag of his head. "They have got the real Ben Hur and they are just dallying with the subject now until he is ready to take the part."

"What's his name?" demanded half a dozen voices in unison.

"He's a general favorite, all right," said Glass, "and he's a wonderful screen type, but he won't be ready to play the part for about eighteen years. They are just sparing until Jackie Coogan will be muscular enough for the requirements."

SQUIBBS ON SCREENLAND

Neely Edwards, Universal comedy star, has purchased half interest in a lion and he says as soon as he saves up a little more money he is going to buy the other half. His purpose in owning a whole lion is, he's going to have it trained to play opposite him in his comedies—very opposite to him with very strong iron bars separating them. "It's the public clamor for animal 'stuff' that forces me to take my life in my hands, but I'm game even if it is a wild game," he says.

Final preparations are being made to film the sixth and final W. C. Tuttle Adventure Magazine story at the Berwill Studios with William Fairbanks as the star. Mr. Fairbanks indicates he will abandon his work of being a western hero and embrace straight leading men roles on account of the war censors are waging against western pictures.

Eric Mayne finished with Gloria Swanson in "Prodigal Daughters," at the Lasky Studios one day and went to work in a Thomas H. Ince feature at the Culver City studios the next day. More evidence of the fact that it's a busy age in filmdom.

"Main Street" is now far advanced on the highway to completion as a motion picture at the Warner Brothers Studios, and, Alan Hale, who is interpreting the character of Bjorstan, the Swedish janitor, is authority for the quip that "it's bound to prove a fine avenue of escape for those needing first-class entertainment" and that "it ought to block the traffic on any street graced by a theatre."

After taking a fling at co-starring with Shirley Mason in the Bernard Durning production of "The Eleventh Hour," Charles (Buck) Jones is back at his old game, starring on his own hook and alone. He has just started his latest William Fox special entitled "Snowdrift," and, more than incidentally, he has a new leading lady—one of exceptional promise—Dorothy Manners by name, and, the so-called "most beautiful brunette on the screen" by fame.

Martha Mattox, who is now playing the part of the spinster housekeeper in the Goldwyn production of "Three Wise Fools," made it a point to be among the first to congratulate Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis on their marriage the other day. Miss Mattox was among Lloyd's very first friends in pictures and she was present when he signed his first contract.

Every Little Comment Has a Meaning All Its Own

"Griever Buys Rights to 'Only a Shop Girl,'" reads a trade paper head-line. Was it because he grieved for her?

They say youth-restoring glands can be purchased in London now for $15 apiece. Just wait a while longer—the ten-cent stores will have 'em on sale yet.

We frequently receive letters requesting information on how to get into the movies. You tell 'em, ceiling—they look up to you, and they can't get at you so easily.

If it is true that about seventy-six especially popular photoplayers get the bulk of the engagements, the screen still has it on Heinz. He boasts only fifty-seven varieties.

Motion picture production is at a standstill throughout Europe now. Why stand still, European producers? Why not move—to Southern California!

It being just as human to air views as it is to err does not justify the implication that it's perfectly all right to air errors proudly. In other and plainer words, he who boasts of having been intoxicated is foolish.

Hollywood is not booming. It is merely growing into the proportions of a great, large city rapidly and consistently. In about another five years, this chee-ild will be nearly as big as its Pa, L. A.

Perchance M. Coue's reason for hastening back to his native France was to undertake curing some of the ills besetting his country. It is extremely obvious that France is not getting better and better in any way nowadays.

The subject acknowledged to be the most popular with the American public is, the screen. This makes it inexplicable why most newspapers give sports twice as much space as is devoted to the movies. It would be interesting to read the explanation of some newspaper manager.

If indications mean anything, the prospect of the motion picture doubling in size and importance within the next three years is a very bright one—far too bright to make dark views of pessimists tolerable in the least way. Wherein there must be perfect harmony in the unending rendition of the Song of Optimism.

It is reported that the drug ring has organized to fight "government persecution." Presumably the dope magnates are demanding the full right of "the seize" of human lives without interference and with immunity to the punishment meted out to other murderers.

Someone has suggested the abolition of all forms of slap-stick comedy and now we are breathlessly awaiting the startling news of a serious uprising among bakers of custard pies, who will naturally resent having their bread and butter snatched right out of their hands by a lot of reformers.

Predictions of a new screen technique are being made in many quarters with increasing persistency. Now if there were only a few predictions of the early change of policy which makes adaptations such a popular sport among producers, the cup of the advocates of the well-known "original" might not be so devoid of cheer.

According to the newspapers, when a pretty girl lifted her skirt so very slightly in crossing a muddy street, two passing automobiles were wrecked. All of which proves there is no such a thing as a sphinx driving automobiles in these ultra-modern days of woman's greatest achievements in putting men into a daze!

Commercial avarice and the cinema art will not mix, which explains why the motion picture industry has been cursed with so many oily and watered blue-sky propositions none of which have ever panned out anything except grief to the deceived investors. Meanwhile the film industry still owes it to itself to be rid of fly-by-nighters in this day of its greatest importance.

Rodolph Valentino is now resorting to public speech-making in waging his campaign against Famous Players-Lasky. This is more than could be expected of an exponent of the silent art. Perchance Ruddy is bent on showing 'em how a screen sheik can shriek. Nevertheless, Lasky or Zukor are still dodging the ordeals of waxing forensic.

Now since everybody is in favor of keeping salacious photoplays in disfavor, it's high time for the chap who would chase dollars at the expense of public morals to repair to the tall timbers for extensive repairs of his code of ethics. Whoever puts suggestive scenes on the screen is a bane to the cinema as a popular art and his removal from the sphere of activity will be a boon much deserved by the whole industry.

William P. S. Earle Pictures, Inc.

Announces that production will begin at once on the New Art Masterpiece

"Tut-ankh-amen"

(A Romance of Ancient Egypt 3000 Years Ago)

From the Novel Soon to Be Published

Mr. Earle, who has directed some of the biggest successes--such as WITHIN THE LAW [with Alice Joyce], THE LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER, THE LAW DECIDES, WOMANHOOD, MARY JANE'S PA, THE BROKEN MELODY, THE WOMAN'S GAME, THE BETTER WIFE, THE ROAD OF AMBITION, and over thirty other features--has been preparing for the past six months for a gigantic Egyptian picture by a totally new process, and those who are clamoring for more beauty and art in motion pictures are asked to watch our production, which will be the first of its kind to be released.

Mary Pickford Springs Some Sensations

Mary Pickford poured oil on the wheels of progress at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios the other day when she announced that she would start work next week. And with this announcement she incidentally exploded a few bombshells, for Mary is going to produce two pictures at once, neither of which will be "Faust," although she stated a short time ago she would turn this into celluloid.

"My first new play is to be an original story," she said, "under the working title of 'Rosita,' but before it is complete I expect to commence work on 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall,' the script for which has already been prepared."

When asked why she had decided not to film "Faust" Miss Pickford explained, "As a matter of fact, I have merely decided to postpone 'Faust.' Each star, you see, has her own especial following and it seems best after careful analysis based on correspondence from those who are interested in my plays, as well as upon a survey made through our various exchange offices, not to step suddenly out of the type of story the public has been accustomed to associating me with into anything quite so dramatic as 'Faust.'"

The new story, the final title for which will be decided later, is from the pen of a European dramatic editor and was brought to this country by Mr. Lubitsch. The scenario has been prepared by Edward Knoblock, noted dramatist, who also wrote the script, in collaboration with Lubitsch, for "Faust."

In "Rosita" Miss Pickford will attempt her most pretentious screen undertaking. Sets for this picture it is understood will outdo those for Doug's "Robin Hood." The story is a colorful romance built against the historical background of fifteenth century Spain, and Miss Pickford will assume the role of a dancing girl. There will be a mediaeval king, portrayed, perhaps, by Holbrook Blinn of "Bad Man" fame. And if negotiations can be arranged, Maurice Chevalier, at present the musical comedy rage of Paris, will play opposite Miss Pickford as leading man. The picture will be directed by Ernest Lubitsch, who was specially engaged by Miss Pickford to do "Faust." For "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," the star expects to employ another director, for she hopes to step out of "Rosita" as soon as her scenes are finished, leaving Mr. Lubitsch to complete the picture with the remainder of the cast while she goes on with "Dorothy Vernon."

"Rosita" promises to supply a vehicle for Miss Pickford's emotional powers and at the same time she hopes it will mark a distinct phase in her transition to the dramatic pinnacle to which she aspires. With this play as the first stepping stone toward a new type of art for her, and with "Dorothy Vernon" as the second, she believes the public will be sufficiently accustomed to the heavier roles to look with favor upon her as "Marguerite" in "Faust."

"While the new story will be strongly dramatic," the little star explained, "it will be sprinkled with natural, spontaneous comedy, but with none of the made-to-order kind, created, to use studio vernacular, through the medium of 'business.' I intend to make this picture 'handwork,' not a factory product, and once we get started I hope the task to be complete in ten weeks."

Golden Opportunity for Photoplayers to Set Fashions

Unless all signs fail, fashions will be more or less influenced by the Monroe Doctrine Centennial to be celebrated next summer by the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. While there has been a tendency to revive the kerchief, head decorations and full skirts, the costuming of many of the historical episodes to be presented in pageants and floats doubtless will have a distinct effect in encouraging a trend of the modes already marked. Here seems to be a chance for the motion picture stars to set the styles for 1923.

In the time of President Monroe there was a great divergence of fashions, for every city and state had distinctive styles of dress, according to the slowness of transmission of news from Paris or New York. For instance, Boston dressed with marked deference to Puritan influences, while Philadelphia was true to its Quaker traditions. Washington was the center of fashions during the administration of the fifth President, because Mrs. Monroe, a New Yorker by birth, had passed a number of years in Paris when her husband was envoy to France.

Portraits of Mrs. Monroe are rare indeed, but it is known that she was a brunette, tall and dignified. She was fond of velvet gowns then much in vogue, and it is recorded that she wore a black velvet much trimmed with lace at one of the White House levees. The fact that she and her two married daughters appeared with "bare neck and arms" was mentioned by contemporary writers who were a bit shocked perhaps. Pearl necklaces were in high favor then as now.

The ornamentation of the coiffure, now apparently so popular, led to the wearing of caps a hundred years ago. From Paris Mrs. Monroe brought the fashion of wearing three nodding white plumes in her hair. Plumes were later supplemented with flowers and ribbons and in time the cap of lace and furbelows which persons of middle age may recall in remembering their grandmothers, were introduced. Hoops and crinolines of various shapes were worn a hundred years ago, although they did not expand to absurd circumferences until later.

All this information is the result of research work done in preparation for costuming pageants and floats for the Revue and Exposition. Costume pictures have been so successful lately and have proved so convincing of the ability of our actresses to wear old-time garments charmingly that it is to be expected they will demonstrate how lovely they can appear in modes of a day long antedating photography, a day when daguerrotypes were miracles in the line of portraiture.

Murray Spencer, ex-Yale man and now striving to become one of the screen idols, has been selected as president of the Old Yale Dramatic Club of Southern California. Several of the members of this organization are successful motion picture actors.

From U to You By MALCOLM S. BOYLAN

It certainly is a rare day when an actor, alone and unaided, creates such a disturbance that he brings out the fire and police departments en masse, but that is precisely what Brandon Hurst did recently.

The wonder is greater when one knows that Hurst is known as an exceptionally mild-mannered man, and plays the role of Jehan in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is directing at Universal City with Lon Chaney as the star.

It all came about when Mr. Hurst in driving down Cahuenga avenue to avoid collision with a speeder, swerved into the curb. His brakes failed to work properly and he crashed into a water plug, snapping it off. While the actor sat appalled, a stream of water shot a hundred feet into the air.

Some excited citizen phoned in a riot call to the police and also sent in an alarm to the fire department. In a few minutes the modest and retiring actor found himself the center of more noise and excitement than he had ever before commanded.

"Rout 1, Box 4, Caney, Kansas.

It would hardly be fair to posterity to print the name of the man who wrote this, but the letter is on file in the offices of the Universal Picture Corporation at Universal City. Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor, was promptly notified of this virgin gold mine of literature and negotiations were opened at once to secure a gross of assorted experiences of the world of big business about which scenario writers know nothing.

"Every time I get a vacation something happens to spoil it and I have to work most of the time."

That's Patsy Ruth Miller's plaint. She has always protested against the high glory of vacations. Her faith in them has been at low ebb, with one vacation after another during her screen work turning into a round of business engagements, calls back to the studio for "retakes" and the like.

But now the real, bonafide vacation has arrived for her. Right in the midst of the first three months of hard work on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," in which Patsy plays Esmeralda, she has been idle for five or six days. What's more, the indications are that she won't work for another week. Needless to say, her faith is returning.

The first three or four days she passed in the various occupations that beset the path of an actress and can't be avoided, like getting clothes and costumes fitted, pictures made, interviews arranged and the ordinary, every-day bothers of life taken care of. But the immediate future holds prospects of the theater, reading, motoring and hiking.

For a year Bert Roach has been doing comedy roles at Universal City with Neely Edwards and other comedy stars. He is considered excellent in that line.

But every two months or so the team work of Edwards and Roach in "Nervy Ned" comedies is broken up by the request of some director for the services of Roach in feature production, in which he plays comedy characters with an excellent sense of the difference between such roles in comedies and features.

The last time he was withdrawn from comedy ranks was when Herbert Henley was making "The Flirt," a multiple reel adaptation of Booth Tarkington's novel. Bert played a very human "boob" in the story, the fellow who is "boob" enough to marry "The Flirt" in the end.

Just the other day Wallace Worsley, director, and Perley Poore Sheehan, adapter, Dick Sutherland, who is one of the hits of "The Shriek of Araby," starring Ben Turpin, which attraction is held over for a second week, beginning tomorrow at the Symphony Theatre. Dick has won a place all his own as the most terrifying villain on the screen. He is now providing thrills for the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," now in the course of production.

stopped shooting scenes for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" long enough to wonder just who could do a comedy bit in the Gondolier ball room sequence just right. They decided on Bert Roach. So he doffed his hobo rags and donned the wig and garb of a fifteenth century gallant, and played the bit.

Now he will play in another comedy before he begins work on a role in Virginia Valli's Universal Jewel vehicle, "Up the Ladder," which Hobart Henley is directing.

A very brief career is behind the work of one member of the cast supporting Priscilla Dean in "Drifting" at Universal City. His name is Bruce Guerin and he is a rather remarkable little chap of three years of age, who finished work at another studio at midnight one day and went to Universal City for the Dean picture the next day.

Bruce began his "histrionic career" as a babe in his mother's arms. He has become a sufficiently seasoned professional now to have his own little canvas-back chair and the manner of a veteran.

Miss Dean has the support of such well-known players as Wallace Beery, Matt Moore, William V. Mong, Anna May Wong and others.

Laura La Plante, who was taken seriously ill after completing the leading role opposite William Desmond in "Around the World in Eighteen Days," has recovered and returned to Universal City to begin work again before the camera.

Her reward for consistently capable work with Universal in two-reel westerns, chapter plays and comedies, comes in the form of an assignment to the cast in Edward (Hoot) Gibson's next starring vehicle as his leading woman. It is her first five-reel feature lead at Universal City, but her past performances are a clear indication of her fitness for her screen leading roles.

Edward Sedgwick will direct Gibson in "Katy Didd." It's his own story with a continuity from his own pen. Production will start when sets and casting are completed.

Art Acord feels like following up the "dog fad" in pictures by putting a new canine star on the horizon. He thinks he has a "world-beater."

Acord's dog, who has been playing an important role at his master's side throughout the Universal chapter play production, "The Oregon Trail," which is just drawing to a close under Edward Laemmle's direction, is the seventh generation of a canine clan raised by the star on the famous Acord ranch in Nevada. Acord has trained him to do all the well-known stunts and some that are new, and the eagerness of Rex before the camera is a tribute to his master's understanding and a guarantee that the embryonic star wouldn't be a "flop."

WHAT HASN'T HE PLAYED!

Eric Mayne, who will play the part of Lord Carnaby, in the comedy drama, "Just Suppose" at the Mason Opera House on Monday next, has had a long and varied theatrical career. Mr. Mayne was with the Drury Lane Company in London for seven years, and played in the Drury Lane Productions in every theatre of importance in the United Kingdom.

In 1913 he arrived in New York with "The Drury Lane Company of America" playing Captain Sartoris in "The Whip." In 1914 he came to Los Angeles with the same play appearing in the same part at the Majestic Theatre. He was with the late Charles Frohman for three years, playing "Bernard Dufresne" in "Zaza" in London and the provinces.

He appeared in leading characters at the Lyceum Theatre, London, for five years playing in the eighteen productions which were made, during that period—such parts as "Lord Robert Ure" in "The Christian"; Philip Christian, in "The Manx Man"; Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet"; the King in "Hamlet"; Hildebrand in "The Proud Prince."

Mr. Mayne was also under the management of Sir Martin Harvey, Sir Charles H. Hawtrey, Mrs. Langtry, C. B. Cochran, Robert Courtneidge and others. In New York, he was under the management of Mr. William A. Brady for several years, both in plays and pictures.

98 Pounds of Star and $25,000 Worth of "Extras"

By RAY H. LEEK

Enter the ninety-eight pound starlet!

Ethel Shannon, declared to be the living embodiment of "The Little Disturber," as conceived by D. W. Griffith, again has lived up to her practice of attaining success by violating all the precedents of the picture industry.

Just when most producers are agreeing that the stately maid of man's size inches will be the future vogue, Miss Shannon has been signed for a long term of years to enact featured roles in special productions—the tiniest adult star in captivity.

Appropriately enough, she has joined the playing forces of a producer who already has gained a reputation of doing things differently, B. P. Schulberg. Although the winsome Miss Shannon has been elevated to a rank equal to stardom in most organizations, she is not technically a star. For the casts in which she will appear will be made up of other stars and featured players of like importance.

To further prove that accepted rules of procedure are not being followed, Mr. Schulberg announced at the time this news became public, that he was seeking two more promising girl players—either with or without experience, beautiful or plain, blonde or brunette! All that is required is that they possess the ability to record their emotions on the screen in the forceful manner that has brought Miss Shannon to the fore in such productions as "The Hero" and "The Girl Who Came Back."

Awaiting the fortunate girls are salaries ranging from $200 to $2,000 a week.

No more certain means of gauging the progress of the screen art is to be found than through the re-making of famous productions of a few years ago. The latest example of the "re-made" film will be found in Goldwyn's "The Spoilers," being filmed by Jesse D. Hampton. Rex Beach's picturesque story originally was filmed by Col. Selig more than ten years ago. It is said that the present production will cost many times that of the Selig picture.

Mary Pickford's second production of "Tess of the Storm Country," also at great cost, was declared by some critics to fall short of her original effort. It remains to be seen whether this filming of the Rex Beach story will mark ten years of picture progress.

Independent pictures again scored this week when Victor Schertzinger signed a long term contract under which he will head a producing unit for Preferred Pictures that will bear his name.

His selection for this important post—for he has been named to make a series of ambitious all-star pictures for the company—is a recognition of his efforts in the same capacity for such stars as Charles Ray, Katherine MacDonald, Mabel Normand, Geraldine Farrar and others of a similar caliber.

Mr. Schertzinger is one of those versatile individuals who prove the theory that art is art regardless of the medium through which it speaks. First an actor, he became a composer, musical director, producer of light operas and finally chose to address his audience through the medium of the directorial megaphone.

But even here he permitted his personal certain liberties. Instead of the conventional megaphone, Mr. Schertzinger uses his violin to interpret his thoughts. In his future Al Lichtman attractions he says the violin will be given an opportunity to register before the camera as it has in the past.

A spirited election in the ranks of the Wampas, the organization of advertising and publicity men who are waging a campaign for truth in picture advertising, has resulted in the election of Joseph Jackson as the new head of the body.

"I am for the same policy for which the organization always has stood—truth in advertising and publicity," said Mr. Jackson, "whatever else we may do this year, the Wampas will not depart from this hard fast rule."

Just a hint of the cost of a big picture production was given to the uninitiated in Hollywood the other evening when Tom Forman sent out word that he wanted to SOLVING THE FOREIGN STAR PROBLEM—BRING 'EM OVER!

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

"A Gentleman From America" is a pleasing comedy-drama having to do with the experiences of an American doughboy in France during the final days of the recent World War, and the story is so deftly put together that no one will chastise Raymond L. Schrock, the author, for reminding us of a catastrophe. "Hoot" Gibson, the star, gives a performance which stamps him as an artist who does not have to depend on cowboy stunts to maintain himself in the picture-loving eye. In short, he has demonstrated definitely that he is first of all, a good actor, and, secondly, one of the world's champion cowboys. Personally we do not hesitate to predict really great dramatic triumphs for "Hoot," because we are convinced he has mastered the fine points of the science of being a true exponent of the dramatic art as it has been developed for the screen. There could be more photoplays of the order of "A Gentleman From America" inasmuch as there has been a scarcity of such stories ever since the vogue of "The Man From Home," which proved one of the biggest of stage hits.

Frankly, it has been difficult for the average picture-goer to understand why Agnes Ayres is a star! And, it must be confessed that she has disappointed in several of her screen characterizations. But, she seems to have found her plane to some extent in "Racing Hearts," her latest picture for Paramount. In this photodrama of geared-up action, she does the best work of her career—not truly stellar performing of artistic finesse, but satisfactory interpreting of a role for which she is suited. Here is an automobile story quite unusual in that it has provided opportunity for just about the most exciting auto races ever filmed. During some of the more exciting race moments, it is impossible to restrain yourself from getting up on your feet and letting out an obstreperous whoop. Near the finish there is a mishap in the form of a "spill" and this all but makes one swoon. To attain such heights of arousing excitement is an achievement for which Paul Powell deserves credit. One of the unusually interesting features of "Racing Hearts" is, Jimmy Murphy, the real thing in the automobile-racing world, who appears briefly in the role of a driver out of a job. Richard Dix is in the cast contributing those ingratiating qualities of his, and Theodore Roberts is also among them in his usual flawless acting form.

The combination of an enthralling love theme and a first-class lot of action is a good one for a motion picture. William Fox has this combination in "Truxton King," an adaptation from George Barr McCutcheon's sequel to "Graustark." This is one of those pictures which fits the requirements of any picture theatre, large or small, aristocratic or plebeian. John Gilbert in the title role is at his best and Jerome Storm contributes some of his best directorial ability. The supporting cast is well-chosen with Ruth Clifford and Otis Harlan winning top honors. The adventure element in this story is "just right" for Americans in view of the fact that Truxton King, a real American, is the adventurer in a foreign land and a thoroughly invincible one. His love-making is of that dashing, irresistible variety which could be aptly rescribed as "passion de gentle a la America." It would be surprising if "Truxton King" failed to make money for most any exhibitor, because it possesses all the

Everywhere in all branches of the motion picture industry, there is a marked tendency to establish more business-like methods. It having ceased to be a gambling game, necessity is once more proving the mother of invention, and new ways to make the business pay as a business are being invented on all sides with Will Hays taking something of an initiative in framing what he terms a Uniform Contract designed with the idea of placing the dealings between distributors and exhibitors on a sounder basis. Well, business is business even in the play world.

The popularity of exploiting motion picture attractions on the circus ballyhoo plan is showing signs of the inception of a waning. Many exhibitors, who heretofore have staged all kinds of "loud" stunts to attract attention to their features, are now almost totally abstaining from such tactics, depending upon more dignified advertising chiefly in newspapers. There seems to be a strong current of feeling against continuing the policy of making the fine art of cinema seem like a side-show proposition. It is just as well and most likely better.

One of the most reassuring movements of the present is that which has as its objective the making of photoplays with definite objectives for wholesome entertainment. Sensationalism is losing its grip on producers. Art is in the ascendancy, and, art is a good business proposition.

They were singing swan songs for serials not so long ago, but the public interest in the to-be-continued brand of motion pictures as a part of an evening's entertainment seems to have been revived and quite a number of theatres, which never before had shown chapter-plays, are advertising them strongly now and in some cases where they had been shown only at Saturday matinees, they are being made a part of the night program.

requisites of a steady money-maker, which is different from a fortune-maker and more dependable.

They are battling valiantly to keep "animal stuff" well within the category of "sure-fire." A good percentage of recent releases provided full quotas of scenes in which a big variety of beasts figure. Now Nell Shipman in "The Grub Stake," another story of the Klondike, has gone the limit with the featuring of animals. As an artist's model, persuaded to brave the hardships of a grub-staking campaign "away up north," she wields an influence similar to that of a snake-charmer among the bears and other wild beasts of a desolate district uninhabited by man. This is a typical outdoor picture in which there is much attention given to getting "shots" of beautiful landscapes. But, the story is devoid of any of those elements which arouse enthusiasm or even convince. An effort is made to build up suspense by delaying the arrival of rescuing officers of the Northwest Mounted Police until the very last minute, but it does not pan out well, because it is so very obvious that the rescue will be accomplished in spite of all. Miss Shipman has been striving for a place in the cinema sun as an outdoor girl for some time, and we admire her courage in being so persistent. However, it would seem that she might try being another sort of girl on the screen to an advantage, because she fails to impress as really a product of the life she seeks to have depicted in her pictures.

"Dollar Devils" as a title hits a mark—there are many of them, but the picture Victor Schertzinger has made under said title misses the mark of real drama by a wide margin. Its best point is its cast; the players save it from being hopelessly commonplace. Joseph Dowling, Cullen Landis, Eva Novak, Lyöia Knott and Hallam Cooley do some mighty good turns for the production, and Mr. Schertzinger should be glad he had them in his cast. The theme of this picture is rather allegorical having to do with little dollars which as veritable devils so often make enemies out of friends. There is a commendable attempt to blend humor and pathos, but somehow there always seems to be something missing which might round out each vital situation. In fact, this is one of those cases in which it is not easy to place one's finger on the chief fault. It certainly is not a picture for a theatre frequented by blasé people. It will probably do better in the smaller towns. It contains none of the Schertzinger handiwork so noticeable in the "The Kingdom Within."

Here's an out-an-out defi flung under the noses of censors bent on restraining the popularity of western stories on the screen. It's William Farnum in the William Fox production of "Brass Commandments," which is a "western" not minus the pistols and gun-play, which is supposed to be under the ban. Moreover, it is a rattling good picture of the older school de west. It is all familiar melodrama with the usual thrills and excitements of the cow country when a gang of cattle thieves are playing havoc with herds. There are the last-second rescues and the inevitable happy ending. But, Mr. Farnum adds virility to the big, upstanding westerner, who isn't afraid of Satan himself. Wanda Hawley is the girl at stake and she serves the purpose well while Tom Santschi revives interest in the old-time villain, who used to make 'em sit up and hiss. But, as we remarked before, it is rattling good entertainment and comes as something of a relief after seeing a surfeit of society and drawing-room dramas of colorless, unexciting plots.

Eric Mayne, popular character man of such screen successes as Mabel Normand's "Suzanna" and Gloria Swanson's "My American Wife," is going to try mixing a new love with an old love just for the experience of it. While he continues his activities in the film studios, he is going to portray one of the leading characters in a stage production of "Just Suppose" at Los Angeles. "Actors divide their time between the stage and screen in New York constantly, but it's not being done so much out west, and therefore my effort can be well called a decided experiment," Mr. Mayne says.

PETER, THE HERMIT, STARS IN PICTURE WHICH PROMISES TO MAKE HIM A SECOND COUE

By Charles Furthman

That Emile Coue, the eminent French scientist, may have sharp competition in America was indicated to many people who attended the pre-view showing at Hollywood's Apollo Theatre of "Follow Me," a feature photoplay in which Peter the Hermit, the film colony's most unusual character, in a stellar role essays to visualize a message bidding all the sick and maimed to be well again. It is not beyond the range of possibility that this picture might develop into a veritable sensation, because there will be countless hundreds of men and women who will probably find it beneficial to mentality and physique to behold the unfolding of a story in which an extraordinary man divests himself of extraordinary ideas concerning the highest ideals. W. H. Clifford wrote and directed this picture-play and it is evident the real life of Peter, his central character, gave him his inspiration.

To a good picture three things are very essential—a good story, a good story and lastly, a good story. It has been proved day after day in every possible way that nothing else is of much account. No good story can be so badly told as not to be better than a bad story told in any fashion. That is why there is still hope for the novices and less for the exhausted experts.

"Follow Me" is from the novices. If it were not for the fact that religious pictures are to be the coming thing for a while on the picture market, one would not have much to say about "Follow Me."

The one subject upon which the whole human race is constantly concentrated is the matter of what is right and what is wrong. This picture teaches faith only and that alone. It gives no quarter to anything else. Science is cast abruptly aside. Every human being from the bishop to the bum, from the saint to the outcast, is concerned in one way or another with the theme of this simple, soulful little production.

This picture, as a production, is a fair example of what the screen can do toward the interpretation of a real life theme. Peter Howard, who plays the part of Peter the Healer, depicts a good man both in soul and body and he is not in the least sorry for himself nor his calling, the story surrounds him with littleness, meanness and fakes, every form of trickery and selfishness comes in contact with him. The bright flame of his faith in his God and everybody burns without a flicker.

The whole thing with its simple conflict and romance is quite amazing, yet so self-evident, so utterly noble and yet so absolutely unconscious of its nobility that it grips you more gently but firmly than melodrama and squeezes your heart and soul and awakens your interest toward the divine more than pinch-back tragedy of the weak and helpless.

It illustrates amateurishly how the screen ought to get over a preachment to the young and unsophisticated. There is no foreign tongue, medievalism, maudlin advertisement of piety, no suggestion of any peculiar fad or cult or church or creed. Just that there is a Supreme Being—nothing more.

The titles have been echoed through the foothills of Hollywood by Peter the Hermit for some time. The part was nothing new to Peter, as he lives it in real life and he is looked upon by many of the natives as God's representative in the Movie World. He plays his part with an art that is little short of perfection. Pat O'Malley gets over his usual good work and nothing that we could say could hurt or help or help him with his large following of picture fans.

The pulling back of the curtain after the showing of the picture gave one Irishman sitting next to me the idea that the production was being hissed, but we quickly informed him before he had time to kill anyone that it was the curtain rings that made the hissing sound. He then informed me he thought those Coo-Coo Clans were in the house and were up to some of their dirty work.

One lone jealous writer even went so far as to volunteer to wager that the author of "Follow Me" had not seen the "Miracle Man" more than—twenty times or more. But no one is a fit judge to say what this picture will do or is going to do. One thing sure is Peter gave it his remarkable personality with a high ideal.

"COVERED WAGON," DESPITE SURPRISING DEFECTS, BIDS FAIR TO PROVE SENSATION

"The Covered Wagon" covers a multitude of elements which go to make up a great photoplay success and there is every indication it will be just that. Yet, the first three reels are marred by flat photography, the continuity is not up to standard and the construction is faulty to the extent that it failed to "get thoroughly under the skin" of its pre-view audience this week. This was partly due, no doubt, to the long, draggy titles and the further fact that they were too explanatory.

Two reels could be cut from the picture to an advantage and the avidity with which Johnny Fox, the boy, is shoved into every scene possible should be made less prominent.

The great outstanding saving grace of "The Covered Wagon" is the performance of the four male members of the cast. Particularly remarkable is the work of Alan Hale as the bad man, the creator of the main piece-de-resistance. If anyone needed any convincing of Mr. Hale's consummate skill as a delineator of a breathing, living character of fiction to the maximum degree of perfection, that conviction is assured in this sterling artist's dramatic interpretation in this picture.

Ernest Torrence, with a wonderful line of comedy relief, also scores a personal triumph. He proves he can do other things as well as he can perpetrate unprecedented villainy. And, Tully Marshall was not trailing far behind as a pal to Torrence. J. Warren Kerrigan, who is the hero of the story, makes an auspicious "come-back" to the screen and one of the first impressions he gives you is, he has aged for the better.

Of the women members of the cast, Lois Wilson is the most important and yet she has not anything to do except to walk in and out of close-ups. However, despite its surprising defects, many of which will undoubtedly be remedied before its release, "The Covered Wagon" bids fair to be a sure-fire attraction with the masses.

The last half of it moves so swiftly and is so exciting that one is prone to forget those first three reels. The several scenes between Hale and Torrence are classics with both artists at their best. The big fight between Hale and Kerrigan is a marvel of realism. The prairie fire is awe-inspiring and the buffalo hunt is one of the greatest achievements of the contemporary screen. The William Tell sequence between Torrence and Marshall deserves special mention and the attack by the Indians is a genuine thriller. Events coincident to all of these high spots grip and hold fast, and cause you to breath admiration for the director, James Cruze, whose tasks were so obviously herculean.

One of the inexplicable things about the whole thing is, why do they give the late Theodore Roosevelt all the credit for blazing the trails to the great Northwest? What about Fremont, who made five perilous expeditions and finally made the great survey for the Government. Why forget Daniel Boone and many others equally courageous trail-blazers of days before the revered Roosevelt's time?

Fight Stadium Much Filmed

The Hollywood Stadium, better known as "Hollywood's Friday evening retreat," is being figured in film productions regularly these days. Director Tom Mills, who is producing a series of pictures for Choice Productions, used the Stadium as a "location" last week, using twenty-two World War Veterans.

The outstanding mystery of Hollywood: Who the dickens is the "Look-Out" on Grauman's Egyptian Theatre?

BOOM IS IN SIGHT FOR U. S., SAYS, FILM HEAD

James R. Grainger, Vice President of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has arrived at the Culver City Studios for a conference of ten days with Vice President Abraham Lehr and with Marshall Neilan, whom he personally represents.

Mr. Grainger, who is making a tour of the country, said he had found business conditions much improved since the first of the year.

"The people have started going to the theatre again, but they are demanding big pictures," he stated. "I am convinced that the day of the so-called 'program' picture is gone forever."

At the Goldwyn Studios Mr. Grainger found the greatest activity and the biggest production schedule in the history of the company. Eight hundred people are on the payroll and eight units are either actually in production or preparing feature pictures. These are headed by Marshall Neilan, Erich von Stroheim, Rupert Hughes, King Vidor, Hugo Ballin, Jesse D. Hampton, Lambert Hillyer, Clarence Badger and Charles Brabin.

MENACE OF LEGAL WAR OVER MENACE FILM ENDS

The controversies between James Calnay and Angela C. Kaufman were settled when Isidor Morris, attorney for Calnay, made a satisfactory settlement whereby Calnay transferred all his rights, title and interest in the "The Greatest Menace" to Mrs. Kaufman.

"The Greatest Menace" was tied up in litigation by James Calnay for about a week as the result of a misunderstanding between him and Mrs. Kaufman. This litigation was dropped, however, as soon as they came to a settlement and therefore there is no further obstacle to prevent the immediate release of the picture.

Neilan Cast Growing

Marshall Neilan is getting to be such a connoisseur of talent that no less than a star suits him for even the smallest "bit" in his picture, "The Eternal Three." The cast now totals fifteen. Marion Aye, one of the latest additions, is to play the part of a maid, and Phillip Ryder, late rabbi of the "Abie's Irish Rose" touring company, has been enrolled as a doctor.

Stahl Selects Story

According to announcement by Louis B. Mayer, "Daughters of the Rich" has been selected by John M. Stahl for production as his next all-star offering through Associated First National. Work on the scenario is practically completed and the actual shooting of the picture will be started as soon as the cast is assembled.

DAREDEVIL DARES DEPARTURE

Here's Jack Giddings looking his dashing-est! For quite a while he has been one of the world's most fearless daredevils and as an adventurer in general he has few equals. He has won undying fame as a stuntman extraordinary in motion pictures, his favorite feats having to do with leaping from one flying aeroplane to another, bearding the dens of lions, tigers and such dangerous critters, and, wrecking automobiles while going at high speed. But now he is quitting all that kind of precarious endeavor—making a departure, as it were—to pursue his real profession, that of an actor of the ultra-dashing variety. Henceforth he will dedicate his life to interpreting drama instead of risking his life in wild adventures. He expects to start in a principal role in support of one of the foremost screen stars very soon.

Jack Giddings

CHAMP BEAUTY OF 1906

Frances Raymond, famous character actress of the screen as she is today. Seventeen years ago—the year of 1906—she was selected by a committee of celebrated artists and New York newspaper critics as the most beautiful bride of that whole year in all America. It was in that year she married David Henderson, this country's foremost theatrical producer then, and at which time she was at the height of her glory as one of the most popular musical comedy stars. She was a little vivacious soubrette with a wealth of golden hair. Now she is one of the most stately, most aristocratic-looking character artists in all picturedom. She is now supporting Dustin Farnum in "The Grail," which is being filmed by William Fox.

A BRITISH VALENTINO

Hugh White, British cinema favorite, proclaimed the Valentino of his native England by several London critics. He has just arrived in Hollywood to embrace the more golden opportunities of picture work in the film capitol of the world. Mr. White played heroic juvenile roles in B. and C. feature films. During the war he served as a lieutenant of the Scots Guards and won high distinction for his valor. He is of the upper social register in private life and was therefore a favorite of the aristocracy when he became a screen idol. Although he is the opposite to Valentino in type, he is said to interpret the silent drama in the dashing manner which has made Ruddy famous.

Lucy Beaumont was compelled to withdraw from the cast which is to present "Just Suppose" at the Mason Opera House because of the necessity of her devoting her whole time to enacting the mother role in the Mowat production of "The Man Who Cheated," now being made at the Hollywood studios.

DIRECTOR VICTIM OF SNOW EYES, A NEW ILL

Progress on "An Eskimo Spy," starring Bull Montana has been considerably slowed up because of a sudden, although mild attack of snow blindness on the part of Hunt Stromberg, director, according to word received at the office of the Hunt Stromberg Productions at the Metro studios. The company is now in Truckee securing some snow scenes for this subject, but production has been halted while Mr. Stromberg is confined to the hotel.

It is said that during the previous picture, the young producer suffered a mild attack of "Klieg Eyes," and the present location trip was brought about earlier in the production schedule than originally planned so that he might thus have temporary relief from the blinding glare of the studio lights.

"Klieg Eyes" are a common studio occurrence, although this is believed to be the first time any member of the industry has suffered with "Snow Eyes."

There is a possibility of Mr. Stromberg having to engage a director to complete this subject at Truckee.

WORK BEGUN ON UNITED STUDIO EXPANSION PLAN

Ground has been broken for the new administration building which is to be erected at the United studios. The building will occupy what has formerly been a garden facing Avenue B, opposite Stages one, two and three. The new construction work is being directed by H. B. Dygert, C. E., assistant technical director for the studio.

All of the streets of this 33-acre lot are to be paved, more stages built, a modern heating plant installed for the comfort of otherwise shivering artists and a large number of exterior sets raised to eliminate the necessity of producing companies making long journeys to distant locations.

Companies making First National releases at the United Studios now are: Edwin Carewe Productions ("The Girl of the Golden West"); Frank Borzage Productions ("Sands of Time"); Allen Holubar Production ("Slander the Woman"); Maurice Tourneur Productions, ("The Isle of Lost Ships"); James Young Productions, ("Wandering Daughters"). Norma Talmadge is soon to start work on "Ashes of Vengeance." Richard Walton Tully is to make "Triby" and Constance Talmadge is selecting her next First National vehicle.

Ford West, former Keith circuit entertainer, is slated for an important part in the next Herman picture.

COUE HAS FAITH IN HIS FILM AS AID-ALL

"The Message of Emile Coue," Educational's sensational two-reel attraction, is completed.

The final scenes were finished a few days ago at the New Rochelle studios of Motion Picture Arts, Inc., just a day or two before the great teacher of auto-suggestion sailed for France after his triumphant visit to the United States.

M. Coue arrived in New York after a sensational lecture tour which carried him as far west as Chicago where he was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the crowds that packed the lecture halls and clamored in vain for admission. He sailed for France Saturday, Feb. 10. Just before sailing time M. Coue issued a signed statement in which he gave the picture his heartiest endorsement and expressed the hope that the picture would prove of benefit to the millions who were unable to hear his lectures.

"Despairing of being able to carry my message of self-help through auto-suggestion to all those who waited for it here, I accepted the plan of my friends and gave it to the cinema which reaches millions throughout the entire country," said M. Coue.

"I found a sympathetic group of men who make moving pictures and working with them I have endeavored to place my message on the screen in such a manner as would be understood by everyone. Before the picture was made I went over the scenario time and again, and made sure that each point was brought out in the clearest possible way.

"The completed picture carries my message in the most graphic manner possible and I am glad to endorse it and give it my approval as the best possible picturization of what I have taught for a score of years and will teach until the end. Anyone seeing the picture will be able to understand, and I feel sure that hundreds of thousands will be helped to help themselves by seeing the lesson it tells.

"I consider the picture a masterpiece and I have no hesitation in entrusting to it the task of carrying my message to the people of America and the world, knowing full well that it will instruct millions where I can only reach hundreds. The message of helpful auto-suggestion must go on, and I feel sure this picture will carry it to every home in this country. More than this, I feel sure that the message will be properly carried and will give the greatest possible help to all who see it."

Louis Natheaux is playing the character of "Mitchell" for Louis Gasnier in "Mothers-in-laws," which picture features Gaston Glass.

UPON MAX LINDER'S ADVICE, AMERICA GAINS ANOTHER LAUGH-MAKER

Max Linder, the great French comedian, is responsible for Maurice Canonge, another great French comedian and likewise a great French tragedian, being among the very late arrivals in the Hollywood film colony.

"America will welcome you, because you can make them laugh when they want to laugh and you can make them cry when they want to cry, for in America they want what they want when they want it," Linder told Canonge.

"Ah, if that is so, I shall go to America and do my best for them," Maurice replied.

So that was that, and Maurice is on the ground and all ready to begin his versatile efforts before the clicking cameras of Southern California.

For the last three years Canonge has been "the rage of Paris" so far as the stage was concerned. Wherever he played, the gendarmes had to be to prevent the crowds from pushing in the front of theatres. His performance as star of the Revue De Marigny was proclaimed by all Parisian critics as the master comedy performance of the decade and he was so amusing to the theatre-goers of the gay French capitol that they kept him busy in the one show in the same playhouse for two whole years.

Previously he had been the foremost favorite at the Theatre Nationale De L'Odeon, where he not only established himself as a great comedian, but also won acclaim as one of his native land's best tragedians, for he played in a variety of productions.

Even before this he was one of the most popular of screen favorites throughout France and most of Europe, he having been a leading star of the Pathe organization for nearly three years.

"The American city most talked-of in France is Hollywood and after my first week in this place I can understand why it is so famous," Canonge says. "It is because it is the undisputed center of a very, very great American art, the cinema, the art which everybody in Europe recognizes as the great American way of expressing ideas and ideals of this fine New World. Naturally I am happy to be here and I shall try my best to help make the cinema grow to bigger things by contributing in my own modest way whatever of dramatic and comedy art I have learned in my twenty years' pursuit of it in my native land."

ACTOR FINDS A TWO-HEADED SCORPION

Joe Roberts

Joe Roberts, well-known favorite of countless screen comedies, lays no claim to an ability as a hunter and wants it impressed that he just naturally found that two-headed scorpion about which there has been so much ado this week. He literally stumbled across it while "on location" at Chatsworth Lake with the Buster Keaton company and he captured it by letting it crawl into his hat and then making a retaining lid out of a board which happened to be handy. Scorpions of all kinds abound in the Chatsworth district, but this is the first one on record to boast two heads, each of which is perfectly formed and complete within itself. Equipped with four good eyes and two practical mouths, this reptile had the advantage of its fellows of the species by being able to both see and eat double. Unfortunately for the side-show business, it could not endure captivity and died the day after being placed in a cage.

ACTOR WANTS NONE OF POLICEMAN'S LOT NOW

Now E. W. Borman is more determined than ever to escape the fate of being consigned permanently to the duties of a screen detective. He never has liked the idea and the more he has disliked it, the oftener he has been selected to play such roles in prominent productions. But, he just has had an experience which throws the balance decidedly in favor of finding some way out of being a sleuth in the world of make-believe.

He is drawing one more such characterization in the Richard Thomas production of "The Silent Accuser," now being made at the Hollywood Studios, and, Thursday noon of this week while he was strolling along Santa Monica Boulevard for exercise, something happened on the inside of a residence and before he knew it, he was literally dragged into the vortex of a domestic storm to settle a few disputes. In the dragging, the "dragger" discovered the "dragee" wore the badge of an officer, a badge Borman wears in the picture for the sake of realism only, and—but anyway, before the actor was able to extricate himself from the entanglement he had to exchange punches with a couple burly men.

"And now I'm cock-sure I want none of the policeman's unhappy lot for mine," he says. "As soon as I finish my present engagement, I'm going to concentrate on avoiding being cast as a film detective another time. In my twenty-five years' experience as an actor, I have played too great a variety of parts to settle down to one line anyway for the present and the last line I would choose would be that of the sleuth. It may be that I have been 'it' so many times that I'm weary of it."

It so happens that Mr. Borman looks precisely like the kind of detectives one reads about in all manner of fiction and he is generally regarded as the ideal type for portraying the character of an officer of the law. However, he has done other things in pictures. His most notable recent screen appearance was made in Marshall Neilan's success, "The Strangers' Banquet."

McKay Has Big Job

James McKay holds the responsible position of head cutter for Rupert Julian at Universal City and is directly supervising the cutting of "Merry-Go-Round." McKay is confronted with the gigantic task of cutting the more than 200,000 feet of film to between 15 and 20 reels before Julian holds the first preview. Working with McKay are Frank Atkinson and Charles Craft.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

Why not more concentration on making all-good pictures rather than merely all-star ones?

Let's harmonize—not victimize. Let's unify—not nullify. Let's keep busy and avoid being dizzy!

Here's hoping the present wave of prosperity in filmdom will not develop into a breaker for anyone.

"Contradict McCarthy," reads a newspaper headline. But why should we? In other words, why all these imperative headlines?

It is still an ill wind that blows no one good. Those blizzards back east made the business of movie theatres jump up, the winds literally driving the crowds to the shows.

The Selznick financial troubles, as reported from New York, seem to have been a matter of "he who sells in the nick of time," and, here's hoping this rather pioneer firm emerges from all its difficulties victoriously.

They are still building larger studios in this field. A notable case is that of the Warner Brothers. Keep the hammers in the constructive hands of the carpenters and the chronic "knockers" will have less chances to inflict their destruction.

There is no place on earth equal to Southern California as the place to make motion pictures. Hence it is well within the range of possibility that practically all the films will be made here eventually. This is a good goal to pull together for and the more concerted the effort the more assured the possibility.

Present studio activities indicate that the film-making industry is now out of its infancy and approaching a healthy maturity. Now if all its clothes are made larger and fit—if small political trickery is eliminated—the full-grown power of the great business will be free to wield its unlimited influence for good.

Picture people as a group are away above the average of citizenry, being of the same strata as that occupied by great educators. This is truth of the whole-cloth, easily proven by analytical logic. Yet, if such a statement were placed on film and projected in picture theatres of some eastern states, it would be deleted by the censors. The point is raised simply to show how wildly unjust censorship has become.

SOMETHING TO THINK
PROUDLY ABOUT

Do you realize that the United States is by far the greatest motion-picture-film producer in the world? This country's annual output is estimated at 1,000,000,000 feet of film worth $40,000,000 and there is a consistently steady increase in the manufacture of this entertainment-providing commodity. The extensiveness of the moving picture industry is an excellent barometer by which to judge and appreciate the vast precedence which has been attained by grand, incomparable America in other lines of business and it should inspire a thrill of pride in the heart of every loyal patriot. Moreover, every photoplay-goer should be constantly aware of the fact that when he or she is witnessing the photoplay made in the U. S. A., he or she is enjoying the happy privilege of seeing the best there is in this wonderful art. The most caustic critic cannot justly assail the American screen in general nor do we know of a single one who has ventured so much. Praise instead of criticism has the upper hand, because the plane occupied by the shadow stage is so exalted, so firmly fixed in its American superiority that even the habitual fault-finder cannot maintain a tenable congruity and denounce it.

THE GAME LITTLE SPORT

The game little sport is man. Physically he is very small when compared to the huge proportions of many of Nature's wonders. Yet, by dint of his mettle he is the conqueror of most all the giants of his realm. The Roaring Lions of Discontent and the Merciless Dragons of Opposition cannot stay him nor has he ever been known to give up the uneven battle despite all the almost insurmountable obstructions the countless Fates could cram into his pathway. Man, like the game, little sport that he is, keeps his face "squarely front" and he maintains an invulnerable equilibrium although he is being incessantly confronted by unheard-of difficulties which seem to defy disposal. Now, whenever you feel yourself demurring because it becomes necessary to deal a blow to a man, remember he was created with all the powers to survive just such blows. Do not make yourself unhappy and permit a series of events to take a wrong course simply because you are so tender-hearted and considerate that you cannot bring yourself to the point of striking for the right shore. Man may seem to falter occasionally and he will err, but when it comes to arising to an emergency requiring bravery and gallantry, he never fails and he never forgets to smile under any or all circumstances. Above-board candor excels reluctant silence every time as a producer of ultimate happiness. The reason is plain: because man is a game little sport. You can bank on this.

INTAKES

From Ed Editor

You won't have so many things to mind if you cease minding other people's business so much.

Don't be so ready to grunt. It's too much like a hog and besides, it makes you resemble a piece of cheese.

Another case of false report is false hair and another kind of bum rumor is a roomer who jumps his board bill.

Don't worry should you be forced to start at the bottom of the ladder. All you've got to do is to climb and even monkeys can climb.

When most of the leading comedians complete their marches up to the altar, may they escape the necessity for rushing up to the courts of alter!

When Clara Phillips is captured she will make personal appearances with "Broken Chains." Then Sheriff Traeger plans to re-make "To Have and to Hold" with our little Clara playing all parts.

Whenever you hear anyone "knock" Los Angeles or Hollywood, redouble your boosting activities, because the "knocking" is a sure sign of the greatness and importance of these giants of running California.

There are more truly great photoplays current this season than ever before. The cinema as an art is on the upward bound, in other words. Therefore, it is high time every dissenting force discontinues all downward pull.

New screen faces are more welcome to the public than some film men may think. Valentino proves this. Something more to think about in these days of mad scrambles for all-star casts the usual names of which are limited to about seventy different artists only.

The day is not far distant when Hollywood will become one of the most important cities of this whole country. It will not only grow as a center of photoplay-making, but it is sure to become a great theatre center. Grauman's Egyptian Theatre is the worthy nucleus of an amusement district, which five years hence will be crowded with paying play-houses showing every form of attraction from motion pictures to top-notch vaudeville, from spoken drama, including modern, Shakespearean and Grecian classics, to musical extravaganza. A pipe dream? All right. Remember this prediction and don't be surprised if it begins to materialize extensively even within the next two years.

E H USTS

From Al Martin

The cast of the "Little Girl Next Door" has returned from Chicago. Did she ask for me?

Edgar Lewis' "The Right of the Strongest" may be changed to "I can eat more onions than you."

Frederick Kohler is doing the "Journey of Death" with Tom Mix. I can't think of a "gag" for that title.

Monty Banks says he won't work in "The Lion and the Mouse" because he dislikes animal pictures.

Seeing that the producers are making "April Showers" and other song successes, who should make "Oh, what a pal was Mary?"

Viola Dana's latest "appendices" under the direction of Dr. Maurice Kahn has been "cut," but the title changed to "My Vacation."

Gladys Walton is making a comedy on the phone service entitled, "Crossed Wires." Can you imagine anything funny about the telephone service?

Now that the pictures are getting cleaner and better, why mislead the public with titles like "What Fools Men Are" and "What Wives Want?"

Kingsley Benedict suggests that this being the day of "contests," why not have an ability contest. The question is, who has the ability to judge the ability?

E. W. Borman, playing in "The Silent Accuser," has a pet saying and it is "Hide something and see if I can find it." The reason for this is, he's learning to be a detective.

Florence Gilbert, playing opposite Bull Montana in his snow picture, says she was so cold in her bathing suit at Truckee that if someone dropped her in chocolate she'd be an Eskimo pie.

Bob Marks has given to the world a new song which he dedicated to Alice Belcher, the comedy vamp of the Bonnie Brier Hotel. The song is entitled "If That's Chicken, I'll Take Fish."

Now that everyone has a "name," Jimmy Cruze fools us all by picking an unknown for "Hollywood." Which reminds me of that old saying, "No matter how cold the night may be, she's still your mother."

Capping Last-Minute Climaxes

LLOYD HUGHES IS ESTABLISHED NOW AS A STAR IN HIS OWN RIGHT. HE HAS JUST SIGNED A CONTRACT FOR HIS SECOND STARRING EFFORT, PLAYING THE LEADING ROLE IN THE FRANK BORZAGE PRODUCTION OF "TERWILIGER," WHICH WILL BE FILMED FOR FIRST NATIONAL AT THE UNITED STUDIOS IMMEDIATELY. MR. HUGHES IS NOW FINISHING IN HIS FIRST STARRING PICTURE, "OUT OF THE NIGHT," BEING FILMED BY THE PALMERPLAY COMPANY AT THE THOMAS H. INCE STUDIOS IN CULVER CITY.

IRVING CUMMINGS IS TAKING HIS ENTIRE COMPANY APPEARING IN "EAST SIDE, WEST SIDE" TO NEW YORK TO PHOTOGRAPH SOME OF THE MORE IMPORTANT ATMOSPHERIC SCENES IN THE LOCALE DESCRIBED IN THE STORY. KENNETH HARLAN, EILEEN PERCY, WALLY VAN, BETTY MAY, LUCILLE WARD, CHARLES MAILES, JOHN D. PRINCE AND LUCILLE HUTTON ARE THE MEMBERS OF THE CAST.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN," THAT TIME-HONORED AMERICAN CLASSIC, WILL BE MADE INTO A PHOTOPLAY BY THE PRINCIPAL PICTURES CORPORATION, HEADED BY SOL LESSER, WHO WILL USE THE ENTIRE CAPACITY OF HIS NEWLY ACQUIRED STUDIO, FORMERLY THE KING VIDOR PLANT, FOR THIS ONE PRODUCTION.

RICHARD WALTON TULLY IS BACK FROM A THREE-MONTH SIEGE OF RESEARCH WORK IN PARIS FOR HIS FORTHCOMING PRODUCTION OF "TRILBY." HIS FIRST IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT WAS TO THE EFFECT THAT HE INTENDED MAKING ALL OF HIS PICTURES IN HOLLYWOOD. AMONG HIS FUTURE FILMING PLANS IS AN ELABORATE SCREEN VERSION OF "THE BIRD OF PARADISE."

THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION SEEMS DESTINED TO BE CALLED UPON TO MAKE THE LEGAL FIGHT OF ITS EXISTENCE AS A RESULT OF THE DETERMINATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TO VIGOROUSLY PURSUE THE CHARGES OF UNFAIR COMPETITION AND MONOPOLISTIC TENDENCIES, ACCORDING TO A LATE DESPATCH FROM WASHINGTON, D. C. THE CASE HAS BEEN SET FOR TRIAL IN NEW YORK ON APRIL 23RD.

RUSSELL SIMPSON IS RECOVERING FROM PAINFUL INJURIES SUSTAINED IN BEING THROWN BY A HORSE WHILE WORKING IN A SCENE FOR "THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" UNDER THE DIRECTION OF EDWIN CAREWE AT SONORA.

CARL LAEMMLE, HEAD OF UNIVERSAL, HAS PURCHASED A FIFTY-FOOT FRONTAGE AT 1010 SOUTH OLIVE STREET, LOS ANGELES, AND WILL ERECT A MODERN BUILDING IN WHICH WILL BE ESTABLISHED HIS COMPANY'S LOCAL EXCHANGE.

CECIL B. DEMILLE AND HIS COMPANY WILL BE SENT TO PALESTINE TO FILM MOST OF THE EXTERIOR SCENES IN HIS NEXT SPECIAL PRODUCTION, "TEN COMMANDMENTS."

THE N. Z. WALL PRODUCTIONS COMPANY IS THE LATEST NEW YORK FILM-PRODUCING CONCERN TO ABANDON THE EASTERN FIELD FOR SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. IT HAS LEASED SPACE AT UNIVERSAL CITY AND ALREADY HAS

EDGAR LEWIS BUSY FILMING "THE RIGHT OF THE STRONGEST" WITH AN ALL-STAR CAST INCLUDING HELEN FERGUSON, ELMO LINCOLN, TULLY MARSHALL AND GEORGE SIEGMANN.

STUART PATON'S "THE ATTIC OF FELIX BAVU" WAS PREVIEWED THIS WEEK AND IT MADE A PROFOUND IMPRESSION, THE CONSENSUS OF OPINION BEING THAT IT IS ONE OF THE MOST GRIPPING, MOST THRILLING PICTURES OF THE YEAR. THOSE IN THE CAST WHO ACHIEVE THE GREATEST HEIGHTS ARE WALLACE BEERY, SYLVIA BREMER, ESTELLE TAYLOR, MARTHA MATTOX AND FOREST STANLEY.

MARY PICKFORD AND OTHER CINEMA NOTABLES WILL ACTIVELY SUPPORT A CAMPAIGN TO RAISE FUNDS WITH WHICH TO DEFRAY THE EXPENSES OF BUILDING A NEW HOME FOR THE HOLLYWOOD STUDIO CLUB AT 6129 CARLOS AVENUE. THE PRESENT STRUCTURE ACCOMMODATES ONLY TWENTY GIRLS. THE NEW ONE WILL AFFORD ALL CONVENIENCES FOR A HUNDRED. THE FUND-RAISING CAMPAIGN WILL BE CONDUCTED THROUGHOUT LOS ANGELES FOR ONE WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 12TH.

FERDINAND PINNEY EARLE HAS RETURNED TO LOS ANGELES AFTER A FOUR-MONTH SOJOURN IN NEW YORK, WHERE HE HAS BEEN DIRECTING THEDA BARA IN "THE EASIEST WAY." IT IS SAID HE HAD SOME TROUBLE OVER FINANCIAL MATTERS WITH THE SELZNICK COMPANY. MR. EARLE REITERATES HIS DETERMINATION TO MAKE A BIG SCREEN PRODUCTION OF "FAUST."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, MARY PICKFORD, HAROLD LLOYD AND CHARLES CHAPLIN WERE AMONG THE SCREEN NOTABLES WHO DISCUSSED FINAL PLANS WITH DENNIS F. O'BRIEN, NEW YORK ATTORNEY, FOR THE FORMATION OF AN ORGANIZATION THE PURPOSE OF WHICH IS TO REMOVE THE TAIN OF COMMERCIALISM FROM THE FILM INDUSTRY BY COUNTERACTING VARIOUS INFLUENCES OF THOSE INCLINED TO BE MONOPOLISTIC IN A PERENNIAL CHASE OF GOLD. THIS MEETING WAS HELD AT THE BEVERLY HILLS HOME OF MARY AND DOUG.

NOAH BEERY IS ESTABLISHING ANOTHER "GREATER ACTIVITY RECORD" BY PLAYING VITALLY BIG PARTS IN THREE VITALLY BIG FEATURE PRODUCTIONS SIMULTANEOUSLY. THE PRODUCTIONS ARE: "MAIN STREET," "THE SPOILERS" AND "WANDERING DAUGHTERS." HE IS LIVING THE LIVES OF SO MANY OTHER FELLOWS NOW THAT HE HAS LITTLE OR NO TIME TO LIVE HIS OWN PRIVATE LIFE.

MABEL NORMAND WILL ARRIVE IN LOS ANGELES NEXT WEEK READY TO START IN HER NEXT STARRING VEHICLE TO BE MADE BY MACK SENNETT, ACCORDING TO THE LATEST ANNOUNCEMENT.

THERE IS A STRONG POSSIBILITY OF DAVID WARK GRIFFITH RETURNING TO HIS OLD STAMPING-GROUNDS HERE IN THE EARLY FUTURE TO ONCE MORE MAKE HIS MASTERPIECES WHERE EVERYBODY THINKS THEY SHOULD BE MADE. HE HAS DEFINITELY ABANDONED HIS EASTERN STUDIOS AND HE IS NOT EXPECTED TO ACCEPT AN OFFER TO MOVE TO NEW ORLEANS.

Ince Buys a "Best-Seller"

Thomas H. Ince has purchased film rights for "The Just and the Unjust," Vaughan Kester's most popular novel, which will be adapted for the screen by Bradley King of the Ince writing staff. Author of "The Prodigal Judge," "The Fortunes of the Landray's" and many other equally successful stories, Kester's "best-seller" has been "The Just and the Unjust." A special motion picture edition of the book will be issued by the Bobbs Merrill Publishing company simultaneously with the release of the picture production, planned as one of the big features of Ince's fall releasing program.

Boylan on a Vacation

Mike Boylan, who last week resigned from his position of publicity director of Universal City and was succeeded by Ben Westland, former assistant advertisement manager, is enjoying a vacation. It was definitely stated that Mr. Boylan's severance of connections was not a result of a "shake-up," and that the same cordial relations still exist between Universal officials and Mr. Boylan. Mr. Boylan and his family left for Coronado, where they will rest for about a week. Mr. Boylan could not state what connection he would make later, although several offers are under consideration.

Veteran Crane "Comes Back"

With the addition of William H. Crane, dean of the American stage, King Vidor has about completed the cast for "Three Wise Fools," his first Goldwyn production. Mr. Crane will be the Judge, one of the three sapient simpletons. Claude Gillingwater will impersonate Findley, the part which he created on the stage, and Alec Francis will be Dr. Gaunt, the other wise fool.

Eleanor Boardman will have the leading feminine role. Zasu Pitts, inimitable comedienne, and Martha Mattox, character actress, have also been added to the brilliant roster.

McCarty Has Own Unit

Backed by eastern as well as local capital, Henry McCarty, who wrote and directed the entire series of western pictures starring Lester Cuneo, has formed his own producing organization and will start work within the next two weeks on the first of a series of western dramas, which he will present with an all-star cast, including the names of some of the screen's best known artists. The stories, which will be written and personally directed by Mr. McCarty, are to be of feature length and will be distributed, it is said, through one of the large releasing organizations.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Earl Metcalf, a baby boy.

Duke Worne has started the filming of his Universal chapter-play, "The Eagle's Talons."

Duane Thompson, Neal Burns' former leading lady, has been signed by Christie to play opposite Bobby Vernon.

Baby Peggy has received her first letter from the frozen north. It comes from Greenland and was 36 days on the way.

Marjorie Daw is the featured player in James Young's "Wandering Daughters," now being made at the United Studio.

Vernon Dent has been assigned an important character part in F. Richard Jones' next production for Mack Sennett.

Joe Bonomo has just been signed to a five-year contract with Universal. At the present time, he is enacting the heavy role in Duke Worne's serial, "The Eagle's Talons."

Ida Rotunni is the latest cinema personage to deny reports of contemplated marriage. "Not for me," says the petite actress, "I've got too many friends who are married!"

Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, "Long Live the King," will serve as the initial story for Jackie Coogan under his new Metro contract. Jackie will portray the role of the little prince.

Actual filming of Mrs. Wallace Reid's picture has been started at the Thomas H. Ince studios. The story, in which Mrs. Reid will play one of the principal roles, has not as yet been titled.

Scott Darling, who just finished a contract with Universal where he directed a series of comedies featuring Lewis Sargent, is now connected with the Sennett forces. He is working on a story, and will, very soon direct one of the companies.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Sanford, Feb. 17th, baby tipping the beam at 8½ pounds. Mr. Sanford is widely known as Tiny, and is at the present time playing an important part in a Richard Thomas production at the Hollywood studio.

Lee Moran is assembling the cast of players who will support him in the series of "You Know Me, Al," comedies which he will film at Universal City. Moran recently purchased the screen rights from Ring W. Lardner, the creator of the famous "baseball boob."

George Webb is playing the "heavy" role in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," under the direction of Robert Hill.

Alice Howell is playing the part of Susie in James Young's production of "Wandering Daughter." Miss Howell supplies the comedy relief.

Frank Lawrence has just finished cutting and editing Allan Holubar's spectacular Canadian production, "Slander the Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips.

Charles Clary is finishing his characterization in "The Other Side," which is being filmed at the Fine Arts studio. He is playing the father of "Ruth," which character is being played by Helen Lynch.

Victor Potel, the elongated comedian of Slippery Slim fame, has been cast for the role of the dumb mute in the new Robertson-Cole production, "When Jerry Comes Home," which is being directed by James Horne.

Margaret Livingston has just been engaged for the all-star cast of "Divorce," a Chester Bennett production now in the making at the Robertson-Cole studios. She will appear in this photoplay with John Bowers.

Albert Shelby LeVino, Paramount scenario writer, has left for New York City, where he will write the scenarios for three productions at the Famous Players-Lasky's eastern studios. He will return to Los Angeles upon completion of his work in the east.

Milton Menasco has been selected by Maurice Tourneur as art director for his next production "The Brass Bottle," which is to be released through First National. Menasco directed the art work of Tourneur's recently completed production of "The Isle of Lost Ships."

Ted Edwards last week signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn. Several months ago, in Chicago, he played a small part in a Rothacker film. He then produced his own picture, "Daddy's Love," displayed it to Abraham Lehr, and was immediately given the contract. Edwards is in his early twenties, just having finished high-school.

Alexander Alt, the young comedian who replaced Sid Smith in the Hall Room Boy series, has changed his name to Al Smith, upon the suggestion of Harry Cohen, the producer of these comedies. The change was made because of the belief that the name of Smith would prove a greater selling power.

Charles J. Brabin, featured director, is busy at the Goldwyn Studios preparing to direct Corine Griffith in "Six Days," from the story by Elinor Glyn, many scenes for which have already been "shot" in London and Paris.

Robert Agnew has been cast to play the juvenile "lead" in the Paramount production of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson. Incidentally, Mr. Agnew has just signed a five-year contract with this concern.

Harold Lloyd has started the filming of his next starring vehicle, as yet untitled, to follow his picture, "Safety Last," soon to be released. Leona Lowden and "Dot" Cleveland have been added to the supporting cast in the new production.

Miss Dupont, who is remembered for her clever work in "Foolish Wives" and many other notable plays for the screen, is playing the feminine lead opposite Walter Hagen in his latest picture, "The Man Who Cheated," which is being directed by Clarence Bricker.

After a prolonged vacation, Baby Peggy will again appear before the camera. The six subjects selected, the first of which will be ready for release March 1st are: "Peg o' the Movies," "Sweetie," "The Kid Reporter," "Carmen Junior," "Taking Orders," and "Tips."

Carl C. Mains, after pleading guilty to a charge of writing an unprintable letter to Marie Prevost, was sentenced to serve eighteen months at McNeil Island. Mains was arrested in his room at a downtown hotel after Miss Prevost had turned the missive over to Federal Post Office Inspectors.

As a reward for having what judges term the most beautiful hands in Southern California, Mabel Coleman was given a part in support of Gloria Swanson in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," under the direction of Sam Woods. Miss Coleman won this distinction through the Los Angeles Examiner's Beautiful Hand Contest.

Al Christie left town this week for Truckee with twenty people, three wind machines, a wooden horse and the funny plot of a farmyard comedy down in Maine, the continuity of which has just been finished these last hot days, by Frank R. Conklin. Dorothy Devore will be starred in the new comedy, supported by such players as Babe London, Earl Rodney and Ward Caulfield.

Actual filming was started last Wednesday on the initial H. & B. Film Company production, a semi-western story entitled "Scarred Hands," at the Bronx Studios. Cliff Smith, who is directing the picture, is also sharing stellar honors with Eileen Sedgwick.

Margaret Livingston has been selected by Chester Bennett for an important role in the all-star cast which will appear in his next production, "Divorce," now in the course of filming at the Robertson-Cole studios. Miss Livingston was formerly a laboratory employee and made her debut on the screen two years ago in the production of "Within the Cup."

Gibson Gowland, the actor Von Stroheim sought to play "McTeague," was located at a beach resort outside of London and was engaged at once by cable. He sailed on the Berngenia and arrived at the Goldwyn Studio this week. He will go to San Francisco immediately to join Von Stroheim on location.

Pauline Garon, young and beautiful winner of whirlwind starrng honors for her excellent portrayal of Tillie, the flapper, in Cecil De Mille's new picture, "Adam's Rib," has just signed a contract with Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of the new Frank Borzage Productions for First National, and will play a leading role in "Terwilliger," which was published in the Metropolitan Magazine.

Walter Griffin, who for seven years was chief cameraman for David M. Hartford, photographing such well-known pictures as "The Golden Snare," "Nomads of the North," and others, has been placed in charge of the camera work for J. A. Mowat Productions, which company is starring Walter Hagen, the golf champ, in a feature story called "The Man Who Cheated," under the direction of Clarence Bricker.

Work was started this week on the Guy Bates Post special to be made by Robert Thornby of the Courtland Productions, and for Principal Pictures Corporation's release. The picture is being made at the Thomas H. Ince studio, where Post will make his temporary professional abiding-place. The story, "The Man From Ten Strike," as it will be seen on the screen, is a free adaptation and development of a short story by James Oliver Curwood.

INGRAM TO START NEW FILM HERE IN THREE WEEKS

Rex Ingram, director of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Prisoner of Zenda," "Trifling Women," "Conquering Power," "Turn to the Right" and other Metro successes and his entire producing unit are once more established at the Metro studios in Hollywood after an absence of more than seven months in the east. Mr. Ingram came west to film "Scaramouche," Rafael Sabatini's story of the French Revolution.

Mr. Ingram was accompanied on his trip from New York by his wife, known in reel life as Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro, Mr. Ingram's leading man, Edith Allen, a new Ingram discovery and Willis Goldbeck, who prepared the continuity for "Scaramouche."

Miss Terry will enact the leading feminine role in "Scaramouche" and Ramon Novarro is to have the leading male part. Edith Allen, who Mr. Ingram discovered while a member of the "Blue Kitten" show in New York, will make her camera debut in a prominent part. The only other member of the cast for this production who has been selected to date is Edward Connelly, Metro's veteran character actor.

Actual "shooting" on this new Ingram feature will be started within the next three weeks.

A Tribute to Versatility

There is not anything unusual about a popular actor receiving two offers of engagements in the same day, but here is a case of the kind in which there is an element out of the ordinary. Eddie Gribbon is the actor alluded to and it happened that one big studio wanted a man to play a leading role in a new picture and the most important requirement was that he had to know all about professional baseball. Gribbon was summoned, because he was formerly a ball player in the big leagues. He had only returned to his home when he was called to the office of the casting director of another studio, where an actor thoroughly capable as a professional boxer was required. The fact that Gribbon had been in the ring for years and fought with the best middleweights of his time made him the logical choice for the part. However, a previously made contract with Universal, precluded the possibility of his accepting either offer. Gribbon had just finished enacting an important role in support of "Hoot" Gibson in "The Poor Worm" when he was started in King Baggott's company as one of the principals in "Crossed Wires," Gladys Walton's newest starring vehicle.

Alberta Vaughn

Adamae Vaughn

All that follows only goes to show that unsophisticated courage can win its fight even in a center of blase hard-boiled-eggs-ness!

A couple years ago two ambitious sisters persuaded their parents to literally move kith and kin from their home in a small city in Kentucky, where they were born, to Hollywood for the sole purpose of giving them an opportunity to try their hands, individually and collectively, as movie actresses. It was with the idea of combining a much desired pleasure trip with a practical way to disillusion the girls that the indulgent parents acceded to their wishes. And now, lo and behold, not a single member of the family could be induced to go back to the old stamping-grounds under any circumstances and the girls—ah, they are becoming famous as photoplayers, for they are Alberta Vaughn, popular leading lady supporting such stars as Clyde Cook and Lupino Lane in William Fox comedies, and, Adamae Vaughn, now enacting the important role of Mary Crackstone in support of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," which is the second Ray picture in which she has appeared.

The first time these sisters went after work in a motion picture plant just those two brief years ago, they walked into L. M. Goodstadt's office at the Lasky Studios and asked for regular parts. The amusing part of this request was, they had no idea of the existence of such an individual as the well-known "super" nor had they therefore calculated on starting their careers on any such low strata. Readily recognizing the inexperience of these aspirants, Mr. Goodstadt good-naturedly bade them to return to their home with the promise that he would summon them later.

Later, in this case, proved to be three days afterwards. Immediately Alberta and Adamae went to work in a film production, but they were not cast in parts. Instead they were among the several "extras" used in that particular picture. Then and there they sprung their first surprise on everybody, probably including themselves—they sized up so exceedingly well that they were selected in preference to all the other more seasoned "extra people" to do important "bits" in the close-ups.

From that moment on, there was never any chance for the grass to grow under their feet, because they have been incessantly too busy advancing up the ladder of cinema achievement and springing one unending series of surprises. Just as they secured their first jobs unaided, they have continued to find their own niches without assistance or suggestion. It has been only very recently that their own parents have recovered from the inevitable astonishment coincident to continual surprises to that extent of coming to a realization that real distinction is about to be brought to the parental domicile through the highly successful histrionic achievements of these sisters of such surprising initiative.

Alberta assured herself of a place on the screen in her portrayal of the character of Lottie McCabe in Vitagraph's production of "The Son of Wallingford," and as Lee Moran's leading lady at Universal, she made such a deep impression that comedy producers were bidding high for her services with Fox winning and retaining her for the last six months. Adamae also made her first big start on the Vitagraph "lot" in the serial "Breaking Through," in which she supported Carmel Meyers and Wallace MacDonald. A subsequent high mark in her earlier career was in Charles Ray's "Two Minutes to Go."

The net result of it all is, there are plenty of film-wise people who do not hesitate to predict truly great accomplishments for this duo in the near future. And thus, in conclusion, it comes to pass that a total absence of "inside pull" does not act as a bane to the progress of aspirants totally unknown especially if in their invasion of filmland they pursue the Alberta-Adamae course of not stopping to think of even the possibility of such a thing as failure. They never even thought remotely of failing and so they succeeded, are continuing to succeed more, and undoubtedly will succeed much more in the near future.

AUTO-SUGGESTION FILM SPONSORED BY LAWYER

The very first educational motion picture based on the newest ideas of auto-suggestion to be one-reel novelty which is just concluding a week's run at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre. The producers of this timely film are S. M. Herzig, who also made the "Crulwyed Comedies," and Lyle W. Rucker, the most prominent motion picture attorney of Hollywood. This short subject scored something of a sensational hit during its current local run because it demonstrates in such a remarkable way the great powers and benefits to be derived from the use of auto-suggestion as practised by Emile Coue, the famous French apostle of this creed as a boon for all humanity. The consensus of opinion seems to be that this film will wield a marked influence towards further popularizing the theories of the French scientist.

According to an announcement issued by Mr. Rucker yesterday, "Day by Day" will be released for the general exhibition throughout the world at a very early date and negotiations are nearing consummation for one of the largest film-distributing concerns to handle it.

Lyle W. Rucker

Robert Bolder, who enacts the role of the doctor in this picture, bears remarkably close to resemblance to M. Coue, and, he gives a quite unusual performance in a difficult role, a role requiring subtle repression in the visualizing. Snitz Edwards is the other feature player and although the picture is a serious educational in all the term implies, he offers some comedy relief which arguments the power of the more tense moments.

JACOBS COMPLETES STUDIO FORCE FOR BORZAGE FILM

Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of the new series of Frank Borzage Productions through First National, has completed his studio organization. He is nearly ready to start actual camera work on the first offering.

The scenario, prepared by Agnes Christine Johnston and Frank Dazey from 'Tristram Tupper's story "Terwilliger," published in the Metropolitan Magazine and serially in many newspapers, is now in Mr. Borzage's hands at the United studios where a score of large sets are already under construction.

Mr. Jacobs has quickly surrounded himself with an efficient organization to give the young director every opportunity to secure the best interpretation of this interesting story. O. O. Dull, better known as "Bunny," will continue as Borzage's assistant, with Lou Borzage as second assistant. Chet Lyons is to be cameraman, with Bob Roberts "shooting" second. J. F. Bennett has assumed the auditor's chair and everyone in the Jacobs camp is on the move getting ready for the first day's shooting.

REAL WORLD WAR HEROES ARE FEATURED IN FILM

Ex-service men had an opportunity to polish up their medals during the filming of a big hospital "set" used for "Lost," a Regal Production special starring Madge Bellamy, which is being made on the lot of the Thomas H. Ince studios. Only veterans of the World War were used in the set, men who actually could produce medals being given the preference when the lists were being made up. One Belgian boy who plays a "bit" appeared with ten medals—all of them rightfully his own—in a double row on his tunic.

Madge Bellamy as a Red Cross nurse and Warner Baxter, her leading man, play a number of big scenes in the opening sequence of the production in this hospital where the "hero," having lost his memory through shell shock is provided with an identity that leads to some dramatic situations later.

Roach to Have Studio Ranch

A large studio ranch, on which will be erected all the exterior scenes needed for the producing of the seven companies, to be active by March 1st, is the elaborate plan just materialized for Hal Roach. On his property, consisting of ten acres lying about one-half mile from his Culver City plant, Mr. Roach will have quarters constructed for his stock of animal performers, and also a school-house for "Our Gang," the irresistible set of film youngsters. The film ranch, to be the most modern of its kind, will cost approximately $100,000.

NEW AGENCY FOR "EXTRAS" OPENS SECOND OFFICE

Monte West has been engaged by the Motion Picture Player's Association as its casting director, and the association has just opened Hollywood casting and business offices at 1614 Cahuenga Ave., where Mr. West will have full charge of the supply of talent to the studios, from among its membership.

He is well-known and liked among the many motion picture artists in and about Los Angeles and Hollywood, having played important roles in pictures, after fifteen years' experience in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage. Among notable productions he has played in are: "Smilin' Through," "The Yankee Prince," "45 Minutes from Broadway," "George Washington, Jr.," "Clarence" and "Pollyanna."

West, or "Monte," as hundreds of performers know him, has also been a producer of musical and farce comedy as well as dramatic productions, and has been associated with the publicity and exploitation departments of a number of well-known vaudeville circuits.

The Motion Picture Players' Association was organized about a month ago at 921 W. 6th St., where permanent Los Angeles headquarters will be maintained, and the association is rapidly growing in favor with the profession. It is understood that a limit as to number will be placed on membership in the association in order that its members may be kept working regularly. No commissions are charged members, as the organization is maintained by the payment of initiation fees and dues.

KYNE BRINGS FUSILLADE OF BRICKBATS HIS WAY

An avalanche of counter-attacks was hurled forth last week in response to Peter B. Kyne's denouncing of the moving picture industry, wherein he stated the cinema was not an art, but a mere cannery with no possibility of a future unless a code of ethics is established. B. P. Schulberg declares Mr. Kyne's remarks are those of a man who has failed to progress. William M. Selig, pioneer producer, was astonished when apprised of Mr. Kyne's denunciation of the industry and offered the opinion that Mr. Kyne no doubt had been treated unfairly by a few people of the profession and for that reason, he had been prejudiced against the entire film business. Reginald Barker, noted director, stated he was sorry because of Mr. Kyne's attitude, but felt sure the cameras would continue to grind away. Louis B. Mayer declared the charger "so obviously ridiculous as to require no answer." Tom Forman, feature director, declared the author's sudden turn was because the latter was evidently out of ideas for screen productions.

Another Screen Victory

John Barrymore has fallen for the films. He is going to do "Beau Brummel" for Warner Bros., with whom he has signed a year's contract. Such is the sequel which Warner Bros. add to their coup of securing the services of David Belasco, foremost American stage producer, to screen "Deburau," which Belasco produced in New York two years ago, as well as two other of his successes.

New Studio Ready Soon

Warner Brothers' enormous new interior stage is nearing completion and the stakes and foundation for the three-story administration building, which will adjoin the new studio, have been laid. The Warner Brothers hope to have the entire studio finished by the middle of March.

LYTELL TAKES FLYER IN VODE BETWEEN PICTURES

When Bert Lytell learned there would be a two-week lapse of time between completing his latest picture and beginning "The Meanest Man in the World" for Sol Lesser, he arranged with Lesser whereby the film magnate would present him in a headline offering on the Orpheum stages of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Lytell will play the northern city first, coming to Los Angeles the week of March 4th. The day following his Los Angeles vaudeville closing, he will don the attire and make-up of the "meanest man" and once more appear before the clicking cameras.

"The Valiant" is the vehicle to be used in presenting Lytell to the two-a-day audiences. Supporting Lytell in his vaudeville flyer will be seen James Marcus, Ida May, Forrest Robinson and Charles Brown—all well known artists.

O'Hara Starts Another

George O'Hara, star of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series, finished last Saturday "The Knight That Failed," and began Monday "Christopher of Columbus," eighth on the list. Mr. O'Hara finished with glory a four-round fight with Joe Rivers, well-known ring veteran, who makes his second appearance in the production. Among other notables in the fight scenes was Tom Andrews, famous sports writer and boxing promoter who acted for the first time on the silversheet and in no difficult role for him, as he was the referee.

Miss Hodges With Kahn

Miss Billie Hodges has been appointed general casting manager of the Ivan Kahn Agency at 5540 Hollywood Boulevard.

Billie Hodges, it will be remembered, was in the casting office at the Metro Studio for two years and recently was auditor for the Ted Sloman organization.

NEW SCREEN DISCOVERY IN MISS YOUNG'S NEW FILM

The name of Jacqueline Gadsdon has been added to the list of young feminine screen players who have gained recognition during the past year and has taken its place alongside those of Pauline Garon, Billie Dove, Patsy Ruth Miller, Katherine McGuire and others. Miss Gadsdon, playing in her second picture since her graduation from the ranks of extras, has the chief supporting feminine role in "Cordelia the Magnificent," Clara Kimball Young's newest starring picture which Harry Garson is producing for Metro.

Miss Gadsdon, 22 years old, was playing a very minor role in a picture featuring Florence Vidor when Lois Weber heard of her, watched her work, and gave her the feminine lead in "Jewel." On the completion of that picture she immediately started work in "Cordelia the Magnificent."

Miss Gadsdon is a native of Lompoc, in Santa Barbara County, California. She was educated at Manuel Arts High School, Los Angeles.

GOLDWYN SIGNS WALSH, FAVORED FOR "BEN HUR"

George Walsh, screen and athletic star, signed a long-term contract this week with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation following his convincing portrayal of Rawdon Crawley in Hugo Ballin's production of "Vanity Fair," which was Mr. Walsh's first appearance in a Goldwyn picture. The announcement was made by Vice-President Abraham Lehr.

The acquisition of Mr. Walsh's exclusive services is in line with the Goldwyn company's announced policy of building up a stock company which will include many of the best-known stars of the films to appear in the big productions now being made and the still greater program laid out for the immediate future. Mr. Walsh has received many votes in the popularity contest being held to determine the actor most in public favor for the part of "Ben Hur."

Duke After Thrills Galore

Al Wilson, the first man to jump from one aeroplane to another without the aid of a rope, has been engaged to do all the stunts in the Universal serial, "The Eagle's Talons." This serial is being produced under the direction of Duke Worne, who promises the public some new thrills. Mr. Wilson has been in the flying game since 1913, starting his aviation career in an old Curtis plane. Since then he has startled thousands. Ann Little is also depended on to furnish various thrills, but these will be heart thrills. Miss Little and Mr. Worne have made three serials together, and they are an ideal star-and-director team. Fred Thompson, who plays opposite Miss Little, is trying to out-do Al Wilson in his stunts.

STAR TO TRY OUT NEW TECHNIQUE IN NEW FILM

When Fritzi Brunette signed a contract to be one of an all-star cast in the Hugh Dierker production of "The Other Side," now being filmed at the Fine Arts Studios, she divulged a secret of very general interest to most of the people in film-dom. It is that she has been studying a new screen technique for the last several months and that she will make her initial effort to put into practice a small portion of it in this new picture. Coincidentally, a part of the secret is, Miss Brunette intends to gradually change her professional name as she develops her artistry to fit this new technique, the full nature of which she very naturally refuses to explain at this time.

"We have heard much about the possibility of a complete revolution in the so-called manner of presentation of drama on the screen and it happens I have heard perhaps more about it than some people," Miss Brunette says. "What I have heard convinces me there will be radical changes in the methods of interpreting dramatic expression before the motion picture camera in a very short time and I am simply seeking to be among the pioneers in mastering the new idea."

Miss Brunette is innately a student and she is seldom without a book on some subject pertinent to the drama. She has studied the cinema art from the days of its real infancy, although she is yet quite youthful herself. She first established herself as one of "the leading leading ladies of the films" playing opposite J. Warren Kerrigan in the heyday of his popularity and she distinguished herself in the most important feminine role opposite House Peters in "The Man From Lost River." Among her more recent notable silversheet appearances was the Paramount production of "While Satan Sleeps," in which Jack Holt was starred.

Having had such a wide experience and being in such an ideal position to study the film-making industry as both an industry and an art, and being so inclined to be studious, Miss Brunette has automatically acquired what some might term "prior information" as to the trend of the evolution of picture acting. At any rate, it bids fair to be exceedingly interesting to watch the results of her experiments with new technique in "The Other Side" especially in view of the fact that there is possibility of it bringing out another side!

Edith Lee Grant has joined the ingenue ranks of Century and makes her first appearance in "Try and Get It."

GRAF STARTS WHAT PROMISES TO BE BIGGEST FRISCO FILM PRODUCTION

By J. Hesser Walraven

Surrounded by a constellation of motion picture luminaries, drawn from the foremost ranks of players and production personnel, Max Graf, supervising director of Graf Productions, Inc., is starting work on what promises to be by far the most pretentious photoplay production ever filmed by a San Francisco producing organization.

William Dudley Pelley's novel, "The Fog," furnishes the vehicle for the production. The working continuity is from the pen of Winifred Dunn, who was responsible for the delightful treatment of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Peg O' My Heart" and other celluloid triumphs.

"The Fog," in a broad sense, is a melodrama of two souls. It deals with the struggles of a youth and a girl to see through the mist of unexplained things, and of misunderstanding. The girl is of noble instincts and high ideals, but born without a name. The youth has been bound by the shackles of persecution since childhood. Each reflects their influence on the other as they journey through life endeavoring to surmount its grim obstacles.

A cast of unusual merit has been secured by Graf to interpret the story. Mildred Harris, former wife of Charlie Chaplin, will return to the screen in this production after an absence of eight months, during which time she has been appearing in her own vaudeville act. In the leading feminine role of the story, Miss Harris will have exceptional opportunity for the sort of portrayal that has won her greatest laurels.

Cullen Landis will be seen as the boy. Although still a very young man, Landis has had a highly successful screen career appearing in such notable successes as "Love in the Dark," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "The Old Nest," and others.

Louise Fazenda who comes fresh from her success in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" after appearing prominently in many productions of a lighter vein; Peggy Wales, who for a number of years has been the best known character woman of the Lasky organization and Anna May, will appear prominently in the feminine roles of the production.

Ralph Lewis, who achieved a notable distinction appearing in the leading role of "The Conquering Power," "I Am the Law," "The Third Alarm" and other pictures, has been entrusted with one of the big parts in the production. Frank Currier, veteran of both stage and screen, is also a member of the cast. Both of these players are well known to photoplay fans although this is the first time they have both been cast in the same picture.

The remainder of the cast thus far selected are David Butler and Edward Phillips. Butler has long been known as one of the popular screen stars and Phillips, although one of the comparative new-comers to the screen, has already entrenched himself firmly in the profession. He made his photoplay debut in the support of Mary Pickford in "The Lovelight" and since that time has appeared prominently in a number of screen successes including "The 'Nth Commandment" and "Just Around the Corner."

Paul Powell will direct the production of "The Fog." He has long been associated with the Lasky forces. He will be assisted by Leigh R. Smith, who has come west from the Griffith forces after assisting that eminent producer in the filming of many of his successes including "Way Down East."

Mark Strong, co-director of "Kismet," is also a prominent member of the production staff while the photography will be done by John Arnold, who has been a member of the Metro photographic forces during the past eight years during which time he has photographed every picture Viola Dana has appeared in.

"The Fog" will be made under the personal supervision of Max Graf at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo and, when completed, will be distributed throughout the world by Metro Pictures Corporation.

W. P. S. EARLE BACK TO FILM EGYPTIAN SPECTACLE

William P. S. Earle, well-known director, has announced that he will begin immediately the production of an Egyptian spectacle entitled "Tutankhamen," an adaptation from the forthcoming novel. He has been preparing for this picture for the past six months, unknown to anyone.

His brother, Ferdinand Pinney Earle, has arrived in the city from the East and has announced that he will not direct Theda Bara in her second picture, and will begin work on his long-awaited artistic production of "Faust." There evidently will be a race between the two brothers, both of whom have been in the independent field for some time, to determine which historical spectacle will reach the screen first. At the present time William P. S. Earle is in the lead.

W. P. S. Earle directed such pictures as "Within the Law," (the old Vitagraph version), "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "Ince," "The Law Decides," Elaine Hammerstein's "The Woman's Game," and Clara Kimball Young's "The Better Wife," and "The Road of Ambition."

FINDS HOLLYWOOD BOUL'VARD LIKE BROADWAY

If, when Lucy Beaumont left New York and a 25-year stage career, she had any idea of consigning herself to a comparative wilderness in coming to Hollywood, she has been disillusioned, because she declares she has found Hollywood Boulevard, the main thoroughfare of the film capitol, comparable to New York's Broadway in one respect, and, that is, one meets as many old friends of the thespian profession on this street as one possibly could on Broadway.

"I had no idea that any other street in the world was frequented by as many theatrical people as Broadway, but after one month 'out west,' I am convinced that Hollywood Boulevard equals it in this regard," Miss Beaumont says.

She has renewed acquaintance with scores of professionals she had known as long ago as twenty-five years and she found some of her old stage associates from London and continental Europe and even India.

Miss Beaumont is now doing her initial picture work in the Southern California field in an important mother role in the Mowat production of "The Man Who Cheated," now in course of production at the Hollywood Studios. Her stage career has been one succession of personal triumphs in such hits as "The Little Lady in Blue," supporting Frances Starr; "The Champion," supporting Grant Mitchell, and, in "Choo Chin Chow," in which she created the character of Mabubah. For the last decade she has specialized in playing mother parts on the stage and she has earned the credit for being "the greatest mother in the spoken drama."

Miss Beaumont intends to continue enacting matronly roles before the motion picture cameras in the belief she can do a real service for humanity by visualizing the mother character in its nobler instincts on the screen.

"As an assembling place for theatrical folks, Hollywood Boulevard on a sunny day equals Broadway on any day," she impresses.

Pyramid Cast Chosen

Among those who have been signed by Pyramid Pictures, Inc., to enact the principal roles in its film version of the play, "Wife in Name Only" are the following: Mary Thurman, Edmund Love, Arthur Hausman, Florence Dixon, William H. Tooker, Edna May Spooner and Ora Jones. George Terwilliger, who also directed "What Fools Men Are," which is a picturization of Eugene Walters' play "The Flapper," made by the same company, will direct.

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, Cal., Feb. 19.—When Eric Von Stroheim returns to San Francisco Wednesday, he will be accompanied by fifty members of the cast and staff for the filming of "McTeague." Part of the staff, including Ben Reynolds, cameraman, are already here and four electricians from the Goldwyn plant arrived yesterday to have everything in readiness to begin actual "shooting" of the picture the latter part of this week.

Once more this week the headliner at the Orpheum is a celebrated star of the stage, and screen, as William Faversham, one of the world's really distinguished actors, opened there yesterday in Alfred Sutro's "A Marriage Has Been Arranged." He made the jump from the east direct to San Francisco, and will be here a week and a week in Los Angeles.

Ernest Traxler, production manager for Goldwyn, having bought a new blue car since he came to town, drove to Los Angeles the first of last week. He will return to San Francisco on Wednesday to be ready for the start of actual shooting of "McTeague."

Evelyn Nelson has severed her connection as a leading lady at the Paul Gerson studios and returned to Los Angeles.

Joseph Kerr, until recently executive officer with First National in New York, and for many years a metropolitan showman, came to San Francisco last week to assume the duties of publicity director at the Paul Gerson studios.

The San Francisco Producers Association held a well-attended meeting at the Press Club last Wednesday. They are working for the general good of the picture industry here and among other things this organization is against the too rigid censorship of the silverscreen.

C. H. Kaufman, motion picture producer of Los Angeles, was in town a few days last week.

Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the noted author, has come to San Francisco to produce films of the famous Bret Harte stories of California, in the locales where they were originally laid. Harte has formed an organ-

News from New York

Charles Brabin's strong photoplay, "Driven," has been purchased by Carl Laemmle. This is the first independent that Universal has bought in six years. Alfred Rabock wrote the script and George Lane photographed it.

Harry Milarde is resting after cutting his latest, "If Winter Comes." Paul Sloane wrote the script. If it should prove a bad picture, each one is thinking up a series of alibis to show that it was the fault of the other.

P. S. Sloane sends word to Jack Ford to "come home, all is forgiven."

George Melford's Paramount production, "Java Head," which stars Leatrice Joy, is a hit at the Rivoli.

The unprecedented patronage at the Capitol Theatre where Doug Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" is attracting capacity houses at each performance, has prompted the management to hold over this production.

Mrs. Barthelmess (Little Mary Hay), chiefly known for her work in musical comedy, is a "Mama." So the eager expression in the eyes of Dick Barthelmess has been replaced by a joyful exultant look. "Some Daddy" says little Mary.

In the column of a New York newspaper under the heading of "Why?" is printed the following: "Why is May Collins, former film star and always brunette, now a decided blonde, and why is she down in the cast of 'Mary the Third,' the new Rachael Crothers play as May Gayler instead of May Collins?" In the same column is a paragraph stating that many folks might be interested in knowing Pola Negri's real name. They say that the name furnished by the lady herself, is, "Apolonia Chalupez." So that's that.

Jackie Coogan and his mother are in town. George Landy, his advance agent, has been working to put over a few novel publicity stunts. —Raymond McKee.

Jean Hersholt is now playing in the Goldwyn production of "Red Lights" and he will go direct from this picture to Von Stroheim's "McTeague," in which he will be the villain.

ization to be known as the Bret Harte Productions, Inc., and will make his headquarters in a studio in or near San Francisco, with location work in mountain towns and mining camps. He will personally supervise the filming of the stories with the best technical assistance.

If all goes well the Golden Gate Production Corporation expects to start work at the Pacific studios about March 25th. F. E. Fisher, business manager of the organization, announces that their first picture will be "The Under-Current," by Viola Wakefield, and that it will be one of a regular series of five-reel comedy drama productions. Jack Dewey, production manager, will go to Los Angeles March 1st to complete the cast and attend to other final business affairs connected with the picture.

Marc McDermott, well-known character man of the screen, and once leading man with Mrs. Pat Campbell in London, will appear at the Golden Gate Theatre in person this week in a one-act comedy called "I Haven't Time."

The first expedition sent to South America by the Northern California Photo-Plays, is already working near Calleo, Peru, and report that so far all goes very well with the company. The second expedition is at Salvador, Central America, where they have had a proposition made them to unite with the Central American Pictures Corporation of Salvador. The son of the Governor of Salvador will be part of the proposed organization, which is looked on with favor by the management here.

The Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation, pioneers in film production in San Francisco, have recently undergone a re-organization of their company, and due to an increased demand for their product are expanding their activities in the production of screen plays. The executive forces are now under the leadership of well-known San Francisco capitalists and business men, with A. H. Thompson as general manager. They are busily engaged in rebuilding and enlarging their recently purchased studios at 1972 Page Street, where two units are producing features, while another company is completing in Los Angeles "The Cricket on the Hearth."

—AGNES KERR CRAWFORD.

Things don't always go right in the making of motion pictures. In attempting to produce a weird effect out on a ranch near San Fernando with the aid of smudge-pots and torches for his latest picture, "Danger," Clifford S. Elfelt, the producer, burned down a barn the other day and had to pay the owner exactly $1,200 therefor. If all effects were as expensive as this, the effect would be a very bad one, financially speaking.

As soon as Helen Kesler completes her present contract as leading lady to Jimmy Aubrey in Vitagraph comedies, she will return to the Goldwyn Studios for a long engagement. She recently appeared in two Rupert Hughes pictures there and it seems they like her well enough to offer her inducements to return.

hire all the extras within telephone range of the picture colony for one scene of his latest picture, "April Showers."

Two days later the American Legion's Stadium was turned over to the director and something like three thousand extras were seated about the ringside where Kenneth Harlan and a middle-weight fighter were to meet in a fistic contest that serves as a climax of the story. Since the most lowly extra is paid $5 a day and the more experienced in the neighborhood of $10, the cost of this one episode may easily be estimated.

"Why not stage an entertainment and let the whole world in free, thereby solving the question of extras?" was asked of the director.

"Simply because a man not controlled by a pay check refuses to take directions," was the answer. "Visitors are in on such an affair for fun and they see that they get it. When we want an audience to register surprise, fear or excitement, it is necessary to pay its members for the effort. Sometimes it costs $20,000 to $25,000 to get this result, but it is worth it."

Incidentally, some of the $5 checks went to well known picture stars who spent an exciting Saturday evening eating peanuts and watching the big fight staged.

An observing correspondent has discovered in the recent foreign film importations a solution of the problem offered by European competition.

"With the only dangerously clever competitors being brought over here to participate in American pictures what have we to fear?" asks the writer. "We have Lubitsch, Pola Negri and Rochfort. Should any other bright luminaries lift their heads they doubtless will follow in the path of these favorites and become American acquisitions in which event there will be little to fear from foreign competition."

SELF-MADE? WE'LL SAY SO

It would seem that Jackie Coogan's most recent exploit is a half-million-dollar contract to act in four motion pictures. Perhaps there is something more than idle rumor in the report that this latest captain of infant industries plans to retire at the age of ten and go to boarding school, at the same time turning his attention toward Wall Street and the investing of the paltry eight or ten millions he will have piled up by that time. A few years hence may we not expect news items something like this:

"The directors of the U. S. Steel Corporation will hold their next meeting at St. Paul's School, in deference to the convenience of the chairman of the board, who has been confined to the infirmary by an attack of croup."

Or like this:

"In an address last night to the Bible Class of the Bullion Baptist Church, John D. Coogan, Jr., spoke as follows: 'Yes, dear friends, I am truly a self-made kid, and I'm not ashamed of it. I lay my success to never being satisfied with anything short of the best. I have always imported my marbles direct, and my lollypops are made specially for me from a secret recipe of my faithful nurse'—etc. ad lib.

But we're all for him, man or boy, who earns it himself, in contrast to the gilded ones reared "in the lap of usury."

—Collier's Weekly.

George Rigas, former matinee idol of Greece and now in American motion pictures, plans an early "flying" trip from Los Angeles to New York on business relative to his plans for forming his own picture-producing company.

The Editor Comments on Folks and Things

The most popular roll-call in Hollywood is the call to roles.

If every move's a picture, move! The world (of actors) wants pictures.

"Is a boon ever a bane?" someone asks us. Yes—when it's bragged about too much.

The real low-down is, the standard of photoplays is going up in spite of the "knockers."

Paul Gerson has quit producing pictures to play in them. He has acted to act, as it were.

The price of all kinds of lumber is going up. But, this does not make wooden heads any more precious.

Did it ever occur to you that reform, when directed towards motion pictures, has more of a tendency to deform?

Dope peddlers are plying their trade in some quarters just the same as usual. It would be very unusual otherwise.

If there is a motion picture trust, it will not require much time to make it a mistrust—if the authorities can be trusted.

Now that Maurice Tourneur has made "The Isle of Lost Ships" such a good picture, he can depend on it: his ship will come in.

Most every day a new picture-making company is born in Los Angeles. However, it is every man's birthright to father a film enterprise.

It is reported an independent producer will soon start a picture called "Beginning." And, of course, there will be an ending to this "Beginning."

Whoever thinks Valentino is through is mistaken. He is not through with the courts or that Lasky contract which keeps him out of pictures.

Leatrice Joy is living up to her name admirably—she is a Joy of the screen. Her work in "Minnie" and "Java Head" is truly and doubly Joyous!

In case the picture industry ever did go to the bow-wows, as some pessimists are forever predicting it will, we wonder what they would bark at next!

Someone has invented a way to force people to refrain from reading titles aloud in picture houses. But surely amputation of tongues would be too cruel.

There was a hanging in Hollywood this week. It happened on Thursday, which was the first of the month. Collectors were hanging around everywhere.

Some Mexican capitalists are trying to establish a picture-producing center in Mexico City. The great danger is, there's always liable to be too much revolution there for the film game.

If Charlie Chaplin is too poor to wed Pola Negri for the present, as it is reported he declares, marriage must take its place among other high and frenzied finance propositions. Or is it just another jolly comedy?

The theory that there is always fire where there's smoke is disproved in one well-known case in Hollywood. Where "Smoke" Turner is, there is only "Smoke" Turner—in a class by himself, for there's nobody else like him. If you'd say "fire" to "Smoke," he'd run—to turn in an alarm.

The Beery brothers are as busy in Hollywood as the "beery" boys used to be in Milwaukee. As Noah works in three different pictures simultaneously. Wallace works in three other pictures simultaneously. If they were exactly the same age, they could be aptly called the Simultaneous Twins.

Cinema geniuses of all nations are assembling in Los Angeles for a concerted attack upon the wide-open and thoroughly vulnerable fortress of golden opportunities, a quantity hopelessly extinct abroad. Welcome! But come well prepared to stay long enough to become citizens. America just naturally loves to naturalize great foreigners.

"So this is Hollywood! Wonderful place! Reminds me so much of Monte Carlo," exclaimed Alphonse Martell, on his arrival this week from France.

Martell is a very distinct Latin type, of pleasing personality and speaks with the purest English. He is six feet tall, with black hair, and dark eyes, and is unique for his facial expressions.

ALPHONSE MARTELL

He has perfect knowledge of four languages, having traveled extensively throughout Europe.

He has many years screen and stage experience to his credit, and will no doubt get a great welcome from the American film fans.

His phone number is Hollywood 2526. He'd like to hear from you!

Affiliation Dreams Come True for Cinema Trail-blazers

Another big film producing company is active in Los Angeles now, due to the fact that releasing contracts have just been signed at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios by Frank E. Woods, president of the Associated Authors, and Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation and Allied Producers and Distributors.

Associated Authors, made up of Frank Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan, is one of the newest concerns to be established in the picture industry, and promises to be one of the most active, judging by plans now under consideration.

"Formed for the purpose of promoting a closer association of authors with regard to the production of pictures," said Frank Woods, "the Associated Authors will devote themselves to the developing of special features of the very highest type. Our first offering will be 'The Talisman,' and Wallace Beery, who won distinction in the role of Richard the Lion-Hearted in 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood,' will be featured in this same role in the Sir Walter Scott classic."

The pictures turned out by the Associated Authors will be released through the Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, a subsidiary of the United Artists owned and controlled by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith.

In the affiliating of this new organization with that owned by the four big stars and producers there is a great deal of sentiment. It is the story of dreams come true. For many years it has been the hope of Miss Pickford, Doug, Chaplin and Griffith that some day an organization headed by Frank Woods would become associated with that owned by the stars. The close association of Mr. Woods with these celebrities in the past has made that a thing to look forward to. All of them are pioneers in the business. Together D. W. Griffith and Frank Woods prepared "The Birth of a Nation," and they were given joint screen credit for the photoplay. The first fourteen pictures made by Fairbanks were supervised by Mr. Woods, and during the reign of Mary Pickford with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Frank Woods was her chief counselor. All this, therefore, makes the new affiliation a most desirable one.

It has not been definitely decided yet at what studio the Associated Authors will operate. This is to be arranged shortly by Clarke Thomas, associated for years with Thomas H. Ince, who has been appointed general manager of the new organization.

The production plan of the Associated Authors is unique in that they will produce in rotation instead of attempting simultaneous operations. The present plan is for Mr. Woods to do "The Talisman" as the first offering, and when photography is complete Elmer Harris will put a picture into work. As soon as all scenes for this are taken, Thompson Buchanan will then start a production. This, it is believed, will insure a steady output, and will enable the authors to advise with each other to best advantage, and to concentrate upon one picture at a time, thus assuring the very highest type of product that can be issued.

In addition to being producers, each of the three authors is an officer in the new concern. Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan are both vice-presidents, while Frank Woods holds the portfolio of president with Clarke Thomas acting as general manager.

"Now that our releasing agency has been established," said Mr. Woods, "I will start at once to gather a cast for 'The Talisman.' It is our hope to have this production ready as one of the picture offerings for spring. Work will start as soon as the cast is chosen, by which time we will be definitely established in a studio."

What's What on the Vamp Question

No one has yet arisen to dispute the assertion of Mr. Kipling that "the female of the species is more deadly than the male," but the question now comes up, as to just what type of female is the most deadly.

"Indeed, no," protests Mme. Jetta Goudal, the noted French emotional actress who is making her screen debut as the adventuress in Richard Barthelmess' forthcoming production of "The Bright Shawl." It is, Mme. Goudal believes, the blue-eyed, bobbed-haired, baby-doll type that makes the alluring—and therefore more successful—vamp.

"Since I have been in this country," she says, "I have observed much. And I have noticed especially that the little blonde with those appealing eyes which are ready to shed tears on the slightest provocation or without any provocation at all, is what you call the fast worker. The popular conception of the adventuress is not the correct one. I laugh at it, for it is so unreal. But I suppose because Cleopatra was dark-haired and dark-eyed, then all the vamps down through the ages must be of that type.

"When I was cast for the role of the adventuress in a stage production I wanted to bring to the stage the real honest-to-goodness vamp. Hence, I visited places where I was told I would see her at her best. At first I didn't recognize her, for I sought some such type as fiction and a popular belief had led me to think would have seductive black eyes and long dark lashes. Instead, what did I find? I found a host of little blue-eyed, appealing blondes working so artistically that their victims didn't realize they were being vamped until they had fallen—hard and expensively. The vamps were not at all the kind the stage-goer or movie fan would expect to find."

Mme. Goudal attracted considerable attention as the adventuress in the stage production, "The Elton Case," as well as a number of other Broadway plays. Despite the fact that she plays vamp roles, she lives demurely at a hotel in New York, which is exclusively for women.

"I make my home there," she explained.

CARMEL'S SMILE

Carmel Meyers, now leading lady in the Richard Thomas Productions Company whose smile has been called "the most bewitching on the screen," by Edward Valeni, Italian painter with a laugh, "to escape the he-vamp—the flirts of Manhattan. It is the only place where one is safe from them. To my mind the most ridiculous and at the same time the most contemptible species of man in America is the flirt. For conceit and egotism he outclasses any woman I ever knew.

"Ugh these persons! Take away their stock expressions: 'How beautiful you are today' and 'you appeal to me more than any woman I ever met,' and what have you left—a vacuum mounted on the shoulders of a tailor's mannikin. Pouf!"

JOKE ON HUGO RIESENFELD

Hugo Riesenfeld, the director and manager of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres of New York City, recently received a letter congratulating him on the work of his daughter in a two-reel comedy the writer saw at the Rivoli.

After puzzling over the letter, he discovered the well meaning writer had become confused by the electric sign which had been erected in front of the theatre, and which had read: "Baby Peggy, Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz."

The unmindful writer in his sweeping glance had overlooked the comma, and had given the Doctor credit for the parentage of the Century Comedy star.

Lucy Beaumont, now playing the mother role in the Mowat production of "The Man Who Cheated," in the course of filming at the Hollywood Studios, is the latest confirmed lover of New York to be converted to boosting California, and, after a mere six weeks' residence in Los Angeles, she has instructed her attorney to buy her a home and everything. It would seem the California bee works fast.

Bobs and Things

By DONALD H. CLARK

News cables brought the exciting news from Paris the other day that the fair sex in that abode of fashion has begun bobbing its hair again. At the same time telegraph wires from the centre of motion picture culture in California were broad-casting the glad tidings that motion picture stars were letting their hair grow.

It is one of the simple truths of hair gardening that the pesky crop is much easier to mow than it is to produce. This might be considered interesting because it bears directly upon the problem confronting modern womanhood. Leaping from a knee length skirt into one that tickles the instep is a matter of seconds—or minutes as the case may be. Tripping from a bob to a Seven Sutherland Sisters effect isn't so easy. It looks as if the girls were going to be all mixed up in their coiffure styles.

Some persons may not consider this question important, but they might change their minds if they could glance over for a moment the hundreds of letters that daily blow in upon motion picture actresses, asking advice about bobs.

The excitement that prevailed when the story got out that Mabel Ballin had been bobbed, and that she was wearing wigs while playing the role of Becky Sharpe in "Vanity Fair," was something scandalous. It grew to such alarming proportions that friends of Miss Ballin dashed to the rescue with a public announcement that her hair is all her own, is not cut, and that she spends an hour a day making it look fetching. A woman's hair is much closer to her in more ways than one than the Ruhr, the Sultan of Turkey, or Tutankhamen's Tomb.

How many flappers decided to let their hair grow when newspapers printed articles that Irene Castle, Claire Windsor and Helene Chadwick had decided after sober deliberation to turn their backs on bobs, it would be impossible to estimate. There are the hundreds of inquiries received by the Misses Chadwick and Windsor to begin figuring on.

Magazines and newspapers are full of the long vs. short hair and skirt proposition; there is even a long and short stocking controversy that becomes more vital during the Summer. Long and short vamps (the foot-gear, not the stage variety) furnish another puzzling situation which the female of the species frequently is called upon to solve.

It would be utterly unfair, however, to make it appear that women are the only ones burdened with this variety of problem. There are lads who write to men stars to know whether they wear their trousers with or without cuffs. In fact, judging from some of the recent fan mail a large number of chaps have had their sleep pretty badly cut into trying to decide whether to have cuffs or not to have cuffs on their Spring outfits this year.

The big circulation of periodicals devoted to styles and the fact that news about it and its vagaries rubs elbows with news of deaths of kings, national disasters, and piquant divorce scandals on the telegraph and cable wires daily, is an indication of its popularity.

Countries may rise, and countries may fall, but bobs and things like that will go on forever.

At a cost of several thousand dollars, the big court scenes made by Wallace Worsley in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," at Universal City a week ago with Lon Chaney as the star, are being retaken.

Upon viewing the rushes of the courtroom scenes, Worsley decided that they were not impressive enough to compare favorably with the other gigantic scenes in the picture and after a consultation with Perley Poore Sheehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr., who adapted Victor Hugo's romance, it was decided to build a new courtroom set.

Patsy Ruth Miller has the principal feminine role opposite Chaney and other players in the cast include Norman Kerry, Kate Lester, Brandon Hurst, Eulalie Jensen, Ernest Torrence, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Nigel de Brulier, Harry Van Meter and others.

Special awnings have been erected over the serial cutting rooms at Universal City where Rupert Julian is cutting "Merry Go Round," to guard against possible ignition of the film from the intense sun rays which are reflected on the walls of the cutting room from the roof on which it is built.

Although the danger of such combustion is almost negligible, the value of the spectacular production is regarded in such light by studio officials that extraordinary precautions are being taken against any possible loss or damage to the film.

Present plans at Universal City call for "Merry Go Round" to be released in ten or twelve reels. Players included in the all-star cast are Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry, Caesar Gravina, Dale Fuller, George Hackathorne, Maude George and others.

Big Bear, cold and snow clad, lifted in frigid majesty above the lower lands of California, and Victorville, the last remaining typical western town in the coast states, will be the locations for two or three weeks of the Universal unit which is transcribing history to the screen in "The Oregon Trail."

"Why not make a picture wherein the hero is a born dumb-bell, instead of the cleverest man on earth?"

Edward (Hoot) Gibson made that suggestion to Universal executives. It certainly was a novel idea for five-reel comedy-drama-making. There certainly is more humor and entertainment in the pathos of a hero who doesn't "know what it is all about" than in the custom-fashioned type.

Edward Sedgwick was commissioned to write and direct such a picture. The title is "Single Handed."

Does anyone know "What Wives Want?"

It's a moot question, but anyway Universal has elected to answer the question with a big all-star production under that title.

Perry Vekroff wrote the story, which is being put into scenario form by E. T. Lowe, Jr., and which Jack Conway will direct.

Buying Titles, Answering Kyne in Kind and Aiding Girls

By RAY H. LEEK

The long arm of coincidence popularly supposed to play so important a part in the average picture, actually has a far bigger role in the naming of them. Witness an occurrence at the Mayer-Schulberg studios here this week.

B. P. Schulberg was carrying on negotiations with the widow of the late Edgar Saltus for the screen rights to the author's most successful book, "Daughters of the Rich."

Louis B. Mayer, in his offices just two feet away, was casting about for a new title to his forthcoming screen production of the stage play, "Climbing."

At just about the time that the Schulberg organization actually acquired the Saltus book announcement was made from the offices of the Mayer company that "Climbing" had been rechristened. The new name was to be "Daughters of the Rich."

Meanwhile, came the statement from the Schulberg offices that the book to which the title rightfully belonged was on the way to its screen incarnation under the directorial hand of Gasnier with an all-star cast of players. Which doubtless will cause the Mayer productions to make its celluloid appearance under the original title "Climbing."

Although similar coincidences in titles have occurred among stage productions on several occasions, they threaten to become disastrously common in the making of pictures because of the many more films turned out each year.

In view of the numerous "Truths about Hollywood" published here and elsewhere it probably will come as a surprise to many newspaper readers to learn that girls who come to the film capital are watched and aided as faithfully by welfare organizations as in any other city in the United States.

Just at present the entire industry is opening its pockets to contribute to the building program of the Studio Club, which expects to provide a modern structure where rooms will be available for girls seeking screen employment.

"And the girls who fail to find employment here will be given every assistance in getting back to their homes," said Eve Unsell, who heads one of the organization's committees. "As far as possible this source of worry for parents will be removed."

At regular intervals some more or less distinguished individual steps out and hurls a bomb at the movies on the theory that so general an attack will be challenged by nobody.

The latest assailant of the screen is Peter B. Kyne, author and creator of "Cappy Ricks," who avers that it is a cannery, not an art, that he has been forced to peddle his stories from studio to studio, that appointments have been broken and that it lacked a code of ethics. He concluded with this well rounded phrase: "It isn't that the industry is in its infancy, but that infants are in the industry."

But in this case the answers to Mr. Kyne were speedily forthcoming. Producers, directors and other leaders of the industry in a position to know the facts immediately made specific answers to Mr. Kyne's statements.

"Probably picture producing is not yet an art," said B. P. Schulberg. "It would be a surprise if it had, in its brief twenty years existence, reached a stage of development where it could be considered such. All our arts—music, painting, sculpture—have been centuries in development. They represent growth of artistic thought along these special lines from prehistoric times."

"It is enough to know that we have developed so far as to admit of the raising of the question whether the industry is an art."

"DAUGHTERS OF THE RICH" HAVE RIVAL CLAIMANTS AMONG PRODUCERS

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

The element of improbability does not react seriously against "A Pauper Millionaire" wherein a rich man, unable to prove his real identity, goes on the rocks of financial distress in a great city and is forced to work as a menial in order to avoid starving to death. The manner in which this situation has been brought about in this picture and punch back of the reason for it, acts as a saving grace and prevents one from muttering that popular word "impossible." It is all based on the time-honored objection of the rich parent when his heir aspires to wed a poor girl. Dad's ensuing extremity and rather bitter taste of the lot of the poverty-stricken instantly inspires him with new thoughts in regard to the poor instead of being so plutocratic in his attitudes in general, he waxes genuinely sympathetic in the decision that the poor folks are as good as the wealthy "swells." This is a picture which should prove especially popular in playhouses largely patronized by members of the great masses of workers. Evidently it was designed for them.

"Look Your Best" and we did. The result: we saw a pretty fine Rupert Hughes photoplay, quite typical of that author's best work for the screen. Many critics complain that this one is not up to the usual Hughes standard. It may not be, but, just the same, it is highly amusing and away above the average of other films of its class. The cast is especially attractive, Colleen Moore and Antonio Moreno dividing high honors with Earl Metcalf and Martha Mattox contributing excellent characterizations. The direction is undoubtedly devoid of any of the brilliance of finesse and could be improved upon easily, but the main idea of the story is registered successfully enough to make anyone remember it with pleasure. And, that's a commendable lot for a motion picture to accomplish.

That great Napoleon of Filmland, Fred Niblo, has hit the nail squarely on the head in his latest production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair." In fact, if the director of the stage production had been able to see the picture he would have been able to give the play even greater success. The plot in the original play is followed strictly with the exception of the boy. I personally think that this work of art will be named in the best ten for 1923. The scenario was well prepared in the first place, but it remained for Fred Niblo to make it a reality. The cast is well-nigh perfect including as it does such fine artists as Ward Crane, Marguerite De La Motte, Carmel Myers, Cullen Landis, Helen Ferguson, Myrtle Stedman and last but not least Huntley Gordon. Mr. Gordon was the surprise of the evening. His performance was remarkable. There was not the slightest interruption to break the well-sustained interest. A great chase gave the picture a difference that makes the production first-class entertainment and sure-fire box office value.

—Charles Furthman.

"Lost and Found" is a good sample of what the South Seas really look like. The photography is beautiful and the settings are charming. The whole production has great educational value and is altogether a refreshing entertainment. The masterful direction of R. A. Walsh is always sure and capable and the pretty settings are notable examples of artistic judgment. The picture holds the interest all the way. In detail the

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

Reformers are being rebuked with more regularity each week. Friends of the motion picture have just won their fight in Missouri where an attempt was made to establish stringent censorship. At about the same time Sunday-closing attempts in Indiana failed. Meanwhile oppressive measures are being combatted formidably in several other states with prospects of victory for those who favor liberal laws.

That it is more and more the era for supremacy among child artists of the screen is becoming more patent every day. The graduation of Baby Peggy from the two-reel class to the full-length feature class is an evidence of the advance in demand for more entertainment such as the tiny juveniles provide.

There is a peculiar condition of price fluctuations in filmland just now. Although George Eastman has reduced the price of raw film, the costs of lumber, rubber and other materials used in construction work in motion picture studios have advanced steadily. This fluctuating tendency has obtained in the matter of salaries, too. Some artists are able to increase their salaries up to record-breaking amounts while others are obliged to reduce. There is no explanation given by anyone as to the cause of these inconsistencies, which are quite serious inasmuch as it is impossible to settle any stable basis for calculation.

It looks as if "a bloodless revolution" has been started within the sphere of motion pictures. Certain independent stars have mustered their forces to combat what they term "the theatre trust." The ultimate result will be especially interesting since it will bring to light definitely the true status of monopoly as it may start to obtain in the film industry.

The most reassuring tendency of the moment is the confident spirit with which independent producers are keeping up with and even exceeding the pace set by the larger "group companies." As long as the independents can keep going in the competition in a strong way, the future of the screen is secure, because so long as independents can survive and prosper, the possibility of a trust is removed.

picture seems perfect and the large schooner used in carrying the tale added much to the picturesqueness of the production. Carl Harbaugh, in the heavy role of a half-breed trader, walked away with the picture. This pupil of the old school of Belasco has evidently decided to follow the lead of Wallie Beery, Jim Kirkwood and others and forget the megaphone for awhile. A first-rate company surrounds Mr. Harbaugh and contributed greatly to the success he made of the heavy role. They are House Peters, Rosemary Theby, Pauline Starke, Tony Moreno,

William Mong, Mary Jane Irving and George Siegman.

Now that Frank Good, the well-known cameraman, is on the Warner Brothers lot and is with Director Chester M. Franklin, the man who will direct "Wolf Fangs," they have begun to talk over old times. They are both veterans, having seen the picture business growing for some years and it is of great interest to them to note the often referred to rapid strides the screen has taken.

About eight or nine years ago at the corner of Gower street and Sunset boulevard, Hollywood, was a studio and in it Chester M. Franklin was doing his first directing with Frank Good at the camera (that is part of the time). Chester was really co-directing, for Fred Balshofer was also there in the same capacity.

"Say, in those days a fellow didn't have any given position on the lot," says Franklin. "He just did everything he could and some things he couldn't. I remember one scene we were filming was supposed to depict the Civil War and we had a street set consisting of some twenty dog-tents with about ten feet across the center. I would put on the costume of a spy. Good would wear the officers' whiskers and uniform and Fred Balshofer the costume of a trained nurse with his back to the camera all the time. Then we would come out. Good would get on the horse and I would crank the camera, he would tear down the street, throw himself off and dash into the tent, run out the other end and grab the camera and I would dash out of the tent with my binoculars, then rush back in and throw my arms outside the tent flaps, wildly enough so it would look like two men arguing, then I'd run back to the camera and Good would run in with Balshofer and out they would come, both mount the horse and tear out of the scene.

"Why, if at that time a producer had advertised more than four people in his cast the public would have branded him an outright liar."

"When I think of those days," chimes in Franklin, "I can appreciate the conveniences of the motion picture today."

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION FACTS

The exposition will open in July in Los Angeles, Calif.

It will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine.

The Community Coliseum seating 80,000 persons, will be used for the pageants and the showing of revolving floats that deal with famous historical episodes in the history of the Americas.

The stage erected in the center of the Coliseum will be the largest ever constructed for dramatic performances. It will be 200 feet square and will have three levels, the whole being an adaptation of an Aztec temple.

The buildings which will cover 800,000 square feet of space, will conform to the Spanish or Latin-American style of architecture.

The Court of the Americas on the Esplanade will be marked by two towers 150 feet high, each rising from a colonnade, the color will be used generously in the decoration of the buildings including bungalows of varying design in which exhibits will be housed.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1923

WOMEN WILL HOLD COURT, ROYAL IN HOSPITALITY, AT PICTURE EXPOSITION

Director General Davison of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, is working out plans by which women's widest interests will be represented at the Monroe Doctrine Centennial. This means that actresses, dramatists, editors and authors, and, in fact, the women connected with various branches in the production of pictures shall do their part in welcoming the thousands who will come to Los Angeles to help celebrate the Monroe Doctrine Centennial.

According to the present tentative plans there is to be a Women's Court which is to be the center of hospitality. Here will be reception rooms, tea rooms and an auditorium in which morning congresses will be held. At these morning congresses world-famous men and women will discuss the questions of the day under the auspices of various national organizations. The State Federation of Women's Clubs will have charge of a number of programs, taking "education" as the general topic.

Mrs. W. A. Fitzgerald, president of the federation, has expressed her heartiest interest in the Revue and Exposition. With Mrs. John C. Urquhart, president of the district federation, she will arrange for the coming of distinguished speakers. Following out this idea it is expected that the men and women who make the pictures—the players, directors and writers—also will present important programs. The opportunity to discuss the development of the theatre of the silent drama as well as all that concerns the greatest of modern arts, the art of making motion pictures, is one that can be of lasting benefit, it is believed.

For the first time in its brief history of less than a quarter of a century the motion picture industry is to exhibit to the world all the complex operations by which the silent drama is placed on the screen and this fact alone places the coming exposition in a class by itself. It offers attractions never before within the reach of any big fair.

Despite all that has been written and all the published illustrations the public has no conception of the stupendous attainment that has been reached in the production of pictures. In this case, seeing certainly will be believing and there is no doubt that as a result of the Revue and Exposition there will be a new respect for the motion picture industry as well as a new faith in its splendid future as an educational medium as well as a means of entertainment.

University heads have taken an interest in research work for the floats and pageants, which will reproduce scenes from the history of all the Americas. With the wonderful resources of the studios to draw from, this pageantry will be gorgeous in its effects as well as faithful in its presentation of historical episodes.

So far, merely the skeleton of the imposing structure of the Exposition has been articulated. The skeleton promises that the finished creation will be a giant which will subdue all future enemies to progress, including critics and censors inclined to retard advancement that is more remarkable than that of any other modern art or industry.

P. A.'S NOTED MOTHER TO ATTEND FILM EXPO.

"Mike" Boylan has the distinction of obtaining the first acceptance of an invitation to the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition which has come from a distinguished eastern clubwoman. His famous mother, Mrs. Grace Duffy Boylan Geldert, widely known as an author, has announced that she will come to Los Angeles to help celebrate the Monroe Doctrine Centennial.

Mrs. Geldert is president of the National League of American Pen Women and her interest in the big fair means that all members and visitors at the league headquarters in Washington, D. C., will hear about the Exposition in a way which will cause many of them to make the trans-continental trip in July.

"Mike" Boylan, who is Malcolm Boylan back east, has inherited the talent that has enabled him to win a reputation as a publicity writer, for his mother was at one time the most famous newspaper woman in Chicago, later turning her attention to poems and novels.

"NEW BLOOD" ERA MAKES ADVENT IN FILMDOM

The rapidity with which so called "new blood" is coming into the motion picture industry is considered amazing by many close observers and practically all seem agreed that it is a good sign, one indicative of the developing of a most wholesome condition. Among those new and young personalities who have entered the producing field with the admirable zeal which seems to presage much for the future is Richard Thomas, who is now making the first of a series of six-reel features, "The Silent Accuser" at the Hollywood Studios. Mr. Thomas has been in the short subject field heretofore and one of his film achievements entitled "History of Radio," made for Educational, was received with enthusiastic acclaim throughout the country.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Thomas enters the feature field with a definite ambition to be different; to make pictures out of the ordinary. He says his first concern upon deciding to make a full-length photoplay was to ascertain, if possible, what kind of a story no one else was preparing at the time. Consequently, he is making what he terms "a mystery comedy" in which the aim is to keep an audience busy believing any one of seven different characters is guilty of a murder and yet keeping them roaring with laughter on proper occasion.

Mr. Thomas has engaged an all-star cast for his initial feature. Carmel Meyers, Carol Holloway, Kathryn McGuire, E. W. Borman, Clyde Fillmore, Melbourne MacDowell, Spottiswood Aiken, Rex Ballard and John Tonney are the stellar members of this cast. Wilbur McGaugh well and favorably known for his brilliant ability, is assisting in the directing while Jack W. Enoch has charge of the camera. George A. Luther is the business manager and Allan C. Jenking is production manager.

According to schedule, Mr. Thomas has about two more weeks of "shooting" to do on "The Silent Accuser" before it is ready for titling and editing. He announces he will follow it immediately with a society drama.

Virginia Fox is playing the leading feminine role at the R. C. studios in "Now You See It," under the direction of James Horne.

FILM STARS TO ATTEND PLAY EN MASSE

Most of the foremost exponents of the silent drama will pay homage to the spoken drama at Mason Opera House next Monday evening, when will take place the premiere of the A. E. Thomas stage classic, "Just Suppose" in which Creighton Hale, himself a screen celebrity, and Isabelle Lowe, one of stage-land's most delightful dramatic artists, will be co-starred. A glance at the long list of box and seat reservations for the first night of this notable engagement reveals the fact that a grand galaxy of cinema geniuses will be in attendance. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks will be among them. Likewise will be conspicuous such far-famed film folk as Harold Lloyd, Mildred Davis, Eric Von Stroheim, Fred Niblo, Enid Bennett, Maurice Tournier, Mary Miles Minter, June Mathis.

"Just Suppose" has aroused such widespread interest in the film colony that it seems likely almost the full capacity of the theatre will be required to accommodate the more distinguished members of this great industry. Among the many other celebrities who have arranged to be present are: Mae Murray, Anita Stewart, Marshall Neilan, Blanche Sweet, Colleen Moore, King Vidor, Florence Vidor, Raoul Walsh, Marie Prevost, Clarence Badger, King Baggott, Larry Semon, Leon Bary, Gaston Glass, Ernest Torrence, David Torrence, Gareth Hughes, E. K. Lincoln, Bessie Love, Lionel Belmore, Louise Fazenda, Zazzy Pitts, Rosemary Theby, William H. Crane, Joseph Kilgour, Rod LaRocque, Wally Van, Richard Walton Tully, James Young, Lloyd Hamilton, Johnnie Walker, George Fitzmaurice, Louis Goodstadt, Anna Q. Nilsson, Reginald Penny, B. P. Schultberg, Louis B. Mayer, Irving J. Thalberg, William Russell, Helen Ferguson and Vola Vale.

In fact, it would seem that the stellar ranks of silversheet favorites will line up in an entirety before the foot lights over which Miss Lowe, Mr. Hale and their company will essay delivering them a treat in the spoken drama.

"Just Suppose" will serve to bring to the foreground several of the best histrionic geniuses in this Los Angeles mecca of Thespians galore. Most notable of those in the supporting cast are Eric Mayne and Richard Blaydon.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Selznicks Have Troubles

Financial difficulties encountered during the filming of the $1,000,000 production of "Rupert of Hentzau," is said to be the reason of the possibility that Myron Selznick will resign from his position as president of the firm that bears his name. David Selznick, a brother, announced that unless eastern bankers met certain financial requests, the two brothers would withdraw from the Selznick organization and establish their own company in Hollywood after the controversy is settled.

Fire Is New Film Fad

Five performers and five technical studio hands were severely burned when a fire suddenly broke out on a huge set used in "The Phantom Fortune," a serial now being filmed at the Universal Studios, last Monday afternoon. Esther Ralston, William Desmond, Cathleen Calhoun, Lewis Sargent, and the director, Robert Hill, suffered burns to the extent that they had to be treated at the studio emergency hospital and removed to their homes. This is the second studio fire of its kind to occur recently, Goldwyn having contributed the other one in doing a fire scene with a circus "set."

Make-up Wizard Praised

Art Lee, well-known make-up expert, who keeps shop at 1712 St., James Court, is the proud possessor of numerous letters from eminent actors and directors, attesting to his ability and general qualifications. He has done work for Frederick Warde, Ferdinand Earle, Warde Lascelle, Norman Dawn, Diane Pascale, R. B. McIntyre of the Goldwyn Studios, and others, and each one has written an appreciation to the grease-paint wizard for his helpful suggestions and constructive methods.

Baby Bruce Popular

Mary Pickford and Jackie Coogan have no monopoly on the fan-letters, according to Master Bruce Guerin, who receives quite a few of his own. When his second picture, "The Bachelor Daddy," starring Thomas Meighan, appeared, his fan-mail began and has increased steadily ever since, though the five subsequent pictures in which he plays real roles have not yet been released. The clever kiddie is now supporting Priscilla Dean in "Drifting" at Universal, having just completed a role in "Brass" for Warner Bros.

Mary Likes "Nancy"

Mary Pickford has shown considerable interest in "Nancy Stair," the Catherine Chisholm Cushing play which closed at the Majestic Theatre last Saturday. Miss Pickford thought so highly of it that she returned for a second performance. The construction of the play is said to provide very good material for screen adaptation, and several offers for the screen rights have been made. No definite decision has been reached as yet.

Merge and Take Theatre

Almost immediately after the merger of the Cosmopolitan Productions and the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, an announcement was issued to the effect that the newly organized company had acquired the Park Theatre of New York, which will serve as the New York headquarters for Cosmopolitan productions. Elaborate plans for redecoration and remodeling are under way and it is hoped the playhouse will be ready for the premiere showing of the new Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies.

Du Crow Gets Offer

Tote Du Crow, the well-known character actor who won high praise for his performance in Frank Borzage's production of "The Pride of Palomar," is considering an offer from a producing company in Mexico City to be featured in a series of Spanish pictures. Mr. Du Crow played the part of Pablo in "The Pride of Palomar," the character around whom the entire story revolves. Mr. Du Crow is a native of Spain and a pioneer in motion picture circles, having migrated to Hollywood with the first picture company some fifteen years ago.

Pola Starts "Cheat"

Pola Negri's second American picture, "The Cheat," was started at the Famous Players-Lasky Studios last week under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, who, incidentally, will leave the Paramount forces, immediately upon the completion of this film. Jack Holt has been selected to play the leading male role opposite Miss Negri and Charles De Roche, Paramount's French idea of another Valentino, will be seen in an important supporting role.

Lesser Gets More Space

Sol Lesser and his newly organized company, Principal Pictures Corporation, have discovered their own studios are inadequate to fit their plans for forthcoming productions and have consummated a deal with Joseph M. Schenck whereby they will hereafter use the United Studios for their activities. The initial picture to be filmed at the new plant by Mr. Lesser and his associates will be "The Man Who Cheated," by a notable cast including Bert Lytell, Blanche Sweet, Bryant Washburn, Maryon Aye and Lucy Beaumont.

Doris Pawn Scores

The premiere showing of Ernest F. Bishop's melodrama of the Canadian Northwest, "Timber Wolf," lowered its finale curtain to an enthusiastic audience at the Egan Theatre last Monday night. The interesting, outstanding point of the performance was the fact that Doris Pawn, prominent film beauty, carried off honors in the role of Iva Shepard. The Los Angeles Examiner's dramatic critic called her work "pleasing" and "charming." Miss Pawn continues her film activities at Universal while enacting her role before the footlights.

Ann May Returns to Films

Ann May is to return to pictures after an absence of more than a year, during which time she has been appearing on the stage. Miss May has been cast for a part in "The Fog," a Graf production for Metro which Paul Powell will direct at the San Mateo studios. Miss May took up stage work about eight months ago when she was starred in "The Love of Su Shong," a Chinese story by De Witt Newing. This play had a successful tour of the Western states. Miss May returned to Hollywood several weeks ago and was immediately selected for a part in "The Fog." Among the pictures in which Miss May enacted leading roles were "Peaceful Valley" and "Paris Green."

Sloman Returns Here

Edward Sloman has returned to Los Angeles after several months in New York where he produced "Backbone," a Clarence Buddington Kelland story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post, as an all-star special for Distinctive Pictures Corporation. Upon completing the picture, Mr. Sloman remained in New York to attend the Broadway opening of his own independent production, "The Last Hour," which is meeting with success at the Cameo Theatre in Times Square.

Ormston Joins Borzage

Frank D. Ormston, one of the finest art directors in the film industry, has just signed with Arthur H. Jacobs as special art director for Frank Borzage's initial production for Associated First National, which will go into camera work at once. Ormston was in a similar capacity for Mary Pickford on "Tess of the Storm Country," and more recently finished with Norma Talmadge on "Within the Law."

He was associated with Jacobs on recent Katherine MacDonald pictures and for a long time with Lois Weber films.

Starts Fifth Witwer Tale

Mal St. Clair has started production at the Film Booking Office studios on "Some Punches and Judy," the fifth adaptation of H. C. Witwer's well-known "Fighting Blood" stories, with George O'Hara in the featured role. Clara Horton again appears as leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Arthur Rankin, William Courtright, M. E. Ryan, Albert Cooke, Kit Guard and Mabel Van Buren. The screen adaptation was made by Beatrice Van. Lee Grames is behind the camera with David Moreno assistant to Director St. Clair.

Settings Are Realistic

Settings in keeping with the heroic keynote of the story will dominate in the production, "Westbound 99," which Emory Johnson is filming at the Film Booking Office studios for early release. W. L. Heywood, art director at the studios, has delivered the sets. Ralph Lewis is featured as a railroad engineer, with Ella Hall as the feminine lead. The supporting cast includes Claire McDowell, Johnny Harron, Taylor Graves, Wedgewood Nowell, David Kirby, Richard Morris and Jane Morgan.

Becomes Trio's Manager

Alfred A. Grasso, who for many years was on the executive staff of the Henry W. Savage theatrical enterprises, and for several years Chief Assistant to the late George Loane Tucker while he produced "The Miracle Man," is now personal manager for Lon Chaney, Wallace Worsley and Perley Poore Sheehan, who are at present connected respectively as star, director and adapter, with the Universal spectacle production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Another Recruit From Stage

Fannie Warren has turned her talents towards the picture game. Miss Warren played for many years in stock in England, after which she toured the United States until she decided to go into pictures a year and a half ago. Since then she has played prominent parts in many productions. The latest of these are "The Dictator," featuring Wallace Reid and Lila Lee; and "The Law of the Lawless," featuring Dorothy Dalton and Charles La Roche, the French actor recently acquired by Lasky. In this latter production Miss Warren plays a gypsy fortune teller.

ITALIAN CAMERA GENIUS LAUDS U. S. FILMS

Although he has been a member of the local film colony only a short time, Hollywood has no more sincere booster anywhere than Silvano Balboni, who before coming to America was one of Italy's foremost cameramen.

His greatest work, perhaps, was that done on "Quo Vadis" and "The Last Days of Pompeii," two masterpieces made in Italy.

"I had heard all about Hollywood over in Europe," Mr. Balboni said, in a recent interview "and I had seen and admired countless pictures made in this part of the world, but I had utterly failed to realize the magnitude of the motion picture industry in this country.

"It commands respect from the banker, the iron magnate, the oil king, and close attention from the government and the public; while the keen interest shown by the American public in cinematographic developments is an eloquent manifestation that leaves the European observer breathless."

Naturally, Mr. Balboni says, the most unstinted praise should go to those film-makers who, through their perseverance, determined will and hard work have been able to convince capitalists that the pictures are an excellent business proposition.

"They have done much more, though, than this," the Italian newcomer continued. "By virtue of their continuous and steady progress, they have been proving daily to the financiers the soundness and honesty of their purposes, thus justifying the erection of the vast and lavishly equipped studios in Hollywood.

"In Italy, and indeed in all other film-producing European countries, some of them did secure generous financial support, but soon it degenerated into a most disgusting and dishonest scramble to see who could get the most of that money for himself!"

Last December, Mr. Balboni wrote an article for the leading Italian motion picture journal, "La Vita Cinematografica," in which he gave his impressions of the local industry. Making it the basis for an editorial, the magazine published the following:

"We point out these facts to the Italian industry, in the hope that they will be understood, and that it may gain by them.

"To imitate the example that comes from America can still prove a means of safety for us. Away with prejudices! Away with fear on our part to lack originality!

"Let's take the good from where it comes! Would it not be advisable for us to make use of their systems so rigidly and energetically followed?"

JOHN FAIRBANKS RECOVERS FROM ILLNESS SLOWLY; DOUG IS HIS OWN MANAGER

That the complete recovery of Douglas Fairbanks' brother John, who suffered a paralytic stroke recently, may be expected within the next two months is the new hope held out by physicians in attendance.

Until such time as John can resume his duties as general manager of Doug's film activities, Doug himself will fill the managerial chair. Owing to the large number of engagements of Robin Hood which are now being opened, a great deal of extra work has been thrust upon the Fairbanks business office with the result that Douglas, in his new role of business executive, finds himself seated in the swivel chair behind his brother's desk each morning confronted by huge piles of contracts, telegrams and important letters all requiring personal attention.

Records and reports of the showings of Robin Hood in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg, Hollywood and other important centers, all come to the Fairbanks company for final attention.

"Often wondered why I worked in Wall Street," Doug said. "Now I know."

The manner in which attendance reports are coming to the studio indicates that "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" will be seen by more people than any other photoplay. During the first week at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where the picture opened last week for the second time in the metropolis, 101,000 admissions were registered. This established a new world's record for theatre attendance. When the picture opened a few days later in Philadelphia at the Stanton Theatre, a new mark for attendance was set in that city. The engagement at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre now promises to develop into the longest run ever recorded a motion picture. In seventeen weeks 255,000 people attended the show, and the picture undoubtedly will continue several weeks longer.

When the new engagements for Robin Hood are launched by the United Artists in practically all of the important cities of the United States, Doug will probably wear out at least a gross of good adding machines adding up new records.

Helen Moves from Studio to Studio

Helen Kesler, petite ingenue who has just finished her second Vitagraph comedy as leading lady for Jimmy Aubrey and will return to Goldwyn for a second engagement. Her career is running in seconds, as she left Goldwyn about three months ago after appearing in her second Rupert Hughes picture. Her latest engagement with Vitagraph was a second one, as she had been Mr. Aubrey's leading lady for a year prior to signing with Goldwyn.

Cops to Do Pre-viewing

The entire Los Angeles police department will be invited to the pre-release showing of "The Silent Accuser," a six-reel mystery drama directed by Richard Thomas, which incidentally gives a graphic description of the finger print system of identification.

Doris Moves from Studio to Stage

Doris Pawn, who has scored a personal triumph as Alice in "The Timber Wolf," a spoken play now being presented at Egan's Theatre. This is Miss Pawn's first appearance on the stage for several seasons and she says she regards it as a lark despite the fact that she is having the lark under the disadvantage of being obliged to work her usual long hours before the cameras at the studio simultaneously. She is playing a principal role in a new Universal picture.

Viola Dana Leaves Hospital

Viola Dana has recovered sufficiently from her operation for appendicitis to be removed from the Good Samaritan hospital to her Hollywood home. While the little Metro star is still under the care of a doctor and nurse she is improving rapidly and expects to be able to walk around within a short time.

ARTIST OF NOTE WEDS SINGER OF NOTE

A very pretty wedding was solemnized Saturday when Welcome Lewis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian J. Lewis of Venice, became the bride of Milton Menasco, well-known western artist and art director of a score of successful motion picture productions.

Judge John Summerfield, who for forty years has been a close friend of the bride's parents, officiated at the wedding which was solemnized at the home of the bride's brother, Lew Lewis of 2106 Pizana Place, Venice. The bride was charming in a gown of white taffeta with flowing white veil. She was attended by Miss Ruth Palmer, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Byron Palmer of Venice. The groom was attended by his brother, Albert Menasco. After a short honeymoon, the young couple will make their home in Hollywood, where they have purchased a residence.

The bride, who for a number of years starred in vaudeville as "The Little Girl with the Big Voice," is a talented violinist and singer. She is said to have a voice of a lower register than any other woman singer. Menasco is recognized as one of the foremost western artists. A number of his murals graced the dome of the Fine Arts building at the Panama Pacific Exposition. Since 1915 he has been devoting his time to the art direction of a large number of big productions. Among his most recent successes are "Lorna Doone" and "The Isle of Lost Ships." He is engaged at present on Maurice Tourneur's production of "The Brass Bottle" and Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West."

HURST WILL PRODUCE A DIFFERENT "BARRIER"

There was an error in the announcement relative to Director Paul Hurst's latest activities for the W. J. Irving Productions. It was stated that he had started filming "The Barrier," which is the title of the well-known Rex Beach masterpiece. As a matter of fact, Mr. Hurst is picturizing entirely different story under the title of "The Blood Barrier." He has been busily engaged casting for this feature at the Cosmo Art Studios for several days and he still has several parts to assign.

"They've been making Rex Beach's 'The Barrier' under every title conceivable for a long time, which accounts for my anxiety to have it impressed that my forthcoming picture, 'The Blood Barrier,' is in no way suggested by or similar to that famous classic," Mr. Hurst says.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

One certainly every actor should take into consideration is, if he goes straight in this present, he is justified in expecting a future. But, on the other hand, if he is indulging in wild parties and trying to "beat" every bill possible, he can be just as sure of getting his foot into it and depriving himself of any chance of a semblance of a noteworthy future. The moth never survives the flame long.

Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood" was received with universal and united acclaim by British critics. Well, if Britishers couldn't like "Robin Hood," they wouldn't be loyal to some of their best traditions, and, if they couldn't like the cinema art so outstanding in Doug's unprecedented production, they wouldn't like the highest possible modern tradition in photodrama.

Now that the advocates of art have lined up solidly against the forces of commercialism, there undoubtedly will be some flying in filmdom since the crowd of fellows who think motion pictures in dollars only are sure to not only squawk but to pick on the very pin-feathers of anyone who would dare to deny them the right to drain all available coffers dry. More power to the defenders of art. Verily, art is more important than fortunes pecuniary and not so peculiarly revolting.

There is no gainsaying the fact that many of the men now running some things in the film industry are utterly and hopelessly of mental calibres far too low to help the screen in any high aims it might rate. However, the inevitable process of natural elimination, gives ample assurance of the eventual advent of the day when in the survival of the fittest the quality of brains will be pre-eminent and the present-day advantage of money-grabbing nerve and bluff will be null and void.

Someone in praising Camera! in a letter gratefully received this week, declares it is the only real trade paper the motion picture industry boasts. Camera! retains its modesty to the extent of hereby making it clear that the field it seeks to cover is the film production field of Southern California. Unlike the other trade papers, no effort is made to go thoroughly into the exhibition end of the business. The management of Camera! figures it is a worthy work to concentrate on recording the production activities from every angle.

WINNING SAVANT'S PRAISE

As a special evidence on high authority of the permanent value of its Eskimo classic, "Nanook of the North," Pathe quotes the following letter received from Curator George H. Sherwood, American Museum of Natural History:

"On behalf of the American Museum of Natural History and especially its Department of Public Education, I desire to express our appreciation of the generosity of Pathe Exchange and Revillon Freres in presenting a copy of the film, 'Nanook of the North,' to the Museum for use in its educational work.

"We had the pleasure of seeing this picture when it was first shown at the Capitol Theatre last spring and were greatly impressed with its educational value in teaching the geography and conditions of the North. We were more than delighted, therefore, when we learned through Mr. George D. Pratt, one of our Trustees, that you had presented a copy of the film to the Museum.

"The photographic work of the film is excellent and the story of how a primitive people live is so simply and dramatically told that the picture holds one's attention, whether child or adult, to the end. We feel that every school child in the city would profit by seeing this picture. We congratulate all those who have had to do with its production upon their success.

"We are glad to possess a copy of this film because in it are shown in actual use many of the implements and utensils which are exhibited in our Eskimo collections at the Museum. The film therefore supplements and enhances the educational value of our exhibits.

"A further reason why we desire this picture is that it was taken with an Akeley camera which, as you doubtless know, was invented and developed by Mr. Carl E. Akeley of our Scientific Staff.

"Our first showing of the film was in the auditorium of the Museum on December 13. It may interest you to know that 10,400 school children applied for seats. Inasmuch as our auditorium holds about 15,000, we have found it necessary to exhibit the film nine times in order to accommodate the number. The total number of children who have seen the picture in the last eight days is approximately 11,000.

"Again thanking you for your interest in the Museum and its work, I am

"Sincerely yours,

"GEO. H. SHERWOOD,

"Curator."

A Motion Picture Ball

I paused a moment
In a wizard's hall.
One time it might have been
Gray stone—
Cold, mocking, fixed.
But tonight
All subtle mysticism had melted
Into flaming pools of gayety.
The dreaded wizard entertained.
Shimmering banners,
Woven from the golden hair of captive princesses, Rippled on the merriment of dance and song.
Great, hidden torches
Reflected light from sapphire mirrors
And sent soft amber glows
To melt into a nothingness.
The guests
In equipage of autumn paints,
Writhed to the brazen music
Of a storm.

If Opportunity doesn't knock, that's no sign you should begin.

EXHAUSTS

By Al Martin

Valentino was making personal appearances in the middle west and told the manager he wanted his salary doubled, for he was "knocking 'em dead."

Ruddy lost that engagement.

The manager told the "Sheik" that it was "killing him" to pay his salary as was.

I originated the "Sheik" idea; playing it ten years ago in a picture with Francis X. Bushman, but was so good they cut me out.

Taking advantage of my extreme knowledge of "Sheiking" I am giving lessons in that art.

I also write life insurance as a side line to protect my half-learned pupils.

By the way (it's cheap buying) I am happy to announce that I am about to produce a picture with actors.

The only release I have arranged lately was my release from jail.

I'll have an all-star cast; even if it's only one, he'll be all star.

About the release, seriously this time, I am negotiating for the purchase of a theatre. The only obstacle in the way of consummating the deal immediately is, I don't happen to have the money that soon.

We will now all stand and sing, "Wrigley, the Gum of the Ocean."

Grief note: "Doc" Lawson has just presented me with my bill for advertising in "Camera."

Certain.
I mean curtain.

P. S.—I forgot to mention the title of the picture I am going to make. The title is, "All the Brothers Were Violent."

N. B.—I will probably follow with "The Sign of the Nose."

IRENE PROVES A RULING DANCE QUEEN

The Coccoanuts almost slipped off their palms in the Ambassador Coccoanut Grove when Irene Castle, clad in a magnificent ermine wrap, made her first appearance in the Ambassador Coccoanut Grove before 1200 leading stars of the motion picture and theatrical world, as well as a great host of society folk.

The Grove has resounded in the past with applause for Maurice, Frisco, impromptu stunts of Charlie Chaplin, Gus Edwards, Larry Semon and many others, but never before has any star received such an ovation as that given Mrs. Castle and her dancing partner, William Reardon.

So great was the enthusiasm that Irene was compelled to slip away, change her costume and appear again, giving no less than seven different dances during the evening, followed by a speech and a judging of the weekly dancing contest, which was won by May McAvoy.

For her first appearance Mrs. Castle wore an orchid chiffon Parisienne creation which floated through the air like a gossamer breeze surrounding the beautiful dancer. She changed later into a white georgette creation, trimmed with great billows of ostrich feathers. Following her dance Mrs. Castle held a regular impromptu reception. Among those who came to pay homage were:

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Buster Keaton, Marshal Neilan, Elaine Hammerstein, Mary Miles Minter, Warner Brothers, Richard Dix, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Mix, Constance Talmadge, Mae Murray, Corinne Griffith, Jack Holt, Monte Blue and Ruth Roland.

FILM MAN HAS NARROW ESCAPE FROM IRISH WAR

Clarence Erickson, in charge of the British and European showings of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," narrowly missed mixing into the Irish Rebellion according to his statement upon returning to the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios after an extended sojourn abroad.

"I was trying my best to catch a train leaving Dublin for Belfast," he says, "but fortunately missed it. At the time I thought this was a piece of pretty tough luck. Next morning, however, when I saw pictures in the paper of the cars piled up in the ditch I realized that he who runs to catch a train sometimes lives to ride another day. Irish rebels had wrecked the train."

Ted Stewart has recovered from an attack of the "flu" and will resume his studio activities soon.

TWO BROTHERS RISK DROP FROM RICHES TO RAGS FOR SAKE OF SCREEN CAREERS

"From Rags to Riches" has nothing on the Murphy boys, only they are reversing the cut, from riches to rags, for it is in rags they appear in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," recently filmed by Lasky.

Not satisfied with their private swimming pool, a palatial home and a collection of cups and medals, won in national athletics, the boys, at the age of eight and ten, renounced their happy birthright to do their bit in the movies. Up to now it has only been a bit, but there is a bit of real Irish behind it.

Few boys at so early an age are permitted to choose their own career, but Mr. and Mrs. John F. Murphy are as unusual parents as their boys are sons. Mrs. Murphy is a graduate of Trinity College and her husband, a noted lawyer, was secretary to Vice-president William P. Frye under the late President Roosevelt, and later won renown as prosecuting attorney in Seattle under the Gill administration.

There never was an Irishman who started from the top and the Murphy boys are no exception to this rule. They turned down a contract in New York and a tour on the Orpheum Circuit to learn the film business from the bottom up. With this in view they have settled in Hollywood and placed themselves in the hands of Theodore Kosloff so that they might have an efficient and artistic training in muscle development, interpretative dancing and pantomime.

Jack, the older boy, whose ambition is to become a director, in addition to shooting scenes, has developed diplomacy at an early age and has shot many ducks with Mr. Kosloff, winning a place for himself in the heart of the great Russian genius.

Maurice, the younger, is more artistically inclined. He is a composer and has shown marked ability as a pianist under Dr. Karll. But Maurice chooses the screen for his career. Jack is ten years old and Maurice is eight.

To renounce the recess of life at so early an age is enough in itself to assure them of success, for when they are not working their hours are spent in the pursuit of their studies.

Despite the fact that the boys came in Hollywood greatly laden with letters of introduction and the prestige that their father's name gives them, they have used neither, and to their efforts and young personalities alone are due their appearance in fifteen different productions during the past few months.

Virginia Brown Faire, who, according to a report current this week, has been offered a starring contract by one of the foremost independent producers. Miss Faire has just completed an engagement in the Paul Gerson production of the Charles Dickens classic, "The Cricket on the Hearth." She has established herself on one of the most brilliant of emotional actresses. Her cameo-like characterizations in "By Benefit of Clergy" and "Omar, the Tentmaker" have been termed rare classics by critics throughout the world.

Fritz Brunette, who is playing the leading feminine role in Hugh Dierker's production of "The Other Side," now being filmed. Miss Brunette, despite her youth, has long since won her place in the front ranks of truly artistic exponents of the silent drama and included in her future plans is one for developing herself as one of the trailblazers in creating a new screen technique which seems assured of realization.

DISCOVERS A NEW WAY TO FILM DANCING

Clarence G. Badger, who is directing the Goldwyn picture, "Red Lights," has discovered a new method of dancing before the camera which practically eliminates the jerky movements of the dancers.

Ballet scenes have never been successful because the movements are recorded with an uneven motion. The reason for this is that the dancers move so fast when crossing in front of the lens that a camera turning at the ordinary rate of speed fails to record each move. Mr. Badger discovered that the jerky motion was noted only when the dancer moved directly across the camera lines. When she moved to or away from the lens there were no uneven breaks.

For the big ballet scene in "Red Lights," Badger decided upon a new plan. The dancers are instructed to slow down their movements when crossing in front of the camera, and to speed up immediately upon turning to or from the camera. This method is said to eliminate all the jerky motions. The quick change of time is very difficult for the dancer, and can be attained only through constant practice. Tests have been made of this new plan and have proved to be highly successful.

Eddie Jones, who is handling the ballet scene in "Red Lights" under the supervision of Mr. Badger, is putting the dancers through rehearsals daily.

PIONEER N. Y. COSTUME HOUSE LOCATES HERE

A further testimonial to the importance of Hollywood as a center for concerns dealing in any way in theatrical lines is given in the establishing in temporary quarters at the Metro Studios of Van Horn & Son, Inc., which firm has made a specialty of historic costuming in New York and Philadelphia for the last seventy years. Not only does this company maintain big establishments in these two cities, but it has recently opened one in Jacksonville, Florida, too, with the idea of having branches in close contact with film production wherever it may be.

Among the especially big and important screen productions for which Van Horn has supplied the costumes are such well-known classics as "When Knighthood Was in Flowers" and "In Old New York," both starring vehicles of Marion Davies, and, "Broadway Broke," starring Mary Carr. "The Scarecrow" starring Glenn Hunter and "Backbone."

At the present time this firm, under the personal direction of Mr. Van Horn, is costuming the forthcoming Rex Ingram production of "Scaramouche."

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

J. W. Fuqua is shooting "The Silent Accuser," now in production at the Hollywood Studios.

Reports from Chicago indicate Rudolph Valentino and Winifred Hudnut will re-wed next Monday.

Monte Blue, Marie Prevost and Harry Myers have been placed under long term contracts by the Warner Brothers.

Wilbur McGaugh, recently production manager for Ben Wilson, is assisting Richard Thomas at the Hollywood Studios.

Maurice Tourneur's next production will be the adaptation of F. Anstey's story, "The Brass Bottle." Mr. Tourneur recently finished the filming of "The Isle of Lost Ships."

Gladys Brockwell has been engaged by Universal to play the role of the mother of Esmereida, which is played by Patsy Ruth Miller in the Wallace Worsely production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," starring Lon Chaney.

Frank Borzage, newest of independent directors, who is to make a story for Associated First National, was at one time a leading man for Thos. H. Ince when that dynamic producer was making pictures out in the canyons near Santa Monica.

Paul Weigel has signed with Lasky to play Gloria Swanson's father in "Blue Beard's Eighth Wife." This character will give Mr. Weigel opportunity to display his dramatic ability once again, as recently he has been featured in a series of comedies.

Tod Browning, noted director of melodrama, long identified with Universal, has signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn. Browning's last picture for Universal was "Drifting," from William Brady's stage play. Priscilla Dean starred in it.

The cast for the first Ring Lardner "You Know Me Al" baseball comedy, being produced by Lee Moran at Universal City, has been completed. Included with the comedian are Mike Donlin, Emil "Irish" Meusel, Bill Dyer and Lillian Hackett. Arvid Gillstrom is directing.

George Walsh, who recently signed a long-term contract to appear in Goldwyn pictures, has been cast as Attorney Wheaton in Rex Beach's "The Spoilers" now being directed at the Goldwyn studios by Director Lambert Hillyer. It is his first role under his new contract.

William Duncan will join the Universal forces immediately after the completion of his final Vitagraph starring vehicle, "Terrible Terry."

Gertrude Neilan, the original Mrs. Marshall Neilan, will wed Jack Alicoate, associate editor of the Film Daily, according to an announcement from Gotham.

Pauline Toler is completing her engagement in the Clarence Badger production of "Red Lights," now being filmed at the Goldwyn Studios.

Ralph Lewis is playing one of the feature roles in Max Graf's latest production, now in the course of filming at the San Mateo Studios.

John M. Stahl's next production for First National release will be the picture version of the original story entitled "Daughters of the Rich."

Mary Pickford is busy casting for her next production, tentatively titled "Rosita," which is to be directed by Ernest Lubitsch. Clara Eames, prominent stage actress, has been selected to play the role of "Queen Rosita," and Holbrook Blinn will interpret the role of the king.

Leo White, who has won international fame enough in his French characterizations, and also his latest success, a comedy part with Valentino in "Blood and Sand," is at present playing a French Count with Harold Lloyd. After completing this part he will return to the Lasky lot.

Eric Von Stroheim's initial production for Goldwyn, the story of the cruel McTeague, from which character the original story derives its name, will be changed to "Greed." A consensus of opinion among writers and critics persuaded Mr. Von Stroheim to make the change in title.

Abe Stern, vice president of Century Comedies, has terminated a twelve-week sojourn to New York with his return to the Century studio in Hollywood. His first official act upon his return was escorting Anna Fitzui, famous San Carlo Opera star, about the "sets" before she left Los Angeles.

Wheeler Dryden, young English actor-playwright, has forsaken the silent drama to fill a second engagement with the Wilkes stock company. He is seen in the role of a lover in "The Poppy Kiss," the Catherine Cushing play at the Majestic Theatre in which Mary Newcomb plays the leading role.

Ethel Christie, who supported Snowy Baker in several productions, has recovered from a severe cold contracted while on location, and will soon resume her studio activities.

Francis McDonald, having finished his role of Jules Gaillard, the French aviator in Douglas MacLean's picture, "Going Up," is taking a short vacation before going into his next role.

A meeting of the Electrical Illuminating Engineers' Society was held March 1st at the Masonic Temple at 6840 Hollywood Boulevard. Dinner was served the members in the grill.

Katherine Grant, winner of the Miss Los Angeles contest and contestant for the title of Miss America, has been engaged as leading woman for the Stan Laurel comedies, now starting production at the Roach studio.

Alberta Vaughn expects to finish her sixth and last comedy for William Fox the early part of next week and will thereupon cease to be a leading lady for comedians. She will step into full-length photodramas and has several offers to choose from in time to avoid being idle more than a day.

Edmund Cobb, making his first picture since his return to California several weeks ago, is supporting Wm. Duncan and Edith Johnston at the Vitagraph studios. The title of the picture is "Terrible Terry" and is personally directed by Mr. Duncan. This is Mr. Duncan's last picture for Vitagraph.

Carmel Myers heads the all-star cast of Richard Thomas' production of "The Silent Accuser," now in production at the Hollywood Studios. The other stellar roles are being portrayed by Carol Halloway, Melbourne MacDowell, E. W. Borman, Kathryn McGuire, Clyde Fillmore, Spottiswoode Aitken.

E. Mason Hopper has signed with the Cosmopolitan Productions for a period of one year, during which time he will direct a series of feature photoplays. At the present time he is well under way with filming of the first of the series, "The Love Piker," starring Anita Stewart, at the Goldwyn Studios.

Floyd Brockell, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., distribution manager, has arrived in Los Angeles in connection with First National business. He will personally visit stars, directors and producers who help make First National pictures. Brockell is stopping at the Alexandria.

Beulah Marie Dix's "The Fighting Blade," a tale of Oliver Cromwell's time, has been selected as Richard Barthelmess' next starring vehicle following the completion of "The Bright Shawl."

Gene Barr, who was injured in an auto accident at Seventh and Broadway several weeks ago, has resumed film work. He recently completed a part in "The Spoilers" at the Goldwyn studios.

H. Jackson, formerly finger print expert at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., is one of the technical directors for Richard Thomas, who is producing "The Silent Accuser" at the Hollywood Studios.

Ann Little created quite a disturbance when it was learned that she was doubling for her double in "The Eagle's Talons," the serial in which she is featured at Universal under the direction of Duke Worne.

Malcolm (Mike) Boylan, former director of publicity for Universal City, has been appointed head official of the exploitation department at the Louis B. Mayer Studios. Charles R. Condon will continue to handle all national and routine publicity while Mr. Boylan will direct special exploitation stunts.

Goldwyn has made arrangements for the handling of another great novel upon the screen. A contract has been signed with Gilbert Gable, a new producer, to make for it, through Achievement Films, Inc., a big special production of "The Magic Skin," one of Honore de Balzac's earlier and most successful novels.

Mabel Normand arrived in Los Angeles this week and was besieged by reporters who wanted to know all about her engagement, or rather, her reported engagement. Mabel told them all that the whole affair was foolishness, and that she was just "kidding" the eastern newspaper men. She will immediately start work on her next Sennett picture, "Mary Ann."

Conway Tearle has been signed by Joseph M. Schenck and will play the leading male role opposite Norma Talmadge in her next starring vehicle, "Ashes of Vengeance." C. Gardner Sullivan, noted creative writer and scenarist, was also tendered a contract at the same time and will prepare the stories and continuities for forthcoming Constance Talmadge productions.

TO OFFER GREEK PLAY HERE IN ENGLISH

George Rigas, who was a stage idol of Athens prior to his coming to America at the head of a company presenting Grecian versions of Shakespearean plays, and who has since made his mark in American motion pictures, is now busily engaged in translating from the Greek the play in which he scored his biggest dramatic triumphs abroad with the idea of producing it on the stage in Los Angeles and then adapting it to the screen. The title of the play is "The Shadow" and Rigas is the author of it, he having first produced it five years ago.

Mr. Rigas has been devoting his time exclusively to the tedious task of translating this play into English for several weeks simultaneously with his activities in connection with forming his own producing unit in which numerous of his fellow-countrymen will have financial interests. The basic idea of his company is to place on the American screen a series of Greek classics in literature, a plan which has aroused much interest in view of the fact that it will be an innovation. Now it has been decided to present the plays on the speaking stage first as a matter of try-out before entering into the expensive processes of filming. All-star casts will be engaged and each play will be elaborately mounted, according to an announcement just issued by Mr. Rigas.

"Since it will be entirely an experiment without precedent to guide us, we must embrace any and all opportunities to determine how the American theatre-goers will receive drama from the modern Grecian viewpoint before undertaking film versions costing upwards of a quarter of a million dollars," he says.

When "The Shadow" is presented on the stage, Mr. Rigas will be seen in the same role he played abroad.

Preparing "Six Days"

Ouida Bergere, one of the most famous of women writers for the screen, will prepare the continuity for "Six Days," the Elinor Glyn story which will mark the first appearance of Corinne Griffith in a Goldwyn feature, according to an announcement by June Mathis, Editorial Director. Miss Bergere is, in private life, the wife of George Fitzmaurice, noted director, and has been associated with him as adapter and scenario writer of practically all his productions. Charles J. Brabin has arrived at the Culver City studios to direct the feature.

Lewis Mason is doing two pictures at the same time. One for Marshall Neilan and the other with Gladys Walton.

HOWLAND FOUNDS GREAT "MINE" OF INFORMATION FOR HOLLYWOOD FILM-MAKERS

Would you like to know just how the inside of King Tutankhamen's palace on the Nile looked 3000 years ago?

Uno can tell you!

Or maybe you'd like a picture, either actual or mental, of just how a Thibetan priest eats his meals; or whether he eats any?

Uno can give you the information.

Of course, this may sound a little far-fetched; maybe it is. But if there's any little detail connected with any important public building, any class of home, any native trait that is necessary in the making of feature film productions, it's almost a 10 to 1 bet that L. A. Howland, who conducts the International Cinema Research Bureau in the Hollywood Security Building, can supply just the information desired.

Through associate correspondents in all parts of the old world, as well as the principal cities of the United States, this bureau receives every day a constant stream of data and pictures of interest to makers of feature films.

Photographs of all classes of buildings—interiors and exteriors of foreign and domestic public buildings, mansions and huts, bungalows and hotels—these are only items among the great supply on hand.

Supplementing the pictures are cables and letters containing authentic data and detail on costumes, customs, manners and habits of the persons using those buildings for business or residence purposes.

Eight years of actual experience in the making of motion pictures is behind the present work in which Mr. Howland is engaged.

Extra, office clerk, casting clerk, continuity assistant on the set, property man, assistant director and studio manager—these are a few of the jobs he has held, and which have given him the real picture slant on the need for absolute accuracy in detail.

This general experience has been supplemented, recently, by a leisurely trip, lasting seven months, through all parts of Europe and Africa.

Of special interest at this time, perhaps, in view of the furor created by the recent discovery and excavation of the tomb of King Tutankhamen, at Luxor, Egypt, is the fact that Mr. Howland spent three days there a year ago and also two nights in camp within a half mile of the Pyramids at Gizah. He observed the operations of archaeologists then seeking the burial place of the ancient monarch.

Carefully kept files, filled with every variety of material which might be useful to motion picture producers, directors and artists, enable immediate entry into the data records of the whole world.

Candidate for Role of "Ben Hur"

Eddie Gribbon as he appeared in a Roman characterization in a Mack Sennett comedy some time ago. Now he is being discussed as a possibility for the title role in "Ben Hur" in which similar costumes will be much featured. Mr. Gribbon is of athletic physique and he is an all-around athletic, having been a professional ball player and a professional boxer before becoming an actor.

Hopes to Vote Himself Out of Sleuthing

Edward W. Borman as a detective in the Richard Thomas production of "The Silent Accuser." Mr. Borman has played about a dozen different kinds of detectives on the screen, but he says this is the first time he has had to suspect seven different characters of having committed one crime. He has hopes of getting away from detective roles soon.

"JUST SUPPOSE" OPENS HERE MONDAY

Outstanding stage plays have been conspicuously few and far between in Los Angeles Theaters this season. In fact, it wouldn't be very hard to name them on the fingers of two hands.

All the more reason, then, for the expectant attitude which theatergoers are assuming toward "Just Suppose," the romantic comedy drama of love and youth which will open at the Mason Opera House next Monday night.

Creighton Hale, as the lovable young Prince George, and Isabelle Lowe, in the leading feminine role, are two of the best known legitimate exponents of drama of today, and the press notices they have received wherever they appeared—New York, Chicago, San Francisco and other cities—put them upon the topmost rung of the stage ladder.

No less strong is the cast which has been engaged to support the two principals.

Eric Mayne, for fifteen years one of the leading actors in London, before coming to America, is cast in the part of Lord Karnaby, the principal character role. His long experience behind the footlights fits him eminently for this part, even if his experience as one of the leading character actors of filmland were not taken into account.

Then there are John Miljan, Chester Bishop and Richard Blaydon, all cast in important parts, in addition to the other members of the cast. Mr. Blaydon in the role of Bubbles is especially interesting.

"Just Suppose," from the pen of A. E. Thomas, had long, successful runs in New York and Chicago, before being brought to the coast. Its most recent showing was in San Francisco, where all of the newspaper critics united in praising it to the skies.

Originally scheduled to open last Monday night, the play was postponed for one week, because of Mr. Hale insisting on absolute perfection of performance and production for art's sake and in total disregard of any extra expense incurred by a delay.

Carl J. Stadler is presenting now "Just Suppose," the staging of which has been under the personal direction of Mr. Hale.

Beban Invited to Italy

The Italian Consul General has requested George Beban to present his combined stage and screen production of "The Sign of the Rose," in Italy, following Mr. Beban's proposed tour of England with his company. The Italian official stated he would ask the King of Italy to bestow a decoration upon Mr. Beban.

TRIP TO SPA HAS MAGIC EFFECT ON SCRIPT

Maurice Tourneur has just returned from Palm Springs where he went a week ago to work out the continuity for his next production, "The Brass Bottle," which is to be released by M. C. Levee through First National. Armed with a copy of the novel by the eminent English author, F. Anstey, a copy of the dramatic version of the story which was the rage of London for three years and an adaptation by Charles Maigne, Tourneur staved when he left for the springs that he wouldn't return until he had worked out the continuity to his entire liking. He came back Monday wearing a happy smile which augurs well for the new picture.

Those who are familiar with "The Brass Bottle" say it is just the kind of a picture that Tourneur likes and that of course means a great deal. The story is said to be the most fantastic imaginable, and one that could only be worked out through the miracles of photography. That it will prove even more interesting than Tourneur's recently completed production of "The Isle of Lost Ships"—a tale of the Sargasso Sea—is the prediction.

The art direction of "The Brass Bottle" will be in the capable hands of Milton Menasco, who was in charge of the art work of Tourneur's "Lorna Doone" and "The Isle of Lost Ships" as well as many other big successes.

Scott R. Beal, who has been Tourneur's chief assistant for a number of years, will be assistant director and production manager for the new picture. The cinematographer will be Arthur L. Todd, who was also with the "Isle of Lost Ships" company.

Scenarist is Writing Novel

Bradley King, continuity writer for Thomas H. Ince, whose original story, "What A Wife Learned," has just been released, is now collaborating with Talbot Mundy, British novelist, on a book which she later will adapt for the screen. The picture will be a big special on Ince's fall releasing program. "The Devil's Own" is the title of the book which will be published by the Bobbs Merrill Publishing Co.

William C. (Bill) Thompson is lending the sunshine of his inimitable smile to the H. and B. Film Company's first production of a series of eight outdoor photoplays, featuring Cliff Smith and Eileen Sedgwick. Bill has charge of the camera and is also acting as co-director with Cliff Smith.

"SMOKE" WINS SECOND CONTRACT WITH INGRAM

The gods smile favorably on "Smoke" Turner so far as keeping him close to the genial influence of Rex Ingram's directorial genius. Therefore, let it be recorded definitely that this same well-known and popular "Smoke" has just signed a three-month contract with Metro with the stipulation that he is to play an important role in "Scaramouche," Ingram's next production. This is the second time this actor has hearkened to the megaphoned voice of Mr. Ingram in a vitally important film, he having been prominently in the cast of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," in which, by the way, Mr. Turner gave one of the most finished performances of his long screen career.

Due to the fact that Mr. Ingram will not be ready to start on the sequences in which figures the character assigned to Mr. Turner until the latter part of March, the latter will play another part in James Young's production of "Tribby" in the meantime. He finished a long engagement with Ruth Roland in her latest serial about two weeks ago.

Gets Doubling Habit Early

Little Dorothy Seay has made rapid strides since she left Chicago to enter the picture game here less than a year ago. She is so much in demand that between sequences in the Charles Ray production of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," for which she is contracted, she has been working at the Hal Roach studio in the "Our Gang" comedies. She expects to sign with the Borzage company shortly.

Saturday, March 3rd, will serve as the last day on which Paul Bern will hold his position of supervising editor of Universal City, according to an announcement just received. After his resignation, Mr. Bern will devote his undivided time to independent scenario writing and adapting.

Robert Edeson has returned from New York, where he played the "lead" in "The World We Live In." He will appear in the picture version of "Othello."

Frank Crowley of the Stadium wishes it announced to the picture folks that he has cast Willie O'Brien and "Dynamite" Murphy to enact the stellar roles in a four-reel production to be staged next Friday night. Don't know what release, but it ought to be a knock-out.

Chester Bennett is completing negotiations for the purchase of the Downing Process Laboratory plant for a reported price of $200,000. The old Bennett Laboratories, which were located next to the Fine Arts Studios, were recently destroyed by fire.

AUTO COLLISION LEADS TO ANGRY GUN PLAY

When the motor car in which Murray Spencer, former Yale student and now a rising motion picture actor, was riding Thursday afternoon, collided with one being driven by Joseph Miller, a druggist, and both machines were badly wrecked, someone got excited and started an altercation which culminated in a gun play in which Mr. Spencer alleges Mr. Miller was the sole instigator and aggressor. It seems that when an argument arose as to where to place the blame for the accident, the revolver was whipped out of a pocket to play its part in contributing towards the excitement.

The final result was both the actor and the druggist rushed to the Wilshire police station with something like four policemen and each preferred charges of reckless driving against the other and Mr. Spencer plans to bring an additional charge of carrying a concealed weapon against Mr. Miller. It is inevitable that a court will have to straighten the tangle out.

When the crash happened, Mr. Spencer was on his way to the United Studios, where he is playing a part in a picture.

Peggy's Production Plans

Four big productions yearly will be made by Baby Peggy, according to the announcement made by J. Travers Montgomery, the proud father of the Jinny Juliet. Peggy will appear in no more two reelers but will confine her efforts entirely to the big features. Despite the fact that Baby Peggy has barely reached her fourth birthday she has starred in thirty-one Century productions since starting in pictures less than two years ago.

Ralph Lewis will soon pack up his two hand bags and journey to the San Mateo studios at San Mateo near San Francisco to play one of the featured roles in a new Graf production.

The H. and B. Film Company has removed its offices from 1442 Beachwood Drive, Hollywood, to the Bronx Studios at 1745 Glendale Boulevard, where their productions are now being made and where they will also conduct their distributing business.

Frank Livingston, former Morosco stage director, has been engaged as production manager by Ward Wing. Mr. Wing is starting on a seven-reel feature, the working title being "The Extra Man," which will be photographed at Universal City.

John Beck has been engaged to play a character heavy in "The Right of the Strongest," which is being directed by Edgar Lewis on the Universal lot.

You may have multitudinous ideas, but pray stick to one ideal, viz: strict righteousness.

SAYS SCREEN HAS ITALY'S BEST TALENT

Due to the fact that there seems to be a general impression that practically all the Italians who have achieved high fame in American motion pictures emanate from the poorer classes of sunny Italy, Monte Banks, the popular comedian, who was born and reared in Cecenna, Italy, arises to remark that not a single native of his country, now in the cinema limelight, hailed from families below the upper middle classes. According to his statement Rodolph Valentino descends from one of the oldest and best Italian families, as well and favorably known to his countrymen, nationally, as any of the American families whose members are prominent in the general public's eye.

"It is not egotism, but a matter of family pride that I call attention to my case; for instance," he says, "my father has been noted in Italy for many years as one of the foremost musicians and conductors of grand opera, and, he has always moved in the highest musical and social circles."

It might be added that Mr. Banks himself was in grand opera before he migrated to the United States and his reason for giving this line of work up was that he discovered his voice could not be developed to a point of sufficient perfection to warrant him in aspiring to the top heights of fame as a singer.

"Every Italian who has been blessed with the success made possible by the superior opportunities in this great America becomes, as a rule, a most ardent loyalist to the United States, and it is seldom that one saves up his money only to take it back to his native land like members of other races do," Monte adds.

Fate is on His Trail

It seems Tom Regan, assistant director for Hobart Henley, who is now filming the Universal production of "The Abysmal Brute," should direct his efforts towards making a career as an actor. In the course of one day he was asked by Director Hill to play a bit in his "Phantom Fortune," a small part for Henry Lehrman in his latest picture, the role of a dancing master in King Baggott's "Crossed Wires," a bank clerk role for Jack Conway and to interpret the role of a Chinaman in Tod Browning's latest production.

Helen Starr, former title writer for Goidwyn, has been assigned the position of assistant publicity director to Ray Leek of the B. P. Schulberg Productions.

told on the screen by Universal with Edward (Hoot) Gibson as the star.

"Shell-Shocked" was written by Edward Sedgwick and Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City. Schrock and Albert
G. Kenyon prepared the continuity. Sedgwick, who directed Gibson in "Dead Game" and "The Gentleman from America," will guide the filming with a strong supporting cast now being selected.

"Shell-Shocked" promises to give Gibson the best characterization chances of all recent stories. There will be enough of the western "flavor" in the atmosphere of the story to satisfy the thousands of fans who think that Gibson is "the" western hero of the screen.

Hobart Henley, featured director who made "The Flirt" and "The Flame of Life" has almost reached the point of actual shooting on "Up the Ladder," the Broadway play in which Virginia Valli will be starred, with Reginald Denny co-starring with her.

Gladys Walton is in the first week of work on "Crossed Wires," in which she plays a telephone operator heroine. King Baggot wrote and is directing it. Her last vehicle,
"The Town Scandal," is in the latter phase of editing and titling. A new story is in preparation for her, "Sawdust"—a circus tale.

Upon finishing his engagement in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," Lewis Sargent expects to enact the role of a fourteen-year-old boy in a forthcoming super-production. Although Sargent is around 25 years of age, he finds it comparatively easy to look and act like youngsters low in their teens. It will be remembered that he created the title role in the late William D. Taylor's production of "Huckleberry Finn."

Dick Sutherland, who will not be forgotten soon as a result of the impression he made in Harold Lloyd's comedy success, "Grandma's Boy," is now portraying a similar character in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," at present well into production at Universal City. Dick packs the meanest looking face on the screen today, but when off-screen his facial expressions are as gentle as the proverbial lamb. It's all make-believe—and therefore art—as difficult as it was to believe after seeing him "scare the wits" out of poor Harold the way he did in that memorable comedy triumph.

Buying Titles

Mr. Kyne doubtless realizes that of the many thousands of books printed each year the percentage of literary masterpieces is very, very low. Why ask so much more of an industry that has existed a brief twenty years?"

Tom Forman, who directed "Cappy Ricks," Mr. Kyne's most ambitious literary effort, was repeatedly commended by reviewers for catching the spirit of the story and faithfully reproducing it on the screen.

"Mr. Kyne has found fault with this picture, but without specifying," said Mr. Forman. "As I told him, the story was translated to the screen with only the slightest changes—such as are necessary when chapters must be told in a few feet of film, and a thought that has been given many pages by the author told in a title of twelve or fifteen words. If there were flaws in the picture story, the author must answer for them, since the original found its way to the screen without change."

The picture industry, like its older colleagues in the business world, is to have an exposition of its own. Under the title of "American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition," the entire industry will join hands in a great fair which will be held here in July of this year. Stars, producers and writers will join hands to show the world how pictures are written, photographed and staged. It is planned to show all who care to see that pictures are made and their workers live much as is the case in any well ordered business.

If evidence of the continued interest of outside workers in picture opportunities were lacking it was supplied this week with the announcement that Preferred Pictures would sign two more promising feminine players for long terms. Ethel Shannon, selected because of unusual work in her two latest Preferred Pictures—"The Hero" and "The Girl Who Came Back"—has been called upon to aid in the selection of her two co-workers from a list of many hundreds of applicants.

Because of his opinion being in favor of the survival of the two-reel comedy, Neely Edwards, Universal's premier comedy star, has turned down several offers to be featured in productions of full length. "Since they are all abandoning the two-reel field, I'll stay with the ship in the full faith that she'll never sink," he says.

News from New York

D. W. Griffith proposes to have his new picture ready for special pre-release exhibition May 1st. Mr. Griffith has suffered something of a set-back in the illness of the star, Ivor Novello, who has been in bed more than a week. Before the producer left New York with his company, locations had been selected in five states by John Powers, the location man.

Arthur Hopkins has refused $50,000 for the picture rights to "The Old Soak," the Don Marquis comedy at the Plymouth, New York.

Word has drifted into the Times Square Circles that two vaudeville comedians are billing themselves over the Orpheum Circuit as being ex-doubles for Harold Lloyd and Snub Pollard. They are the act of Berg and English, comedy acrobats. The fact up to now is undisputed, still we expect that such billing will do Lloyd and Pollard no good, as most fans believe the boys do all of their own stunts.

Billie Burke is taking a subscription for a memorial for the late Charles Frohman. Miss Burke yesterday received the following telegram from Al H. Woods: "Mr. Frohman was the only theatrical manager I ever knew who was not commercial and I beg to suggest that you include me among your first subscribers to a fund for placing a bronze bust of Chas. Frohman in the theatre which he made famous, the Empire Theatre."

"Down to the Sea in Ships," Elmer Clifton's whaling drama, opened Sunday the 18th at the Cameo Theatre on Broadway for a ten-week and possibly longer run. The film stars are Raymond McKee and Marguerite Courtot.

John Coogan, father of Jackie, is defendant in a suit filed yesterday in the supreme court by John F. Connolly, a theatrical agent, who seeks to recover $25,000, which he claims is due him under an agreement whereby he was to exploit Jackie. Mr. Coogan stopped Connolly's remittances after a short time.

SEEING THINGS WITHOUT ALARM

It is germane to note that this is not starting off like a German year.

All reports show business is picking up throughout the nation, and also New York City.

"Go to a movie once a day and help drive the pesty censors away" is a slogan well worth considering—and acting upon.

When a man cannot "make the grade," he should re-grade the make of his courage, which is a simple process of digging in to dig up in spite of all.

Now that Europe seems on the verge of plunging into another general war, it is almost time to come to the conclusion that many Europeans haven't the sense of a one-eyed ant.

So long as motion pictures move forward in quality (if it is general enough), there need be no concern over the quantity. The public would patronize many more good pictures than it does—if there were more good pictures.

An American film producer, just returned from abroad, declares that most French cinema concerns make their pictures primarily to please Parisians only, which undoubtedly accounts for the fact that few of these releases please anyone else.

"Film Actress Freed in Mann Act Inquiry," read a newspaper headline this week. But in a case where it is a plain man act—and inquiring—there is not so much freedom forever after, as a general rule. Otherwise, the world would have no marrying parsons.

Now that Mary Pickford is making another picture, it is to be expected that many of the pessimists will start gloomily predicting she will make a mistake, as usual. Miss Pickford's "mistakes" are the most profitable "mistakes" imaginable. Wish we could make a few of them.

If Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film succeeds in wielding sufficient influence to save one human being from becoming an addict to drugs, her praiseworthy effort will not be in vain. One human life is worth a great deal more than many motorists seem prone to concede!

Recently an eastern newspaper published a feature story about Dorothy Manners, the rising screen beauty, and in the very next column was an article on table manners. Evidently the make-up man thought he was working on a classified page, or, perchance, all kinds of manners looked alike and polite to him.

"Screenland," a "fan" magazine, ventures the assertion that the three biggest money-making cinema stars: Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin, are on the brink of disaster, so far as popularity is concerned. No comprehensible reasons are given. Hence the whole notion may be called unreasonable.

A dispatch from New York discloses the well-known fact that the east has its eye on Los Angeles, and no dispatch is required to call attention to the further fact that plenty of easterners have their feet right on the ground here, too, with the number growing with ever-increasing rapidity. It's the pitty-pat of progress in the right direction.

You will note that very few dope peddlers and no higher-ups are being placed under arrest, nor are any of them taking a rest—the drug traffic is still wide open and too many official mouths are being kept too shut. It will begin to look like the inglorious finish if society is forced to the point of admitting it cannot rid itself of this indefensible scourge.

Hollywood will be the real theatre district of Los Angeles within the next few years if half of the present theatre-building plans materialize. As such, it would become even a more fertile field for scandal-mongers. Therefore, here's hoping the afore-said plans do become a reality—we just love to see the gossipers kept busy, since their small talk helps one to idle away so many amusing moments.

A whole week has gone by without Charlie and Pola having one single spat. Even temperament can subside under the gentle influence of the lord of love. How a would-be duelist will act under the same influence is a matter for conjecture. At that, we'll lay our wager on Charlie if he is permitted to choose the weapons, because all he need do is to choose cameras, and it's a cinch he'll be able to "out-shoot" anybody.

It is gratifying to have Rex Ingram back in Hollywood again, and it would augment general satisfaction if David W. Griffith, Allan Dwan, John S. Robertson and a few other more or less wandering directorial geniuses would return to the only ideal land for making motion pictures. Moreover, it is a safe prediction that all of the best of them will sooner or later resume their activities here. In other words, the place for filmland's production capital is in filmland's capitol.

CANONGE, PARIS REVUE STAR, IN "TRILBY" CAST

There isn't any question in anyone's mind about the superiority of American motion pictures.

But there are a lot of foreign-born actors and actresses in the profession, many of whom have entered the work only recently, who are running some of the American leaders a close race for stellar honors.

There's Pola Negri, for instance, whose coming to America has been heralded as one of the greatest occurrences in films for many months.

And now comes Maurice Canonge, idol of the French theater-going public, who has just been assigned one of the most important roles in Richard Walton Tully's production, "Trilby."

For several years Canonge has trod the boards of the leading theaters of Paris, not only in drama and tragedy, but also in the large, extravagant reviews for which the French capital is famous.

His greatest success, perhaps, was achieved in the Revue de Marigny at the Marigny Theater in Paris.

Canonge has been assured of further work, in future Tully productions to be made at the United Studios, where "Trilby" is now in production.

He is intimate with every scene in which the characters of Du Maurier's famous classic move and live, and not only will have a leading part in "Trilby," but also is expected to aid in obtaining the proper French atmosphere for the play.

Her First Trip East

Claire Windsor is very much excited—she is going to New York for the first time in her life. As soon as she finishes portraying the lovely bride of Hobart Bosworth in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," she will be away. Great plans are consuming the Windsor household in making ready for the little small town girl—Claire was born and raised in Cawker City, Kansas,—to make her first appearance in greater New York. Little Billy Windsor, her son, will remain with grandmother on the coast.

Her Record is Lengthy

Marie D'Albert, a recent arrival in Hollywood, has many years of exceptional stage and screen experience to her credit. Among her portrayals were Josephine in "A Royal Divorce," and Lucy Paton in "The Old Wife and the New," opposite Charles Witlock, on the stage, and Azucena in "Il Trovatore," Madalena in "Rigolito" with Titta Ruffo, Lola in "Cavaliere Rusticana" with the Thomas Quinlan Opera Company, on the operatic stage. In addition to this she has been prominently featured in several motion pictures, most of which were made in England.

THREE NOTABLES OF FILMLAND PASS AWAY

The week just ended has witnessed the passing of three well-known residents of Filmland.

Al Semmacher, former manager of the late Virginia Rappe, succumbed to heart disease March 9th, after an illness of two months' duration.

Within the same few hours within the same few blocks in Hollywood, Marjorie Graves, wife of Ralph Graves, popular screen star, died in child-birth. The infant, a son, survives her and is reported to be doing nicely.

The third demise to shock picture followers was that of Carol Mae Brown, child star, who will be remembered long for her artistic cinema performances in the late William D. Taylor's production, "Wealth." Pneumonia was assigned as the cause.

Frankie Gets Title Role

Frankie Lee, popular child actor, who is remembered for his brilliant interpretation of the little crippled boy in "The Miracle Man" and for his work in many other notable plays for the screen, has been cast for the title role in "Terwilliger," the play being produced by Arthur H. Jacobs under the direction of Frank Borzage and starring Lloyd Hughes. This role is of greater importance than any that has heretofore been assigned to the youngster and it allows him an opportunity to present in a most appealing manner the many boyish expressions and peculiarities which have brought him to the fore in the ranks of child film artists.

'Tis a Small Woild

He left her in "The Lying Truth" and found her two years later a "wanderin' gdaughter!" Such is the story of Pat O'Malley and Marjorie Daw. Not since the Marian Fairfax production of the Marshall Neilan pictures in which they played screen sweethearts, have these two favorites been united until they found themselves portraying leading roles in "Wandering Daughters," a James Young production which Sam E. Rork is presenting.

Wherein Realism Burns

E. B. Johnson, playing the part of a guard in King Vidor's latest picture, "Three Wise Fools," was shot in the arm during the filming of a prison break scene. Lee Boman, one of the escaping convicts, fired point-blank at Johnson at close range and the gun wadding penetrated Johnson's coat, breaking the skin below his elbow. He was treated for severe powder burns.

Wilson Bailey, formerly popular character actress of Essanay in Chicago, has settled in Hollywood to call it "home sweet home" the rest of her days, and, to continue the pursuit of her cinema aspirations in the Southern California field.

Two Feet Ahead of Them All and a Face for Fair!

Necks craned and cameras clicked recently as the "million dollar" feet of Andree Lafayette, beautiful French actress imported by Richard Walton Tully to play the title role of "Trilby," descended the steps of a transcontinental train when it pulled into the Salt Lake station at Los Angeles.

All the world has heard of Mlle. Lafayette's "trilbies." Not only is this charming actress famous for beauty of face and figure but she is also renowned as the possessor of the most beautiful feet in Paris.

Despairing of finding the exact type of de Maurier's Trilby in America the famous American playwright and film producer went to France in search of a young woman to portray this role in his forthcoming First National attraction, which is to be directed by James Young.

A search of Paris was likewise fruitless and Tully was about to give up in disgust when he espied a poster on a French billboard. Finding the owner of the feet in the poster was easy since all Paris worshipped at the beautiful feet of this distinguished actress.

"She's two feet ahead of the foremost actresses of Paris," is the way one enthusiastic French producer described the physical pulchritude of the much admired artiste.

Mlle. Lafayette is rather of the English than what is generally looked upon as the French type. This she accounts for by the fact that she is of pure Norman blood and was educated in Surrey, England, where she thoroughly mastered the English language. She is a dazzling blonde with hair as beautiful as finely spun gold. Her eyes are limpid blue and her figure as perfect as a Grecian goddess.

"So many people who have read 'Trilby,' said Mlle. Lafayette, as she noticed all eyes focused upon her feet, 'seem to be under the impression that the heroine of de Maurier's tale had extremely small feet. This is not true. They were of medium size, but had kept their perfectly natural shape because she did not wear shoes.'

"Please, do not think, however," she smiled, "that I am not in the habit of wearing shoes. In fact shoes are my hobby; but they must fit comfortably and not distort my feet. With me it is not so much a matter of vanity but a matter of common sense—and comfort. Most women have ugly feet because they do not wear the right shaped and size shoes."

The fair mademoiselle after meeting a large delegation from the United Studios and posing for newspaper photographers was whisked away toward Hollywood where she is now making preparations for her screen work in "Trilby."

"Sets" and the Artistic "Smart Set"

Notre Dame Cathedral has been reproduced in California. Standing after nearly 800 years as the greatest Cathedral of all eras, written of by the greatest poets and authors, painted by the greatest artists, it has now its replica in a Moving Picture Studio; surrounded by the fantastic charm of 14th and 15th Century Paris, awaiting the awakening of an army of soldiers tramping through the Parvis and echoing shrilly to the beggars cry and gaudy aristocrats of that turbulent time.

The "land of dream's fantastic" has given in this set one of its finest efforts. Sidney M. Ullman and his corps of workers are being praised on every hand for the artistic work done by them. This reproduction of the Cathedral and the great place leading to it have been made for the filming of Victor Hugo's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Few pictures have been awaited with such interest. Much is always said and written of the actors and directors and scenarist, but seldom is the art director considered. The work of the sets and their development covering months of research and study must be so fitting and accurate as to be part of the picture and in so doing the audience accepts them rather than accords them praise.

If on the other hand the environment was wrong as to period, style or taste the set would disturb and actors as well as audience would sense the incongruity. Still strange as it may seem, with all the work and accuracy necessary in the making of picture sets, art directors receive little or no comment when it is compared with the praise heaped upon the others.

About six years ago, Mr. Ullman, then a practising architect in Birmingham, Alabama, came to California, and entered the Technical Department of Universal City. He has subsequently worked at Metro and several other studios.

In this latest production the Cathedral alone has been reproduced in many of its parts and the entire front first story is reproduced identically. This has taken months of research and the work of a staff of the finest sculptors and draftsmen. The interior adjoining the Cathedral is accessible from the entrance and is also a replica of the edifice while the third story gallery, necessary in the action of the play, is also reproduced accurately, this exquisite gothic colonnade being thirty-five feet in height.

The two miniatures of the Cathedral are said to be the finest ever made for pictures, and have only one probable rival in the Notre Dame miniature in the Metropolitan Museum in New York City. It is the hope

From July 2nd to August 4th---Ah!

California has many ways of exercising a magic long-distance influence, but chief among them is the motion picture which carries to the uttermost parts of the earth visions of beauty. Announcement that the Monroe Doctrine Centennial would be celebrated in Los Angeles under the auspices of the motion picture industry has been received with the most extraordinary interest and even at this early date it is evident that the greatest crowd ever entertained in the city will come during July.

According to present arrangements there will be a three-fold interest in the daily programs. First in originality and charm will be the nightly revues in which stirring episodes of history will be presented on a mammoth four-sided stage placed in the center of the Coliseum, one of the most impressive structures built in recent years. This stage, which is to have three graduated platforms, is designed to suggest an Aztec temple and should afford splendid facilities for achieving sensational effects.

Next the exhibits to be displayed in bungalows specially adapted to them will be unusually attractive, for they will have just the right environment and only what is distinctive will be shown. In this connection it can be promised that the various counties of California will be well represented.

All the artistry which can be applied to each exhibit bungalow will be called into requisition. As landscape gardening will contribute all possible to the grounds, it can be promised that visitors will behold in reality many lovely glimpses of semi-tropical trees and flowers that they have often seen in moving pictures.

The third attraction will be the morning congresses at which famous men and women will speak on world problems, art, literature and the drama. This will afford an opportunity to discuss many phases of modern progress and will include, doubtless, programs given over to motion picture interests. Thus it is possible to educate the public and at the same time obtain the point of view of the public regarding the greatest of modern arts.

A more intelligent appreciation of motion pictures inevitably must follow the Revue and Exposition. Visitors who see pictures in the making and learn something of the real aims of those who produce them, will gain a better understanding of fine points and will give henceforth a support that assures the best co-operation. For the public must co-operate in the development of motion pictures in new fields of usefulness as well as in those already occupied.

The Exposition will open July 2nd and will close August 4th. In this period of five weeks every one connected with the motion picture industry must accept the responsibility of acting as host or hostess. By means of this hospitality the truth concerning the making of pictures and all concerned in them will be set forth and the facts warrant the best sort of pride. No other city in the world could prepare such a fair as that now in course of preparation and it will set a new mark for the future.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVUE AND MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION GENERAL PLAN, SHOWING MAIN ENTRANCE IN FOREGROUND, WITH ESPLANADE LEADING TO COLISEUM, WITH STAGE IN CENTER.

San Francisco, California, March 6th.—The actual shooting of Eric Von Stroheim's production of "McTeague" will begin on Wednesday, but meanwhile the Goldwyn forces, already here, are having many a laugh over the complications caused by their too realistic set. For the set is done down to the last detail, and it's some set; in fact, it's so life-like that day after day patients with aching teeth sit in McTeague's office waiting for the dentist to come in, and old women climb the stairs hunting the fortune-teller to have the bumps on their heads read and can't be convinced that "there ain't no such person" in real life. In Frank Norris' book, from which the picture is being made, McTeague was a struggling dentist on Polk Street near Bush—ground that was burned over in the fire—so with much labor a corresponding location was found at Laguna and Hayes Streets and most of a block leased, and all the scenes of the story recreated, even to McTeague's woolen socks hung up to dry over the stove and the cobwebs in the junk man's loft.

Flashes from Frisco

Milton Hoffman, production manager for Metro, and his wife, were in San Francisco last Friday and visited the Pacific Studios at San Mateo to see "The Fog" in the making by the Graf Productions.

Holbrook Blinn, now appearing on the stage here at the Alcazar Theatre, in "The Bad Man," signed a contract the other day to go to Los Angeles, at the conclusion of his present engagement, to play an important part in Mary Pickford's next picture.

Mark Strong, production manager for the Graf Productions on "The Fog," is wearing a happy smile these days, for the first two weeks of work on the picture have gone beautifully, and as San Francisco is Mark's old home he is enjoying every minute of his stay here.

Eugene H. Roth, San Francisco motion picture expert, and until recently one of the managing directors of the California, Granada, Imperial and New Portola Theatres, has been appointed Carl Laemmle's personal representative. He will be Carl Laemmle to all intents and purposes, representing the president of Universal in every branch of the business—financial, executive, production, and distribution.

The Belasco Productions, Inc., will release their picture previewed under the title of "The Eyes of Love," as "Her Accidental Husband." They have engaged Hal Rodes, who handled all of the Cosmopolitan Productions for three or four years, to handle the publicity campaign for this picture and future productions. Joe Brant is managing the sales and will leave New York at once on a special trip through the United States placing the picture. "Her Accidental Husband" will be shown at one of Los Angeles' largest picture theatres in the very near future.

From Vaudeville's Past to Filmland's Present

Rosa Gore, a rare stage beauty of 1887.

Do you know who first invented the term "head-liners" as a description for featured vaudeville acts?

With which particular skit did Paul Armstrong, noted playwright, get his start up the ladder of success?

Who were the members of the most popular vaudeville team of stars in the day when vaudeville was in its infancy?

How many can tell the name of the star of "Feeny's Social Experiment," a comedy made by Pathe in 1913, and which ran for two and one-half years up and down Broadway, New York, and was proclaimed the greatest screen classic of its time.

And what, pray, was the most popular song ever sung on the Pacific Coast?

The average reader, after getting these questions circulating through his brain channels, straightway would think that Thomas A. Edison, world-famous asker of questions, had gone into the theatrical business, and was trying out a gang of college youths for positions in his organization.

But no! Edison isn't contemplating any such thing, as far as anyone knows.

Those are merely a few things concerning one of the greatest vaudeville teams ever known in America, and anyone familiar with the theatre a couple of decades ago could answer them in a flash, after a moment or two of reminiscent thought.

Crimmins & Gore!

Does that name, or combination of two names, strike any chord of memory? Does it bring back a mental picture of a short, absurdly fat man, and a tall, absurdly thin woman, who were wont to frolic away with the lion's share of the applause on every vaudeville bill in which they appeared?

Maybe it doesn't bring back such memories to the younger set; the ones who can't remember any further back than the picture which was released day before yesterday, or the fox-trot number to which they danced last night.

But it does bring back mellow-time-hallowed recollections to the "old-timers"; recollections, and regrets, perhaps, for the things which used to be.

Dan Crimmins and Rosa Gore—names to contemplate seriously, those were. It's the way they've been billed ever since they teamed up away back in the eighties, and they were the first vaudeville artists ever to be called "headliners" on a vaudeville program.

They gave Paul Armstrong, well-known playwright, his start, in 1901, when they paid him $100 for writing for them a one-act comedy which was entitled "Like Mother Used to Make." Can you imagine a playwright working for that kind of money now?

Dan and Rosa were topline artists on the old Keith circuit, when it boasted of the fact that it controlled four theatres—the old Shamrock quartette.

Those were the good old days! Some of the greatest stars and theatrical magnates of the present day were treading the boards in vaudeville then, and an idea of the prominence and popularity which Crimmins & Gore had heaped up for themselves is gained from the briefest of glances over some of the programs in which they appeared.

Take, for instance, the program given at the Orpheum in Denver the week of May 29, 1898. The two were paired for headline honors with Al Wilson, the greatest yodeler of all time. On the same bill was The American Biograph, described then as "the greatest projectoscope in the world, showing new life scenes," which was the real father of the motion picture of today. And Carter DeHaven, now a notable star and producer in filmland, was on the same program as a "filler" acrobatic act.

The team was given precedence at that time, too, over McIntyre & Heath, present-day premier black-face comedians, one instance being the program for the week of January 19, 1891, of Hyde's Star Specialty Company, a road show, in which Filson & Errol also took part. Al Filson, a member of the latter team, is well known in Hollywood.

Probably no team is better known in vaudeville circles anywhere, not only in the United States, where they virtually became members of the Orpheum Circuit "family" through touring the circuit seven times, but also in Australia, South America, Africa and Europe, to which continents they made many trips, short and long.

Dan and Rosa brought to San Francisco—where they were married, by the way, in 1887—the most popular song that was ever sung on the Pacific Coast. Its title was "Am I a Man?" and Rosa sang it triumphantly hundreds of times.

All of their work, though, hasn't been confined to the vaudeville stage, by any means. As motion picture stars, they are among the oldest, in point of experience. Mr. Crimmins starred in the first big comedy ever screened, which ran for two and one-half years, and was hailed by screen critics everywhere as a comedy classic—"Feeny's Social Experiment."

But the Crimmins family—there is a boy, too, Danny Hoy, who recently played the important part of the half-witted boy in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country"—doesn't live in the past.

No, no, and a couple more no-noes. The entire family—Dan, Rosa and Danny—are still in the profession, and rising steadily, even higher than their former glorified position on top of the vaudeville world.

"Motion pictures, without the shadow of a doubt, are still in their infancy."

Dan Crimmins as he was in 1887.

That's Dan's opinion, and he is determined to be one of the nurses, just as he was in the vaudeville end of the profession years ago, to bring the industry to a hale and hearty maturity, and develop the films into the great art they are destined to become.

Mr. Crimmins has been seen recently in support of Laurette Taylor in the screen version of "Peg o' My Heart." He portrayed the role of the comic-looking postman, who rides the antiquated bicycle up to Peg's cabin home with the news of her great good fortune.

His most recent screen part was in support of Harry Carey, in "The Man from the Desert."

Mrs. Crimmins—pardon, Miss Gore—finds time enough, too, from her household duties, to work in the pictures, and has just finished an important character part in "The Dangerous Game," lately completed by Gladys Walton, under King Baggot's direction.

She also worked under Edgar Lewis' direction in "The Right of the Strongest." Lewis, by the way, directed "Feeny's Social Experiment," in which Mr. Crimmins made his first big hit in pictures more than a decade ago.

But, this isn't supposed to be a biography, or reminiscence, or anything of the sort.

It's primarily intended as a tribute to one of the greatest vaudeville teams that ever trod the boards of a theatre, and pulled laughs from audiences of the whole world.

It's a little printed applause for the work the two veterans have done, are doing now, and will continue to do.

And it's a welcome, too, even though they have been here for years, to Crimmins & Gore, and little Danny Hoy, into the real "inside circle" of Hollywood's film colony.

Alan Hale has been voted the best after-dinner speaker in filmdom. His forte is the telling of anecdotes and his supply of "new ones" is said to be inexhaustible. Since he started enacting the role of the Swedish janitor in Warner Brothers' production of "Main Street" two weeks ago, he has been the principal after-dinner speaker at five important social functions.

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

The general average of new pictures revealed to the pre-view forces this week was rather high. Even program features from which little was expected by anyone proved strong enough to elicit enthusiastic praise in several cases. This was true, notably, of Universal's production of "The Bolted Door" in which Frank Mayo is starred to an advantage. It is evident there has been no ambition on the part of anyone connected with the creating of this feature to make it a world-beater. Instead there has been a tenacious clinging to most of the best traditions of photoplay-building with the result that a diverting story is well visualized. Here is a picture of balance with just enough action to keep it above the monotonous and a manner of unfolding that keeps your attention every minute. Mayo offers an excellent performance and he gets good support from especially Nigel Barrie and Phyllis Haver while Charles A. Stevenson, that veteran of veterans, impresses his histrionic ability favorably. George Gibbs wrote this story and George Randolph Chester adapted it to the screen, and, they proved once more that when two masters of a craft get together it is always fair weather—for high screen standards.

Doris Pawn is just about the best leading lady Dustin Farnum ever had. She demonstrates this most forcibly in that star's latest William Fox feature, "The Buster," a title which, by the way, is not one single iota short of being truly awful. Miss Pawn is a different kind of heroine and there is all kinds of appeal in the difference. She possesses a rather remarkable ability for winning you to the character she portrays without the slightest semblance of an effort to do so. This is achieved only by an understanding of drama and how to reflect it. Even though she were not so fair of face and petite of manner, Miss Pawn is of the school of acting that transcends all physical considerations and gets into the sphere of spiritual beauty with easy grace. Frankly, she is one of our selections for exceptionally brilliant stardom. Of course she has been a star in her own right already, but not in these very recent times when great big productions have their greatest vogue. "The Buster" is especially notable for its being so replete with thrills. Critical moments that convince one abound and Mr. Farnum is always happiest when in the midst of such moments with a pretty girl in the very vortex of whatever storm the plot has evolved. In this instance, Miss Pawn affords him ample incentive for first-class dramatic work, and, as the slightly spoiled city girl on her first excursion in the far west, she does the things to be expected of one in her position so well that it helps the star to do his part exceedingly well. In short, the Farnum-Pawn combination is an ideal one for cinema achievements.

What looks like a sure-fire spur to a return of another Shakespearean era on the silversheet has just been imported to this country from Germany. It is an excellently constructed version of "Othello" and brings once more to the foreground of American moviedom that brilliant Teutonic Thespian, Emil Jannings, who plays the title role with even more finesse than he drew his memorable characterization in "Passion," which served to give Pola Negri her entry to Uncle Sam's coffers. This classy production of a true classic should enjoy a wide popularity

Producing short subjects for educational programs is becoming quite a fad and within the last month, eleven new companies have entered this particular field. A growth in the educational value of the screen will mean a general growth of respect for it as a medium for usefulness.

The French are not only invading the Ruhr—they are invading Los Angeles as well. Practically every week there is one more celebrated stage or screen favorite of France adopting the film capitol as his or her home and some weeks—this one, for example—as many as a dozen Parisian artists arrive and settle. It begins to look as if it's going to be a French year in American movies.

Preparations for more big film productions continue and the next month bids fair to see even more "extraordinary pictures" started than ever. General Optimism is leading his army well on the battle-fields of Filmiland.

The successor-to-Valentino craze is dying out of its own volition. Presumably producers are discovering that the successors they select do not succeed very well.

There is a movement among certain prominent producers to essay reviving interest in stories which have been picturized before. Mary Pickford started it with the re-creation of her "Tess of the Storm Country." Lasky is advancing the idea by re-making "The Cheat" with Pola Negri in the role Fannie Ward played and something like a half dozen other producers are preparing to emulate these leaders in the grand resurrection act.

A general realignment of comedy stars is under way. Clyde Cook is the latest to break away from old moorings—the William Fox Company—and he is now under Lou Anger's management. Monty Banks will soon leave Federated to embrace other opportunities under another banner. Meanwhile Lee Moran and Larry Semon are among the several others who have "struck out" to conquer other "empires."

Conditions for a greater concentration of picture-making activities in the Southern California field are more favorable than ever. Lasky is about the only firm dividing its forces between western and eastern studios now.

despite the fact that it has a tragic ending, because it does uplift the cinema to a plane of successful conveying of literature in its highest form. If there are objections to the tragic aspects of this work, there are plenty of other Shakespearean masterpieces to develop a full-fledged era of his greatest vogue on the screen and we do not regard it as a prediction amiss to anticipate the production of several of his incomparable plays as screen features during the next few months.

Feathers! That's what the writer thought of upon seeing "Jazzmania." Fluff! That was a second thought. But, not such bad entertainment at that, was the third and final thought. Mae Murray is the star and she is also Mae Murray. Bounteously blithesome, always alluring, decidedly different—that's Mae Murray, and, she's always the same. Fortunately, her's is a sameness the American public does not tire of easily. In fact, it begins to look as if she may be able to go on just like taxes—forever. Yea and verily, "Jazzmania" lives up to its improvised title—it's a mania of jazz for fair, and, it serves a great purpose admirably: it makes most anyone glad for being alive and seeing others so alive. Rare beauty is intermingled with exhilarating zip with such a deft touch that it wafts you through ethereal spaces of sheer enjoyment without giving much of a chance for understanding just what it is all about or why. But, it makes no difference. It's Mae Murray in her usual extravaganza of bizarre effects and blase prospects. See her in it and you'll forget you owe the rent for the proverbial nonce at least. That's enough to ask of any motion picture.

Someone took a wild chance on having his product unmercifully "kidded" when he selected "Success" as the title of a photoplay. But, that someone was not a losing gambler. He won, for "Success" is a success or should be as soon as it gets sufficiently current. Forsooth, it is really one of the strongest stories filmed for a moon or two and Brandon Tynan, who plays the leading role, scores a distinct personal triumph of ample proportions to carry his vehicle in on a landslide. Ralph Ince directed this picture and he never before displayed such unmistakable signs of genius in the directorial art. From beginning to end "Success" is blessed with almost perfect direction, a feature which no doubt helps to make it so outstanding. Another point favorable to bringing about a general ingratiating of this film is its quite universal appeal. However, it does lean somewhat towards the high-brow idea and will prove a better attraction for high-class houses than it will those located in middle-class neighborhoods.

FLAPPERS AS OLD AS TUT

The idea that flappers are a Twentieth century creation is an error, according to William P. S. Earle, who is preparing a screen version of "Tut-Ank-Amen," a romantic tale of old Egyptian days. Earle, who claims some distinction as a student of Egyptology, says that positive evidence in documents and paintings, left behind by the ancients in their tombs, reveals the fact that not only were flappers quite the vogue in Tut-Ank-Amen's day, but carvings and figures in miniature found by scientists reveal that bobbed hair was in fashion with many of the fair sex. "Laying all these things at the door of modern woman is not fair," says Earle, "as it is only as instinct brought down to them through the centuries."

Dorothy Manners has been offered the leading feminine role in a forthcoming Metropolitan production and will accept if she completes prior contracts in time.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1923

THEATRES GALORE AND UNIQUE WILL RISE TO MAKE HOLLYWOOD WHITE LIGHT CENTER OF WEST

Hollywood will become a great theatre district. Development of the current week seem to make this undeniably certain. Indeed there is the element of the amazing in the disclosure of plans through which no less than four different first-class playhouses would be erected simultaneously by different organizations, and, it is especially interesting to note that each of these temples of amusement will be dedicated to a different branch of the art.

The two which bid fair to get under way first will be one designed for the presentation of new spoken plays, comedies and dramas, offered by a stock company with frequent changes of the featured players, and, another built solely for standard vaudeville.

Of the other two houses proposed one will be the first of its kind in the world—a theatre playing only attractions which are combinations of silent drama and spoken drama, such ventures as George Beban has been pioneering in his personal appearances with his film version of "The Sign of the Rose" and as Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will do with the feature they are now filming in New York under the direction of Whitman Bennett.

The fourth theatre, which seems assured now, will be the home of only musical productions, including light operas, musical comedies and extravaganzas, every offering to be a world premiere.

The dramatic stock house is as much of a certainty as anything can be and is being sponsored by Allen Holubar, well known picture producer. Holubar admitted this week that he had a stock theatre in Hollywood in mind, and that a syndicate of San Francisco financiers had offered to back him in the venture. San Francisco is Holubar's home city. He has been in conference with real estate men and contractors all this past week getting estimates on probable cost of a 1000-seat house. It will probably be called the Little Theatre of Hollywood, and will be Los Angeles' only Little Theatre, Egan's Little Theatre having dropped the diminutive title.

Holubar and his star wife, Dorothy Phillips, had considerable stage experience with Henry W. Savage, Charles Dillingham and in stock company work before entering the film world. Miss Phillips is credited with being a remarkably talented dramatic actress of the emotional type.

Stars of known worth in the spoken drama, now playing in pictures would be utilized in different productions supplementing the efforts of the permanent stock company.

Alexander Pantages long has had under consideration plans for the building of an up-to-the-minute vaudeville theatre in Hollywood, but, it is understood, he has been delayed by difficulties encountered in trying to purchase a suitable site. Now, according to a report from reliable sources this week, his representatives have been able to approach the point of consummating negotiations which will give him possession of Hollywood Boulevard property near Highland avenue, and, it seems certain, building operations will not be deferred long after the acquisition of such footage.

The combination picture-and-personal-appearance house is being backed by a group of former New York showmen, who have become permanent residents of Los Angeles within the last three years and it is stated by one in high authority, whose name cannot be divulged at this time, that "the brains" of this unique project is also at the head of the tentative company which will establish the musical playhouse. However, this one man will be the only one interested in both enterprises, as each will be financed by a group of citizens having no other financial interests in theatrical projects. It is reasonably sure this latter mecca of diversion will be situated somewhere in the vicinity of Hollywood Boulevard and Highland avenue, too.

One of the more interesting motives actuating the promoters of the musical house is to open the way for the evolving and developing of the much-discussed great American opera, which is yet to see the light of day. A further aim is to add to the gaiety of Southern California in an effective way with much lively and wholesome entertainment in the lighter vein. It is the scheme to provide, for instance, a new chorus for each new attraction as well as to introduce new musical stars. The hope is to stage successes of sufficient importance to warrant transferring them to New York's Broadway just as Oliver Morosco has been doing for years, and, in most cases the original company intact would be sent east.

Aside from these four bright prospects of augmenting the diversion facilities of Hollywood, as seems so befitting to the capitol of Filmland, the source of such unbounded pleasure to such countless throngs of theatre-goers of the entire world, there are substantial prospects of the founding of another great motion picture theatre in the immediate future. The sensational success of Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre with the remarkable record of keeping its opening attraction on the boards profitably for more than five months, has proven an eye-opener such as is attracting several groups of film men, one of which has already announced definite intentions of building a second big cinema emporium near Grauman's as soon as necessary arrangements can be made.

Therefore, it is well within the range of possibility for Hollywood to emerge from its first era of importance as the center of picture-producing activities into a new era of greater importance as such with a group of theatres par excellence added, and, all this note-worthy transition of amusement progress is likely to be accomplished fully within the next eighteen months.

CENSORSHIP IS CALLED DEGRADED GOVERNMENT

At a meeting of the Senate Committee in Albany, N. Y., strong arguments were made by clergymen, publishers and civic organizations in favor of the bill to eliminate motion picture censorship. Rev. N. D. Hillis of Brooklyn pleaded for "freedom of the films" and suggested that should a man use the screen in such a manner to blacken the souls of people, he should suffer a penalty. During the meeting, censorship was characterized as a "degraded form of government."

Miss Ayres is Ill

Agnes Ayres is seriously ill in New York, suffering from influenza and severe after effects. It is believed the contrast between Southern California weather and that of the Atlantic coast is responsible for her illness.

MRS. REID WINS POLICE AID OF LAND

Police chiefs from all parts of the nation will come to Los Angeles during the week of March 26th to assist and witness the making of important dramatic scenes in Mrs. Wallace Reid's film, "The Living Dead," according to a wire received this week by Chief of Police Louis D. Oaks of Los Angeles, from Chief of Police Philip T. Smith of New Haven, president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

As a result of arrangements made by the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League, of which Dr. R. B. Von KleinSmid, president of the University of Southern California, is chairman, the police chiefs will be able to contribute many valuable suggestions regarding the screen treatment of the drug evil photoplay now being started at the Thomas H. Ince studios under the direction of John Griffith Wray. The film is designed to support the government in its campaign against the narcotic menace.

While here the police chiefs will confer with John P. Carter, former Collector of Internal Revenue, a nationally known authority on the narcotic problem, and with William Allan Pinkerton, dean of American detectives, who already has given Mrs. Wallace Reid many valuable suggestions for the anti-drug photoplay.

Among the other famous police officials who have wired Mrs. Reid, offering their help, are William J. Burns, Director of the Division of Investigation of the Federal Department of Justice; George S. Dougherty and William J. Flynn of New York, and Edward J. Kelley, famous government detective of Washington.

A. D. A. RENEWS LEASE ON HOME USED 5 YEARS

The Assistant Directors' Association of California has again renewed its lease on rooms at 5444 Hollywood Boulevard. The A. D. A. has occupied these quarters since the founding of the Association in 1918 with 25 members. The roster now contains the names of sixty assistants, which represents practically all the large studios in the cinema industry.

The worst in us need not be pronounced. It will speak for itself.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Jackie Gets Glad Hand

A reception which would have gladdened the heart of a king was accorded Jackie Coogan when he descended from the steps of the train that rushed him to Southern California from New York, where he has been visiting the past few weeks. Hundreds of kiddies, and grown-ups, too, were present when the youthful cinema celebrity arrived home. His first move was to deliver a message to Mayor Cryer entrusted to him by Mayor Hyman of New York.

Rudy Disappointed Again

Hereafter Rodolph Valentino will regard the calendar with more care. His inability to keep account of dates caused him to make every preparation for his second and initial legal marriage to Winifred Hudnut. And at the last moment, with the officiating clergyman in waiting, he found another week must fly by before the ceremony could take place. He has it all definitely fixed in his mind now—the last decree will be signed and issued the 10th of this month, and they will be married the 11th.

Miss Brent to Wed

According to an announcement from Evelyn Brent, now under contract to Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, she will become the bride of Bernie P. Fineman, independent producer, but—not for awhile. Friends, however, declare the marriage will take place within the next few months. Miss Brent has devoted the majority of her time working in pictures produced in Italy, Spain and England.

Money Drive Starts

A drive to raise $150,000 for the erection of a new Hollywood Studio Club, was started last week, under the supervision of Mrs. Elizabeth McGaffey. The sum of $30,000 will be sought in Los Angeles and Hollywood and the balance will be subscribed for in the east with the aid of Will Hays. Julia Faye and Vianna Knowlton will canvass the local studios and will make short talks in an effort to raise a portion of the needed funds.

Julian Postpones Pre-View

Due to a delay in the cutting of the film, Rupert Julian's "a la carte" preview of "Merry-Go-Round" for the drama critics of Los Angeles has been postponed to a later date. The original date for the unique preview was March 20 at the Beverly Hills Hotel. However, the job of editing the Viennese spectacle has been a bigger one than was expected, so the preview has been set aside for the present. A definite date for the showing will be announced shortly. Julian is giving this preview while the film is still in about twenty reels so he can obtain the views of the critics before the final cutting.

Stunt Man Is Killed

Doubling for Harold Lloyd as an exploitation "stunt" for the comedian's latest release, "Safety Last," James Young, the human fly, fell eleven stories to death on the pavement of Broadway, New York, while attempting to scale one of Gotham's skyscrapers. Thousands of awed spectators gazed upon the man as he swiftly ascended the side of the building, and women fainted while men held hands before their eyes to hide the sight of the man as he suddenly slipped and fell forward to his death. The dead man's wife was present when his lifeless body was carried away by police officials.

Carewe Returns to Studio

The Edwin Carewe company, filming "The Girl of the Golden West," for Associated First National, has returned from Sonora, where a majority of the exterior scenes were photographed. Nearly a month was spent by Carewe in the mountains of Central California and during that time he completed one-half of the production. Interiors are now being made at the United Studios. Featured in this production are J. Warren Kerrigan, Sylvia Breamer, Rosemary Theby, Russell Simpson, Joy Winthrop, Wilfred Lucas and Hector Sarno.

Will Fight Blue Laws

Heading a list of prominent New York theatrical producers, William A. Brady has announced that Sunday concerts in Gotham would continue in spite of a recently organized blue law trust consisting of approximately every variety of anti-leagues in the east. With an endowment of $375,000 and a building fund of $300,000, the aggregated resources of the different reform leagues included in the merger, this newly established organization will bend every effort towards forcing commercial amusement enterprises to discontinue activities on the Sabbath.

Mowat Unit Progressing

J. A. Mowat Productions, which have been at Truckee for the past two weeks filming snow scenes for "The Man Who Cheated," have returned to the Hollywood studios, where interiors for the picture are now being filmed. Walter Hagen, the British golf champ, is being starred in the picture which also presents Estelle Taylor, Miss Dupont, Earle Foxe, Lucy Beaumont, George Kuwa and others. Clarence Bricker is directing and Walter Griffin is behind the camera.

"Tea" Kicks Up Two Reels

Not less than 22,000 feet of film was "shot" for Halperin Productions' latest satirical play, "Tea—With a Kick," which has just been completed with a cast of 24 stars under the direction of Erle Kenton. Victor Hugo Halperin, who wrote the story and is one of its producers, stated this week that while his company originally planned to release the picture as a five-reeler, it had filmed such a great number of interesting scenes that the company has now decided to present the picture in seven reels. Within the next ten days Halperin will leave the Fine Arts studios for New York to negotiate important matters concerning the picture's distribution.

From "Main Street" to "Fog"

Louise Fazenda, upon completion of her work in "Main Street" for Warner Brothers, will go to San Francisco where she will work at the San Mateo Studios in the Graf production of "The Fog" for Metro. Miss Fazenda will motor up there accompanied by her mother. The comedienne's talents are in constant demand, another interesting engagement awaiting her upon her return from the northern city.

Not Supposing

The manner in which rumors get afloat and fill the air in film-land is little short of remarkable. Now simply because Creighton Hale is co-starring with Isabelle Lowe in "Just Suppose," at the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, there is an avalanche of reports to the effect that he is going to definitely give up motion pictures for the stage and will go on tour with his present comedy vehicle. As a matter of fact, this production of the A. E. Thomas play was made purely for local edification and Mr. Hale is under contract to play an important role in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of "Tribby," the filming of which will be started very soon.

A Richard of Richness

Richard Blaydon, who is scoring a personal triumph in the amusing role of Bubbles in the stage play, "Just Suppose," now playing at the Mason Opera House, is demonstrating the fact that he is rich in true dramatic talent, and it is interesting to note that he is also (or could be) rich in his native land of Great Britain. The point is, Mr. Blaydon abandoned a life of ease offered him by his wealthy parents to migrate to America and carve out his niche in the ladder of success solely on the merits of his own efforts without any sort of pecuniary aid or inside influence. The fact that he is making a signal success of being thus courageous shows reward awaits he who refuses to sit in the lap of luxury when there is work to be done.

Actor Ends His Life

Joseph McDermott, a picture actor living at 1267 Western Avenue, became despondent at the thought of losing his mind and took his life by inhaling gas. A note left to his brother in Keewauke, Illinois, read: "Just couldn't make the grade. Feel my mind slipping."

Jeff Heading For Films

According to a statement from Jim Jeffries, ex-champion heavyweight fighter of the world, and who recently entered a voluntary bankruptcy petition, he will soon make his advent into the motion picture industry—as an actor. Jeffries listed liabilities amounting to $300,000 and declared his creditors would be paid dollar for dollar.

Mrs. Tully Convalescent

Richard Walton Tully has received news from New York that his wife, who became seriously ill while traveling in Paris and who is now recuperating in a New York hospital, is recovering rapidly and will soon be able to journey to California. Mr. Tully is busy preparing for his forthcoming production, "Tribby."

And That's That

Little Bruce Guerin's mother was giving him some lessons the other day in elementary physiology. "And now, tell mother what the stomach does?" she asked. "The stomach," Bruce replied gravely, "holds up your petticoat." Mother Guerin decided to call it a day.

Dick's Next at Ft. Lee

Inspiration Pictures Corporation has leased the Universal studios at Fort Lee for the producing of their next vehicle for Richard Barthelmess, "The Fighting Blade," by Beulah Marie Dix. John Robertson, who recently finished directing Mr. Barthelmess in "The Bright Shawl," will also wield the megaphone for this picture.

Selnicks Face Bankruptcy

Creditors of the Selnick Pictures Corporation filed a petition in bankruptcy last week for claims amounting to $3,000. It has been rumored for some time that this concern was about to discontinue activities because of financial conditions, resulting from an over-expenditure in the producing of their two latest productions, "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law." Work on Selnick productions at the United Studios has been temporarily stopped.

PRODUCER PLANS SPECIALIZING IN DANGER

Convinced by his own personal experiences as an independent film producer that the picture-going public is more interested in stories dealing with thrilling danger in which human happiness is threatened than it is in all problems pertaining to sex affairs and the wide variety of love tangles, Clifford S. Elfelt, who has just finished his production of "Danger," will follow it with one called "Dangerous Men" with the definite idea of offering some new dangers for the public to conjure up in its mind.

"It is my opinion that fictitious characters in jeopardy are far more interesting to the average photoplay fan than those who are threatened only by the tedium of humdrum existence," Mr. Elfelt says. "Every feature of my present series has to do directly with serious danger as it might hover low over the head of any human being."

As was revealed at a recent pre-view showing, "Danger" is all the title implies—it is filled to the brim with dangers galore and each one contributes something towards thrilling most anyone. Now its sequel, "Dangerous Men," will go even farther in visualizing precariousness of positions as men and women are angled into them by Fate. J. B. Warner, who is the star of "Danger," will also play the stellar role in "Dangerous Men."

Mr. Elfelt is collaborating with Frank Howard Clark in writing the scenario, which will be completed within a few days. Actual photographing of this newest Elfelt production will be started at the Fine Arts Studios, Hollywood, on about March 15.

THOMAS FINISHES FIRST OF NEW SERIES OF FILMS

"The Silent Accuser," a six-reel screen melodrama produced and directed by Richard Thomas at the Hollywood Studios, has been completed. Editing and titling is now in progress.

This production is described Particular stress is placed upon as a "different" crook picture. certain elements of the plot, which call for a graphic display of criminal finger printing.

The cast of "The Silent Accuser," which was photographed by J. W. Fuqua, consists of Carmel Myers, Kathryn McGuire, Melbourne MacDowell, Clyde Fillmore, Carol Holloway, Spottiswoode Aitken and Edward Borman.

Doris Baker has completed a role in Charles Ray's "The Courtship of Miles Standish." She was on this picture eight weeks.

FATE INTRODUCES NAVAL OFFICER AND SCREEN STAR IN AN ODDLY ACCIDENTAL WAY

A small piece of orange peel, a small child, a high-heeled slipper and a long flight of steps, all in coincidental conjunction, might have caused serious injury to Ann Little, motion picture star, had it not been for the quick wit and agile strength of a naval officer at Long Beach this week.

Here's how it happened:

Little Buster Brewster, four-year-old son of a visitor at the Virginia Hotel, was playing about the veranda, and eating an orange. He was very careful, as he stripped the yellow peel from the fruit, to toss each piece of peeling off the porch.

One piece must have escaped his tiny fingers, though, because as Miss Little emerged from the hotel, where she had been having tea with a party of friends and film fans, the French heel of her slipper struck the small piece of peel.

And right then things began to happen.

Usually, Miss Little faces danger—thrilling stunts on land, sea or in the air—without a quiver.

But when something unexpected happens, like stepping on a slippery piece of orange peel, who wouldn't squeal.

And that's just what she did.

Capt. Quinby, an officer of the United States Navy, heard the squeal. He was ascending the stairs, perhaps a dozen steps below the actress, and as he looked up to determine the source, the actress plumped into his arms. She almost knocked him off balance, but he recovered in time to brace himself and save the actress from a painful, if not serious fall. The extraordinary feature of this unusual occurrence is, Capt. Quinby declares Miss Little is the first screen star he had ever met.

Miss Little has been in Long Beach, on location, for several days, with the Universal company filming the serial, "The Eagle's Talons."

STAR HAS CAUSE TO GRIEVE OVER $25,000 LEGACY

How would you like to inherit $25,000 in hard, cold cash, and then find that your "inheritance" was only a joke, a hoax played on you by some well-meaning friend or admirer?

That's the experience that fell to the lot of Virginia Brown Faire, motion picture star, this week.

In the early mail Monday Miss Faire received a letter from a firm of attorneys in Brooklyn, New York, her old home, advising her that Max Rosenblatt, ostensibly a wealthy clothing manufacturer of New York's across-the-river neighbor, had left her $25,000 in cash, and asking her what disposition she wished to make of the legacy.

Miss Faire remembered Mr. Rosenblatt; she had been present several years ago when he was injured in an automobile accident in Central Park, New York, and had helped care for him until the ambulance arrived. At that time, Miss Faire said, he had offered her a gift of $1,000, which she had refused.

So she wasn't mystified or anything of the sort when she received the letter Monday.

However

At once she sat down and composed a telegram, brief and to the point, and directed it to the firm of attorneys—Meyer & Meyer, with offices in the Rosenblatt Building, Brooklyn.

"Send it to me"—those were the only necessary words, Miss Faire thought, that the telegram should contain.

Then she sat herself down to spend her fortune—that is, part of it.

First on the list was a new car; her old one wasn't running just as it should. Then came clothing, and her pet charities; gifts for her mother and dad, and several friends, and several other little things that she'd been wanting for some time.

But Tuesday rolled around. Oh, fateful day!

And with Tuesday came a message from the telegraph company, almost as brief as hers had been:

"Unable to deliver; can't locate party."

Tough? Well, rather!

But she isn't disheartened; she still wears the same old smile. However, she's determined to find out just who played the joke on her—which of her old friends back east—and even things up, even if it takes a hundred years

"POOR-RICH" HEIR FINDS HAVEN IN FILMS

George O'Hara, star of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series and Mal St. Clair, who is directing the pictures, have found in Craig Biddle, Jr., heir apparent to some of the millions of the famous Biddle family of Philadelphia, the manly type they have been seeking for the pictures now under production at Powers studios, Hollywood.

The scion of the house of Biddle recently left a Wall street career behind him and came to Hollywood to enter motion pictures. When the story appeared in a Los Angeles newspaper of the real hardships the young man has endured for a motion picture opportunity, Mr. O'Hara, upon reading the article, exclaimed as he passed the paper on to St. Clair:

"This young chap looks promising, I'll bet he'll make good!"

Mr. St. Clair thought the same, sent for young Biddle and immediately signed him up for the rest of the pictures. Mr. Biddle was delighted with the opportunity and is determined to make good. Mr. O'Hara has him in hand and is initiating him in all the secrets of make-up. As the company is like one family, Mr. Biddle no longer feels like a stranger, but is one of 'em, and having the time of his young life.

"COVERED WAGON" TO FOLLOW "ROBIN HOOD" AT GRAUMAN EGYPTIAN

According to authentic reports, it has been definitely decided that the Paramount production of "The Covered Wagon" will be the successor to "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre at an early date. The run of Doug's masterpiece has been phenomenal in all the term implies, including the financial sense, and it is an enviable record difficult to emulate. However, "The Covered Wagon" is considered one of the greatest film productions of all time and it is argued it should remain popular at Hollywood's new de luxe movie house for several months at least.

It is interesting to note that Alan Hale, who so brilliantly plays the character of Little John in "Robin Hood," has even a more important role in "The Covered Wagon" and he will therefore have the honor of being prominently in the casts of the two first successes to be exhibited at this unique playhouse.

Mort Blumenstock and Fred Stanley have arrived in Hollywood from the east to assist in exploitation of First National pictures.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

We'll say the ex-Kaiser is starting all over again. But, one thing is sure—It won't be another Crown Prince.

An actor who cannot make a close-up mean something should not expect a close-up to make him mean something.

At any rate, whoever does play the title role in "Ben Hur" will have a hard time dodging fame. It'll be a chariot-ride cinch.

Our idea of a real misfortune is to be silly enough to fortune a Miss who cares naught about making you fortunate therefor.

If you must criticize, do it according to your size, and, don't get confused to the extent of saying you know what you really only think!

Camera! favors every deserving underdog now out of favor. We implicitly believe there is room for some altruism even in the movie game.

Any time anybody tries to please everybody, everybody is bound to laugh at anybody for the folly of trying to do the utterly impossible.

The return of the serial craze seems assured—so much so that producers are vying with each other in spending huge fortunes on them. This is food for serial thought.

Better pictures are always easy of accomplishment and the producer who cannot offer improvements occasionally is not much of a benefit to the business which benefits him so financially.

Wall street may control a big share of the picture business, but little old Main Street will decide how much the profit for control shall be and here's hoping film producers will not lose sight of the fact.

The announcement to the effect that Will Rogers is going to make a new series of two-reel comedies is a powerful answer to the pessimists, who refuse to admit there is anything good in store for the screen. Where there's such a Will there's a way—to better things and laughter.

Civilization is an empty boast so long as all this acrimonious bickering and freeze-out dicker-ing continues in such popular vogue and it behooves all people within all filmdom to take the initiative in fostering toleration and making sincere efforts to squelch silly jealousies. Life is too fine a game to be either uncivilized or uncivil about it.

FILM PACE AND NEWS-PAPER SPACE

At times it seems that some of the Los Angeles newspapers are on the very verge of ignoring the motion picture industry entirely. If one single paper would print all the news of filmdom every day, it would be to Los Angeles what the leading daily of Detroit is to the motor car industry there, and, it would become the biggest publication in the local field overnight. The contents of all the newspapers in this city combined so far as film news is concerned does not cover more than ten per cent of the news all of which some part of the public would like to know. Of course there is some excuse in the fact that the film industry has grown so fast that the matter of keeping up with it has been at least difficult.

Pardon us for butting in, but did you read that one about John Goatt refusing to allow his son, William, to go to the movies on Sunday and how he all but murdered the boy for disobeying him? It was no "kid" with that old duffer and if we were that son, we'd Billy-Goat him until sitting down for a little rest would be the maximum in excruciating pain. A strait-laced man is bad enough, but when his name is Goatt and his proclivity is vicious punishment, we are in favor of strong methods such as a Goatt would be likely to recognize.

If it is true the Zukor-Lasky combination has any sort of a design on perfecting a trust, it is reasonably certain the design will be mused up considerably before Uncle Sam concludes his job. Camera! still hopes both Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky are too patriotic and too grateful for having the freedom of America to delude themselves into any hallucinations anent getting a corner on the bulk of the film business.

The influx of foreign Thespians into the Hollywood field is becoming quite remarkable and it will be a fine tribute to the bigness of the motion picture industry if it succeeds in assimilating all the best genius of many lands without depriving the American artists of any of their just opportunities. It is to be hoped the recruits from afar will evince a spirit coinciding with that of the people who welcome them with such unstinted hospitality and magnanimity.

Charlie Chaplin and Pola Negri have patched it up again, but they should not take the chance on running out of patches. Anyway, lovers' quarrels are not conducive to the best of publicity.

Los Angeles is pushing New York and Chicago for high honors as a picture-going city. This going record is one more proof of the fact that this is a coming city.

EXHAUSTS

By Al Martin

Mrs. Harold McCormack, who was the wife of Mr. McCormack until a judge pronounced them man and alimony-wife, claims that in another life she was the wife of King "Tut."

This claim of her's is the bunk, as I was king "Tut" himself and I don't even remember her.

She might have been around the place and I could easily have forgotten her in all these years, but if she were my wife, I would never forget.

Ed Sturgess, who is with Owen Moore when he isn't around the Christie Hotel, can verify this King stuff as I knew him in the old days.

Fact is, I had to have him be-headed because he was trying to "cop" my girl.

Before he tried this "stunt" he didn't use his head, and after our little be-heading party, he couldn't.

We often mention our other life, but not in public nor for publication.

We were discussing this non-publication item the other evening, when a lady approached Mr. Whipple who is the night diplomat of the Christie Hotel. This lady told him that she was looking for her husband.

This being unusual in the wood of holly the gang sat down and sang that little ditty entitled, "No Matter How Cold the Night May Be, She's Still Your Mother."

Ed, my sphinx-like boy friend, sang what he called bass, I sang for a tenor, and Monty Banks chirped in very non-operatically.

To stop all this noise George Rigas invited us all in to John's restaurant for a cup of coffee apiece.

We were all nervous for fear George would get a cramp in his hand when the waiter presented him with the check.

And our fears were well grounded, for he ignored the check completely.

We then all fought for the check, that is with the exception of myself, because my mother always tells me not to fight.

After all is said and finished, what excuse can we give the eastern people for our late rain?

"No, lady. Foot-pads will not cure chill-blains."

CREIGHTON HALE TO BE FEATURE OF "TRILBY"

Richard Walton Tully has contracted with Creighton Hale to play the role of "Little Billie" in his all-star production of "Trilby," which is to go into production very soon at the United Studios. In this selection Mr. Tully's peculiar talent for proper casting is again manifest.

De Maurier might have visualized Mr. Hale writing the story, so perfectly does he fit the author's description of the character, in appearance, physique and mannerisms.

Mr. Hale has enjoyed a most interesting and successful career both on the stage and screen. His latest stage triumph was scored in "Just Suppose" at the Mason Opera House this week.

Creighton Hale is well known to footlight fans through his work with Lady Forbes-Robertson in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow"; he appeared with John Mason and Martha Hedman in "An Indian Summer," and with Holbrook Blinn, Edmund Breese and Gareth Hughes in "Moloch," besides other notable stage engagements.

His work in pictures is equally well and favorably known. He will be remembered in the role of the professor in "Way Down East," and in support of May Murray in "Fascination." He has recently starred in "Her Majesty," and has just completed "Tea With a Kick," as one of a most extraordinary cast.

Andree Lafayette, who recently arrived from Paris to play the title role in "Trilby," is highly pleased over Mr. Tully's selection of Creighton Hale.

"I am very happy," smiled Mr. Tully, "in securing Hale's services. He is Little Billie in the life, and his contract is simply another step in the accomplishment of the determination of Jimmie Young and myself to make the cast for 'Trilby' as nearly perfect as possible. Young, who is to direct the production, is as enthusiastic as myself over Miss Lafayette and Mr. Hale. Svengali? Not yet, but we expect to have an announcement soon that will prove interesting."

Mary Signs Swedish Genius

Svend Gade, the noted Danish art director, has been engaged by Mary Pickford to design the pretentious sets to be used in her new production. Mr. Gade is internationally known for his brilliant work, among which of the more noted are: Esther Neilsen's film production of "Hamlet," the European stage production of "Faust" and the presentation of "Johannes Kreiser," which ran at the Apollo in New York.

COMPETITION IN SHEIK BUSINESS GETS KEENER

Sheiks, and near-sheiks—watch your turbans!

Also, watch your reputations, and be sure your contracts are safely locked in the little old safe deposit vault.

Pedro Viadero is in Hollywood.

Maybe that name doesn't mean much in the average life of the average, or above average, motion picture player today.

But it's going to mean something some day, and that something is going to be not a little bit, but a whole lot. Take Pedro's word for it.

He arrived in the film capital only a short time ago, from Spain, where he was a matinee idol for three years in Madrid, despite his comparative youth; he's only twenty-one now.

So it's up to the present-day sheiks—Valentino and Moreno, Ricardo Cortez and Ivor Novello, to look to their laurels.

Even though Pedro himself declares he doesn't intend to follow in their footsteps, but to develop, if possible, an individual brand of art all his own.

BUSHMAN AND MISS BAYNE BACK IN FILM NOVELTY

Nation-wide interest which has been aroused over the big production that Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are now producing as a combination stage and screen attraction in which they are to appear in person in the big theatres of the largest cities of the country, comes to a head this week with the announcement by American Releasing Corporation that it has obtained the distribution of this big attraction.

Simultaneously, first announcement is made of the title of the picture which is being produced by F. X. B. Pictures, Inc., under the supervision of Whitman Bennett of the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers.

The story selected for the personal appearances of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, acting a twenty-minute episode in the picture, in the large first-run picture theatres of the country is "Modern Marriage," by Dorothy Farnum from the widely-known novel, "Lady Varley," by Derek Vane.

Production of this picture is practically completed under the direction of Lawrence Windom and its first presentation as a combination attraction will be made in a large eastern city the first week in April, after which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are to be booked for a twelve-week tour in as many cities.

The real drones in the busy film hive are the know-it-all and the do-nothing—with emphasis on the former.

GOLDWYN EXTENDS ITS EXPANSION CAMPAIGN

Emmett J. Flynn, director of "The Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" and "The Count of Monte Cristo," two of the most successful pictures of the last year, has signed a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Flynn will head a production unit at the Goldwyn studios, now teeming with activity. His first picture will be adapted from one of the best known American novels, the name of which will be announced soon.

The signing of young Mr. Flynn—he is now only thirty-one—follows the acquisition by the Goldwyn company of many of the best known directors and actors. In fact, the Goldwyn expansion is attracting sensational interest in film circles.

Recently added to the Goldwyn list of directors have been Victor Seastrom, the Swedish director, King Vidor, George D. Baker, Charles Brabin, Tod Browning, Lambert Hillyer and Clarence Badger.

Marshall Neilan, director-producer, is making his second production at the Goldwyn Studios. Erich von Stroheim as about to start his first, and Rupert Hughes is just finishing his most ambitious effort. Hugo Ballin is about to produce his second under the lion banner.

Richard Walton Tully's new executive staff includes Ray Coffin, who will head the publicity department during the filming of "Trilby," which is to be a First National release.

PHOTOGRAPHER TO HAVE UNIQUE STUDIO

Walter Frederick Seely, prominent artist and photographer who recently opened his new studio at 1448 Wilcox Avenue, Hollywood, in the group of buildings generally referred to as "Bohemian Row," has begun extensive alterations and additions to his quarters which promise to establish them as the most unique of their kind in Hollywood. The general theme of decoration bespeaks the true artist, it being Mr. Seely's wish to do away with the commercial appearance of the modern photographic studio and substitute therefore what he believes to be the ideal setting for the creation of artistic portraiture. In its suggestion of great height and length it is strangely reminiscent of the film studios, and the odd wall coverings give a very bizarre and restful touch.

"I want this studio to express myself, just as I want my work to bear my own individual touch," Mr. Seely says. "Because I am seeking this expression everything that I work with must be made to carry out my own ideas. Therefore I have designed my own lights, have had my lens made to my own prescription, and am using effects that will insure the utmost beauty in the finished picture. I don't believe that any artist, working in a studio that does not reflect colorful beauty in its walls and ceilings, is doing his best work. He cannot, for his surroundings are not in harmony with his ideas. This studio will be of and by myself, and I believe my work will be far better because of it."

In the very near future, possibly in the early summer, Mr. Seely will exhibit some of his work, much of which has appeared in some of the leading fan magazines and art publications.

ROBERT BRUNTON DIES SUDDENLY IN LONDON

A cablegram from Jack Brunton, brother of Robert Brunton, founder and former owner of what is now called the United Studios, disclosed the news of the death of his brother in London last Sunday. The deceased was one of the wealthiest and most prominent figures in film-dom, having established himself as a successful producer almost at the time of the inception of the picture industry. It was Mr. Brunton's plan, after an extensive tour of Europe, to resume his picture activities in Los Angeles, on an elaborate scale. He had been ill only three days.

Is That So?

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Carl Gerard is supporting Anita Stewart in her first Cosmopolitan production, "The Love Piker."

Ethel Grey Terry is at work at Universal City on a new Jack Conway production, "What Wives Want."

Lillian Lawrence has been added to the cast of Buster Keaton's new special comedy "Three Ages."

Cullen Landis is in San Mateo with the Metro company making "The Fog," under the direction of Paul Powell.

Wallace MacDonald is at work at the Goldwyn studio on the revival of "The Spoilers." In this MacDonald plays the Broncho Kid.

Myrtle Stedman is completing "Out of the Night," a Thomas H. Ince production. Work was held up on the feature because of the change in directors. Joseph de Grasse and Del Andrews are alternating at the megaphone.

"Freckles" Barry is touring the northwest as a personal appearance artist in connection with his latest picture, "Heroes of the Street." He expects to arrive in Los Angeles some time next month to begin work on his next film, "Little Johnny Jones."

The task of selecting the cast for Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film production is now under way. John Griffith Wray, who will direct the picture, has cast Harry S. Northrup to interpret the leading heavy role in support of Mrs. Reid, who will play the stellar role.

Over-work and exposure to driving rain storms resulted in an attack of influenza for Rowland V. Lee, while he was producing his latest picture, "Desire." The editing and cutting of the film will be discontinued until Mr. Lee has recovered from his illness.

William Fox will complete the filming of the latest Charles (Buck) Jones starring vehicle, "Snowdrift," in which Dorothy Manners, the leading lady, will be a feature, on about March 20th, after which date, it is said, Mr. Jones will sever his connections with this firm.

Bert Woodruff, who won immortality with Charles Ray for his portrayal of many true to life characters in the home-spun of Ray pictures, yesterday put his name to the dotted line on a contract to work on Frank Borzage's first production for Arthur H. Jacobs which he is now casting.

Arthur Stuart Hull is supporting Herbert Rawlinson in a new Universal production tentatively called "Twenty Dollars."

Rights to Hall Cain's latest novel, "The Master of Man," have been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Beth Kosik has just completed a five-week engagement in "The Right of the Strongest," under the direction of Edgar Lewis.

Michael Dark is at work on the Warner Brothers production "Main Street," in which he is playing Guy Pollock, the lawyer.

Huntley Gordon has left for Del Monte with the Lasky company to make the first scenes for Gloria Swanson's next starring vehicle "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Taylor Graves has been engaged to play a prominent role in the new William de Mille production, "Only 38." Taylor will have the love interest opposite May MacAvoy.

Eva Novak is compiling a book of "Beauty Hints for the Blonde," a collection of a series of articles now running in various newspapers throughout the country.

Lew Cody will play a leading part in the forthcoming Paramount production of "Lawful Larceny," to be filmed at that concern's Long Island Studios under the direction of Allan Dwan.

Baby Peggy, winsome child star of Century Comedies, is back in grease paint and starts her first picture for 1923 under the direction of Harry Edwards. Edwards was chosen from many applicants for the wielding of Peggy's megaphone because of his splendid handling of Buddy Messinger.

Virginia Brown Faire, famous for her unusual characterizations in such successes as "Omar the Tentmaker" and "Monte Cristo," wishes to deny the rather sensational story, recently published, to the effect that she is an Egyptian. She is an American girl, born and reared in Brooklyn.

Victor Potel, the elongated comedian who helped to make Essanay famous back in the old days, has been cast for an important role in the James Horne production of "When Jerry Comes Home," now being photographed at the Robertson-Cole Studios and which is scheduled for release during the late spring.

William H. Bender, Guy Bates Post's personal representative and legal adviser, has just returned from a trip to New York in the interests of his client.

Lincoln Stedman returned to the legitimate stage for one performance the other evening at the Writer's Club. He appeared in a one act adaptation of the "Sabine Women."

The Clarence Badger company, now filming the latest Goldwyn production, "Red Lights," is on "location" in Mexico, shooting exteriors for this popular stage success.

Benny Alexander has been selected to play the role of Penrod in First National's production of "Penrod and Sam," which is to be made at the Hollywood studio. William Beaudine will direct. Martha Mattox, one of the screen's most versatile actresses, will also appear in an important part in this picture.

Dereyls Perdue, former stage dancer who is now portraying an important role in Emile Chautard's production of "Daytime Wives," will hereafter be known as just plain Ann Perdue. A magazine contest was held recently in quest of a more suitable name for the actress, and from among the thousands of suggestions, "Ann" was selected.

Martha Mattox, whose performance in "The Hero" is one of the bright spots in the picture, according to newspaper critics, will follow this motherly role with one of the most villainous characterizations ever offered by an actress, in the Universal picturization of "The Attic of Felix Bavu." Miss Mattox is one of the most versatile character artists in films today.

Carl Miller, playing opposite Edna Purviance in the Charles Chaplin vehicle, "Public Opinion," which the comedian is directing, is working for the first time since the picture went under production in the open air, the photography heretofore being confined to interiors at the studios. Hence an excursion to the Wilshire district, where a beautiful home formed an exterior, offered a thrill.

Creighton Hale, now dividing stellar honors with Isabelle Lowe in the stage play of "Just Suppose" at the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, will play one of the principal parts in Richard Walton Tully's film production of "Trilby." Mr. Hale's remarkable eccentric characterization in D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" stamped him as one of the silversheet's foremost artists.

Sidney Franklin is to direct Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy," a First National release, which will be in production about the middle of March.

Do you resemble Wes Barry? If so, call Mr. Furtheman at the Service Bureau. He is looking for a youngster about thirteen years of age who is endowed with a wealth of freckles to push Wesley for honors.

Clyde Cook, whose contract with William Fox has just expired, is now under a long-term agreement with the Lou Anger Productions, for whom he will specialize in the producing of two-reel comedies, at the Buster Keaton Studios.

Actual filming will soon start on "Trilby," under the direction of James Young at the United Studios. Andree Lafayette, the imported French beauty, will be featured, supported by John Bowers, Marguerite De la Motte, Pat O'Malley and Marjorie Daw.

Otto Matiesen, who played the part of Napoleon Bonaparte in Hugo Ballin's recently completed "Vanity Fair," will play Philippe de Vilmoren in "Scaramouche," which is to be produced by Rex Ingram. Production begins in about fifteen days.

Jack Giddings, who, as a movie stuntman, has flirted with death so many times that he has lost count of them, will hereafter flirt with leading ladies as a juvenile leading man, and there will be some skeptical enough to doubt whether or not his new occupation will prove any safer!

Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Garon, parents of the little screen flapper, Pauline Garon, are expected in Hollywood in the near future for a visit with their daughter. Their home is in Montreal, where they are prominent in French-Canadian circles. At the present time, sister Lorette, who is with Pauline, is doing her best to enact the part of father, mother and general secretary to the busy little film lady.

When Lewis Sargent finishes his present engagement as juvenile leading man in support of William Desmond in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," he will have fought exactly seventeen fist fights, which observation is interesting because it focuses attention on the necessity for finding substitutes for gun-play as a source for serial thrills. The censors have put the ban on the popular tactics in chapter plays of yore, much to the damage of actors' knuckles.

FILM WRITERS TO GET DATA DIRECT

Eleanore Coffee and John Goodrich, who have been engaged by Principal Pictures Corporation to adapt the series of Harold Bell Wright stories for the screen, are preparing for a novel trip in quest of data pertaining to the first of the Wright Series, "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

These film folk, accompanied by Michael Rosenberg, secretary of Principal Pictures Corporation, will leave shortly for the Arizona home of Harold Bell Wright and will spend considerable time at the famous author's ranch near Tucson. Here they expect to obtain interesting facts pertaining to the author's ideas of the stories shortly to be filmed.

Harold Bell Wright is probably one of the most unique story writers in the world. He has his own methods of creating stories which are keenly interesting and in all his novels, he has used living models with which to surround his tales. He is anxiously awaiting the arrival of the film people and is quite interested in the forthcoming filming of his books.

After their visit with author Wright, Miss Coffee, Mr. Goodrich and Mr. Rosenberg will depart for Imperial Valley, the scene of action of "The Winning of Barbara Worth." Here they will meet and talk to the people whom Mr. Wright used in this famous story. Practically all of the characters of the tale are still alive and living in the romantic valley of the southland.

In almost every instance, Wright has used California as the background for his world famous books and both Miss Coffee and Mr. Goodrich expect to obtain some interesting and vital data on each of his books which will be put to use in the adaptation.

The continuity for the George M. Cohan stage success, "The Meanest Man in the World," was arranged by Miss Coffee and Mr. Goodrich. This production will be started immediately.

English Star in "Six Days"

The first selection for the cast to appear with Corrine Griffith in "Six Days," her first Goldwyn picture, is Claude King, the English actor who has just finished the important role of Dr. Isaacson in "Belladonna" with Pola Negri. "Six Days," which will be directed by Charles J. Brabin, will be Mr. King's fourth picture in the United States, although his pictures in England have made him a screen favorite throughout the Empire. He came to America in 1919 to support Ethel Barrymore in "De-classe."

NEILAN NOW DIRECTS WIFE'S FIRST "LEAD"

Blanche Stewart's first leading man, Charles H. West, is now appearing in her husband's picture—Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three." West was the "Biograph blonde's" chief support in her first leading part D. W. Griffith's direction in a two-reeler—called "a civil war picture." Bobby Harron played the part of his brother.

West also recalls Kathleen Williams' first appearance before a camera. She portrayed his sweetheart in a picture in which Mary Pickford had the lead. He remembers arguing that Miss Williams was not too tall for pictures, and after convincing the director, assisted her with her first make-up.

79 NOTABLES IN ONE PICTURE, A RECORD

With the filming this week at the Goldwyn Studio of the final scenes in "Souls for Sale," Rupert Hughes' story of motion picture life, a new record is set up for the number of recognized screen luminaries appearing in a single production.

Thirty-three leading stars and directors of the screen, aside from the all-star cast itself—which boasts forty-six players—will be on view to the public when "Souls for Sale" is eventually released.

These celebrities consented to appear briefly before the camera in order to enhance the realism of Major Hughes' story, a representation of life as it is actually lived in the motion picture colony.

The stars composing this resplendent galaxy are: Marshall Neilan, Blanche Sweet, Erich von Stroheim, Mabel Ballin, Hugo Ballin, Florence Vidor, King Vidor, Fred Niblo, Hobart Bosworth, Ernest Lubitsch, Robert Edeson, Claire Windsor, Raymond Griffith, Elaine Hammerstein, Claude Gillingwater, Milton Sills, Zasu Pitts, Chester Conklin, Johnnie Walker, Bessie Love, Alice Lake, Dagmar Godowsky, John Sainpolis, Elliott Dexter, Kathryn Williams, Barbara Bedford, Anna Q. Nilsson, Anita Stewart, William H. Crane, T. Roy Barnes, George Walsh, Kenneth C. Beaton—K. C. B.—and Thomas G. Patten, western representative for Will Hays.

The principal players in "Souls for Sale" constitute in themselves a fair percentage of the Motion Picture Blue Book list. Among them are such screen notables as Eleanor Boardman, Mae Busch, Barbara La Marr, Richard Dix, Frank Mayo, Lew Cody, Arthur Hoyt, David Imboden, Roy Atwell, William Orlamond, William Haines, Dale Fuller, Snitz Edwards, Rush Hughes, Aileen Pringle, Sylvia Ashton and Jed Prouty.

More than a thousand persons all told took part in "Souls for Sale."

Mabel Julienne Scott, who has achieved her greatest success in "The Power of a Lie," has been cast by Clarence Bricker to play the role of a vamp in his initial picture for J. A. Mowat Productions, "The Man Who Cheated," starring Walter Hagen.

WHEREIN FLIRTING CAUSES AUTO WRECK

When a passing motorist seeks to stage a little impromptu flirtation while en route down the boulevard, it is high time for the modest girl to "step on the gas" in her car and show a burst of get-away speed in resentment. This is precisely what Alberta Vaughn, leading lady of many comedy film triumphs, did last Thursday evening, but with unusual results. The would-be masher persisted doggedly and in racing his car to overtake the popular movie star, he allowed his attention to be centered too much on his determination. The upshot of it was, a crash—a collision in which the flirter's machine was the worse for violent contact with a telephone pole.

When she heard the crash, Miss Vaughn brought her car to a standstill and hastened to the scene of the wreck with the idea of returning good for evil by being of whatever aid she could.

However, she found the man unhurt and made apologetic by the fright occasioned by the close call. The actress graciously forgave the stranger and resumed her journey to her home.

Many pedestrians witnessed the accident, but only Miss

DENIAL REVEALS LEADING MAN IS ONLY 19

It took a denial of a rumor to bring about a divulging of the fact that Lewis Sargent, now playing in "The Phantom Fortune," a Universal serial in the course of production, is the youngest leading director in motion pictures at present. The rumor had to do with an alleged long-term contract with Universal. An over-zealous and ambitious news gatherer, new to the field, had caused the publishing of a story in which it was stated that he had signed up with the Carl Laemmle organization for five years.

"It's untrue—I'm too young to sign a contract," he declared in asking for a retraction.

This opened the way to the questioning which led Mr. Sargent to admit he is only nineteen years of age. A little consulting of all available records on the part of an investigating editor revealed the fact that no other leading man in motion pictures is so young by four years.

Mr. Sargent has played juvenile leading roles in several feature photoplays and at the age of eighteen he was starred in a series of Universal comedies. He is the juvenile "lead" in "The Phantom Fortune."

He was signed for this one picture and will probably be found at another studio within the next three weeks, which he could not do if he was under a long-term contract with Universal.

Vaughn understood fully the cause of the disastrous effect. She says she is more convinced than ever that flirting does not pay.

THIS SCREEN CHILD IS CALLED A HUMAN FISH

Prominent among the budding starlets of Hollywood is Mickey McBan, three-and-one half years of age, who is also noted for his aquatic prowess, having won five medals for supremacy in water feats.

He won his first two awards at the age of two when he made a six-foot dive, and a fifty-foot swim. Recently he has acquired three others for a fifty-yard backstroke, a ten-foot dive and general swimming excellence.

He is what might be termed a "human fish," but certainly not a poor fish, for he has been working almost incessantly before the camera, with the exception of a short period of illness. He is at present playing an important role in Emile Chautard's "Daytime Wives" at the R-C studios, which marks his thirty-seventh appearance on the silver sheet, and the third time he has been with Chautard.

STAR FINDS MANY WILL HELP HER CHANGE NAME

Fritzi Brunette wants to change her name.

She doesn't like her present professional cognomen so well, she says.

In a recent interview, with a feature writer for an eastern eastern paper, Miss Brunette let it be known that she wished to change her name.

Like a lot of impetuous type-writer pounders, though, the interviewer got the wrong slant, and wrote his story to the effect that the feminine lead of "The Other Side," Hugh Dierker's latest production, was looking for a husband.

Can you beat it?

Well, the value of advertising was graphically illustrated to Miss Brunette in a very forcible manner.

Immediately the mail which daily arrives at Dierker's office for Miss Brunette began to increase, until last week, when the peak load was reached, with a total of 38 letters, seventeen of which contained proposals of marriage.

One came from Alaska; a gold-hunting miner who was seeking a mate. A farm hand in Kansas also put in his bid for the fair actress' hand, and a prize-fight promoter in New York, whose name is withheld for obvious reasons, also wanted to change Fritzi's last name to correspond with his.

Miss Brunette, though, wants it distinctly understood that she's not seeking a husband, but merely a better name, for picture work, than the one she's now using; which, by the way, is her very own.

"Tut" Film From "Tut" Novel

The screen version of "Tutankhamen," the story of old Egypt and its famous Pharaoh which is being made ready for the films by William P. S. Earle, is an adaptation of the 200,000 word novel by Blanche Taylor Earle entitled "Tutankhamen of Luxor." Mrs. Earle has only recently completed the writing of the novel which will be published almost simultaneously with the presentation of the photoplay version on the screen, and it was started long before the scientists announced the opening of the now famous King "Tut's" tomb.

Ruth Abandons Serials

Ruth Roland, known throughout the world as "the serial queen," on account of her starring roles in thrilling screen serials, is to abandon this type of offering for a time, and will do regular feature productions. Miss Roland recently completed her Pathe serial, "Ruth's Millions."

FROM "WITHIN THE LAW" TO "VENGEANCE" IN JIFFY

Norma Talmadge does not believe in hesitating long between pictures.

Art and activity are not at odds with each other in her scheme of things. Temperament, so called, to her means work—more opportunities for self-expression. Her art is her life; to be happy she must be busy.

Almost immediately upon completion of "Within the Law," the huge machinery of the Joseph M. Schenck organization was set in motion to prepare for Miss Talmadge's new vehicle, "Ashes of Vengeance," which is from the prolific pen of H. B. Sumerville. It is to be a romance of Old France—the France of Charles IX, of Henry of Navarre, of Margaret of Valois and the Huguenots. The action takes place in the picturesque France of the latter part of the sixteenth century. It was, indeed, the age of romance and chivalry, of graceful women and scheming men, and of grim, historical drama.

C. M. A. Endorses Expo

A resolution commending the motion picture industry for its initiative in planning the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, to be given in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, July 2 to August 4, commemorating the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, was unanimously adopted by the California Industrial Council and the California Manufacturers Association recently assembled at Paso Robles. These two organizations represent the biggest business and manufacturing concerns in the state. Virtually every trade and every form of business in California was represented at the Paso Robles meeting.

To Say It With Music

A modern picture studio is like a symphony.

Ignace Jan Paderewski says so. The famous pianist was the guest of Thomas H. Ince during his recent appearance in Los Angeles and was so impressed with the technical perfection, the life and the bustling activities that he declared his intention of writing a "Studio Symphony" which would translate the things he has seen and heard into music.

Eastern Exhibitors Visit Here

Max Balaban and Morris Katz, members of the firm of Balaban and Katz, owning and controlling the finest moving picture temples in Chicago and surrounding territory, are visitors in Los Angeles. With the theatre magnates is also Floyd Brockell, general sales manager for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of New York City.

Yes, Eloise, the fellow who is so heroic on the screen is sometimes a miserable coward in private life.

FOX WROTE AND WILL DIRECT "MAN BETWEEN"

Finis Fox, author, director and independent producer, has started work at the Fine Arts studios on his third independent production, "The Man Between." This new play, which was written by Mr. Fox and adapted to the screen by Lois Zellner, has its scenes laid in the quaint old city of Quebec and the French-Canadian portion of Canada.

Announcement of the production is made by Robert Beaty, general manager of the Finis Fox Productions. The cast engaged for the picture includes such well known artists as Allan Forrest, Philo McCullough, Edna Murphy, Vola Vale, Kittie Bradbury, Fred Malatesta and Doreen Turner. Sam Landers is behind the camera and Finis Fox himself is directing.

Mintz With Century

Another well known "gagman"—a writer of clever comedy sequences and situations—has been engaged by Julius Stern, president of the organization making Century Comedian. He is Jack Mintz, who has been placed with the Herman Raymaker unit making Centuries.

WITHEY WILL DIRECT BEERY IN "TALISMAN"

Chet Withey has been engaged to direct Frank Woods' initial production, a screen version of Sir Walter Scott's "The Talisman," featuring Wallace Beery in the role of Richard the Lion Hearted which he made famous in Douglas Fairbanks' interpretation of Robin Hood.

This picture will represent the first of a series to be put out by the Associated Authors, made up of Frank Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan. The productions are to be released through the Allied Producers and Distributors Corp., owned by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, and a subsidiary of the United Artists.

Work will commence on the Woods offering about March 25th, by which time it is expected that the scenario will be complete.

Irvin VanOsdell, who for the past two seasons played center-field for the Salt Lake baseball club, has been engaged by Finis Fox to assist him in the direction of his latest story for the screen, a melodrama, as yet untitled.

From U to You

"Drifting" has been completed. The spectacular film play of China, adapted from the John Colton stage success, in which Priscilla Dean has given the starring performance before the camera, has gone into the editorial department following four months' solid work with the cameras.
"Drifting" has every quality of a perfect
Dean vehicle in the opinion of Universal executives, and it is said to mark a definite point in her career.

Miss Dean will spend a vacation period supervising the finishing touches in decoration and furnishings of her new home in Beverly Hills, the exclusive residential suburb of Los Angeles, ten miles from Universal City.

A bachelor always, Alfred Allen, famous character actor and pioneer in the motion picture profession, has played the role of father to nearly every beautiful actress of the screen. In the role of Jim Travis, Texas cattleman, his parental role takes a different turn as he appears in "Shell Shocked" as the Dad of the rollicking cowboy played by Edward (Hoot) Gibson.

In this current vehicle, Allen breathes again the atmosphere of his old stamping ground, as he virtually made his home at Universal City five years.

The all-star character of the impressive cast supporting Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at Universal City has been further heightened by the addition of Gladys Brockwell, who for years was one of the most popular stars of the silversheet.

Miss Brockwell will play the role of the mother of Esmeralda, the gypsy dancer who is impersonated in the picture by Patsy Ruth Miller. The role is dramatic and has those emotional possibilities which Miss Brockwell can always be expected to realize to the fullest extent.

Wallace Worsley, director, Perley Poore
Sheehan, adapter, and Chaney are determined that every character of the fifteenth century classic will be reproduced faithfully in the moving shadows of the screen epic.

Edward (Hoot) Gibson is hard at work on "Shell Shocked," the story of one of 'em who came back from "over there" with a distinct tendency toward nervousness and the rest of the troubles that go with shell shock. It is a real characterization for Gibson, to follow "Dead Game," "Single-Handed" and "Double-Dealing" among his releases.

of the Art Department of Universal City to give one of these models to the Museum of Los Angeles.

Elmer Sheeley, head of the Art Department at this studio, is a specialist in handling miniatures and has developed this line of work to such a remarkable extent as to surmount unbelievable difficulties and save the company thousands of dollars.

One usually speaks of great feature productions in terms of dollars and cents. Art is its secondary thought. The mind of an American audience is generally influenced by how much a thing cost. If that was necessary at all in this picture, it would stagger the public to know what has already been spent on the "sets" alone. But in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" art will lead and the work of the combined efforts of the entire "unit" will prove that above everything real merit in every way is necessary to make a great production. From the head of the stupendous plant, who makes the picture possible, to the lowliest workman who handles pick and shovel in due praise or blame.

Not more than fifteen years ago for moving pictures were unknown. Even ten years ago it was often necessary to go "on location" into homes, banks and churches to find what was needed to suit the story. It is a gigantic step in the development of the industry to meet its requirements now, when it is necessary, to make a reproduction of such an edifice as Notre Dame Cathedral, supplying every detail and realism, then not content to have this structure alone, to reproduce from the imagination the buildings and environment surrounding it.

Frances Raymond, who has just been cast for an important role in Dustin Farnum's new picture, "The Grail," and, who long since established herself as a cinema character actress par excellence in screen hits ranging from the time of Bryant Washburn's triumph, "Skinner's Dress Suit," to "Shadows" and "Hungry Hearts," was the most popular soubrette on the American comic opera stage twenty-five years ago, when she appeared in stellar roles in extravagant productions of her late husband, David Henderson, then the Zeigfeld of the nation.

Monty Banks has just started his third-to-the-last comedy for Federated release. Upon the expiration of this, his third annual contract with this concern, Mr. Banks will turn his stellar comic antics to features of four, five and six reels instead of the regulation two-reeler.

Joseph Kerr, exploitation manager of the Paul Gerson Picture Corporation, and Berthold Berger, executive officer of the Company, will leave for New York this week. They will take with them the first print of the company's latest feature production, "The Cricket on the Hearth," also first prints of the first of the series of two-reel comedy-dramas from Peter B. Kyne's "Tiberius Tinker" stories in the Saturday Evening Post. They will arrange releases for these pictures and future productions.

Max Graf has discovered a new heir for Roscoe Arbuckle's laurels in John J. Perkins, an entertainer at Coffee Dan's, and now also playing the country hotel clerk in "The Fog." John J. is just twenty-four, weighs a merry little two hundred and sixty-eight pounds, and best of all, has a really funny face.

Al Christie was in San Francisco last week enroute to Truckee.

The Co-Operative Motion Picture Productions, Inc., Ivor McFaddon production manager, has taken rooms in the Golden Gate Building and expects to begin work on a picture shortly. They claim to have discovered a young man star who will make Richard Barthelmess look to his laurels.

Another motion picture company has been started in San Francisco, so quietly that no word of its formation was made public until after its first picture was under way. It is the Kenmat Productions and they are already making "Scarlet Shadows" at Universal City, although all future productions will be done at San Mateo. It is a closed corporation, with only three men interested and no stock for sale. "Scarlet Shadows" is being directed by Fred Reel, Jr., who wrote the story, and has a cast including Noah Beery, Thomas Santschi, Stuart Holmes, Eileen Sedgwick, Arline Pretty, Anna May Wong, Zella Gray, and others.

INTEREST IN THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVUE AND MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION is so great that two special trains will be required to bring distinguished visitors from Washington, D. C. Before Congress adjourned so many United States Senators and Representatives signified their desire to attend the Premiere that arrangements must be made for an extra trans-continental train. The Premiere is to be one of the most brilliant spectacles ever staged anywhere and will attract an immense crowd. Admission will be limited to holders of PATRON CERTIFICATES. No one can afford to miss the program of July 2, which includes a ball following a series of novel events.

SUBSCRIBE FOR YOUR PATRON CERTIFICATE NOW. Don't wait until it is too late to enter the gates of the enchanted city in which old Spanish-American traditions are revived, and the resources of the Motion Picture world are employed in providing wonderful pageants.

Fill out this blank application and mail to Exposition Department, 1005 Hollingsworth Bldg., Sixth and Hill Sts., Los Angeles.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1923

No. 49

From the Editorial Observatory

As for the very next King Tut joke, tut, tut!

It is highly probable that the Ruhr may become a Rue for the French.

A Fritzi Blonde has arrived in Filmland to try her luck in pictures. Beware, Fritzi Brunette!

Rubber is going up in price. In other words, they're taking advantage of its stretching possibilities.

A Professor Bugg predicts the end of the world will come in the year of 1942. This IS a "Buggy" idea.

Speaking of all these proposed theatre projects, let us add: the prospect of having such an increase in amusements is delightfully amusing, and the realization of it all will be even more so.

The Los Angeles dramatic critics seem to be unanimous in the decision that the one reason why "The Wheel of Life" rolls on at all is, Elsie Ferguson (in person) is the main spoke. But then it is a spoken drama.

Pola Negri's first American-made photoplay, "Bella Donna," has failed to "knock 'em dead," but this failure may be intentional—Pola may want to be sure of having some live patrons left for her next American-made picture.

This is a good time to once more caution a few bad actors against their persistency in neglecting the mending of their breaking ways. There may be a "kick" in carousing and wild-party life, but it is certain there also will be a kick-back.

They can send music from New York to New Zealand via radio now. There is much of the new in this, to say nothing of the abundance of the truly marvelous. Pretty soon you'll be able to radio a kiss all the way around the world and back right on your own dear cheek.

Somebody on a certain morning newspaper must be simply wild about "Bull" Montana. There is nearly always one story about him, and sometimes there are two of them on the same page the same day. But you can't blame Montana for wanting to be on the map.

China is still making demands on Japan. Is it that something must be done to protect the chop suey interests, or has demanding become the national sport of China? At any rate, Japan continues to be immune to all demands except its own, and it wants America to meet most of those.

The Prohibition officers claim they are close on the trail of a powerful Hollywood bootlegging ring. On the square? (The suggestion of skepticism is the result of a natural amazement over the revelation that after all these years, the Prohibition officers should get on a trail hundreds have been traversing with intoxicating regularity.)

Now that Hollywood is assured a couple of new million-dollar theatres, and a couple of others a little less costly, it is to be expected that some long-haired, long-winded reformer will burst into print soon with the unqualified declaration that this city is going straight to perdition. If such commendable progress is that, come on perdition!

Helen Ferguson, the film star, has made the discovery that perfumes nowadays are inferior. She dropped a little of it in the corner of one of her famous brown eyes to produce tears for a motion picture scene, and she almost went blind because the perfume contained a very crude and inferior grade of wood alcohol. Ye gods! Can it be possible that the unscrupulous bootleggers also control the perfume business? If so, we're off of perfume, too.

According to the latest reports, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are serious in their determination to join the West Coast-Grauman organization in promoting the construction of a million-dollar theatre in Hollywood. Since it is a foregone conclusion that such an enterprise will be a good financial proposition, it is well worth all the seriousness anyone can muster. Moreover, Mary and Doug had just as well be serious enough about it to insure themselves a neat profit as anybody else.

Speaking of journalistic wares (not necessarily hard), Camera! enjoyed its little theatre "scoop" last week. When a weekly publication can beat a half dozen newspapers in divulging an important news story pertaining to Filmland, it is one more proof of the fact that the Los Angeles dailies cover the film-production field very weakly. All the real film news published in all the local newspapers during a whole week is set forth in two pages in Camera! on Saturday as a resume, and the remainder of the contents, or about fifteen pages, are occupied by news and gossip overlooked or neglected by all other publications. Presumably, Los Angeles newspapers are none too proud of the great film industry.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Within the next two weeks production of a series of high-class two-reel comedies presenting to the motion picture public the famous Gump family will begin at Universal City. The pictures will be produced by Samuel Van Ronkel and distributed by the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and will be known as Samuel Van Ronkel Productions. Plans are practically completed and casting is under way.

Picturization of the activities of the Gumps, made famous by Sidney Smith's comedy strip in the daily newspapers, will include the love affair of Uncle Bim and the widow Zander, which caused nation-wide interest a couple of years ago and nearly caused a panic at newspaper information bureaus by questions from "fans" who were following the affair. Chester and Min, "Old Timer" and his good wife of Shady Rest will have important roles in the Universal screen attraction.

Mr. Van Ronkel's contract with Sidney Smith extends over a period of five years and the pictures to be filmed will follow the Gump's activities to a considerable extent as they appear in the daily comedy strip.

All of the characters for the comedies have not been chosen, although many screen tests have been made during the last few days. It is a particularly delicate task to pick these characters because of the unusual physiognomy of the Gump family, especially Andy and Uncle Bim.

"The comedies are not to be of the ordinary slap stick variety so common in 'two-reelers' but will be of the very subtle order," Mr. Van Ronkel said.

Marion Orth, popular fictionist and playwright, has been added to the scenario staff at Universal City. She was engaged by Raymond L. Schrock, head of the scenario department, to write seven original screen stories within the next year.

For the last three years Miss Orth has devoted her time exclusively to writing motion picture plays. Previous to that time she was for several years a short story magazine contributor and came west from Chicago three years ago at the invitation of Miss Lois Weber, noted playwright and motion picture director, who had purchased two of her stories, "The Price of a Good Time" and "Borrowed Clothes," for filming at Universal City.

Among well known picture plays which Miss Orth has written are "Midnight Romance," "To Please One Woman," "Too Wise Wives" and "The Lure of Jade."

Recalling the excellent work of Ethel Grey Terry in "Under Two Flags" it is logical to expect a fine characterization from her in "What Wives Want," an all-star production just finished.

"What Wives Want" is a novel screen discussion of the marital problem, affording good dramatic opportunities for Miss Terry, Niles Welsh, Ramsey Wallace, Vernon Steele and others, directed by Jack Conway. Perry Vokroff wrote the story.

Katherine Perry, wife of Owen Moore and well known screen actress, has been engaged to play the feminine lead in "Twenty Dollars," Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Herbert Blache. Miss Perry has appeared in pictures a year or two and has played leading roles in all-star attractions. She is best remembered for her work in "Sooner or Later" and "The Chicken in the Case."

Zach Sanderson, graduate of the State University of Michigan, and for the past six years associated with the George H. Putnam Publishing Company, has been added to the scenario staff at Universal City.

Ann Little, "Queen of the outdoors," has been signed by the Universal Pictures Corporation.

She will co-star with Fred Thompson, all-around world's champion athlete, in a forthcoming Universal chapter play production, "The Eagle's Talons," which will exploit the thrill of outdoor life and the interest of adventure in the open spaces. Miss Little's screen history includes achievements in every type of role, but for years she has been known primarily as one of the most courageous of outdoor women. She was born in Sisson, California, went into pictures first with Ince, followed her initial experience there with engagements at Universal, American, Lasky, Arrow and other studios, and spent practically all of 1921 and 1922 traveling over the entire world. Two of her best appearances were in "The Squaw Man" and "Nan of Music Mountain."

Thompson has held the world's amateur athletic championship for some time and is rapidly gaining fame in pictures. He is of the clean-cut outdoor type, entirely likable in personality.

To further insure the finest personality interest possible in a serial Universal City executives have engaged Al Wilson, one of the world's most famous aeroplane stunt fliers, to handle a role of featured importance in the story.

Another element which guarantees the best possible story value is that "The Eagle's Talons" was written by Theodore Wharton, "the father of the serial." He has prepared some of the greatest chapter play successes which the screen has known, among them the very first produced.

Doris Pawn, a star in her own right and one of the very finest artists on the screen today, is playing a featured leading role opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "Twenty Dollars," now in the course of production under the direction of Herbert Blache. Miss Pawn has a long list of silversheet triumphs to her credit, but most critics think she appeared to her best advantage in such successes as "Trey of Hearts," "Tower of Ivory" and "The City of Dim Faces," although her very latest appearance in "The Hero" has brought a veritable avalanche of high praise her way. Miss Pawn is quite in a class of her own and she seems assured of an extraordinary future of artistic achievement.

I KNEW 'EM WHEN—

Claire Windsor admits she started her film career as an extra girl with no stage experience whatever.

Clarence Badger's father was a theater manager, and once hired David Warfield as an usher.

Cecil Holland, make-up wizard who practices his greasepaint magic at Goldwyn studio, has played more than 2000 different characters.

Kate Lester, grande dame of Goldwyn films, made her screen debut in "Mollie Make Believe" in 1915.

Erich von Stroheim has acted in nine motion pictures in his career. He played a villainous character in nine of them.

Gretchen Hartman, wife of Alan Hale, is making a double-header of her return to the screen after an absence of three years due to the necessity for devoting her whole, undivided time to Alan, Jr. She is being seen almost simultaneously in two different William Fox features, namely: Tom Mix in "Do and Dare" and Dustin Farnum in "While Justice Waits."

Miss Betty McCoy, well known Hollywood dancer, is now in Mexico City, at the National Theatre

DIRECT FROM FILMLAND

Dick Sutherland, whose face is so intriguing in its ugliness as has proven in his characterization of the tramp in support of Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," has been requested to make personal appearances because of a demand of many movie fans to be allowed to see with their own eyes whether or not he is as ugly in reality as he photographs when engaged in make-believe. Mr. Sutherland is undecided as to what he will do about the request. He is more prone to give a negative answer because of the fact that he has been asked by directors on several occasions to add make-up which tends to hide some of his natural facial features. "I'm afraid the fans will think my face is my misfortune although I regard it as my greatest fortune," he says.

Monty Banks, the popular comedy star, is turning out two-reelers at a merry clip just now. During the thirty days ending last Saturday he made two complete comedies for the Federated program. Both were promptly accepted by the high-ups as O. K. The first one, entitled "Oil's Well," is said to be especially funny while the second one, "Please Arrest Me," is claimed to be entirely up to standard. Ruth Holly is Monty's leading lady in both of these films.

Eyes and a Slide Down a Coal Chute

If Helen Ferguson hadn't had more than the ordinary amount of nerve and perseverance when she started working in motion pictures, she might now be pounding a typewriter in a glue factory, or sitting in the cubbyhole office of a tanyard somewhere with a telephone receiver strapped over her ears, taking the latest market reports on leather and tallow.

However, Helen had that nerve and perseverance, and as a result she's now one of the screen's most prominent stars.

Back in the heyday of the old Essanay company's success, at the studio in Chicago, Helen started as an extra girl.

She wasn't getting much of a "kick" out of life then, however, and her big brown eyes, unlike they are today, continually held a rather sad, woe-begone look.

So strongly did this wistful, beseeching optical expression grate on the nerves of Essanay's casting director that it became a daily habit for him to "fire" Helen and tell her not to come back again.

But return she did—time after time, after time!

Then one day the director, his patience at the breaking point, told her to get off the "lot," with a fusillade of blankety-blank-blank gratuities thrown in, and never, never come back.

The next morning, bright and early, the director walked through the waiting room, picking his types for the day's work. Casting hadn't been reduced then, by the way, to the science which it is now.

Hurriedly he made the rounds, choosing a girl here and there.

Then—
Suddenly he stopped, threw back his head and roared with rage.

There in her accustomed place, on her favorite bench, sat Helen, unperturbed and her eyes more haunting than ever. Her face was streaked with coal dust, the make-up, which she had so laboriously put on in the morning, was begrimed and utterly ruined.

"How in the world did you get in here?" queried the director, when his rage had subsided enough to give his voice a chance. He had given strict instructions to all gatemen to the effect that she wasn't to be admitted to the studio under any circumstances.

"Through the coal chute," Helen replied, her eyes, staring sadly even in her triumph.

And that very sympathy-winning lustre in her eyes, which since have become famous the world over, started her on her career.

Simply because there was no way to get rid of her, that casting director gave her what he thought to be a "bit" in an Essanay two-reeler starting that memorable day, and when he saw the picture projected later, he discovered the girl had made it the biggest part in the story because she accidentally got a chance to use her eyes to a distinct advantage before a camera in close-ups for the first time.

Emboldened even more by this slight taste of getting into a movie enough to be seen, Miss Ferguson marched herself majestically up to the office of the production manager, knocked at his door and breezed into his sanctum without awaiting a response.

"If you'll give me a chance and I find out I'm not good, I'll promise to never come back to your studio again," she proposed.

"And, are you to do the deciding as to whether or not you are good?" he asked, much amused.

HELEN FERGUSON

ONE DULL WEEK IN HELEN'S LIFE

Helen Ferguson is the possessor of several degrees in the superlative. In the first place, she is considered one of the most intellectual photoplayers on the screen, and, in the second place, she is quite generally conceded to be one of the most active. It is interesting to note how she spends a dull week. Witnesseth:

Monday—She finished playing the stellar role in Edgar Lewis' "The Right of the Strongest" at 6 p. m., and at 8:30 p. m., of the same day, she was attending a meeting of the Twinkler's Club she helped to found.

Tuesday—She returned to the studio for several re-takes, went shopping, posed for six portraits and that evening was the hostess at a surprise dinner she gave in honor of Mr. Lewis.

Wednesday—Started at 8 a. m., and spent the whole morning helping to raise funds for the new home of the Studio Club, which cares for gentle aspirants to screen honors who aspire under the disadvantage of a financial shortage. At noon she was the principal speaker at an important meeting in behalf of Better Films. At 2 p. m.

San Francisco, Calif., March 12.—Week by week the list of San Francisco producing corporations grows longer and longer. The latest addition is The Bellineo Film Corporation, with offices at 619 Chronicle Building. Their aim is to make better pictures with a psychological punch. Their first picture will be from a story by Grace Sanderson Michie, well known as the author of "The Finger of Justice," and other scenarios. She will be scenario editor for the company. Louis William Chaudet will direct with Richard Scherer as assistant director. Work on the picture will be begun in the very near future in one of the southern studios, with some exterior locations in San Francisco.

Walter Hiers and his bride arrived in San Francisco on Friday for our fat friend Walter to make personal appearances for a week, at the California Theatre, with the world's premiere of the first picture in which he has been starred, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime."

Louise Dresser, well-known star of vaudeville, the stage and screen, arrived in San Francisco last Wednesday to play a prominent part in "The Fog," now being shot by the Grafs at the Pacific Studios.

Mrs. Emily Johnson, author of "The Third

Flashes from Frisco

Alarm," spent several days last week in San Francisco.

Ralph Lewis, one of the leading members of the cast of "The Fog," has been very ill for a week at the Hotel Plaza with a severe attack of the "flu." Mrs. Lewis arrived the first of last week to look after him.

Harry McKenzie, president of the Kenmat Productions, left on Saturday for Los Angeles, where their first picture, "Scarlet Shadows," is being filmed at Universal City. It is announced that the future productions of the company will be made at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo.

Leo Goodstadt, casting director for Lasky, is in town with his wife enjoying a well-earned vacation; in fact, it's the first time he has been off duty in several years.

Victor B. Fisher, of the Fisher Productions, went to Los Angeles again last week, where Lillian Ducey has almost completed the continuity for "Youth Triumphant." While in the south Mr. Fisher will complete the cast for the picture, work on which will be begun at the Pacific Studios in about ten days.

Winifred Dunn, recently appointed scenario editor for Metro, and who is the author of the screen version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," and many other successful films, spent last week in San Francisco completing the continuity for "The Fog." Five minutes after Miss Dunn's arrival at the Palace Hotel the hotel was on fire, which had never happened before, but then Miss Dunn had never been in town before.

Georgé Rigas, well known to the silver screen, was in town several days this week enroute to New York.

Richard Bret Harte, grandson of the famous writer, is making his headquarters at the Hotel Plaza while he completes his arrangements for the filming of "The Ward of the Golden Gate," first picture of the Bret Harte productions. Work on the picture will be begun next month, in and around San Francisco.

H. A. Sebastian, of the Belasco Productions, returned from New York last week where he has been assisting in the distribution of "Her Accidental Husband."

The return of Eric Von Stroheim, with his company, has once more been put off. This time they are due on Tuesday, to begin the shooting of "Greed" on Wednesday morning.

Filmland's Indoor Sport, a Famous Bed and a Broken Leg

By RAY H. LEEK

First nighting with the film favorites still continues to be the most popular of indoor sports here.

Possibly it is because we have the opportunity to obtain a double eyeful of our idols—both in their celluloid personalities and as their true selves in the orchestra chairs—that we continue to line up before the box offices, eager to find standing room at every big picture.

At any rate, the opening of Gasnier's production of "The Hero" the other evening proved a magnet for Angelenos and tourist-visitors alike. Carriages, street cars and sidewalks disgorged the throngs who were eager to see the film version of the famous stage production and those who had made it possible.

recesses of the rear of the theatre sat Gasnier. And nobody was disappointed. In the dim ton Glass who enacts the title role in the picture, with a galaxy of stars about him such as would have been the envy of any director. Mae Murray, hurried away from her own opening a few doors away, to be a member of Gaston's party. "Bob" Leonard, her director-husband, also was among those present.

Barbara La Marr forgot her newly acquired role of mother (acquired through the adoption of a baby boy) to view her modified vampire self on the screen. Doris Pawn, playing in a stage production a few blocks away, found time to attend the opening and see herself in what has been declared to be her most ambitious dramatic role.

John Sainpolis, whose work in the picture was picked by a big national magazine as the outstanding characterization of the month, also was present, along with practically every other member of the big cast. B. P. Schulberg, whose organization produced the picture, was elbowed by the good-natured throng as wholeheartedly as were the "grips" and electricians who also share in the general interest in "their" pictures.

"And then they all wept glycerine tears."

There was a time, and not so long ago, when the motion picture critic who wrote those words was justified in doing so. But glycerine, as the basis for the picture tear, has become a tradition. Unfortunately, like most traditions, it remains in fiction long after its cause has ceased to exist.

The director who would permit a player to attempt to simulate emotion by facial movements alone, without actual sympathy and feeling for the part, would not continue as a director under the new regime.

Gasnier, who has won directorial fame through the production of highly dramatic pictures, insists that every player actually feel the emotion he seeks to portray. Music, "quiet hours" and sympathetic discussion of the story often are used, alone or together, to bring about the desired effect.

In "Mothers-in-Law," Gasnier's latest production, the tears which were shed by Ruth Clifford, by Edith Yorke and Vola Vale doubtless will convince the most unbelieving that glycerine, as an agency of emotional expression, has passed into history.

When the newspapers recently chronicled the fact that Alan Holubar had broken his leg, they only told the half of it. For the director also broke a record when, hobbling about on crutches, he filmed his latest picture, "Slander the Woman," in five weeks, which has caused the query to be propounded, "What marvels might he not accomplish if he would break both of his legs?"

If the wraith of the late Parisian beauty, Gaby Deslys, ever wanders about on this

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

There is no disposition on our part to be unkind, and in fact, we strive incessantly to be magnanimous, considerate to a maximum degree and cognizant of the ever-present possibility of our opinion being entirely wrong. But, it does seem to us that it is likely "The Woman Conquers" is at least one of the reasons why Katherine MacDonald decided to abandon the screen temporarily, if not permanently. This picture is an impressive example of the utter futility of producers continuing an obviously fallacious proclivity for wallowing around in hackneyed shreds in frantic attempts to piece together one single thread of a story. Indeed, this feature is one of the best arguments in favor of fostering and developing a new school of writers trained to create new literature for the new screen. "The Woman Conquers" essays a contrast of the tedium and boredom of high society life with the rough crudities of outdoor life in the far north, where men are brutes on occasion. Every situation undertaken is so thread-bare that despite Director Tom Foreman's consummate skill in handling his whole picture, there is not a single instant when one feels as if he might start to get excited over it. Miss MacDonald is, as usual, a feast for the eyes—she is beautiful and she does deserve the title of "the American beauty," but her performance is that of the weary. She seems on the verge of stopping short and asking in despair: "Oh what is the use?" Verily, there is no use and there should be a sharp and immediate turning away from such material as this photoplay contains—a turning away process in which all producers should participate for the sake of the common film weal. And, if there is not some such diverting from the old beaten paths in a voluntary spirit, the public is liable to force a precipitate retreat which will resemble a débacle.

If Director Austin Huhn was trying for a program picture when he made "A Clouded Name," he got what he was after: a fairly good program picture. It certainly would not be proper to advertise it as a special. Moreover, it certainly is not a mark quite worthy of being "aimed at." It is not "up to snuff." However, few such pictures serve a purpose and that purpose is to supply smaller theatres with passable attractions at small cost. The cast is not particularly brilliant, Gladden James carrying off the few honors possible. Norma Shearer, the heroine, would have done better if her part had justified it—she shows much promise as a truly artistic interpreter of the silent drama. In conclusion, perhaps the most glaring of all the defects in this production are in the titles which could easily be improved by most anybody.

There is no use considering extensive globe-trotting in quest of locales in which to photograph story action as vital to the fidelity of back-ground for a motion picture. Douglas Fairbanks had more of merry, old England's scenic atmosphere on his Hollywood "lot" than could be found any place in England and on this star's "lot" was the only place he could hope to find the conveniences of equipment to make such a production as "Robin Hood" at all feasible. Yet, company after company spend fortunes sending big companies of photoplayers to Hawaii, for instance, for what? Not one single element of Hawaiian scenery which

Gradually the screen is gaining new and powerful friends among both state and national legislators and this undoubtedly constitutes a handwriting on the wall such as insures a consideration more replete with fairness than has been given in some halls of law-making heretofore. In short, it means the more intelligent men of power are recognizing the futility of the efforts of a few narrow-minded reformers to stifle the great American cinema art.

Just as might be expected, there are plans for a veritable avalanche of photoplays based on the King Tut idea, no less than six features on the subject being proposed already. The very human tendency of crowding into a single thoroughfare until there is serious traffic congestion flourishes in filmdom just as it does in a busy business district.

A quiet though impressive battle royal is on among several promising contenders for the honor of being called "the greatest child artist of the screen." Although Jackie Coogan has started the idea by showing the possibility of kiddies of tender years eclipsing most grown-ups as screen favorites, all indications point to the certainty of his having really serious competition within a very short time. One releasing concern is now spending a great deal of money advertising another child artist as "the greatest."

Practically every juvenile leading man bearing the slightest resemblance to a Latin has been striving with much might to win the coveted honor of being Mary Pickford's leading man in her new picture, but the merry rivalry has been ended by the selection of George Walsh to play the part. This decision puts the Walsh family very much in the saddle at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios, as Raoul Walsh has been chosen to direct Douglas Fairbanks in his next picture.

The older film releasing organizations are being challenged more and more seriously every day nowadays. In fact, some of the newer concerns seem to bid fair to attain even previously unheard-of proportions of importance from a big business standpoint. The very fact that the development of such additional competitors is possible at all indicates clearly the growing demand for motion pictures.

There is no prospect of the early decadence of the fad for all-star casts. On the contrary, producers continue to vie with each other in the matter of "getting the most big names in their casts." A few weeks ago it was considered amazing to have fourteen stars in one cast. Now a current release has eighteen and two others are to follow soon with considerably more than a whole score of stellar luminaries in one aggregation.

cannot be produced right here in Southern California much cheaper! There have been several demonstrations as to how futile such long-distance expeditions are in reality and now comes Paramount with another one in "The White Flower" in which Betty Compson is starred. In the first place, the correctness of the atmosphere is not indispensable to the story involved. A clever suggestion of such an atmosphere would have served just as well and would have saved thousands of dollars. The outstanding high-light of this picture is the love story unfolded with commendable smoothness. That love story could have been enacted with equal forcefulness right on the Lasky "lot" amidst "sets" carefully designed and executed as replicas of the locales desired, and, we have no doubt but what the whole filming process would have been under far better influences than those to be had in any part of Hawaii, which, as a place for sight-seeing, is disappointing to more people than any one highly-touted place in the world. The point we desire to score with as much emphasis as possible is that the tendency of producers to incur the tremendous expense of sending costly troupes of photoplayers to the four corners of the globe for "shots of alleged realism" is not justified in a vast majority of cases and "The White Flower" is one of those cases. By sticking more closely to the Southern California field, which offers everything possible in one locality, the producers will save themselves money, will save the exhibitors money and in due turn will save the patrons of picture theatres money. Such is a goal worthy of all manner of efforts to reach. Let the slogan of the times be: Make the whole picture in Southern California!

Another "miss" is "Woman of Bronze" and Clara Kimball Young as the Mrs. in the story contributes her full share of causes for this picture missing the mark by oodles of points. Whoever has seen Margaret Anglin in the stage version of this splendid play is bound to be "at sea" over this cinema adaptation. Miss Young's lowering of her own high dramatic standards is inexplicable and one just naturally wonders what really was her conception of the character she is portraying. When she has her opportunity to rise to strong emotional heights, her performance becomes almost mediocre, and, seemingly, she did not even have it in her mind to make a serious effort to win any sympathy for Vivian Hunt. It is bad enough to have to contend with one of the time-honored twists of the eternal triangle without having to watch a popular star play her part in it with about the same amount of finesse required of the leading lady in a cheap western two-reeler. Lloyd Whitlock, who plays the role of the artist-husband, was either imbued with the same idea as Miss Young was at the time of the photographing of the story or else it was a role he did not understand at all. Likewise is Kathryn McGuire unsatisfactory, largely because she essayed a role not in her line. The late Edwin Stevens is in this cast and his performance is easily the best of any in the picture. King Vidor directed and at times misdirected, but it probably was not entirely his fault.

RECORDS TO BE BROKEN IN ERECTING EXPO BUILDINGS

Architects for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition have completed all plans for the principal buildings to be erected in Exposition Park and it is probable that construction will begin by April 1. Motion picture demands have taught extraordinary speed in making dream cities become realities and for that reason the motion picture exposition will appear as if by magic when the time comes for the waving of the magic wand.

Charles H. Kyson, the architect, has adapted the early Spanish-American types of buildings including those that indicate Aztec influences to the demands of the exposition and a quaint and colorful city is promised. Mr. Kyson and his assistant, Lester G. Scherer, have made the most careful study of the history of all the Americas, which are to be represented in the exhibits, and have adapted their plans most cleverly to the needs as well as the traditions of the various countries.

Mr. Scherer is an anthropologist as well as an architect, and as president of the Alpha Epsilon Sigma, honor society of the anthropologists, studied many things now most useful in his exposition work. He has traveled through Mexico, New Mexico and Arizona, making studies for the big fair. His familiarity with the Indian traditions has enabled him to apply many charming touches in modeling decorations and suggesting color schemes.

Included in the general scheme is landscape gardening in which semi-tropical plants and flowers will be featured so that the exposition city will appear as if it had existed a century or more.

It is the intention to make the exposition "set" the most unique and most alluring that has ever been provided for any big fair. As it is to form the background for many daily "shots" of visitors and pageants the exposition city will become familiar to theatre-goers everywhere and will advertise California in a way never before attained.

Temporary buildings are to be placed in the park next week when the Esplanade and other streets will be surveyed. The exhibit bungalows are in such demand that there is no doubt the Exposition City will show the same sort of phenomenal growth that distinguishes Los Angeles. The principal buildings on the Esplanade will house collections of exhibits from Central and South America as well as from all parts of the United States.

Exhibits of costumes are being prepared and these will include many that have interesting histories as well as hundreds that have been worn in pictures now famous.

REPORTS DEARTH OF STORIES IN N. Y.

Milton E. Hoffman, Metro production manager, returned to Los Angeles from New York where he spent several weeks conferring with Metro executives regarding the six special Viola Dana pictures, the six all-star productions and the Technicolor picture that are to be made under his supervision at the Metro studios during the coming year.

According to the present plans as announced by Mr. Hoffman on his arrival, actual production on Miss Dana's first picture and on the initial all-star feature will be started about April 1st.

Encouraged by the success of the first Technicolor picture, "Toll of the Sea," which was released by Metro recently, another color production will be made in the near future. Several important improvements have been made since the filming of "Toll of the Sea," which makes Technicolor the most successful process of its kind to date.

While in the East he started negotiations for a number of stories for Viola Dana as well as for the Metro all-star production. Mr. Hoffman reported an alarming scarcity of good original stories suitable for screen productions.

Mower to Star in Serial

Jack Mower has signed a long term contract with Universal for whom he will be featured in a historical serial, the actual filming of which will start about March 20th. The serial, consisting of fifteen episodes, will be entitled "Daniel Boone," and will be directed by J. Marchant and Frank Messinger. Eileen Sedgwick will be co-featured.

STAR HAS EVERYONE "ON THE PICTURE" AT DINNER

Helen Ferguson, one of the most prominently active film stars in Hollywood, can always be depended upon for a surprise. She's as full of them, say her friends, as a bakery plum pudding isn't full of plums.

Saturday afternoon, out at Universal City, final scenes were filmed for "The Right of the Strongest."

At the conclusion of work, Miss Ferguson, star of the picture, told all of the cast, on the quiet, to meet her that night at Ye Bull Pen Inn, down in Los Angeles.

Some of the boys—she invited everyone, from the principals down the line to the junior assistant property boy—didn't know where the place was; but a motion picture employe, of any capacity, generally can be depended upon to find anything, if given time.

Promptly at 8 o'clock, Miss Ferguson walked into Ye Banquet Stall, where her guests had assembled. With her was Edgar Lewis, director of the picture, in whose honor she had arranged the affair.

When it came time for the speeches, some thought the prop boys and other lesser lights who had worked on the sets would be stumped. But not so.

"They made the best speeches of the whole lot," Miss Ferguson declared.

OMAHA EXHIBITOR IS HONOR GUEST AT PARTY

In honor of Walter Brandes, who is the manager of the Rialto Theatre of Omaha, Neb., a party was given at the home of Harry Dunkinson, who is a well-known figure in the motion picture world.

Alberta Vaughn, popular leading lady with Clyde Cook, presented her conception of various dances, assisted in a few numbers by William Curran.

The following were guests as per invitation, but later everyone took a turn on the entertainment committee:

Frederick Truesdale and wife, "Smoke" Turner, Mrs. Fanny Lacalzy, Marion Nixon, Adamae Vaughn, Mr. and Mrs. Preston, Stanley Blystone, Marie Brandes, Marguerite Lacalzy, Marion Skinner and Al Martin.

Trib's Critic is Here

Harriett Underhill, motion picture critic for the New York Tribune, has arrived in Hollywood, where she intends to devote her time to composing a series of stories relative to the social lives of film celebrities.

MILLION-DOLLAR THEATRE FOR HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood is to have a million dollar theatre!

This announcement comes from Messrs. Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser, Joseph M. Schenck, Adolph Ramish, Michael Gore, and others of the West Coast Theatres, Incorporated, organization.

Plans are now being drawn up and a site will be definitely decided upon immediately, according to Sid Grauman.

Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast organization, expressed himself as follows:

"Hollywood has enjoyed a truly remarkable growth. It is a beehive of prosperity and business is booming. The success of Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in this cinema center has more than proven the desire of Hollywood citizens and film folk to have nothing but the best. We feel that Hollywood has now reached the state where it can support a million dollar theatre."

"The new theatre," says Grauman, "will certainly be the show place of the country. It will represent the finest in cinema temples. Work will start at once and I feel safe in saying we will be ready to open the doors within six months."

The new theatre will seat between 1500 and 2000 people. It will face Hollywood Boulevard and will be in the heart of the film colony.

The West Coast Theatres Incorporated have a joint interest in the present Grauman Theatre in Hollywood. They also operate the Hollywood, Apollo, Wilshire, Paramount, Granada and several other Hollywood theatres. Their chain of houses exceeds 100—all in the State of California. It is regarded as one of the biggest theatre chains in the country.

One of the features of the house, it is understood, will be a full-fledged orange grove in a patio of the new temple. Oranges will be grown and cared for by fruit growers of Southern California and many other innovations will be a part of the new million dollar Hollywood theatre, according to the executives.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have joined forces with Joseph Schenck, Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser and officials of the West Coast theatres, in their plans to erect in Hollywood, a $1,000,000 theatre which will be dedicated to the spoken drama

RADIO SUCCEEDS IN TESTS AS STUDIO AID

A radio device whereby a motion picture director may personally page his actors or the members of his staff over an entire studio was tested before Goldwyn officials this week.

Known as the "public address system," it carries the voice over any area desired up to a radius of three-quarters of a mile.

Thus its use could be confined to the one set on which the company is working, or the director's voice may be broadcasted widely over the studio grounds.

Should the radio device prove practical Goldwyn officials will install it as part of the regular equipment at the Culver City studio.

The tests were supervised by A. L. Santee of the Western Electric company.

The instrument would save much time and money if successful. It would supplant the call-boy system of sending messages from stages and sets often half a mile from the dressing room tiers.

The invention would also prove of great value in directing mob scenes in which hundreds of persons appear, it is believed. Heretofore directors have had to depend on a corps of assistants to direct large mobs from sidelines or within the mob. This direction can be handled by the director without raising his voice by means of the public address radio.

The instrument amplified the voice 9,000,000,000 times.

It was installed on a large set Marshall Neilan is using for "The Eternal Three," and Neilan directed a scene with its aid.

HOLLYWOOD MEASURES UP TO FRENCH DREAMS

"I certainly was pleasantly surprised when I arrived in Hollywood! I never thought it was such a big, spread-out place, but it was, nevertheless, the Hollywood of my dreams. And the climate, warm and balmy sea breezes, just like those that sweep over Nice and the Riviera."

This is the impression advanced by Alphonse Martell, recently arrived on the scene of our film activities, from the gay whirl of Paris and Monte Carlo. He is making no extravagant claims for immediate success here, for he knows the motion picture game, having been with Gaumont, Pathe, and other big European film organizations. However, his make-up kit is ready for action.

Adamae Vaughn, who is playing the part of Mary Chrackstone in support of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," was selected personally by Mr. Ray because of her work in his picture, "Two Minutes to Go."

Former Montreal Society Belle Seems Destined to Become Favorite Screen Belle

There was as much of a stir in Montreal social circles three years ago as British social circles ever allow themselves to be stirred.

Norma Shearer, accounted the season's loveliest debutante, announced her intention of setting out for Los Angeles to become a motion picture actress. She persuaded her father that he could conduct a gigantic lumber business alone for a while and started out with her charming mother for fame and fortune.

She found it this week, and the Louis B. Mayer studio was almost as stirred up about it as Montreal will be when the gossiping wires tonight speed the word that Norma Shearer is destined to become a star.

At the moment it is not quite definite what her first role as a leading woman will be for Mr. Mayer. She may find herself with a colorful characterization of the northland in Reginald Barker's big production of "The Law Bringers." She may even come under the admirable direction of Fred Niblo in "Captain Applejack." Perhaps it will be her fortune to find a part with John M. Stahl in the new picture which he is now preparing.

Since her arrival in Los Angeles Miss Shearer has done excellent work for a number of independent companies, particularly in "The Stealers."

She came to the attention of Irving G. Thalberg, vice-president of the Louis B. Mayer studios, when she was selected for a leading role with Reginald Denny in "The Leather Pushers" series.

"To be a part of a big organization," she says, "is realization of my ambition to do big roles in big pictures."

Vera With Montana

Vera Steadman returns to the screen in "One Wild Day," the new Hunt Stromberg-Metro comedy starring "Bull" Montana. Miss Steadman, who is one of the original Mack Sennett bathing beauties, has been featured in Christie Comedies and appeared opposite Charles Ray in "Scrap Iron."

Lloyd Hughes the Man

Agnes Christine Johnston, who wrote the scenario of "Terwilliger," from the magazine story, had Lloyd Hughes in mind when she wrote the script, and when asked by the producer whom she considered the best young man to portray the character, promptly named Hughes, whereupon he was more promptly engaged by Arthur H. Jacobs after Director Borzage had heartily approved the scenarist's choice. The picture is to be released through Associated First National, as the first of a series of Borzage films.

Forrest Does Dual Role

Allan Forrest, popular leading man, is playing his first dual role in "The Man Between," the new Finis Fox production, which is now being filmed at the Fine Arts studios under the direction of Fox himself. One of the characters being portrayed by the actor is that of a young waster, a devil-may-care son of a French-Canadian family of wealth and position, while the other is of a grim, silent man of mystery, cruelly victimized by Fate.

Back From Frisco Engagement

Reggie Morley, who created the character of Dude Busbee in the Plum Center Comedies, supporting Dan Mason, has returned to Hollywood from San Francisco. Robert Eddy, the director, and Mr. Mason are at present in New York making arrangements for a new series of Plum Center comedies to be made here.

Starts Film on Pat's Day

St. Patrick's day has been selected by Rex Ingram for the launching of the filming of "Scaramouche," his first 1923 production which will take six months' time in the making. Arrangements had been made to "shoot" the initial scene on March 15th, but Mr. Ingram elected to wait two days in order that the picture might be started under the most propitious circumstances. Possibly the fact that he is a native of Dublin, Ireland, had something to do with it.

James Harrison is Back

James Harrison, prominent and popular Los Angeles film leading man, is back in town after an absence of nearly two years during which he has been playing in eastern-made pictures. Harrison accompanied Charles H. Christie to Los Angeles this week. He was with the Christie company for three years and played in about fifty of their pictures before going East to appear in feature productions.

Saunders Directs New Unit

A new production company under the name of The H-F Productions have permanently located at the Cosmosart studios, and is making extensive preparations for production to start about April 20. It will make a series of six two-reel comedies under the direction of R. D. Saunders, formerly casting director at the Hollywood studios. Hattie Carson is writing the continuities for these comedies which will feature Ted Henderson, well-known comedy actor.

EFFORTS UNITED TO BRING U. S. SOLONS HERE

Plans for bringing a large delegation of Congressmen to Los Angeles for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition in July are meeting with general approbation throughout Southern California, according to reports at Exposition headquarters. Nearly every county in Southern California is seeking Federal aid for some important project and the coming Revue and Exposition is looked upon as the magnet that will draw influential government officials to Southern California so they may learn at first hand what assistance is needed in building up the vast domain of the West.

Leading business men of Los Angeles started the movement to bring 100 or more members of Congress to the Revue and Exposition as guests of Southern California, so these legislators could be shown the trade possibilities at Los Angeles harbor. Orange County immediately joined forces with Los Angeles in the undertaking, as Orange County for several years has been seeking government assistance in the development of Newport harbor as a feeder to the port at Los Angeles.

Civic leaders at San Diego showed the same enthusiasm. San Diego, with its important naval station, is anxious to show a representative Congressional delegation the great possibilities of that port. Imperial Valley, although an inland district, is reclaiming thousands of acres of arid lands and is vitally interested in the irrigation possibilities of the vast Boulder Dam project.

Tucson, Ariz., has even started a campaign to have the official delegation from Washington, coming to Los Angeles for the Premiere of the Revue and Exposition, travel through that thriving section. The whole Southwest has evinced the greatest enthusiasm over the plan to bring here the largest possible official delegation for the event next summer. President Harding himself has accepted the invitation of Southern California to attend the Revue and Exposition Premiere on the night of July 2. The Exposition management is planning a special transcontinental train, to run from Washington to Los Angeles and return to bring the official government party West for the motion picture industry's celebration of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial.

Jules Cronjager, well known cinematographer, who was responsible for the fine camera work in "The Common Law," "One Week of Love," and other productions, will be chief cameraman for the filming of "Tutankhamen."

FILMING OF LIFE OF LINCOLN STARTED

The Rockett-Lincoln Film Company announces the beginning of production on their picture, "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," after eighteen months of research and preparation. Philip E. Rosen, recently of Famous Players-Lasky, is directing. Al Kelly is assisting and Robert Kurre is chief cameraman.

The Rockett company has sprung a great surprise in the disclosure that George A. Billings, an actor entirely outside the motion picture industry, has been cast for the role of Abraham Lincoln. Both Mr. Rosen and Mr. Billings have been in training for their respective jobs several months. Mr. Billings is pronounced by Al and Ray Rockett to be the greatest Lincoln of stage or screen. The picture is to be, not an educational, but a photo-drama twelve reels in length and will be given lavish production.

A copy of the finished work will be presented to the U. S. Government for deposit in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D. C., to be preserved till the 300th anniversary of the birth of Lincoln, or for a period of 186 years.

The world premiere of the picture will be given in Washington, D. C. next fall before the President, Congress and official America in general.

SEEKS SECOND PLOT AND TITLE FOR FIRST ONE

With camera work completed on "Out of the Night," the first Palmer Photoplay Corporation film production, which was made at the Thomas H. Ince Studios, the heads of the producing-educational institution are turning their attention toward the problem of choosing a story for their next photoplay. Of course, only "originals" written by writers trained in the corporation's educational department will be used. "Out of the Night" is the working title only of the first Palmer-play, and a "still hunt" for a good title is also under way.

The position of the Palmer Corporation as a producing as well as educational organization is unique in film history. The ideal toward which the organization has been working since its inception four years ago is that of creating a literature of the screen, distinct from all other branches of creative writing, and open to the trained outsider. A vast storehouse of genius has been tapped, and according to the heads of the company's Educational Department, the product of that genius is steadily rising in quality and quantity.

AN APOLOGY ARRIVES MUCH BELATED AND THE PRICE ISN'T RIGHT

Just a little less than ten years ago Albert Hart, already an accomplished thespian, was preparing for the premiere of a three act "melodrammer" in a small town not far from Chicago.

Nervous? Yes, a trifle, but not so perturbed that he felt the need of opening a quart bottle of champagne which an admirer had sent to him at the theater.

There it reposed on his dressing table, all wrapped 'round with tinfoil, and with the cork tightly secured with a strong little wire.

The curtain call came. Hart left the dressing room, took his stand in the wings, and waited for his "cue."

Another member of the cast though, was more afraid of the opening ordeal than Hart, and felt the need of stimulants, so he took Hart's champagne.

After the show, none would admit taking the bottle, and Hart had to celebrate the success of the show with a glass of beer.

This week, Hart, who is now finishing his role in "The Phantom Fortune," at Universal, received a letter from William Gibbs, and the following explanation:

VIRGINIA IS LOATHE TO GET OFF HOLLYWOOD MAP

Stardom!

Ever since Virginia Brown Faire won the beauty contest in Brooklyn several years ago that started her on her screen career, she's dreamed of that word, night and day.

She's worked hard, too, to attain a star's estate; studying, learning; "unlearning" that which she found to be wrong, and learning anew.

But now that she has a chance to star in her own right, she doesn't know whether to accept or not.

This week Miss Faire received a cablegram from an American producer making his headquarters in Paris. It read:

"Want you star Egyptian film. Can't make without you. Cable acceptance."

Miss Faire is a canny young

Spurns Vaudeville For Films

Doris Baker, who recently completed a part in Charles Ray's production of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," has turned down an offer from one of the leading vaudeville circuits for a 42-week engagement throughout the country, giving as her reason her desire to stay in Hollywood, and engage in motion picture work. She played over eastern vaudeville circuits for several years, and this particular type of work no longer appeals to her. Several years ago she was one of the most famous kiddies of the screen, and today she makes her reappearance as one of filmdom's promising ingenues.

Albert Hart

"Remember that quart of champagne in Rockford? Well, I took it, and I've thought about it lots of times since."

He enclosed a $5 bill, in payment. He evidently hasn't tried to buy a quart of champagne at bootleggers' prices recently, though, Hart thinks.

lady, though, despite her youth. She has learned that contracts should be written in black and white, and in most cases submitted to an attorney, before they are signed.

Also, she has been the object of tempting baits from independent producers before this. So she sat down, wrote the producer a cablegram, and requested him to give her further details of his proposition.

Even then, however, she may not accept, if they're tempting to a degree. Several productions are now being prepared in which she can choose one of several principal roles; and she isn't sure, for another thing, that she'd relish learning all over again the new values of French money. She knew them once, but the war has changed everything.

Finishes First Starring Film

"Green As Grass," the rural comedy which introduces Jimmie Adams as a Christie comedy star, has been completed under the direction of Scott Sidney, and will be released in April through Educational Film Exchange. In the cast with Adams are Charlotte Merriam, William Irving, Earl Rodney and William Chapman. The story introduces a wonderful horse, declared to be a "find" by the director. The plot, which was written by Walter Graham centers at a County fair, where the horse "Chillblains" wins the Pike County derby and romps home with the price of a good farm mortgage.

NEILAN COMEDY IS "SHOOTING" MEXICO

The castle of President Obregon at Chapultepec, Mexico, and possibly the President himself may play an important part in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three."

Armed with a letter of introduction from the Nogales Chamber of Commerce to President Obregon, Mr. Neilan's company of players and technical men left the Goldwyn studio last Tuesday to film scenes for this production in Mexico. In the diplomatic negotiations necessary, Neilan acted as his own representative and arranged all international matters—even to having his entire company vaccinated against smallpox.

Mexico City has been selected because of the beauty of the Spanish architecture, and because, cinematographically, it "has not been shot to death," as expressed by Neilan.

Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, and William Orlamond, principals of the cast, Frank Urson, director, Tom Held, assistant director, and Clyde DeVinna, cameraman, are among the members of the company to make the trip. Mrs. Bosworth will be the honorary guest of the party. They will return within ten days.

The location scenes include those at a beautiful hacienda where Bosworth, as the famous surgeon, seeks to regain his health as the guest of his old friend, William Orlamond. He meets Claire Windsor, a wealthy ranch owner, and she becomes his bride. These scenes will practically round out "The Eternal Three," and immediately upon completion of the picture, Miss Windsor will leave for New York—her first visit to the metropolis.

H. AND B. FINISHES ITS FIRST FEATURE

The H. and B. Film Co., finished its first production of a series of eight outdoor dramas at the Bronx Studio this week. The story, an original by Eugene A. Vogt, and finally titled "Scarred Hands," is now being edited and a preview will be given in a local theater in the near future.

Cliff Smith directed and played the lead. W. C. (Bill) Thompson co-directed. Eileen Sedgwick had the principal feminine role. Others in the cast were: Lew Moshan, Myles McCarthy, Ben Corbett, Eugene McKay and Ada Pope. Kenneth J. Bishop acted as production manager. F. F. Hedden is president of the company.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-em-up

One of the best signs of the times is, the exhibitors sign for more pictures so many times.

The picture business is largely a business of keeping busy progressing in spite of the carping of a lot of straight-laced reformers.

Anent that Coue film—we don't want to "knock," but it must be admitted as an incontrovertible fact that it is not getting better and better.

Here's hoping the present wave of prosperity may become so tremendous as to drench the whole nation with gold—and happiness.

The easiest thing in the world is to encounter difficulty. So let's try something more difficult, which is the matter of either dodging difficulty or facilitating the tasks it incurs.

There are several dashing, young leading men within film-dom who need to be reminded as to what happened to Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle. Such a word to even the unwise should be sufficient.

When Camera! contemplates the present situation in the picture production field, it is constrained to announce that the motion picture industry is well out of its infancy and is more like a healthy young giant.

Why go to Palestine to make a motion picture when it can be made to more closely resemble that locale right in Southern California? Anyway, why not refrain from invading the field which belongs to the scenics?

If President Harding does come to Los Angeles to formally open the great Motion Picture Exposition next July and if he makes a tour of inspection of the various studios, he will no doubt wonder why one of the largest concerns has the shabbiest, most unsightly groups of barn-like buildings. It will be natural for the Chief Executive to wonder about this since everybody else does.

Independent production is living up to the meaning of the term by not being dependent on the whims of any one powerful group for its prosperity and it behooves everyone to encourage the independents since they are performing yeoman service in check-mating monopolistic tendencies. All those having the best interests of this great industry at heart must stand unyielding in the spirit of the imperative command that "no trust shall pass."

THAT UNDER-DOG

If the arm of supernumeraries ever get a Napoleon to lead them, they're going to capture something if it is only the right to have screen credit since all other credit is denied most of them. They are more important than some people seem to think if you take into consideration that without "supers" it would be difficult to make super-productions. Moreover, the ranks of the "extras" are always providing the recruits for the select company of stars and from those lowly ranks have come many of our present-day stars including such commanding figures as Charles Ray, Gloria Swanson, Agnes Ayres, Helen Ferguson and numerous others. A little more consideration for the "extra" at every possible opportunity would not be amiss or a bad idea. The spear-carrier who is the plebeian of today may be the king tomorrow and it is gloriously typical of the American spirit that he should have his every chance.

HOLLYWOOD, THE GREAT

The growth and development of Hollywood as a metropolis is one of the outstanding marvels of this decade and already it is so delightfully cosmopolitan as to deserve classification as being unique. Five years hence Hollywood will be a city of two or three hundred thousand people, very many of whom will be the world's greatest geniuses. Forsooth, few communities have ever boasted such a large number and such a wide variety of masters of the fine arts and intricate sciences as dwell in this film capitol even now. Verily, Hollywood is worthy of the most laudatory comment and its future seems a foregone conclusion by way of justifying all possible civic pride on the part of her populace. It is an ideal home for the incomparable cinema art.

Are we really civilized so long as brothers under the skin persist in kicking each other viciously on the shin? And, is there anything even smacking of civilization in the continued proclivity of parents for smacking the daylights out of their own off-spring. Wonder if compulsory education in the subjects of harmony and unity would act as a panacea? By all means, let something be put into effect to force the issue against all this monotonous perpetuating of acrimonious issues.

The anti-censorship campaign is gaining momentum surprisingly and it may yet come to pass that the blue-law cranks will be begging "anti" for mercy like a Dutch uncle.

Theatres galore are in the wood for Hollywood and that's a concrete fact.

'Chasing a dollar is no more difficult than following a cent.

HOT SHOOTIN'

Weekly Impressions

By Harry Davis Powers

One of these problem play men is thinking of filming a story called "Is Your Wife Sensible?" in seven parts. It is suggested by a mere "fan" that he'd be glad to have his wife sensible in one part.

There'd be more skeletons in the closet, only some of us live in tents.

Superstition is the chief attribute of ignorance. It becomes the meal-ticket of mediums, fortune-tellers, and healers. It causes heart-breaks and home-breaks. It leads to jail-breaks. Heaven help those who spread its creed, and place clubs in the hands of the intelligent, backing them with the will power to wield these sticks of righteous chastisement.

The motion picture industry is far too big and too important to be even slightly neglected by any newspaper in all Southern California. Every newspaper in Los Angeles and Hollywood, especially, could well afford devoting considerable more space to the news of film-land and its people than is given it now. In fact, all papers could double their allotments of space to this field and still fall short of meeting the demands of the growing public interest.

At last, however, from my chair I ground my teeth—I felt that mean—

LYTELL DEFENDS AS RUDDY SLAPS

"The Sheik" calmly rejected a $10,000 offer to appear in a Los Angeles hotel ballroom for a week and there display his tango talents, according to report.

Valentino gave for his reason that an audience composed of motion picture players would be entirely too critical, and that he would not appear in public dance exhibitions in Hollywood or Los Angeles for any amount of money.

Bert Lytell, popular stage and screen star, this week put a bomb under the Valentino statements, claiming that, on the other hand, motion picture stars and players were the most enthusiastic audience he has ever had the pleasure of appearing before.

"In my brief vaudeville engagement in Los Angeles recently," says Lytell, "I have seen hundreds of picture players in the seats before me at each performance. If applause, smiling faces, letters of appreciation and congratulations mean anything—and I feel they do—then I have only words of gratitude for the enthusiasm of these audiences of motion picture folk.

"I do not think Rodolph judges the picture people correctly. I do not believe they are critical toward one another. And I feel that were Valentine to make a dance appearance in Los Angeles he would be a tremendous success, and the greater portion of his audience would, no doubt, consist of his brother workers of the silent drama."

Lytell resumed his picture work this week, enacting the role of "the meanest man in the world" for Principal Pictures Corporation.

FLYNN GIVES SISTER WORLD TOUR AS GIFT

To celebrate the contract he signed to direct pictures for Goldwyn and to celebrate his sister's birthday at the same time, Emmett J. Flynn has sent his sister, Florence Flynn, on a rip around the world.

Miss Flynn is a teacher in the Los Angeles public schools. She left the classroom this week for a stateroom on the President Harrison, and sailed from San Pedro for South America. There she will spend the first three months of her vacation, and after a thorough rest, will proceed to encircle the globe.

Emmett Flynn directed "The Connecticut Yankee" and "Monte Cristo" the past season. He will head his own producing unit at Goldwyn's.

VICTOR POTEL VENTURES TO TELL A NEW FISH STORY

If you happen to see a tall, thin, solemn-looking man walking down Broadway or Hollywood boulevard, with a gold-fish bowl filled with water hanging from one of his hands, don't think he's doing it on a bet, or is being initiate into some sort of U. R. A. D. P. secret society, because he's doing nothing of the kind.

The reason is, the elongated comedian, who is Victor Potel, himself, walked on the "lot" at the Robertson-Cole studio and proceeded to tell all and sundry a fish story; so rank, in fact, was the story that the fish must have been dead.

However, to proceed—

Victor awoke from one of Abou Ben's well known deep dreams of peace the next morning, yawned lazily, stretched and slowly climbed out of bed. He craved water; cold, wet water, and went to the kitchen to get it. Half asleep, he raised the glass to his lips, took a large mouthful, and suddenly spat it out.

Wide awake now, he glanced down into the sink, to see a small minnow, perhaps an inch long, wriggling about.

Well, Vic told the story. His associates gave him the order of the raspberry—blah, blah, blah.

And now Vic is carrying the fish around in a gold-fish globe, to prove to his friends and other skeptical persons that the fish story wasn't one of his highly paid press agent's dreams.

EDITOR SAYS MOTHERLY ART SAVES "THE HERO"

It is very, very seldom that an editor compliments an actor or actress on their work in pictures, or on the stage.

Most critics, it seems, have a penchant for slamming all and sundry productions which pass before their cynical eyes; cynics, maybe, would be a better word than critics in designating them.

However, there's one editor in the world who makes it a practice to compliment artists for their work; not in the publication which he represents, because it doesn't carry a dramatic criticism department, but by means of personal letters to the parties themselves.

This unusual writer is Burt M. McConnell, member of the editorial staff of the Literary Digest.

Martha Mattox is the latest known object of his personal commendation, having lately received a letter from Mr. McConnell in which he wrote:

"I don't have much time for pictures, but last evening I dropped into a Procter theater here (New York) and saw 'The Hero.' I was well rewarded by the performance you gave as the mother. You have every other 'mother' in the movies beaten forty ways. The picture was too long, in my opinion, but your natural motherliness throughout, in my estimation, saved it as a picture."

AND "MEETINGLESS" CLUB IS QUITE MEET

Hail the United Studio Press Club!

It came into being yesterday at the United Studios. Clarke Irvine is its organizer. The object is good fellowship.

There are ten husky ink spreaders as members, with no officers, dues or meetings except the round table held every noon in Mother Brown's studio cafe.

Every publicity writer on the lot is a member, and the personnel now includes Jack Neville, Pete Smith, the Harrys Wilson and Brand, Ray Coffin, Scoop Conlon, Mort Blumenstock, Fred Stanley and Irvine.

WHILE IT'S FAIR WEATHER, BUY A HOME

Bring on your skeptics, your knockers, who say that motion picture actors aren't model citizens!

Let Joe Roberts show them up.

Joe has realized for a long, long time, that the time to save money, and prepare for that rainy day in the future, is the immediate present.

He knows the logic of it, from long observation of actors, prize-fighters and other public idols who have made big money in their prime, squandered it, and died in poverty when their popularity waned.

So Joe is preparing now for that autumnal period in his life when he can't any longer waddle his 300 pounds before a movie camera for a fat weekly check.

He is now building a beautiful home on Rossmore boulevard, in the famous Wilshire district of Los Angeles, which will cost more than $25,000. More than $10,000 will be spent for furnishing the new home, when it is complete.

And it will all be paid for, take Joe's word for it.

"No mortgages, or foreclosures for me," he said. "All cash, that's my motto."

Joe has played many heavy parts, in which he has foreclosed many mortgages, perhaps, on unfortunate money borrowers. Also, he has registered the sorrow of the borrower, in his comedian roles, so the fear of mortgages might be a real part of the big actor.

He has just finished the leading "heavy" role in Buster Keaton's new feature comedy, "Three Ages."

SCREEN STAR'S FIRST SONG IS SCORING HIT

Marguerite de la Motte, who portrays the leading feminine role in "Wandering Daughters," the initial James Young production for First National, is coming to the front as a musical composer.

"Mediterranean Moon" is her first contribution to the music publishers, and it is likely to prove a hit as the favorite motion picture orchestra leader, Max Fisher, has made this alluring fox-trot a feature number. Many of the Los Angeles cafe orchestras are featuring Miss de la Motte's composition every night.

If the star had not met Douglas Fairbanks accidentally a few years ago, she would no doubt have continued her successful stage career as a dancer. It took a leading role to lure her from the art of ballet and toe dancing in which she had won the praise of the great Palova.

Tom Regan is directing a publicity picture for Universal on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Continuity work on the next Constance Talmadge picture, "Dulcy," is nearing completion at the United studios.

The wardrobe department of Joseph M. Schenck Productions has begun work on thousand soft costumes to be used in Norma Talmadge's next First National picture, "Ashes of Vengeance."

Elsa Lorimer has returned from New York where she went some months ago to fill a stage engagement. Immediately upon her return she was cast for the mother role in "Terwilliger" the Borage company at United.

An English motion picture company recently photographed the famous St. Paul's Cathedral in London, using powerful arc lights in order to record the exquisite beauty of St. Christopher Wren's masterpiece of architecture.

J. Stewart Woodhouse, scenarist, who has several original screen stories to his credit, has moved his residence to San Fernando, where a new Spanish bungalow, located in a five-acre orange grove, furnishes him quiet for the spinning stories.

Princess Thais Kalkonsky, beautiful and accomplished Russian refugee, whose father, the Cossack general, George Kiseloff, was slain by Bolsheviks, is the ballet dancer in James Young's First National attraction, "Wandering Daughters."

Edward J. Montagen has completed the titling of "The Common Law," an all star Selznick production, with Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle and Elliot Dexter in the line-up. Montagne also adapted the novel for the screen. "The Common Law" will soon be seen at the California Theatre.

Having finished for Goldwyn the scenario for "Six Days," Ouida Bergere left last week for New York, whence she will leave shortly for Europe, Miss Bergere is, in private life, the wife of the noted director, George Fitzmaurice, and has prepared the continuity of most of the features directed by him.

Universal's next series of two-reel comedies to be produced will be an adaptation from Gerald Beaumont's "Rider Up," and which will be released on the screen under the title of "The Information Kid." Nat Ross, who guided Edward (Hoot) Gibson in several starring vehicles, will direct the series.

John Cossar has finally been persuaded to part with his mustache in order to portray an important part in the Universal production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Victor Seastrom, the noted film director who deserted Sweden for California, acted on the stage nine months of the year in his native land, and directed pictures the remaining three.

Grant Carpenter of Warner Brothers scenario staff, reports the finish of the first draft of "The Gold-Diggers," the David Belasco play which Warner Brothers will film. Actual production will be started about April 1st.

Creighton Hale, juvenile lead of more than a hundred successful picture plays, has been cast as "Little Billee," in Richard Walton Tully's screen production of "Tilby," which is to be distributed through First National channels.

Harry S. Northrup has completed his part in Charles Chaplin's production "Public Opinion," and is now playing the leading heavy role in "The Living Dead" at the Ince studios under the direction of John Griffith Wray.

Helen Jerome Eddy will start a tour of legitimate playhouses next week with her own company, the first performance to be in conjunction with the premiere showing of her starring photograph, "When Love Comes," at the Pantages Theatre.

When Alberta Vaughn finishes her present engagement as leading lady to Clyde Cook in his latest comedy, she will conclude the fulfillment of a six-month contract with William Fox, and will henceforth devote herself to full-length dramatic productions.

The "Hunchback" cast seems to have a corner on character artists. The latest acquisition is Fanny Warren, character and make-up artist of the English stage who has recently turned her talents toward the screen. She has lately gained prominence through her portrayal of the gypsy fortune-teller in "The Law of the Lawless."

Harry Keaton, who is at the Century studio, shooting comedies, has organized a very good unit, including Jean Hope, who plays feminine lead, Bob McKenzie and Robert Anthon. Keaton is directing as well as starring, and is assisted by Walter Sweeny. The photography is under the supervision of Elmer Edwardson.

Little Geraldine Waggles recently finished doubling for Marguerite de La Motte as a little girl in "Wandering Daughters," and followed this up with an engagement supporting Vivian Rich in an adventure series.

Howard P. Brotherton, who was with Selznick for the past three years as head cutter, has just been engaged by Arthur H. Jacobs to edit the initial Frank Borzage production which is an adaptation of the magazine story "Terwilliger," by Tristram Tupper.

Harry H. McKenzie, president of the Kenmat Productions, now producing "Scarlet Shadows" at Universal City under the direction of Frederick Reel, Jr., is spending ten days in Los Angeles, witnessing the filming of the final scenes.

Philo McCollough has joined the ranks of the two-job men by dividing his time between the Ince Studios, where he is playing in "Out of the Night," and at the Fine Arts Studios where he is in Finis Fox's picture, "The Man Between."

If current rumors have any foundation, Gloria Swanson is about to adopt a six-weeks old baby. The child is now at Miss Swanson's Beverly Hills home, and it is understood preliminary steps have been taken for the filing of adoption papers.

Sam de Grasse, one of the best known character actors of the screen, has been engaged by Jesse D. Hampton to portray the dastardly Judge Stillman, in Rex Beach's novel, "The Spoilers," now being directed at the Goldwyn studios by Lambert Hillyer.

Jackie Coogan will discard his suit of rags worn in his previous film successes and will don the dignified wearing apparel that would befit His Royal Highness, the Crown Prince Ferdinand William Otto, for that is the role he will portray in his next starring vehicle, "Long Live the King," Mary Roberts Rinehart's famous novel.

Kathleen Key has been given a long-term contract by Goldwyn, and is now a member of that organization's stock company. Miss Key made her advent into motion pictures three years ago at the Ince Studios and has since played many prominent roles, notably in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam."

Dinky Dean, who plays an important part with Charles Chaplin in "The Pilgrim," a First National attraction, is autographing his first fan photographs in response to letters from people who saw his initial screen efforts during previews of the Chaplin comedy.

Jack Giddings, famous the country over as one of the most daring of all daredevils, having done most everything from leaps from one flying aeroplane to another to bearding the lion's den, announces he has joined the reform elements to the extent of settling down to pursuing his real profession—that of a motion picture actor. He will accept no more parts requiring the precarious performance of precarious stunts if he can avoid it.

Eddie Gribbon is pushing the busiest of movie actors for high honors in the matter of keeping busy. The minute he finished in "Hoot" Gibson's latest picture, "The Poor Worm," he went right into King Baggott's "Crossed Wires," starring Gladys Walton. For several weeks recently he worked in two and three pictures at the same time and one day this week he had five calls from studios wanting to cast him in new pictures.

With the signing of Lloyd Hughes to play one of the all-star parts in his first picture, Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of the new Frank Borzage Productions for Associated First National, has practically completed his cast and is ready for commencing actual camera work. Other members of the Jacobs constellation are Johnnie Walker, Pauline Garon, George Nichols, Bert Woodruff and Frankie Lee. Work is progressing at the United Studios on the large sets which are being erected for this production.

He Wins in Doubles

J. Stewart Woodhouse is author of the original story, "Playing Double," which serves as Dick Hatton's latest starring vehicle, soon to be released in this territory. Mr. Woodhouse seems to have success with "doubles" being author of Wallace Reid's successful screen vehicle, "Double Speed."

No Beans Here

Before moving to Hollywood to take up his work in the cinema world, Francis McDonald was a resident of the city of Boston. When asked recently by a citizen of Boston how he liked Hollywood, he said that it is the bunk. When asked what he meant by that, he said, "You can't get any good baked beans in the whole town of Hollywood."

BLAYDON & GRAY FORM GRAYDON UNIT

Articles of incorporation for the Graydon Picture Corporation were filed in Sacramento March 12th.

The officials of the newly organized concern are L. H. Gray, veteran steamship and railroad official; N. W. Smallwood, prominent Seattle business man, Richard A. Blaydon, well-known theatrical man, and Creighton Hale, prominent star of the stage and screen.

According to a statement issued by Mr. Blaydon, secretary and production manager, his organization intends to produce only the highest quality of dramatic and comedy pictures, the continuity for the first of which is now being prepared.

Mr. Gray, president of the new company, has arranged for sufficient financial backing to assure his organization the best available facilities, he announces.

Although Mr. Hale will not take an active part in the corporation for some time, he is named as second vice-president of the concern and will act in an advisory capacity. Meanwhile he will enact an important role in Richard Walton Tully's "Triby."

Officials of the company are making their headquarters in the Fuller Building, Hollywood.

W. P. S. EARLE SELECTS HIS EXECUTIVE STAFF

A production staff has been organized for the newly formed William P. S. Earle Pictures Corporation, and the company will next Wednesday start the filming of its first big production, a screen version of the novel, "Tutankhamen," by Blanche Taylor Earle. The Hollywood studios have been selected as production headquarters and Director Earle and staff are already supervising the erection of several big sets.

The staff engaged for the company consists of the following department heads: Paul Dodge, designer of sets; Dick L'Esrange, production manager; Capt. Dudley S. Corlette, technical advisor; Paul Tangi, business manager; Xavier Mochado, scenic artist; Tamar Lane, publicity director.

Mr. Earle is said to be using an entirely different process of picture-making than the one now in use among producers and he promises some radical departures in the way of settings and backgrounds.

"When Civilization Failed," the first of the three big specials made by the Leah Baird Productions for Associated Exhibitors release, will be released March 1st, according to an announcement just issued by Arthur S. Kane.

WITH THE CAMERAMEN

Al Gilks is filming "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson and directed by Sam Wood.

Frank B. Good, is photographing "Wolf Fangs" for Warner Brothers.

Reggie Lyons is finishing the camera work on the current Joe Rock production.

Walter Griffin has returned from Truckee, Calif., where he filmed location scenes for "The Man Who Cheated," directed by Clarence Bricker.

Truckee evidently is the present location rendezvous of A. S. C. members as Fred Jackman, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, has taken his company there for Jack London's "The Call of the Wild," which he is directing as a special production.

George Schneiderman also has been in Truckee for more than a fortnight shooting a Fox production.

Floyd Jackman, to complete the circle, has been filming "The Eskimo Spy," starring Bull Montana, in the Truckee stamping ground. It is said that it was a matter of difficulty to locate earmuffs for Montana in that land of snow.

Kenneth MacLean is filming the "You Know Me, Al" series, starring Lee Moran and based on a newspaper syndicate cartoon strip character, the brain child of Ring Lardner.

Harry Perry is shooting a forthcoming Cosmopolitan production at the Goldwyn studios.

William Marshall has finished the filming of "Tea With a Kick" and is making preparations for photographing a western production at the Robertson-Cole studios.

Robert Newhard and Charles Stumar, both A. S. C. members, are immersed in the task of bringing the Universal production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" to the screen as a photographic masterpiece.

At the open meeting of the American Society of Cinematographers recently, George A. Blair, an official of the Eastman company and vice-president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, delivered an exceedingly informative and interesting talk on the manufacture of motion picture film. Blair's comprehension of film-making not only manifested itself at every turn, but he imparted this information in a manner that could not be misunderstood.

In conjunction with his talk, Blair exhibited motion pictures which illustrated the process of film making at the Eastman plant. The film was very well produced and was enhanced by the cleverness of the illustrations which appeared in the subtitles. While this film may be classed as an educational vehicle, the Eastman company is to be commended on the fact that they gave full screen credit to the cinematographer who shot it. Messrs. Bruletier, German and Connor of the Eastman organization accompanied Blair at the meeting.

Walter M. Griffin has returned to Los Angeles after several months of travel to the four corners of North America as cinematographer for David Hartford productions. His next picture with that organization will be made in Hollywood.

King Gray has signed to film the next Ed Le Saint production.

Harry Fowler is photographing "Rider of Lost Valley," Frederick Reel production.

Henry Sharp is filming "Lost," starring Madge Bellamy.

Ross Fisher "shot" "Going Up," Douglas MacLean's first independent production.

James Van Trees photographed "Rustle of Silk," starring Betty Compson and directed by Herbert Brenon.

Joe Brotherton has completed filming "Chastity," starring Katherine MacDonald.

Francis Corby has returned from San Diego where he went on location in the filming of a Jack White production.

John Arnold is photographing "The Fog," a Graf vehicle for Metro release. For the past several years, Arnold has been filming Metro productions starring Viola Dana whose activities have been halted temporarily due to an attack of appendicitis.

David Abel is making preparations for the shooting of his next Fox production.

Karl Brown, is photographing "Hollywood," a James Cruze production for Paramount.

Faxon Dean is completing the camera work on "Sixty Cents an Hour," Walter Hier's first starring production.

Jack (Curley) Kiehl, who distinguished himself by photographing scenes of the recent Universal City fire while in a precarious position, has been transferred from the Duke Worne company to the staff of prominent cinematographers now filming "Hunchback of Notre Dame."

RACES AT 90-MILE CLIP, SPLINT IN EYE

Ninety miles an hour!

That's the speed attained by William Desmond and Lewis Sargent when they roared around the Beverly Hills Speedway, and crossed the finished wire but a few yards ahead of Frank Elliott and other prominent speed demons.

And although it was a real race, it was just a reel race, as the affair was staged in order to film that episode of the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune," in which Desmond is starred and Sargent is seen in the leading juvenile role.

As Desmond piloted his high-powered car around the saucer-shaped bowl, Sargent in true mechanic style, hunched low in his seat and glanced over his left shoulder, in order to ascertain the position of their competitors.

As the actors were making the final lap, Sargent's goggles became loose and slipped from his eyes, endangering his features from the many slivers of wood that were stripped from the track as they sped along. Before the youthful star could regain the protecting glasses, several pieces of wood found their marks around his optics. One of them narrowly missed the pupil of his left eye.

Despite the pain resulting from his mishap, Sargent urged Desmond to continue the race, and sugical assistance was not rendered until the entire scene was "shot."

CALNAY PLANS STARTING THREE NEW UNITS SOON

The West Coast Productions company is to start three producing units immediately, each with an all-star cast, according to an announcement just made.

James Calnay, head of the organization, is searching the field for good material suitable for his release.

Each of the three units is to produce an entirely different type of pictures. One unit will produce fast moving melodramas, one will turn out small-town plays, with home-like touches and human interest, while the third unit will specialize on problem pictures based upon topics of the day.

Story writers, who have suitable material along this line and directors who can handle these types of productions on economical basis, will be welcome at the company's studios.

J. H. Wyrick is casting and Lewis King is director general for all productions.

Some girls are like cheap autos. Too much depends on the finish, with too few real insides to take the finish any great distance after it's on.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

West in "Red Lights"

Charles H. West has been added to the cast of "Red Lights," Goldwyn's screen version of the stage play, "The Rear Car," which Clarence G. Badger is directing. West will portray the role of the railroad conductor. He will leave immediately for Carisso Gorge on the Mexican boundary, where the "Red Lights" company is on location with a special train of twelve coaches.

Littlefield In It

Lucian Littlefield, expert make-up man and character actor, has been selected by King Vidor to play the role of Douglas in "Three Wise Fools," a Goldwyn picture. This role gives him the opportunity for similar comedy to that which he played in "To Have and to Hold."

Publicist Pete Free-lances

Pete Smith, who has just returned to Los Angeles, has opened offices to handle publicity and exploitation for independent producers and stars. Arrangements have been closed with M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, whereby Mr. Smith will make his offices at this studio and handle the publicity of United, Maurice Tourneur Productions and other independent producers.

Kirkwood in Reid Film

James Kirkwood, motion picture star who has been playing the lead in "The Fool," one of the Broadway successes of the year, has given two weeks' notice to accept the leading male role in "The Living Dead," the dramatic film lesson depicting the horrors of the drug evil which is being made here by Mrs. Wallace Reid.

Is Big Chief Temporarily

P. J. Hungate, assistant to Casting Director L. M. Goodstadt, of the Lasky Studio, is temporarily in charge of that important office while Mr. Goodstadt is enjoying a belated vacation of from two to three weeks. Hungate has conducted similar duties alone and unaided in the past for other studios. A number of new Paramount Pictures are now being cast so that "batting for Kelly" in Mr. Hungate's case is proving an active occupation.

Film Favorites to Wed

According to authentic reports from Gotham, the month of April will chime out wedding bells for Raymond McKee, popular leading man, and Marguerite Courtot. Their engagement was made known shortly after their performances in "Down to the Sea in Ships."

SCREEN NEEDS ROGERS, SAYS CHARLES THURSTON

According to a well-founded report, Will Rogers' return to the screen has been delayed because Florence Ziegfeld refuses to release him from his contract as star of the Follies. It is understood Hal Roach had made arrangements to start Rogers in a series of two-reel special comedies two weeks ago, but had to suspend preparations until Ziegfeld closes the Follies for the season. Charles Thurston, who has played important supporting roles in five Will Rogers features, is among those who has expressed regret over this postponement. "The screen needs Will Rogers more than ever now, because with Charlie Chaplin and several other comedians inactive temporarily there is a dearth in high-class film fun-making," Mr. Thurston says. "I regard any shortage of laugh-providers as a serious situation for the movies and Will Rogers can fill a lot of gaps."

Mr. Thurston has just finished playing a heavy character role in "The Gun Fighter," in support of William Farnum.

Biddle Joins M. P. P. A. L.

After convincing himself of the value of the service it offers, Craig Biddle, scion of a rich Philadelphia family, now here to win his way as a motion picture actor, has placed himself under the management of the Motion Picture Players' Association, which makes a specialty of handling the professional affairs of rising photoplayers. Biddle's brother, George, has also signed with this organization and both young men are in the cinema field in earnest about winning their way through merit.

Giving Spurr Credit

Through an unintentional omission, there was no credit given for the super-fine photography which graced the cover of Camera! week before last. The portrait of Craire Windsor, which was featured thereon, was made by Spurr, the popular and artistic photographer, and Camera! hereby gives him the full credit he deserves for achieving much high art in it.

Corralling Scenario Writers

Three scenario writers were added to the Warner Brothers staff. These include Edmund Goulding, who has written most of Mae Murray's and Dick Barthelmess' screen stories, Frank Lazey, who has written the play, "Peter Weston," for Frank Keenan, and Agnes Johnson, who wrote many of Charlie Ray's films.

NEW SERIAL QUEEN IS DEVELOPED BY LAEMMLE

Louise Lorraine, who has scored a decided hit in "The Gentleman From America," in which she plays the leading feminine role opposite Edward (Hoot) Gibson, has a brilliant future as a queen of serials, according to predictions emanating is now co-starring with Art Acord in "Oregon Trail," an especially ambitious chapter-play being directed by Eddie Laemmle. Miss Lorraine's performance in the earlier episodes of this picture seems to have been so impressive as to justify a building up of her part.

Inasmuch as serials seem to be more popularly in vogue now than ever before, despite the fact that censorship has forced a complete revolution in treatment of to-be-continued film, the Laemmle organization is exerting special efforts to develop new stars for this field and Miss Lorraine is said to look like one of their best future bets. However, she has not indicated any decision to specialize in serials.

Error is Fault of Habit

Anna May Wong is so representative of the Orient that whenever a picture is laid in China, her name seems to be naturally included in the cast. This time it was with the Frederick Reel production of "Scarlet Shadows." But this time it was a mistake, because she is not to play in this picture at all. Instead she is engaged to play in the Marshall Neilan production of "The Eternal Three" at Goldwyn studio.

"Cricket" Is Ready

Director Lorimer Johnson this week delivered his screen version of Charles Dickens' "The Cricket on the Hearth" to the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco. Mr. Johnson made this photoplay at Universal City with an all-star cast headed by Josef Swichard and Fritzi Ridgway. Mr. Johnson has plans for producing a series of pictures independently and he is now looking for suitable stories.

Elfelt to Cast Next Week

With every prospect in favor of concluding the work of completing the continuity of his new story, "Dangerous Men," before many days go by, Clifford S. Elfelt is preparing to select the players for the quite extensive cast at his offices at the Fine Arts Studios. J. B. Warner will play the stellar role, but Mr. Elfelt does not expect to decide on any of the other players until after the scenario is finished. He is collaborating with Frank Howard Clark on this work.

Another Warner Classic

"Tiger Rose," the famous stage success, recently presented at the Morosco Theatre, will be picturized by Warner Brothers, under the direction of Sidney Franklin. Lenore Ulric has been assigned the title role of the story, the filming of which will commence about June 15th. Edmund Goulding, who has just arrived from New York, will adapt the play to the screen.

Mary Anderson Returns

Mary Anderson, who will be remembered for her stellar performances in Vitagraph pictures some years ago, has returned to Los Angeles from New York, where she has been engaged in picture work. Shortly before leaving for the Southland from the East, Miss Anderson completed an extensive personal appearance tour in Southern theatres.

Sues Jackie's Dad

John Coogan, father of Jackie, the youthful film celebrity, has been made the defendant in a law suit in New York instituted by John F. Connolly, who alleges he has received only $1,700 for his services as personal manager for the little star. Connolly declared in the suit that Coogan Junior earned not less than $250,000 while under his management. Connolly asks $17,050 as the balance due him.

Fairbanks Completes Series

William Fairbanks has completed his starring activities with Ben Wilson under whose direction he has made a series of six feature productions. The final one was finished this week, it being a picturization of W. C. Tuttle's Adventure Magazine story, "Sun Dog Trails." Mr. Fairbanks expects to announce his future starring plans early next week. It is likely he will abandon at least temporarily the portrayal of western heroic characters and will enact some dressed-up, conventional roles.

Louise Tries a New One

Louise Fazenda completed work Saturday night as "Bea Sorerson" in Warner Brothers "Main Street" and the next day accompanied by her mother left for San Francisco where at the San Mateo Studios she is cast for the role of "Mille" in "The Fog," Graf production for Metro. The characterization which Miss Fazenda will play straight, is a "sunless" one in the script, but the comedienne will invest it with a certain portion of humor. It is unlike anything she has heretofore essayed. While in great demand for dramatic productions, Miss Fazenda in addition, has plans for future comedies.

notch winner on the program. This is one of those mystery stories in which the crook characters interest one to the limit due to the situation into which they are angled with rare skill. The whole production is blessed with action keyed up to tempo which gives no one a chance to become bored. Rupert Julian did a good job of story-writing in this case and George Archainbaud matched that gentleman's literary prowess with some directorial genius which helped extensively. Miss Darmond's performance is par excellence and she holds the sympathy she wins with appealing grace. Mahlon Hamilton and Mathilde Brundage both deserve special mention for splendid characterizations. True, there is something of the hackneyed in the plot, but this has been glossed over with an alluring veneer of tempo, if you "get" what we mean.

"Can a Woman Love Twice?" Yes, and some of them thrice. Could a more assinine title be conceived by mortal man? Does it in any way compare with "The Greater Glory" under which name this picture was filmed? However, fortunately, this is a top-notch photoplay invested with sufficient strength to bear the burden of the bad title. It presents Ethel Clayton at her best and affords her all the opportunities she could desire for impressing her ability to feel and visualize the emotions of an interesting and rather extraordinary woman. Just as there is the refreshing element of originality in this story, there is something original in Miss Clayton's dramatic procedure throughout. She has the advantage of superb support from a cast of supporting players of wide accomplishments in the aggregate. Malcolm McGregor is "just right" while Albert Hart offers a characterization which is something of a classic, stamping him as one of the really true artists of the silversheet. Fred Esmelton, Kate Lester, Wilfred Lucas and Victory Bateman are others who help to make the picture a success. But, Muriel Frances Dana, the four-year-old artist, is as much the starlet of the picture as Miss Clayton is the star of it. Seldom has a child given such a remarkable comprehensive interpretation of an important character in a story; never has any child displayed more of a spark of genuine genius for convincing one that she understands thoroughly the drama involved in the action she is called upon to help move forward. It is certain this picture will go a long way toward making little Muriel Dana quite famous over the length and breadth of the land.

FILM FOLK GOSSIP IN BRIEF

Craig Ward, hero of Reginald Barker's "Heart's Aflame," is finding it the hardest job of his cinema career to resist being tempted back onto the speaking stage. He gets a couple offers most every week to return to the New York stage, but he clings to the movie game in Hollywood.

Dorothy Manners, who has just been elevated to the position of dramatic leading lady by William Fox and is now playing the leading feminine role opposite Charles (Buck) Jones in "Snowdrift," has dropped her legal proceedings against Sally Bosse, who she alleges uses her name without right, because of the fact that Miss Bosse seems to have withdrawn from pictures.

The title of the Robertson-Cole picture, "Wreckage," has been changed to "Storm-Swept" and it will be released February 29th, according to latest report. Much interest attaches to this production because it visualizes a man gone crazy and there is some speculation as to what the results will be. Jack Carlyle plays this part and it is said to be a quite remarkable performance.

Cupid has succeeded in disproving the old rule that humor and sentiment cannot go hand in hand. Should Larry Semon succumb to the wiles of the love god in the near future as his friends say is likely to be the case, all of the screen's greatest fun-makers will be accounted for.

Buster Keaton started the epidemic when he married Natalie Talmadge a little more than a year ago. Then began the long series of reported engagements of Charlie Chaplin, culminating in his admitted betrothal to the fascinating Pola Negri.

The latest involves Harold Lloyd and his former leading lady, Mildred Davis, in holy wedlock.

side of the Atlantic, it doubtless will find a homey, restful atmosphere about the studio setting in which Gasnier is filming one episode of "Daughters of the Rich." For the director has obtained the fair Gaby's favorite bed for use in the rich boudoir setting required by the Edgar Saltus story. And petite Ethel Shannon, in her first big role under her new Preferred Picture contract, is permitted to lie in it!

For the benefit of those who crave details, it may be added that the bed is hand-carved, to follow the general contour of a boat, is heavily gold-leafed and hand-painted, that a golden Cupid guards the foot-board, and a high head-board which may have been intended by the carver as a sail, carries the occupant away to Slumberland.

Surely a luxurious resting place for a king's favorite—or a film queen!

she was distributing little gifts at an orphans' asylum and that night she made another speech at a Woman's Club.

Thursday—Between 8:30 a. m. and noon she received four different producers offering her engagements in forthcoming pictures. At one that afternoon, she was a guest of honor at a theatre party.

Friday—She devoted the whole day to raising more funds for the Studio Club and the whole evening with newspaper and magazine people in quest of interviews.

Saturday—She was occupied a-plenty with an accumulation of something like a thousand "fan" letters, and, that evening she was the honored speaker at a farewell supper in honor of a prominent movie star about to depart for Europe.

Sunday—At 11 a. m. she delivered a lay sermon at a leading church. At 2 p. m., she started a round of various hospitals to cheer up invalids. At 6 p. m., she entertained at dinner in her own house and that evening she rested by reading manuscripts submitted to her by producers seeking to interest her in certain roles.

Tyrone Power, who at present is appearing in the film version of "Under the Red Robe," and "Fury," caused a sensation in playing the King with John Barrymore's "Hamlet."

EYES AND A SLIDE DOWN A COAL CHUTE

"Yes, I'll know if I'm not and I'll admit it," she promised.

This step taken by the girl in totally unsophisticated precocity was the last straw that broke the fate's back. Without excepting too much the production manager did give her a chance by entrusting to her a leading role in a Henry B. Walthall feature about to be started.

When came the vital moment for the decision as to the quality of her histrionic work, she decided she was "pretty good" whereupon the boss agreed with her, and, she was assigned to the leading feminine roles in Mr. Walthall's next two or three starring vehicles.

So, there is plenty of the element of truth in the statement that when Helen Ferguson slid down the coal chute, she slid down and past the gauntlet of obstacles placed in her aspiring way and that she bounced up to a rung of the ladder of success from which it was possible for her to climb upwards until she became—

Well, everybody who goes to the movies in these days knows Helen and her eyes, eyes no longer sad so incessantly, but now twinkling with bright humor on occasion although they continue to be just about the most haunting, most alluring pair of optics

Helen Kesler, one of the popular little leading ladies of the comedy field, who has done her best work in support of Jimmy Aubrey in Vitagraph fun films, has organized a club to which only comedy ladies are eligible. Her idea is to arouse young women who serve as foils to prominent comedians to the necessity of intelligent study of ways and means to contribute towards the mirth-provoking qualities of such films in the belief that to make people laugh is a mission well worth anyone's time. Miss Kesler recently caused a great deal of comment by abandoning the dramatic field because she did not want to participate in making people sad.

No. 50

From the Editorial Observatory

Mary Pickford is shy a title for her new picture. But, we hope she's got the story.

"The really great motion pictures have not been made yet," declares an eastern savant. Gracious, how this will grate on the nerves of some directors!

Actors are supposed to help along the action of a story, but too often they just act, which is different, if you're in the mood to grapple with "a subtle depth."

Wallace Beery has an ambition to play most of the celebrated kings of history before the motion picture cameras. He's been the villain long enough to justify him in being tired of playing the devil.

Help Hollywood grow! Don't stand still and help to make it slow! Nor yet, permit no provincial folk to invade to choke! In short, let's make Los Angeles proud of its grandest chee-ild.

"Fascinating women abound there," writes a well-known author in a recent magazine article dwelling on Los Angeles. Not only do they abound, but they fill men with spizzierinktum. (Wait! Look the word up before you knock us down.)

An investigation just concluded by interested experts reveals the fact that there is absolutely no opium-smoking whatsoever within the entire city limits of Hollywood. Let the strait-laced gentry put that in their pipe and smoke it.

So long as automobiles and babies increase at their present surprising rate in California, it cannot be said that this part of the country is going to the dogs. It is more appropriate to say, it's just simply going.

It is reported the United States government plans on using the radio for publicity purposes. If a movie star were as slow in embracing new publicity mediums as the government is, the world scarcely would know who Mary Pickford is yet.

As we observe the frequency with which outside "angels" continue to come into the film-making field and allow some sharp promoter to deprive him of his fortune, it is but natural to paraphrase: the fool and his fool picture soon start—and finish.

Now that it develops the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition is going to be a great big triumph in all the term implies, it would be a veritable shock if it escaped some "knocks." There is only one real test of the worth-while and that is, how much it's disparaged.

Whenever a stranger-promoter comes to you bubbling over with enthusiasm because of your chances of making fortunes with him, beware of the bubble! The time has come when Southern California is not such a new country as to make "blue sky" so easy of money-making perpetuity.

We heard a good one this week: romance entered the life of Al Martin and he immediately concentrated on consulting the divorce laws of the various states. This is probably the first time in the history of man that so much foresight has been manifested in a contemplated matrimonial venture.

Theatres galore and then some more! This would be a worthy slogan for the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, because a proper backing of the movement bids fair to make Hollywood one of the greatest amusement centers of the world and as such it would attract people from all over the world. It is, of course, of equal importance that it be arranged to present the most unique attractions in the world in these said theatres and, according to advance information on the plans of at least two of these projects, superb novelty in the superlative sense will be the program from the inception. If you happen to be rather unfamiliar with the possibilities of the prospects for converting Hollywood into a great rialto of supreme amusements, it would be wise to investigate, for herein lies the film capitol's greatest opportunity to supplement the importance the motion picture industry has attached to it.

Wonder if Police Judge Chambers knows that he has become the terror of most law-abiding citizens while practically all law-breakers have no fear of him at all? His mania for imposing jail sentences on respectable citizens for very slight infractions of the traffic laws while really irresponsible people, often intoxicated, drive about at terrific rates of speed without suffering serious consequences in the way of punishment, does not impress the citizenry as either judicious or plain smart-aleck. It's downright obnoxious law enforcement to incarcerate highly reputed mothers of infant children and business men of true civic spirit for slight errors. A fine is always proper in any case wherein the offense is proven beyond a single doubt, but the jails were built for criminals who may be deemed dangerous if left at large and not to humiliate substantial people who would do as much as Judge Chambers would to preserve law and order. Verily, he is going too far and it is high time that he calls a halt on himself and exercise some common-sense judgement as he metes out justice.

Fewer "Moving" Pictures, More Photodrama

is the present day need of the industry

RECENTLY a famous and widely read author of fiction, one who has worked with the motion picture industry for many months, delivered a scathing denunciation of the industry as it is at present conducted.

Without holding any brief for many of the statements this author made, there is one that is well worth considering. He said,

"Until those who control the motion picture production realize that the fundamental thing is a clean, wholesome story, undistorted by commercialized hokum, they must continue to face the orgy of censorship, well meaning preachers and representative women's clubs."

Unquestionably in this one respect, at least, he has pointed the way which the motion picture industry must follow. And the sooner this direction is taken, the sooner will this great industry cast off its swaddling clothes for the garments of manhood.

People, even those in the heart of darkest Africa, are no longer impressed by the fact that pictures can be made to move. That was the important factor a generation ago, but it has no interest now.

With the passing of the superficial interest in the mechanics of motion pictures, there has come the opportunity and the need to do the real work for which this medium of expression is admirably fitted, the depicting of life with truth and simplicity.

And until the motion picture industry produces compelling stories of life, there will never be the whole-hearted public interest and support that will carry it to its ultimate success.

The public is long suffering. Yet once aroused, its opinion sweeps all before it. The motion picture industry hangs in the balance. Either it will change voluntarily or it will be forced to change. And the revolution will be neither pleasant nor profitable.

Start with the story. There lies the cause of mediocre pictures that must be bolstered up with artificialities and subterfuges.

But in this story also lies the big opportunity to produce photodrama.

We have stories of the type the industry needs. Original stories, fresh and vital, written directly for the screen. They are true to life. They can carry the weight of real photodrama.

Our representatives will gladly keep you in touch with the big stories of every type worthy of your consideration, which are available from day to day.

The Meteoric Rise of a Twice-a-Joy

Only a few short years ago a small, eager, bright-eyed girl sat in the first row of the old Grand Opera House in New Orleans.

Her mother hadn't wanted first row seats at all—too close, she said. But the child, a determined thrust to her tiny chin, had remained firm in her determination to be as close as possible to the leading man.

Almost breathless the child held her breath, as the actor went through the scenes, and when the final curtain fell none applauded more loudly than did little Leatrice Joy.

"Some day I want to be an actress," she told her mother, as they left the theater.

And today she is not only an actress, but one of the most brilliant of film stars, undoubtedly destined to set new high standards of histrionic achievement.

Leatrice Joy, as she is known in films, started her dramatic career in a school conducted in New Orleans by the mother of Herbert Brenon, now one of Lasky's greatest directors.

After the incidents of being elected maid of honor and later queen of the Mardi Gras carnival in the old Louisiana metropolis, she had her first film role in "Pearl From India," produced in New Orleans. Incidentally, the cameraman at the time was John Boyle, who has been quite prominently in the news recently, because of his disappearance while on an expedition into Africa.

Miss Joy's first real picture triumph was scored in George Loane Tucker's "Ladies

LEATRICE JOY

Must Live," in which she played opposite Betty Compson.

Soon afterward she realized a life ambition by becoming the leading lady for the same actor she had admired in her girlhood days in New Orleans—Bert Lytell—in the Metro picture, "The Right of Way."

Her rise after this was rapid, with leading roles in "Down Home," "Buntz Pulls the Strings," "The Tale of Two Worlds," "Night Rose" and "Ace of Hearts."

Then came the very highest highlight of her career, when she was signed by Lasky and chosen immediately for the principal role in Cecil B. De Mille's "Saturday Night."

This was followed by big roles in "Man-slaughter," "The Bachelor Daddy" and "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow." One of her latest hits is as the star in "Java Head," and she also appeared to great advantage in "Don't Deceive Your Wife."

Now comes what she considers her greatest part, the principal role in De Mille's most ambitious production, "The Ten Commandments," work on which will begin about April 1st. The company, it is planned, will go to Palestine on location, remaining there about two months.

She is one of the "biggest names" the Paramount forces ever have boasted and her legions of admirers always stand ready to endorse any promotion she is given and those admirers would naturally be disappointed if she were held back for any reason.

Star Retires to Seclusion as Fame Grows

If Louise Lorraine, petite star of Universal productions, chooses to remain in seclusion for a few days, to avoid an army of reporters who have been on her trail constantly, that's her business.

Maybe Miss Lorraine doesn't crave a lot of notoriety; maybe she's just a wee bit tired, after working for weeks in "The Oregon Trail," which Ed Laemmle has just finished for Universal; and maybe—

Well, maybe she thinks it's her prerogative, if she wishes, to have a little time to herself if she wants.

Last Tuesday a man posing as "Captain" Edward Dawson was arrested by local police, on a warrant sworn to by his landlady, who charged him with having cashed two checks for $115 for which there were no funds in the bank.

In his room at the time were found two contracts, asserted to bear the signatures of Miss Lorraine and Art Acord, who co-starred with her in "The Oregon Trail." These contracts, the police declared, showed that Dawson intended to organize a film production company, to be known as Louise Lorraine Productions, and to pay the actress and actor $1,000 a week each for their services, besides depositing $150,000 to their credit in a local bank.

Since Dawson's arrest, reporters have tried in vain to reach the pretty actress, but without success.

Nor have they had any better luck in finding Mr. Acord.

At both of their homes, however, relatives have declared they knew Captain Dawson, and had been with him considerably within the past two weeks.

Film folk generally in Hollywood, though, can't just get the connection between Dawson and the present "intensive search," as the newspapers put it, for Acord and Miss Lorraine.

LOUISE LORRAINE

"What's the big idea," one man asked today. "Is it any crime to sign a contract that would bring in $1,000 good, cash dollars every week to play in pictures?"

And it's true that if such a thing were a crime, Hollywood perhaps would turn into a hotbed of criminality overnight if every film actor and actress in the profession had the chance to sign such an agreement.

Of course, because of her prominence in the industry, Miss Lorraine would naturally be the "quarry" of reporters and correspondents when such a story "broke" for the papers.

But it's the general opinion in Hollywood, that she has a perfect right to refuse to see them if she so desires.

Meanwhile she has the satisfaction of having it impressed upon her that her popularity as a true screen artist is growing by leaps and bounds, and, there is an unmistakable and very pronounced demand for pictures in which she appears so winningly.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Friends of Colonel Gordon McGee, the research expert on Universal's spectacular filming of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," in which Lon Chaney is starring with the support of seventy-five recognized artists, believe that in this effort he has achieved the highest point of his career.

Colonel McGee has been technical adviser with Maurice Tourneu, Geraldine Farrar and other prominent figures of the industry. On "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" he has charge of the costuming of thirty-two hundred players impersonating citizens of fifteenth century Paris as described and sketched by Victor Hugo. The costumes all had to be made from authoritative drawings and descriptions, no duplicates of that period being in existence.

Additions to the scenario staff at Universal City during the last few days include three well-known writers of stage and motion picture plays.

Theodore Wharton, known as "the father of the serial," who has contributed many a thrill to the screen in "Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and "Patria," will write serials for Universal. Tommy Grey, whose specialty is vaudeville and comedy hits, will write laughs for the funsters and inject humorous situations wherever they are needed, and Joseph La Brandt, author of stage plays, will write original stories for Universal feature productions.

Jack Hoxie, one of the cleverest riders in the country and star of many western photo-plays, has signed a contract with Universal to star in five-reel westerns.

Hoxie got his early training on an Oklahoma cattle ranch and won many prizes for trick and fancy riding at some of the biggest rodeos in the Southwest. He has been in pictures for several years. Among his best known pictures are "Dead or Alive," "The Man from Nowhere" and "Cyclone Bliss."

Aside from his skill as a "buckaroo" of the old school, Hoxie has unusual dramatic ability.

The thrills and humor of the race-track will live on the screen in "The Information Kid."

"The Information Kid" is a new series of two-reel real-fact humor epics which Universal is planning to make, and which it is hoped will be just as big knockouts as the famous Universal-Witwer series of "The Leather Pushers," the prize ring stories in which Reginald Denny is starred.

Gerald Beaumont, popular and successful fictionist, wrote a series of race track stories compiled under the general title of "Rider Up." "The Information Kid" is the hero and that will be the main title of the series.

Nat Ross, who directed some of the best Hoot Gibson vehicles and "The Ghost Patrol," will guide the filming of the series. Two continuity writers are now working on the adaptations.

Reginald Denny, star of the famous Universal humor epics, "The Leather Pushers," and who has just completed a starring vehicle of the most elaborate type, Jack London's "The Abysmal Brute," has been called by popular demand back into "The Leather Pushers." A new series of six of what the leading critics called "the best two-reelers ever made" will be filmed.

Erle Kenton, director of comedies and short reel subjects for many different producers, has been engaged to direct the new series. Two of the supporting players in the last series of "The Leather Pushers," Hayden Stevenson, the manager and Elinor Field, "the girl," have already been engaged for the new productions. Ed Kennedy, formerly a director, has been signed for a principal role also.

This change in Denny's plans means that he will not be with Virginia Valli in "Up the Ladder." Popular applause for "The Leather Pushers" makes it evident that "more of the same" is the logical step right now. "Up the Ladder" will be temporarily shelved until Denny is released from the new series of "The Leather Pushers" in order that it may be a Valli-Denny effort under Hobart Henley's direction.

When Edward Laemmle thought he was almost through with "The Oregon Trail," Universal's chapter play or Northwestern history in which Art Acord stars with the brilliant support of charming Louise Lorraine and others, executives of the Universal City studios decided that the value of this historical document warranted the most picturesque scenic effects possible. Consequently the unit went to Big Bear Valley and Laemmle directed additional scenes which required two or three weeks to make.

But now the company is back at Universal City and the final scenes of the dramatic story of the great Northwest are being shot. One more week and "The Oregon Trail" will be completed and another screen history will be on its way to the fans who love facts with their entertainment.

Virginia Valli, who was to have co-starred in "Up the Ladder," with Reginald Denny, will star under Hobart Henley's direction in Frances Hodgson Burnett's wonderful story, "A Lady of Quality." Denny will do more of "The Leather Pushers," the famous two-reel epics of the prize ring in which he jumped into popular favor, because the public has demanded more.

"A Lady of Quality" has remarkable possibilities for Virginia Valli, and as might be expected Hobart Henley will choose a cast of all-star character similar to the casts he has used in "The Flame of Life," "The Flirt" and "The Abysmal Brute."

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, gave a serial director and a star the thrill of their lives yesterday.

Robert Hill, who directed "Around the World in Eighteen Days" and "The Phantom Fortune," two chapter plays in which William Desmond is starred, will produce features with Desmond as the star.

Hill has been serial-ling for four years. His "Tarzan" series was his first attempt in directing continued features. Hill has made several serials for Universal, and Carl Laemmle has made him a feature director.

William Desmond has starred in feature productions before he signed with Universal, but he has been the featured player in four chapter plays produced at Universal City.

So the Multitudes May Go "On Location"

Interest in the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition exhibits will center largely in "The Location." This will in a way correspond with the midways of previous expositions, but like all the other attractions at the Monroe Doctrine Centennial will be "different."

"The Location" will belong especially to the studios, since it will contain all the exhibits of the motion picture producers. Here in Spanish-Colonial buildings which are to be adapted to the needs of each display will be shown all the mysterious processes which must be accomplished in the making of a motion picture. The evolution of pictures as well as their present-day production will be demonstrated in a manner sure to focus attention.

Although the motion picture industry has its center in Los Angeles, where it is estimated more than fifty per cent of all the films in the world are produced, comparatively few residents are familiar with the many actual steps involved in the intricate task of staging and "shooting" a drama for the screen. To the general public the newest of the arts, for motion picture production is an art composed of many arts, is all a mystery and one that intrigues the imagination. There is more curiosity concerning the persons concerned in the making of pictures than now centers on any other class in the United States today, for players are known to hundreds of thousands of theatre-goers and the names of directors, dramatists, scenarists, photographers as well as producers are household words. All these have been touched by the magic of the camera and it will mean much to be able to see how they work.

For the first time in its brief history the motion picture industry is thus to reveal itself by showing pictures in the making and visitors from every state in the Union will find in "The Location" attractions never before offered at any exposition. The possibilities of the various exhibits are unlimited and various producers have announced their intention of making the most of the opportunity to reveal the wonders of the studios.

"The Location" will be free from all the usual cheap catch-penny devices familiar to persons who attend expositions. It will be exceedingly attractive in its environment, for all the buildings will be surrounded by gardens and most of them will have charming patios. No admission will be charged and there will be the sort of hospitality extended that will not only draw the crowds, but inspire them to linger in the most novel department ever devised for an exposition.

The work of building is to be started without delay and construction is to be pushed rapidly, for everything must be complete on July 2, the opening day of the celebration.

For Every Tree Isn't a Family Tree

Why is it, especially in the motion picture world, that a man and a woman can't be good friends without a lot of long-tongued gossips immediately hooking up their names in the latest engaged-to-be-married rumor?

That's something no one connected with the industry has ever been able to understand or explain.

Only a few weeks ago Andree Lafayette, darling of the French theater-going public, arrived in Hollywood to play the leading role in Richard Walton Tully's new production, "Trilby."

At once she started to work, and worked verree, verree hard; she wants, above everything in the world, to be successful in American pictures.

All was well—everything was pretty, in fact, to use a popular expression.

Then along came Maurice Canonge—and the tongues started wagging.

Maurice was signed for a part in the same picture; he'll be "Zou-Zou."

Daily they were together on the lot. Why shouldn't they be? They talk the same language, eat the same foods, and like the same books.

And nightly, too, they were seen together, at various hotels and cafe dinner parties and dances.

Again—why shouldn't they be seen together?

Andree Lafayette and Maurice Canonge...and Tree...Not a Family Tree

Still the tongues wagged. The curious couldn't understand that they've known each other for years—both were favorites on the Parisian stage, where Canonge was as high a star as Miss Lafayette, who has risen in her branch of the art.

This week a reporter, scenting a story in the air, approached them.

"Are you engaged to marry Maurice Canonge?" he asked the petite mademoiselle. No finesse, no diplomacy; just a plain question.

"Mais, non!" She lapses into French when she's excited, or taken off her guard.

The same reply greeted the same question, when put to Canonge.

Then in chorus:

"We're not engaged; we never have been engaged; we never will—"

Then they both looked at each other, smiled, and stopped talking.

So there you are.

And meanwhile both look like sure-fire hits in America. Canonge seems especially promising, since he is a real marvel in the matter of versatility. He is as famous abroad as a tragedian as he is a comedian. He has scored some history-making triumphs as the star of great tragic plays and he has scored equally as heavily as the star of great comedy and musical extravaganza successes.

So, there you are again.

Flashes from Frisco

San Francisco, March 21st.—Eric Von Stroheim returned to San Francisco last Tuesday with twenty-five members of the cast, and staff for "McTeague," now to be called "Greed," and actual shooting of the picture began on Wednesday morning. This production has the unique distinction of being the first picture ever made with no studio work on it whatever. We went out to the set at Page and Laguna Streets a day or two ago to look the work over, and parked in a corner of the junkshop, where they were shooting. The hard-working staff has not only built the junkman's house, but stocked it with an assortment of junk, which is the envy of every junkman in town, and it's hanging so thick with man-made cobwebs that the slogan of the company seems to be "look out for the cobwebs." We stood on one foot in a corner back of the orchestra and watched Dale Fuller and Cesare Gravina act until driven out to seek air, but judging from what we saw it's going to be some picture.

David Butler, well-known screen idol, and Louise Fazenda, beloved comedienne, arrived in San Francisco last week, as the latest additions to the all-star cast of "The Fog."

John Thompson, cameraman, has severed his connection with the Paul Gerson Studios and is returning to Los Angeles.

N. Dragonanovich, general manager of the West Coast Films, spent most of last week in Los Angeles on business connected with the next production of his company.

One of the largest and most elaborate scenes of "The Fog," was shot last Wednesday.

Gossip from Ray Leek

Have you the gift for word juggling? Can you fit together two or three words that will intrigue the interest of the reader and create a desire for further details?

If so you may be unwittingly carrying a fortune about in your head. For the screen today offers a market for titles that probably exceeds even its story requirements.

When a producer who is famous as a title picker first read the words, "Rich Men's Wives," nearly a year ago he remarked: "The person who wrote that title created a $25,000 piece of property. Attached to any motion picture it will add that sum—at the most conservative estimate—to the value of the production."

And once more his judgment has been vindicated. The title, backed up by a picture that makes good every promise of the title, is declared to have broken box office records in every key city in the United States.

That the title grips the imagination of writers and theater-goers was evidenced by the fact that while its sequel, "Poor Men's Wives," was being filmed by B. P. Schulberg not fewer than half a dozen stories of that title were received—all from different sources and without possibility of one having been suggested by the others.

Then came the production of the sequel of the two pictures, a film version of Edgar Saltus' most popular book, "Daughters of the Rich." That this title was considered of unusual value was shown by the fact that another producer began the production of an adaptation of a stage play, which he immediately rechristened "Daughters of the Rich."

Such thrill as may come to a young man who suddenly discovers himself to be the autocratic ruler of a city, with all of its

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

In his new starring vehicle, "Daddy," Jackie Coogan has taken long strides towards convincing the public that he is more than merely a cute and clever child artist of the screen, because in this picture he plainly demonstrates a spark of genius inasmuch as he runs the gamut of emotions without apparent effort or any thought of acting. For the first time he seems instinctively expert in changing the moods of his audience in a twinkling and he makes 'em like him all the way. Somehow it seems that whoever was responsible for his direction, whether it was E. Mason Hopper, Coogan, Sr., or both, managed to inspire "the kid" with the notion that he was not making a picture at all, but that instead he was living the life of a certain definite character whom he seemed to understand perfectly. As stories go, "Daddy" is not much of a story. In fact, it is extremely mediocre in spots and never masterly at any time. But Jackie was at the time of its photographing in such fine fettle that he probably could have transcended the best of masterpieces. Just the same, there is ample reason to be apprehensive over his future as a screen artist if there is a continuance of haphazard selection of material for him to work with, and it is to be devoutly hoped that this thing of simply "framing up stories and gagging them to 'fit'" will be superseded by a policy of a really intelligent choosing of vehicles written by professional story-writers, who have intelligent comprehension of the boy's limitations and possibilities. We do not blame Coogan, Sr., for desiring to keep full control over his brilliant son, but it must be patent to him that he needs a lot more help in the matter of stories. It is a foregone conclusion the public will not continue to crowd theatres to see even a good, little dramatic star in photoplays so palpably inferior as to almost divert attention from the acknowledged genius of the star who is called upon to struggle with it. Give Jackie Coogan stories matching his ability and he will be a match for anyone as a drawing-card indefinitely. Foist onto him too much trashy material and he is sure to start slipping quite prematurely. It does not require the supreme effort of a wizard to figure out this bit of simple logic. Nor will it be a moot question as to the inferior quality of "Daddy" as a story.

Lloyd Hughes, brilliantly talented and likeable, forges ahead as the pre-eminent feature of two promising productions about to be released almost simultaneously. And, it's a toss-up between the two insofar as the high entertaining values are concerned. In both instances, Mr. Hughes advances his position as a real star worthy of the name and in both instances, he proves he possesses a versatility extremely uncommon among good-looking leading men such as he is and for which he is noted. No doubt a good percentage of the "fans" will like Mr. Hughes better in the B. P. Schulberg production of "Are You a Failure?" This is a thoroughly amusing picture because its underlying quality is one of comedy, it being the story of how a weak young man becomes a strong hero as a result of taking a correspondence course on the subject of how to be a success. From beginning to end every situation in which the star figures he predominates and he keeps the interest to a high pitch even in moments when he is inadequately supported as he is in several in-

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

Since somebody started the movement toward signing photoplayers to long-term contracts, most all the producers have joined in with a zest as a result of it being figured out that this will be the only effective way to keep the salaries of artists down to a definite level for the next few years. The persistent tendency to "raise the pay" has inspired the players, no doubt, to raise a barrier to prevent an unlimited raise. By contracts which stipulate the salaries of players for as many as five years, the employers will be able to gauge their financial obligations of the future—if they can sign enough of the important cinema leaders in this present.

It is reported a survey of the whole nation shows an unprecedented demand for serials of thirty reels in fifteen two-reel episodes. There is every evidence in Southern California that the demand, whatever its proportions might be during the next year, will be fully met, as never before were so many serials being made here.

As a further proof of the oft-repeated assertion to the effect that the ordinary program picture had long since gotten onto the toboggan which would convey it to oblivion, William Fox, pioneer in and stickler for the near-machine-made photoplay, has announced his decision to completely abandon that field in favor of super-features only.

The annual political shake-up in executive quarters of various parts of the film industry continues. Starting with Irving Thalberg's rather surprising withdrawal from Universal, a climax has just been capped by the sudden resignation of Charles A. Bird from the general managership of the William Fox West Coast Studios. Smaller birds are whispering predictions of even more "upsets" a la sensational.

The proclivity manifest in photoplayers for the last several weeks to quit the films for the stage seems to have been given a jolt which tends to bring forth an avalanche of denials of such intentions. Explicitly, the most common tendency among artists of the screen is to remain exactly that without further dabbling in the spoken drama. Some recent disastrous "flyers" wherein success failed to bless the efforts involved in the transferring of talents, is the cause of a renewed fealty to the cinema as THE field for histrionic endeavor.

Money in sizable gobs continues to be poured into the Hollywood field to be spent on making motion pictures. An interesting feature of this reassuring "inflow" is that much Chicago and other mid-western capital is among the late arrivals. Only a few months ago, all the coin of the realm came from the vicinity of Wall Street.

stances when Madge Bellamy, the "lead" opposite him, is called upon by the plot to do things. Miss Bellamy's performance is the only outstanding disappointment in this picture. She is entirely too much herself and too totally out of any character. In watching her, one is impressed with the idea that perhaps she is relying too much on personality without taking into account that personality can often be most annoying. However—in "Scars of Jealousy," a Thomas H. Ince production in which Mr. Hughes is likewise the star, there are all the elements of truly powerful drama. This picture is more like "Tol'able David" than anything else although it could not be in any way an imitation of it inasmuch as it was filmed about the same time the great Richard Barthelmess classic was being made and the full width of the continent separated the two companies, precluding the possibility of any copying or "stealing of thunder." As a youthful mountaineer Mr. Hughes is most convincing and even striking. He draws a characterization which we predict will live and we would not be surprised if "Scars of Jealousy" develops into a sensation comparable to that created by "Tol'able David," although, unfortunately, it has not an Ernest Torrence to add tremendous momentum to the big scenes of moment. Marguerite de la Motte plays the leading feminine character opposite Mr. Hughes in this one and she does well throughout. On occasion she "troupe" with Mr. Hughes as he should be "trouped with" and does her full share to aid him in glossing over several unconvincing spots in the story. All things being equal, so far as general business conditions are concerned, both "Are You a Failure?" and "Scars of Jealousy" should make much money and should tend to ingratiate Lloyd Hughes with everyone who sees either one of them.

We doubt the value of the Arrow production called "Night Life in Hollywood" as propaganda for Hollywood. Our reason for this doubting is, this picture swings to the extreme farthest away from the extreme exaggerations of scandal-mongering publications bent on painting this film center as the center of the worst hell-hole itself. In fact, this film tends to lead the uninitiated to believe Hollywood is a thoroughly dead, rubelike town after 9 p. m. Anyone in any way familiar with the night life in this home of hundreds of motion picture people is fully aware of the ridiculousness of creating such an impression especially since the opening of such night institutions as Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre and the Montmartre. Moreover, Hollywood is extremely active socially every night. This does not mean necessarily that there are the countless "wild parties" so frequently described, but, of course, there are far more lively parties in this community than could happen in most any other city of its size. We do not think it is a good idea to spread the impression that Hollywood is ever "dead"—that it is a quiet, little church town, where extremely quiet home-life obtains in all quarters, primarily because this is something it is not and it would be something no one would want Hollywood to be. Those who have Hollywood's best interests at heart want it to be developed more and more into a thoroughly cosmopolitan city peopled chiefly by masters of and devotees to the great fine arts. At the same time everybody

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1923

FOX JOINS IN GREAT FILM EXPANSION

The coming year promises to be a big and prosperous one for the William Fox organization.

According to an announcement made this week, the entire activities will be moved to a new studio, the plans for which are now being prepared, and the total expense of which will be approximately $2,000,000. A site, covering more than two hundred acres, has already been selected and construction work will be started within the next few months.

Charles A. Bird, who, until last week bore the responsibilities of business manager and casting director, and Dan Kelly, his assistant, have resigned from the organization, and have been succeeded by Ben Jackson as business manager, and Arthur Ford as casting director.

The new studio will be built on an elaborate plan, and will be of Spanish architecture throughout.

Several new stars will be added to the Fox roster, including Jean Arthur, Peggy Shaw and Ruth Dyer, three New York beauties.

The production of program pictures will be discontinued under the new production schedule, and the initial super-production to be filmed will be "Shadows of the East," to be followed by three Broadway stage successes.

MAGNATES TO SURVEY N. Y. SITUATION EN MASSE

Joseph M. Schenck, Sol Lesser and Michael Gore, officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., California's largest chain of amusement houses, will leave soon for New York for the purpose of surveying conditions of business holdings located in that vicinity. In addition to his interest in the West Coast holdings, Mr. Schenck has business associates in the East and will devote a large portion of his time in conference with them.

Lesser and Gore will spend considerable time with producers of legitimate productions with the view of having Broadway successes transferred to the proposed Hollywood theatre. While East, Mr. Lesser will arrange for the distribution of the pictures to be filmed by his new unit, The Principal Pictures Corporation.

GOLDWYN WILL HELP TO SAVE DELUDED GIRLS

A noble movement has been sponsored by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who will work in connection with Southern California police officials, in an attempt to combat juvenile delinquency caused by the common desire of many young boys and girls to leave home in quest of screen honors. The history of every young girl who applies for picture work at the Goldwyn Studios will be carefully investigated, and her parents notified of her whereabouts. In the event the applicant's parents cannot be located, police officials will be asked to look up her past record.

PASADENA YIELDS TO FILM-MAKING AT LAST

Southern California's society center, Pasadena, has gone in for motion picture production at last.

A motion picture company, whose purpose it will be to film educational and religious photoplays, will construct a studio near the foothills of the Crown City within the next month, according to David L. Haney, president of the syndicate which will finance the project.

The company will feature Otto Poll, cinema actor, and considered one of America's greatest all-round athletes, he having won thirty-eight championships during the last few years. Lucile Waldheim, also well known in women's athletic circles, will play the leading feminine roles, served as president last year.

The newly organized company, which will be known as the Popular Players, will produce pictures for the Hercules Film Productions with which Mr. Poll

John M. Charles, vice-president of the Hercules company, has been signed by the syndicate to act as head cameraman for the new company, and George Brewster, another athlete, has been engaged to play supporting roles.

In Finis Fox Film

Fred Malatesta is portraying the sympathetic role of the French Canadian in the Finis Fox picture, "The Man Between," now in the course of production at the Fine Arts studios. Mr. Malatesta won high praise for his brilliant performance in the Morosco stage success, "Mike Angeleo." He will also be seen soon in an important role in support of Katharine MacDonald in "Refuge."

EX-PUG TRAINER, NOW ACTOR, SIGNS WITH R.C.

Tom Wilson, long prominent on the stage and screen as a character actor, has joined the rapidly growing roster of stars now serving under the Robertson-Cole banner.

Wilson signed a long-term contract last week, according to an announcement by Emile Offenman, general manager of the studios.

Before he took up the stage as a career Tom Wilson was one of the best known trainers of pugilists in America. He helped train Fitzsimmons, Jeffries, Corbett and Kid McCoy for some of their biggest ring battles.

LENORE ULRIC WILL STAR IN "TIGER ROSE" FILM

Through a partnership arrangement between the firm of Warner Brothers and David Belasco, it was learned that Lenore Ulric will be starred in a screen version of Mr. Belasco's great stage success, "Tiger Rose."

Miss Ulric has been appearing for the past two seasons in the Belasco play, "Kiki." While the popularity of the play shows no signs of abatement, Miss Ulric, however, had planned to go to Europe this summer for a vacation. But on the advice of Mr. Belasco, following the consummation of the picture arrangement, she will terminate her engagement at the Belasco Theatre the latter part of May and leave immediately for the Warner Brothers studios here to begin active work on "Tiger Rose."

An important feature in connection with the arrangements is that Mr. Belasco will personally, and for the first time in his career, invade a photoplay studio in order to infuse into the filming of the production the high standards he so successfully employs in his stage plays. He is expected to leave New York for Los Angeles about June 1.

P. A. a Pa Again

Al Risley, director of publicity of the Fine Arts Studios, is the proud father of a 10-pound boy, born Tuesday, March 20th, at his home, 4530 Hollywood Boulevard. This is Mr. Risley's second male heir, the other child being two years of age. The new born tot, who has already displayed a marked tendency to favor an Underwood, and the mother, are doing nicely. Al thanks you.

"DOUG" BREAKS ALL PARIS RECORDS

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" started its first engagement in Continental Europe at the Salle Marivaux, Paris, on February 16th and has made a greater success than any American or European motion picture production that has ever been presented, according to reports.

The receipts of the first and second weeks' engagements were not only larger than any motion picture house had ever played to in Paris, but greater than any two weeks' receipts in any of the dramatic theatres. It is interesting to note that out of four productions which have heretofore made records in receipts in France, three were photoplays of stars comprising the United Artists. They were: Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro," Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," and D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East;" the fourth production was the French picture, "L'Atlantide."

The French papers, which ordinarily do not review at length motion picture productions, gave long and enthusiastic accounts of "Robin Hood."

The engagements will continue at the Salle Marivaux at least until the warm weather and it is more than likely that the production will extend through the summer months.

A cable just received by Douglas Fairbanks from Norris Wilcox, manager of the United Artists' office at Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, indicates that the European triumph of "Robin Hood" will be duplicated in South America. "Robin Hood," biggest success ever in Argentine," Wilcox's cable read, "Four houses completely sold out first night."

SPANISH NOBLEMAN WINS FEATURE ROLE IN FILM

Don Armando, the well-known Spanish sportsman, formerly captain of King Alfonso's guards, is the latest addition to the cast of "Why Do We Live?" an all-star special feature now being produced by West Coast Productions Company. Don Armando is a member of the Spanish nobility. He has been featured in several five-reel pictures in Spain, and is a recent arrival in America. The West Coast Productions Co. is the first American producing company to feature Don Armando in a series of special productions.

Within Filmland's Inner Portals

Mario Carillo is working for Gasnier in "Daughters of the Rich," which picture features Gaston Glass.

Mary Lee Wise is now playing an important role with Pola Negri in "The Cheat," under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

Douglas Z. Doty has succeeded Eugene B. Lewis as Editor-in-Chief of the Advisory Bureau of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

Paul Weigel has started work with Sam Wood in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife." He is playing Gloria Swanson's father in the picture.

Leatrice Joy is busy assembling the wardrobe she will use while interpreting the stellar role in Cecil B. De Mille's next production, "The Ten Commandments."

William Conklin is the latest actor to lap-dissolve his engagement. While finishing his part in "Daytime Wives" he started to work in "The Meanest Man in the World."

Josie Sedgwick is starting a series of outdoor pictures with the H. & B. productions under the direction of Cliff Smith. Mr. Smith will also play opposite Miss Sedgwick in this series.

Joe Roberts, the rotund comedian who has just finished a long engagement in Buster Keaton's initial full-length comedy, "The Three Ages," has also finished erecting his new $25,000 home.

Zenobia and Ruth Emerson, sisters known to their friends in pictures as "sunshine and storm," have just concluded a three weeks' engagement at Universal City in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Edmund Cobb, who just finished a feature picture with William Duncan, has started with Harry Carey in "The Miracle Baby." This picture is being directed by Val Paul and the company is at present on location at Truckee.

Clara Horton has just completed the tenth of "The Fighting Blood" series, under the direction of Mal St. Clair of the Robertson-Cole Studios. Miss Horton will finish her present engagement in about seven weeks.

The fourth episode of the latest Universal serial, "The Eagle's Talons," starring Ann Little, has just been completed. Final scenes were "shot" at Balboa and Riverside, California. Work on the next chapter will begin immediately.

Clara Horton is conquering the terpsichorean art as well as the cinema. She won an exhibition fox-trot at the Plantation and carried off a silver loving cup as her prize last week.

Edna Murphy, petite and charming leading woman, has the feminine lead in "The Man Between," Finis Fox's third independent production, which is now being filmed at the Fine Arts Studios.

Glenn Hunter, whose portrayal of the screen-struck boy of "Merton of the Movies," has been one of the biggest Broadway hits in years, has just signed a five-year contract to star in Paramount Pictures.

The American Historical Review and Motion Picture Exposition, which opens in Los Angeles next July, will commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine.

Alberta Vaughn, who has just completed a series of comedies, serving as a foil for Clyde Cook, has been signed by Mack Sennett to a year's contract. She will co-star with Harry Gribbon in a series of fun-films.

Myrtil Stedman, musical comedy star and motion picture actress, has been engaged by Charles J. Brabin to play Olive Kingston in his production of Elinor Glyn's original story, "Six Days," for Goldwyn.

After four months in New York, Philip V. Kroha, production manager of the Richard Walton Tully productions, has returned to Los Angeles, to again take charge of Tully's studio affairs and manage the production of his pictures, the first of which will be "Tribly."

George Rigas, the Grecian star who is now in New York conferring with a group of wealthy promoters for the purpose of organizing a motion picture company to film ancient classics of Grecian literature, is expected to return to Hollywood next week.

Current rumors have it that Charles Thurston, who played important roles in five Will Rogers films for Goldwyn, will be selected by Hal Roach to support the comedian in the series of two-reel comedies he will produce at the Hal Roach Studios.

Max Parker, who has acted as art director for the Paramount West Coast Studios the last seven years, has left for Honolulu, where he will enjoy a month's vacation. Arthur Kook-en will take charge of Parker's responsibilities during the director's absence.

Victor Potel, filmdom's comedy character actor de luxe, has placed in an orphanage the little negro baby left on his door-step recently. He presented a $100 check to be spent on the unfortunate at the same time.

Clyde Cook, who recently finished his contract as a featured comedian for William Fox, will soon commence the filming of his first comedy under the terms of his new contract with Lou Anger.

Joe Roberts, whose next notable screen appearance will be made in Buster Keaton's initial full-length feature comedy, "The Three Ages," can truthfully boast of being the biggest man in pictures—at least, one of them. Joe weighs more than 300 pounds.

Frank Mayo, ex-Universal star and now under contract with Goldwyn, has been assigned the leading male role opposite Corinne Griffith in Elinor Glyn's "Six Days," to be directed by Charles J. Brabin, Goldwyn's latest acquisition to their directorial staff.

Rex Taylor has severed his connections with Sennett and will once again be a free-lance writer. He is at present working on his second story for R-C, the first one of which is titled "Blow Your Own Horn," and will go into production very soon.

Eileen Sedgwick has started her engagement in "Daniel Boone," the historical serial which is being produced at Universal City, starring Jack Mower and Miss Sedgwick, under the direction of J. Marchant and Frank Messinger.

Louise Lorraine, who last week finished enacting the leading feminine role opposite Art Acord in the Universal serial, "Oregon Trail," is expected to sign a long-term contract offered her by a leading producer to enact stellar roles in dramatic productions.

75,000 books, loaded in two huge trucks, were transported to the Lasky Studios, where they will be used in a college library scene for the latest William De Mille production, "Only Thirty-Eight," featuring Lois Wilson, May McAvoy, Elliott Dexter and George Fawcett.

Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle, "Twenty Dollars," has just been finished at Universal City, and Doris Pawn, who enacted the leading feminine role, has taken a five-day leave of absence from her studio work to move her household belongings into her newly built bungalow.

Josephine Adair, six-year-old actress, finished her engagement in Frank Borzage's "Terwilliger" last Saturday, and on Monday morning started enacting an important role in Mack Sennett's new comedy, with Teddy, the canine.

Hugh Dierker's latest feature production, "The Other Side," will be finished next week, and Fritz Brunette, who plays the leading role, intends to spend two weeks resting at Catalina Islands—that is, if the producers will let her.

Helen Ferguson's brilliant performance in the Goldwyn production of "Hungry Hearts," is considered by many dramatic critics as one of the most intellectual displays of histrionic endeavors offered during the year 1922.

Edith Stayart has been cast and has started work in "The Eagle's Talons" at Universal under the direction of Duke Worne. Miss Stayart is playing the character of "Helen." Ann Little and Fred Thompson are featured in this picture and at the present time are finishing the fourth episode.

Doris Baker, screen ingenue who recently finished a bit in Charles Ray's "The Courtship of Miles Standish," is now the proud possessor of a new Chevrolet touring car, and has proceeded to give it a rakish touch by adding all kinds of beautiful little accessories such as bumpers, wind-deflectors, etc.

After seventeen years of "big time" vaudeville, James Barrows has decided to direct his histrionic efforts toward gaining recognition as an artist of the screen, and is enacting one of the important roles in Hugh Dierker's "The Other Side," now in the course of production at the Fine Arts Studios.

Following the completion of "Vanity Fair," James R. Diamond, long-time cameraman for Hugo Ballin, will go with Edward Dillon for one Tiffany picture, "Broadway Gold," also to be made at the Goldwyn studio. This arrangement will continue only while Mr. Ballin is selecting and preparing his next story, which will star Mabel Ballin.

One of the most interesting figures these days at the United Studios is Conrad Tritschler, one of Europe's most celebrated scenic artists, who is under contract with Richard Walton Tully to design the settings for the forthcoming all-star production of "Tribly." Mr. Tritschler is a native of Carlisle, Cumberland, England.

CHAMPION TITLER GETS "LOVING CLOCK"

At a luncheon given by the officials and directors of the Fox Film Corporation, this week at the Montmartre Cafe, Hollywood, Thomas N. Miranda, who for several years has been Editor-in-Chief of the Fox West Coast Studios, was presented with a magnificent clock, upon which was engraved:

"To Tom, with appreciation of his Fox Friends."

Mr. Miranda is known as the "Title King," having titled more pictures than any living person in the motion picture industry, included among which were many of the pictures which will go down in history as real super-productions.

After three years under the Fox banner, Mr. Miranda returns to be Title Editor of the Goldwyn Productions, with whom he was associated previously, both in New York and on the West Coast.

Among those present at the luncheon tendered in his honor, were: Tom Mix, Jack Ford, Sol Wurtzel, John Gilbert, Scott Dunlap, William Wellman, Charles "Buck" Jones, Jerome Storm, Jack Strumwasser, E. J. Flynn, Bernard Durning and Dustin Farnum.

McGREGOR, "EXTRA" YEAR AGO, TO LEAD IN "TUT"

From a mere "extra" to a featured player on the screen within the short period of a year is the rapid progress that has been made by Malcolm McGregor, young motion picture actor who has just been signed to play the leading role in the production, "Tutankhamen," by William P. S. Earle. McGregor was picked out of a large group of prominent screen leading men and now he will be given the opportunity he has been waiting for ever since he decided upon a film career.

Young McGregor has had a very quick rise to the top. His first picture was "The Prisoner of Zenda." Later he played in "Broken Chains," "All the Brothers Were Valiant" and "Can a Woman Love Twice?"

In spite of his limited experience he has made good and is rated by many as one of the coming screen favorites. In "Tutankhamen" with Carmel Myers, Sam De Grasse and other players, McGregor will have a real chance to show what he can do. Production of the picture was started this week by Director Earle.

Pat Harmon, playing "Oil" Kirby with Reginald Barker, has gone to Banff, Canada, with the company on location.

VILLAGE BUILT FOR "SCARAMOUCHE" WITHOUT USE OF T-SQUARE OR PLUMB

Gavrillac, a French town of the eighteenth century reproduced on a 60-acre lot in the Hollywood foothills for use in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production, was built without the use of a single T-square or a plumb, considered indispensable implements of the arts of carpentry and masonry.

There is not a single straight line in the architecture of any of the buildings which include a castle, inn, stores, houses and smaller buildings. Buildings in French towns of 1789 were usually rambling and often ramshackle compositions of stone and timbers with thatched or roughly shingled roofs, never constructed with the least attempt at geometrical symmetry.

According to one of the draughtsmen who assisted Mr. Ingram in planning the village many of the buildings standing in such towns as Gavrillac in 1789 had been standing for scores of years and had been put together in a most haphazard fashion.

"A French peasant would decide to build a home and he probably would call in one or two of his friends to help him," the draughtsman said. "He'd take one big stone and drop it at a given spot. Then he'd take another and toss it several yards away. That would be another corner of the dwelling. The only yardstick they ever used was a section of the limb of a tree. The result was that the floor plan of their dwellings was irregular.

"Perhaps this peasant's son would marry and, wishing to remain with his parents, would build an additional story to his father's house. He might want an extra room so beams would be laid across the top of the lower story and would extend over the edge. Houses of this top-heavy variety were common."

This kind of construction is far more difficult to duplicate than a more modern type. Stone and plaster with an occasional timber comprise the material used and work proceeded much more slowly than if the workers had been engaged in building along lines with which they were more familiar.

Mr. Ingram has selected Ramon Novarro for the leading male role in "Scaramouche" while the chief feminine character will be portrayed by Alice Terry, the young director's wife. Mr. Ingram has even greater resources at his command than when he made "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and expects to be engaged six months in filming it.

DANCE CONTEST FINALS EXCITE FILMLANDERS

All sorts of excitement is buzzing about the Ambassador Dancing Contest finals which will take place in April. A great many are betting that Jack Pickford dancing with Alice Lake will win, while others feel convinced that May McAvoy in her quiet little way may sneak off with the Ambassador's $500 trophy. There are one or two dark horses to be considered, one of which is the young man who sprung into fame as a result of these contests when seen dancing for a cup by Jesse L. Lasky, who was a judge at the time, this being none other than Ricardo Cortez, who in the preliminaries danced with Miss Katherine Keith, a well-known Los Angeles society girl.

There is also much speculation in Los Angeles as to whether a society couple or motion picture couple will win the prize. At any rate, both factions are rapidly getting their cohorts together for a big showdown.

Stars Entertain Stars

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Williams recently entertained Miss Constance Talmadge and Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn at a Coconut Grove party. Mrs. Williams wore an evening gown of cerise velvet with silver. Mrs. Washburn looked extremely demure in white satin. Miss Talmadge wore black velvet.

ANOTHER COMEDIAN IS ADDED TO "GREED" CAST

Erich von Stroheim has engaged another comedian for "Greed."

Hughie Mack, a funmaker of vaudeville and motion pictures, will play Heise, the harness-maker in the picturization of Frank Norris' "McTeague."

Mack played in many Pathe pictures, and for Metro, for Robertson-Cole and other companies.

Other ex-comedians who will be called on to play tragedy under von Stroheim's direction in his first picture for Goldwyn are ZaSu Pitts, Dale Fuller, Sylvia Ashton, Chester Conklin, Frank Hayes, Cesare Gravina, and Gibson Gowland.

Barker Starts Another

Reginald Barker has started on the production of G. B. Lancaster's widely-read novel, "The Law-Bringers," as his second big special for Louis B. Mayer presented through Metro. Several months have already been spent in preparations for the picture, and at least six months more will be consumed by the director in its making. A strong cast of individual stars interpret the principal characters, the list including: Renee Adoree, Earl Williams, Pat O'Malley, Barbara La Marr, Wallace Beery, Josef Swickard, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa.

NIBLO WILL MAKE "APPLEJACK" AT CLUNE'S!

Fred Niblo's production unit of the Louis B. Mayer Studios will move to Clune's studios and occupy entire space there for the filming of "Captain Applejack."

Through negotiations conducted by Irving G. Thalberg, vice-president of Louis B. Mayer Productions, and M. C. Levee of the United Studios, the Niblo unit will be given unlimited facilities at the leased studio for the big production.

Reginald Barker and John M. Stahl, both producing for Mr. Mayer at his Mission Road Studios are occupying all available space and the big and numerous settings for "Captain Applejack" made the temporary change necessary.

The move comes on the eve of production for Mr. Niblo. He has completed the script in collaboration with Miss Bess Meredyth, and Matt Moore has just returned from New York for the title role. Others in the cast are: Enid Bennett, Barbara La Marr, Robert McKim and Thomas Ricketts.

"Captain Applejack" takes Mr. Niblo back to Clune's Studio for his third production. He made "The Mark of Zorro" and "The Three Musketeers" there.

PLANS FILMING ANCIENT GREEK TRAGEDIES SOON

Dramatic plays, those that flourished approximately 500 years before the creation of the new modern world, will be revived via the motion picture screen, according to the latest announcement from George Rigas, who is now in New York, conferring with a group of wealthy Greeks who are desirous of establishing a picture company, the purpose of which will be to reincarnate their native country's most popular dramatic classics, long forgotten.

Mr. Rigas, who some years ago was considered the foremost matinee idol of Athens, and who is now a prominent character in American motion picture circles, was chosen by his countrymen as the logical exponent of the ancient drama to head their contemplated company, and he will exercise complete supervision over each production as well as to enact one of the important roles.

Although it has not been definitely decided, it is planned to film as their vehicle, an adaptation from the tragedies interpreted by either Aeschylus or Sophocles, the first Grecian dramatists to subordinate choral performances to dialogue.

Mr. Rigas is expected to return to Hollywood within the next ten days, after contracts and agreements have been signed.

Camera's
Weekly Wake-up

Sweet peace seems determined to turn sour.

The Southern California climate does not have to be bragged about. It speaks for itself, sonny.

The situation in the photoplay-producing field is entirely satisfactory since things are looking up higher than ever before. Therefore, it is an ideal time to produce the goods.

These London birds who put the ban on Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country," need a little wing-clipping—they're trying to fly too high with their authority.

We hereby make and second the move that all branches of the film industry move to Los Angeles instantaneously. If the voting is based on common-sense, it'll be a landslide for the move.

America is the white spot of the world just now. Southern California is the white spot of America. Los Angeles is the white spot of Southern California, and, the motion picture industry is the white spot of Los Angeles.

We don't know who started the censorship craze, but we do know the great common people are going to finish it. There is every indication of the public disgust with censors being pronounced enough to pronounce a final fate for them.

Clarence W. Horn has entered the race for the Board of Freeholders to be nominated at the Los Angeles primary May 1st. This is a political note of no interest to music-lovers! Moreover, it bids fair to be a toot-toot race.

Every once in a while they catch a boot-legger and it is so unusual that the newspapers "play it up" in sensational headlines. Yet, if a fellow let it be known that he would like to buy a little liquor, he's pestered by so many bootleggers, eager for his trade, that he has every reason to believe he is the speaker of the day at a convention.

The fact that avoidable automobile accidents are increasing with an alarming rapidity simply proves there is no prospect of a dearth in fools. A good remedy for the motor situation is, to pass a law requiring every applicant for a driver's license to prove he is not a fool, the upshot of which would be that most all the automobile manufacturers would be compelled to go out of business. Whatta tribe we modern mortals be!

ENTHUSIASM—A FILMLAND ESSENTIAL

Whooop 'er up always! The world needs enthusiasm and more enthusiasm of the right sort. Luke-warm, shilly-shally espousal is a detriment instead of a boon. No one can eschew contributing a just share of oil to the fires of intensity of purpose and be wholly fit to occupy a place of importance in the affairs of this mundane sphere. A laissez-faire in the business of waxing enthusiastic is palpably fallacious and exceedingly intolerable. All that merits it must be boosted, promoted and URGED. Absolute purity would be vitiated if it were not enthused over. Magnanimity might be deemed futile if it aroused no enthusiasm. Likewise would honesty suffer if there should be any cessation in praising it with energy. Fulsome degeneration would certainly follow a prolonged era of apathy if it happened to be general enough.

Of all the essentials extant the one essential which IS essential to them all is Enthusiasm. If we were not enthusiastic over our regard for wheat as tremendously indispensable we would probably be careless and possibly negligent in conserving it. And how far could any nation go toward winning a war without surpassing enthusiasm?

YOU MUST HAVE ENTHUSIASM IN COPIOUS QUANTITIES BEFORE YOU CAN BE EVEN A GOOD CITIZEN.

Enthusiasm takes a man to the polls regularly to cast his ballot for what he regards as the best obtainable government. Enthusiasm keeps his interest whetted to that keen perspective which enables him to discern the evil tendencies of lethargy in meeting the obligations of his suffrage.

Without ENTHUSIASM of the big-letter type no aspirant can achieve the desired exalted purpose. Go after a thing in a half-hearted way and you will make the headway of a snail if you make any headway at all. Be all enthusiastic and you will greatly facilitate your task. We know many people who owe their success to 75 per cent. enthusiasm and 25 per cent. ability. You can get along splendidly with little ability, but you cannot navigate the seas of ambition to any appreciable extent without an abundance of enthusiasm.

So, in whatever you essay, be sure to make the attempt with a superlative degree of enthusiasm. If you possess a talent, remember no one will enthuse over it unless you are contagiously enthusiastic in your efforts to develop it and to realize on its value. Yes, you can be enthusiastic over your own ability without lapsing into a state of ego. You need not be foolish in your zeal. You can be modest while you enthuse. And a combination of these two qualities will undoubtedly extricate you from a veritable labyrinth of difficulties such as you are sure to encounter in an earnest pursuit of ambition.

Throughout your struggles to attain a high goal always remember the fact that unabating enthusiasm is an essential, and if you will act accordingly satisfaction and reassuring contentment will likely be only a part of your happy reward. By all means never let enthusiasm die.

EXHAUSTS By AL MARTIN

The best way to raise money for the Studio Club is to sell keys to the place.

The newest club to be organized is the "Location Club." The idea of this club is to protect the fair sex at home while the other sex are at work on location.

Now that "Bull" Montana has finished his snow picture, he will again take up his dancing lessons.

Harry Northrup is playing a leading heavy role in "The Living Dead." The title is rather confusing, but then again have any of you folks ever been to Pomona?

Now that Betty Compson has finally written a song, Valentino, the "shiek" of the newspapers, should burst forth with one entitled, "Life Is Just One Wedding After Another."

"Red" Uhlman, the 158-lb. wonder of the Hollywood Stadium, has appeared in the last six boxing shows there. John Beck speaks out loud asking if "Red" is in stock. Not so bad, eh, what?

Monte Brice will supervise the production of Gerald Beaumont stories at the U. There will be many people out to see U now, Monte.

Now that the benefit craze is on, Ed Sturgis suggests we give one for the broken-down golf players.

Monty Banks suggests a little benefit for the actors that are holding out for more salary.

Another suggestion was one for the ex-casting directors whose popularity ceased when they went out of office. I can't tell who suggested this one.

Sam Kress, the smiling drug-gist, who has been called America's greatest actor, should be starred in this benefit program, that is, if it can be put over. But the question arises, can a suitable cast be gotten together to support him? The gag is, the picture people support him as it is.

Mervyn LeRoy was so accustomed to working in benefits that when he finished his last picture he forgot to ask for his salary.

Many ways have been tried to find star material, but this is the most novel, and it works. To get credit, particularly in the Hollywood stores, one must have a wonderful personality, so one of our well-known producers, seeking new faces with personality, discovered who had the biggest charge accounts, getting of course the people with the best personalities. Figure this one out?

Rupert Hughes claims that "Souls For Sale" is an inside story of film life. Of course, this does not make it so.

Rubber has gone up in price. Maybe that's why Paul Gerson's off-spring, whose first name is Charley, wears sport shirts.

The war created many words, but Rex Ingram must be given credit for "Scaramouche."

Now that William De Mille is making "Only 38" reminds me of that old poem from the pen of Vic Potel entitled: "I'd rather have two girls at 19 than one at 38." P. S. If Mrs. Potel sees this, remember, it's all in fun.

Mary Pickford, who has been called "the mother of the trees," sure started something. Billy Joy is now trying to save the poor telephone poles.

B. P. Fineman, who produces pictures at the Principal Studios, latest is "Don't Marry for Money." Oh! Mr. B. P. can you tell us how to not to.

Many people have inquired what my friend, Billy West, is doing now. For the benefit of those who inquired and others that read this, Billy is in vaudeville. How long this condition will last I do not know.

Billy Bevan at Sennett's is making a novel and original story entitled: "Domestic Economy." Give us the recipe, Billy, we'll try it on the piano.

Charles Brabin is on the second week of "Six Days." This reads funny to me, but it must be so because I read it in Camera!

Harry Dunkinson had a wonderful party at his home which I attended. Being present I was in a position to give Harry several news notes. Of course I am not seeking invitations, but after Monday I have no engagements whatsoever.

ANN ASPIRES TO WRITE NAME IN SKY

Ann Little, veteran star of almost innumerable serials, is hunting another thrill.

She's ridden the fastest horses, automobiles and trains that can be found on land.

Several times has she gone beneath the waves in speeding submarines.

Only last week the actress, who is now starring in "The Eagle's Talons" for Universal, was initiated into the mysteries of running a speed yacht at Balboa.

And now she wants to write her name in the sky.

For several days an imported airman has been spreading the name of a well-known brand of cigarettes through the heavens, in letters apparently a mile high, and Ann thinks that, as she has made as many airplane flights as any actress in the business, her name ought to be up there, too.

So she has written to "Lucky Strike," asking him if such a thing can be arranged, and if he's agreeable, she will make a flight with him within a day or so.

Whether he is at liberty to write her name, though, is a matter for debate, as conflicting reports say that he is under contract exclusively with the tobacco company to advertise its wares for an indefinite time.

TOM GIBSON REPEATS TRIUMPH IN PAPA ROLE

When the Stork Special whistled into Hollywood last Friday a little stranger hopped off, tagged (C. O. D.) for Mr. and Mrs. Tom Gibson. From the advance notices it was believed her name would be David, but a last-minute flurry straightened out the "mistake" and she was properly "way-billed" as Doris Margaret. Now everyone is happy. Tom Jr., and Roma, her brother and sister, didn't think much of the "consignment," because she couldn't walk or talk, but when they learned there are no "exchanges" possible under the present system of "distribution" they became reconciled.

Miss Doris weighed nine and a half pounds, and while a bit incoherent as regards her speech, Mrs. Tom had no difficulty in translating for the interviewer, to-wit: "That she was dad-burned glad the movies were in their infancy so she and it could grow up together; that she hoped Hollywood was half as lively as they believed it was in Oshgosh because she hated to have to go to Monte Carlo for her thrills; and that she wished her father would shave his upper lip and get busy on his next Ranger Production to follow the "Web of the Law."

NOTED FENCER ENGAGED FOR NEW TALMADGE FILM

Fred Cavens, who acted as co-director and fencing master during the filming of Max Linder's famous travesty, "The Three-Must-Get-There's," has been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to supervise the numerous sword combats which will figure in the forthcoming Norma Talmadge production, "Ashes of Vengeance." This story is taken from the 16th century and will afford Mr. Cavens the opportunity to put to advantage his well-known skill and knowledge of dagger and rapier fencing, of which he has made a life-long study. While in Paris, he gave a fencing exhibition at the Theatre de la Porte St. Martin, called "The Duel Through the Ages."

CHRISTIE LEASES FIRST EXPOSITION BUNGALOW

The Christie studios have signed up for Bungalow Number One, where producing companies are to have exhibits at the American Historical Review and Motion Picture Exposition here during the month of July.

The space is the first studio reservation to be made, and it is expected that practically every film organization will have an exhibit in the grounds at Exposition Park, where all phases of motion picture endeavor will be represented. The Motion Picture exhibits will, however, not be the only ones for many reservations are being made daily by foreign countries, especially by the South and Central American governments.

ANOTHER PICTURE OF OLD SPAIN TO BE MADE

In an effort to continue his successes in the making of romantic photoplays, Emmett J. Flynn, well-known director who recently signed a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Corporation, will direct "In the Palace of the King," as his first production under the lion banner.

"In the Palace of the King," written by F. Marion Crawford, won success both as a novel and on the stage. With Viola Allen as the star, the play was first produced in New York about 1900. The book has proved one of the most popular of Crawford's works.

Mr. Flynn, who directed "The Connecticut Yankee," "Monte Cristo," and other romantic successes, is enthusiastic over the selection of "In the Palace of the King."

His first Goldwyn picture, in which will be produced many rich and colorful scenes in the Spanish court during the reign of King Phillip II, is to be the most lavish production Mr. Flynn has attempted. An unusually large cast will be used in the picture.

The story, "a love tale of Old Madrid," deals with the romantic age of Spain, when the nation, immediately after the conquest of the Americas, was in her height of wealth and glory.

The story centers about the loves and adventures of Don John, an Austrian whose exploits had made him the idol of Spain and who held a higher place in the hearts of the people than even the king.

The work of adapting the story to the screen is now being rushed, and actual filming of the story will begin as soon as possible.

ANOTHER NEW NAME IN FILMLAND'S "WHO'S WHO"

Write a new name in Filmland's "Who's Who"—that of E. Wesley Borman.

Although it's a new name, the man who bears it isn't new, by any means, in the film colony.

He is E. W. Borman, who for various reasons has decided to spell out his second name for use in the films.

Borman said today that he didn't mind being mistaken for a business man when he talked to casting directors over the telephone; as a matter of fact, he would like very much to be a real business man, if he could make more money at it than he makes in pictures.

But for various reasons, of which this is only one, he has decided upon the change, and henceforth will be known as E. Wesley Borman. It will look more "actorish" on the screen, anyway, he thinks, than the old one.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Eva Novak is motoring through northern California prior to resuming her work before the camera.

Taylor Graves, who is working under the direction of William de Mille in "Only 38," is playing the love interest opposite May McAvoy.

Lillian Lawrence has been engaged to play a leading role with Frank Sheridan and James Morrison in the new Victor Schertzinger production at Vitagraph.

George Stewart has finished his engagement in "Crossed Wires," which features Gladys Walton and was produced at Universal under the direction of King Baggot.

Ann May has returned to Hollywood following the completion of her role in the Graf production of "The Fog," which is being filmed at the San Mateo studios for Metro.

H. H. Van Loan, noted scenarist, left Los Angeles last week for Santa Barbara, where he started a tour of the entire United States and Canada to deliver lectures in all the important cities.

Norton C. Travis has just completed photographing a five-reel feature entitled "The Poppy Runners," with an all-star cast headed by Irene Rich, Noah Beery, William Lowery, Tully Marshall, Jack Curtis, Fred Hank and Jane Talent, and directed by Al Neitz.

G. Gardner Sullivan has been obtained by the Jackie Coogan Productions to adapt the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, "Long Live the King," for filming purposes. Eve Unsell, prominent continuity writer, will prepare the working script from Mr. Sullivan's adaptation.

Roy Meyers, formerly of Universal City, and the ex-assistant manager of the Hotel Alexandria, has been appointed secretary to Sol Lesser, president of the Principal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Meyers will be quartered at Mr. Lesser's offices at the United studios.

Dorothy Phillips is the defendant in a law suit brought to court by Lichtig & Rothwell, Inc., booking agents, who allege Miss Phillips contracted with them to pay 10 per cent of the salary received from the Principal Pictures Corporation for her services in "The World's a Stage." The plaintiffs ask $2,000, their alleged commission.

Margaret Landis has been signed to play the leading feminine role opposite Harry Carey in his new Robertson-Cole production.

Although Mabel Ballin is best known as an actress, she was formerly an art student, and received favorable comment on landscapes exhibited at the Art Students' League.

Ricardo Cortez has started work on "Children of Jazz" at Lasky's under the direction of Jerome Storm. The cast includes Eileen Percy, Theodore Kosloff and Estelle Taylor.

Viola Dana has completely recovered from her recent appendicitis operation and after a short rest will start work on the first picture to be made since she signed her new Metro contract.

Baby Mary Rose, star of the Shell-Craft studios, has recovered from a recent attack of pneumonia. The child was taken ill following the completion of her latest comedy, "Means and Motors."

Helen Ferguson, soon to be seen in the principal role in the Edgar Lewis production of "The Right of the Strongest," is the latest famous screen name to be linked with the plans of the forthcoming picturization of "Ben Hur." However, Miss Ferguson refuses to comment on reports relative to her possible engagement for this picture.

Walter Roselle, prominent New York broker, will be the guest of Joseph Schenck for the next two weeks, during which time he intends to make a detailed survey of present moving picture conditions. Upon his arrival, Mr. Roselle declared Los Angeles in twenty years will rank close to New York, as it is at present the financial white spot of the United States.

The filming of "Penrod and Sam," the sequel to "Penrod," has been started. Martha Mattox, who has one of the leading roles in it, is also doing a large share of the acting before the Goldwyn cameras now registering "Three Wise Fools." Truly, this is a busy era in all filmdom and many of the more popular photoplayers hold down two or three jobs at a time.

Peter J. Brady, President of the State Allied Printing Trades Council, last week urged New York motion picture theatre owners to lend their efforts in the fight against motion picture censors by writing letters to their Assemblymen and Senators, pointing out the great unnecessary expense and burden upon theatre patrons because of the existing censor laws.

Erich von Stroheim once tried out for a job in a rathskeller. Like Tommy Tucker, he sang for his supper, plus $3. But the patrons didn't like his song, so he had to pay for the supper with his last nickel.

Elsie Jane Julian, wife of Rupert Julian, Universal director, is preparing to start actual filming on her first of a series of Baby Peggy stories, which she will direct under the supervision of her husband.

According to a statement from Mae Busch, Goldwyn star, she will become the bride of Albert Wilkie, Goldwyn publicity writer next October, immediately after receiving her final divorce decree from Francis J. McDonald, her former husband.

Helen Daniels, daughter of Josephus Daniels, ex-secretary of the navy, has become a motion picture actress. Miss Daniels made her debut last week before the motion camera at San Diego for the Goldwyn production of "Red Lights."

Antique furniture of the Louis XV and Louis XVI period, valued at $75,000, is en route to Los Angeles, where it will be used in the latest Norma Talmadge production, "Ashes of Vengeance," to be filmed at the United studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Three more beautious maids have been added to grace the finishing touches of Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three." Carmelita Geraghty, Rhea Le Fort, and Jean Haskell—the latter two, beauty contest winners—will be seen on the ballroom floor of Neilan's most pretentious set.

"The Covered Wagon" is serving to give fresh impetus to the filming of photoplays of historical value. One of the most promising successors to this great Paramount success will be "The Oregon Trail," which is being made in fifteen two-reel episodes as a serial at Universal. Louise Lorraine is playing the principal feminine character in this picture with Art Acord portraying the role of the hero. Edward Laemmle is directing.

"The Meanest Man in the World" will soon come into being on the screen. Sol Lesser has started the photographing of scenes in this picturization of the George M. Cohan stage hit. Frances Raymond, called by many "The most beautiful mother on the screen," was the last member of an all-star cast to be signed for this feature. Bert Lytell and Bryant Washburn are among the other stars in the cast.

Still another producing unit seems assured for the early future. None other than the gigantic Joe Roberts will be the star of this contemplated new series of features and the company will bear his name. Mr. Roberts has only recently completed an important role in Buster Keaton's first full-length comedy, "The Three Ages."

James Kirkwood, star and director, has been signed by Goldwyn, and has left New York, where he has been starring in "The Fool." Before commencing actual work at the Goldwyn studios, Mr. Kirkwood will play the leading male role opposite Mrs. Wallace Reid in her anti-narcotic film, "The Living Dead," now in course of production at the Ince studios.

William Farnum's next starring picture has been titled "The Gun Fighter," and there is much speculation on how the censors of some eastern states will receive it, especially in view of the fact that Charles Thurston, the well-known screen villain, fills most every reel with almost hair-raising thrills in his manner of making himself a menace to the hero. It is said some of the fights staged by Farnum and Thurston are the most realistic ever screened.

Eddie Gribbon, who plays an important role in King Baggot's production of "Crossed Wires," a picture based on the mix-ups coincident to the modern telephone service and which has just been completed at Universal City, has just started a movement among fellow-actors in Hollywood to gradually abandon their automobiles to join his walking club. Mr. Gribbon claims the motor car craze is endangering the health of humanity because it encourages too much easy riding and no difficult hiking with a consequent suffering of human health for the want of sufficient and proper exercise.

The Palmerplay company has changed the title of their first production for a third time. It was originally called "Atone-ment." Then it was rechristened "Out of the Night." Now it bears the cognomen of "Storms of Judgment." At any rate, the filming of the feature has been much delayed due to illness and to unfavorable weather conditions while the company was on location, and Lloyd Hughes, the star of the picture, may now be able to finish in time to play the stellar role in "Terwilliger" for which he has been signed. However, it is possible the scenes in which he figures in said "Terwilliger" may be delayed until he can complete his present heroic characterization.

ACTRESS REPORTS SEEING NOTED FUGITIVE

Interest in the William N. Barrett case, the former husband of the wealthy Alice Drexel, and who is wanted by the police in connection with the recent theft of a $100,000 necklace from Mrs. John D. Spreckels, was transferred to Hollywood this week when Miss Wilson-Bailey, a character actress and a cousin of the elusive youth, reported that she had met him while alighting from her machine in front of her home.

Barrett was arrested here two years ago on suspicion of having the valuable necklace while in London, and was detained in the city jail for two days. He was released when English officers failed to send word that he was wanted. A day following his release, an order to hold him was received, but efforts to find him were fruitless.

When questioned, Miss Wilson-Bailey advanced the theory that in view of the fact her cousin was a close friend of Julian Eltinge, the famous female impersonator who is appearing at a Los Angeles theatre this week, it is highly possible he migrated to Southern California from his hiding place to visit with the noted artist. However, if this is true, he failed in his purpose, as Mr. Eltinge has not seen him for many months.

Private detective agencies are lending every effort to discover the fugitives whereabouts.

New "Lead" Gets Chance

A new juvenile actor, handsome enough to contest the laurels of the long-established favorites, will be introduced by the Goldwyn company in "Three Wise Fools." William Haines, selected one year ago by Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre from thousands of applicants in New York, and who has since been playing small parts and receiving training in cinema technique, has his first big chance as Gordon, the nephew in the King Vidor screen production of Austin Strong's popular play.

Opens Fencing School

Those interested in the revival of fencing will be glad to learn of a school which has been established in Hollywood, the purpose of which will be to teach the art of this ancient game. Fred Cavens, well-known fencer, who has participated in numerous large cinema productions, and Philip Brigandi, another authority on the technicalities of fencing, have opened such a school at 1626 North Hobart Boulevard.

If pictures continue to grow in popularity, the calamity-howlers may be forced to start complaining over the rawness of leaving such popularity "un-wasted."

RIDES HOME FROM EAST ON BLIZZARD, MOORE NEEDS MUCH THAWING

Swaddled in enough clothes to make an eskimo stuffy, and with every reference to eastern weather setting his arms swinging like a frost-bitten milkman, Matt Moore caught up with summer just outside of San Bernardino and rode home with the radiant lady.

Half the film colony at the station seemed a feeble force to get his heavy coat, his muffler and his padded gloves away from him until he made quite sure that he had outrun the blizzard.

Louis B. Mayer sent Moore to New York to see "Captain Applejack." Fred Niblo, ready now to start production on the colorful romance, called him home to play the title role.

"Captain Applejack" was cruising when Matt Moore reached New York, so he tacked and beat back into Detroit where he bottled up that roaring old pirate's brig and saw half a dozen performances.

Trying to remain incognito at least until he could venture to thrust a numb hand into the atmosphere in public greeting, Matt Moore did Detroit in the least conspicuous automobile in which Detroit abounds. He was identified, however, and thawed out sufficiently to make several personal appearances.

Wallace Eddinger, who plays "Captain Applejack" on the stage, and the screen star formed a mutual admiration society which will probably hold its first annual convention when the stage company visits Mr. Niblo's unit this summer. Such a junket is planned.

With Matt Moore home, and rapidly getting warm enough to work, Mr. Niblo is collaborating with Miss Bess Meredyth on the final script and production will begin at once. Doran Cox, chief of staff for Mr. Niblo, has arranged locations from a sailing fleet to an English town and Alvin Wyckoff, supervising cameraman, has made preliminary tests of Miss Enid Bennett, Robert McKim, Barbara La Marr and Thomas Ricketts of the cast.

A REAL REEL VETERAN AT FOUR

This little girl is four years and ten weeks old, and has worked in moving pictures four years. Her first picture was with Gloria Swanson at the old Triangle in which Fay played Gloria's child. She was ten weeks old when this picture was made. Since then she has worked in many feature productions and also in a Chester Comedy.

Robert Mackenzie, her father, featured her in a series of "Kid Comedies." At the Pantages Theatre this week Fay is in "When Love Comes."

She has a very important part in "Out of the Night," the Palmer Photoplay production, which is nearly completed.

FAY MACKENZIE

Why Mickey Grins

Mickey McBan, young film actor of three-and-one-half years, has just completed the only child role in Emile Chautard's "Daytime Wives" which was produced at the R-C studios. Others in the cast include such well-known players as Wyndham Standing, Grace Darmond, Dorelys Perdue, William Conklin, Edward Hearn, Katharine Lewis, Kenneth Gibson and Christina Mott. The broad grin, which is one of the distinguishing points of this little thespian, is broader than ever now, for his fond daddy, Fred McBan, has just returned from Canada, where he was engaged with the Trimble-Murfin unit filming the Strongheart pictures. The elder Mr. McBan is a motion picture technician.

Ill For First Time

Edward Connelly, Metro's veteran character actor, has been confined to his home for the past week with a severe attack of grippe. This is the first time in Mr. Connelly's professional career of more than thirty years that he has ever been ill. During the twenty years he was on the stage Mr. Connelly never missed a performance. Upon his recovery Mr. Connelly will enact a part in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro.

According to daily statistics, the railroads leading into Los Angeles have a powerful ally in the campaign to increase the population here in the "person" of General Stork, just now so very general as to keep doctors on the jump.

STAR BOWLED INTO LAKE, BATTLES TWO DOGS

Only his immense strength and quick wit saved Eddie Gribbon, well known film actor and athlete, from serious injury, this week.

As is his daily custom, Eddie arose bright and early and trotted over to Silver Lake Park, near Edendale, where he makes the round of the big lake, a course perhaps three miles in length, every day.

As he rounded a curve in the path which hugs the contour of the lakeshore, two giant bulldogs sprang at him.

Taken off his guard, the actor fell into the lake. The dogs plunged in after him, continuing their attack.

With blood streaming from two wounds in his right hand, and a long gash on his forehead, Gribbon managed to throw off his heavy sweater and clamber out of the water.

The dogs followed. One was rendered unconscious by a blow of the actor's heavy shoe; the other he put in a pacific humor by twisting its neck.

Whose the dogs were, where they belonged or how they fared after he subdued them Eddie doesn't know; neither does he care.

He's only hoping and praying that rabies doesn't result from the wounds.

Chances For Unknown

The Pioneer Writers Guild of America, 9 Charles St., New York City, will award prizes amounting to $600.00 to writers' and artists' whose work has never been published. The award will be divided as follows: Four prizes of $150.00 each for the best short story, poem, play and cartoon. This contest closes June 30th, 1923.

"Main Street" is Completed

The picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street," has been completed at the Warner Brothers studio under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Florence Vidor plays the role of Carol Milford, and Monte Blue portrays the part of Dr. Will Kennicott, while Alan Hale offers what is said to be a remarkable characterization of Bjorstan, the Swede.

Wes Craves Lore

Wesley Barry, the freckled screen king, has intellectual ambitions. He plans to go to college within a year, although he admits that as yet he hasn't decided what course he will pursue. At present he is confining his efforts to a personal appearance engagement with his latest Warner Brothers picture, "Heroes of the Street."

COMEDY STAR IN BAD SITUATION WITH LAW

Monty Banks, film comedian, has just come through an experience which for some time promised dire results.

Recently, on a hurried trip to San Francisco, where he went to confer with capitalists, it is understood, in connection with the formation of a new producing company, Banks was arrested at Atascadero.

The motorcycle officer who escorted him to Atascadero told John S. Calhoun, justice of the peace, that the comedian's Cadillac was making many more knots than the law allowed thereabouts.

Monty didn't know he was driving so fast, he told the judge; his speedometer was broken, he explained.

After being released, Banks came on to Los Angeles, and supplemented his verbal plea with a note, pleading for leniency.

Visions of a dark, dreary jail cell troubled his mind during the day, and made nightmares of his dreams at night.

Judge Calhoun, in his reply, showed that his brand of justice is tempered with mercy.

"The fine will be $5, the lowest I can assess," he wrote. "If that strikes your sense of humor as being too small, you can increase it to ten."

Monty, though, was very well pleased with the $5 brand of humor, and in forwarding it to the Atascadero judge, wrote, "I plead guilty to the charge" in addition to his thanks.

P. S. Oh, yes, Monty already has had that speedometer fixed, so garage owners needn't bother him seeking the job.

Pauline Buys a Home

Chalk up another movie resident for Hollywood. Pauline Garon, of "Adam's Rib" fame, has just closed a deal for a new home in the exclusive Wilshire district. She will move in as soon as the decorators and furnishers complete their work. Pauline and her sister, Lauretta, are living in an hotel until their new place is ready, when Pa and Ma Garon of Montreal, are to join them. The Garon family is one of that happy French kind and will be a welcome addition to the coast film colony where Pauline has recently made such meteoric strides in her film career.

Noted Critic Moves Here

Miss Amy Leslie, who has distinguished herself as dramatic critic of the Chicago Daily News for many years, is en route to Los Angeles, where she will make her future home. Before leaving Chicago, Miss Leslie was honored by a big farewell banquet, which was attended by many stars of the theatrical world.

STANDING FINISHES 6TH PICTURE WITH CHAUTARD

Wyndham Standing, well-known stage and screen star, has just completed enacting the leading role in "Daytime Wives" at the R-C studios, which was made under the direction of Emile Chautard. This marks the sixth these two have worked together.

Mr. Standing recently returned to Hollywood after an extended tour through Europe, and is much in demand at the present time. While abroad he was engaged by the Hollandia Film Company, and made a picture for them in Holland. He also spent some time in London.

The most notable of his many screen successes are "Earth-bound," proclaimed by many one of the most compelling pictures ever made, "Paid in Full," with Pauline Frederick, "Eyes of the Soul," with Elsie Ferguson, and "Smilin' Through," with Norma Talmadge, a recent release which has had successful runs everywhere. "Daytime Wives" offers Mr. Standing further opportunities to display his brilliant dramatic ability.

So, Zat's Zat

"Not only am I fully and finally divorced from Count Eugene Domska, but he is so well aware of that fact that shortly before I came to America I was told of his engagement to the Countess Allenfeld, daughter of the Danish Ambassador at Warsaw." That is Pola Negri's answer to the widely printed reports of her former husband's allegations that they had never been divorced and that therefore the famous Polish screen star was not free to marry Charlie Chaplin, to whom she recently announced her engagement.

Censors, Don Shock-absorbers!

The days of '49 have been revived in Edwin Carewe's latest production "The Girl of the Golden West." Old grizzled miners shuffle in and out of the "Polka Saloon," exchanging their "gold dust" for food and tools. The roulette wheel in one corner of the set is surrounded by miners who are staking some or all of their earnings. If one wins the others glare at him as he moves away and if he orders drinks they are all his close friends.

Sister Succeeds Sister

The initial production of the H. & B. Film Company has been completed, and Cliff Smith, who directed and played the male lead in the picture, is busy casting for a second production, to be started next week. Eileen Sedgwick, who played the feminine lead in the first picture, could not be engaged for the second in view of the fact that previously signed contracts prevented her doing so. However, Mr. Smith seemed anxious to keep the name of Sedgwick in his cast, and has engaged Miss Sedgwick's sister, Josie, to play the leading feminine role.

WANTED: LEADING LADY TO FLIRT—WITH DEATH

Motion picture actresses, rally 'round!

Are you a blonde? Fine! Step up a little closer.

Can you dive like Annette Kellerman and swim like a mermaid? You can? Great! You may get the job.

All of which is just a prelude to saying that Clifford B. Elfelt, independent producer, who is now engaged in preparing to film "Dangerous Men," is combing the film colony of Hollywood for a leading lady.

She must be a blonde, first and foremost.

Then, she must be able to dive beautifully, and also to swim perfectly; her life will depend upon her ability to swim, it is said, because one scene shows her plunging into a foaming rapids to escape the clutches of the "villyun."

Elfelt says he pays his cast every week, which will insure the winner of this part of getting a little enjoyment out of life before the final scene is shot.

In this, the leading lady is tied to a railroad track, according to the script, and a speeding express train passes over her.

Well? Want the job? Help yourself.

Anent Curing Kleig Eyes

Dr. W. I. Schuster, filmland's ex-ray chiropractor, located in the Bogardus Building, declares there is not only a positive cure, but also a sure preventative for the dreaded Kleig eye malady. He contends that Kleig eyes, as well as other optical troubles, can be cured and prevented by scientific chiropractic treatments, for the reason that such ailments are but a contraction of nerves and blood vessels leading to and from the eyes. By relieving this contraction of nerves, a result of the nervous strain under which photoplayers are constantly placed, the symptoms disappear, he claims.

ROBERTS CORRALS LATE CZAR'S COAT OF ARMS

Joe Roberts has a new family crest.

It's new, but it's old. And it belongs to him, but it isn't his.

That is to say—well, here's how it all happened:

Some time ago Joe was working over on the Fox "lot," in the leading role of "The Four-flusher," a "parody" on Erich von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives."

Major Phillip Prideaux, attached to the Ordnance Department of the British Army at Esquimault, B. C., was a frequent visitor on the set.

He praised the way in which the film was made, and on the day of his last visit asked the big comedian for a picture.

Joe complied with the request, and in return for the photograph received from Major Prideaux a bronze coat of arms which had been chiseled from one of the state carriages of the last Czar of Russia.

The coat of arms, with its Russian characters and lettering, is one of Roberts' prized possessions, and occupies a place of honor in his new home.

John, a Star Feeder

John, Hollywood's most popular restaurateur, claims to have assembled the largest all-star cast of food purveyors in any one food establishment in filmland. He has fifty-five artists behind the counters at which feed legions of cinema performers and motion picture in general who seem so prone to vie with each other in swarming into John's two cafes.

Filming at El Paso

The Allied Film Company, with studios located at El Paso, Texas, is filming a five-reel feature entitled, "Thou Shalt Not," under the direction of Dick Johnson, author of the story, who, incidentally, is director general of the organization. Upon completion of this vehicle, work will start immediately upon their next story, "The Fall of Maximilian."

citizens ready to obey his slightest order, is the lot of Tom Forman these days.

For Mr. Forman has caused to be erected on the banks of the Rio Grande, in New Mexico, a Mexican town whose existence is the result only of camera requirements of his next picture, "The Broken Wing." Its approximately two thousand citizens are Los Angeles players, ranging from such favorites as Kenneth Harlan, Miriam Cooper, Betty Francisco, Walter Long, Edward Brady and Evelyn Selbie, to the humblest extras who appear in several big "mob" scenes.

After a corporate life of two weeks the structures that make up the city will be removed as completely as if the town never had existed. The materials will be salvaged in a nearby town and the players will return to Los Angeles.

"Once an actor, always an actor," is a saying that finds its greatest proof more often on the screen than on the speaking stage.

Marshal Neilan has announced that he intends to drop his directorial megaphone to don the grease paint for a new picture to be directed by Edward Dillon—"Broadway Gods."

Which reminds us that Rex Ingram, whom Griffith wants to star, has said that he would appear in one of his own pictures in the near future.

Orville Caldwell, featured screen player whose work before the camera has been as great a sensation in Los Angeles as were his physical perfections, over which Elinor Glyn waxed enthusiastic, is about to make his first return to New York since his picture debut.

Caldwell last saw Broadway as the leading male player in the Comstock and Gest spectacle, "Mecca." It was because of his combination of remarkable physique and gift for characterization that he was selected to play the leading roles in two Katherine MacDonald pictures, after which he was signed for a long period of years by Preferred Pictures.

Mr. Caldwell's latest triumph was his selection, over a numberless field of competitors in Hollywood, to play the difficult leading male role with Mae Murray in her latest picture, "The French Doll." A leading man who was handsome, but capable of carrying a comedy role; who could appear as a fish packer and still retain the sentimental attitude required for the part—these were just a few of the requisites of the part. After interviewing or otherwise considering nearly every available male player on the West Coast, Miss Murray and her director-husband, Bob Leonard, decided that Caldwell was the only man on the screen who could be "sentimental and humorous at one and the same time."

The newest business venture of Doug and Mary, according to an announcement just made, is a part interest in a theatre in Hollywood that will be devoted to the spoken drama. When the stars finish a day's work in their studios they will be permitted, under their new plan, to spend an evening watching the activities of their co-workers on the legitimate stage and the equally interesting work of the cashier in the box office.

SURE ENOUGH!

Headling: Two telephone services in Los Angeles to be combined into one.

"What difference will it make?" inquires Raymond Griffith, the Goldwyn wise-cracker. "Everybody knows that zero plus zero equals zero."

day, when the play within a play was filmed. The story calls for the giving of a part of "Mid-Summer Night's Dream," and it was shot in a leafy glade on one of San Mateo's largest and most beautiful estates. The audience quite forgot it was March and that somewhere it was snowing, and were almost carried back to the forest of Arden, so lovely were Titania, Puck, and the fairies in their wisps of gauze, dancing on a flower-strewn lawn under giant oak trees. The same audience who appeared before the camera included many names well known to San Francisco society.

A. H. Sebastian of the Belasco Productions, left for Los Angeles last Saturday to begin arrangements for the making of the company's next picture. While in the South he will look up stories, continuity writers and directors. He also is on the lookout for pictures for distribution under the Belasco banner.

Edward Phillips, who has been playing the handsome young villain in "The Fog," has finished his part of the picture and will drive back to Hollywood in a few days. He will be accompanied by George Reilly, a new recruit for the films, recently arrived from the east, and who played one of the small parts in the picture.

Alfred Wilkie, publicity man for Goldwyn, arrived in San Francisco last Friday, to be attached to the Von Stroheim outfit.

The first three pictures of the series being made from Peter B. Kyne's stories at the Paul Gerson Studios, are finished, and work on the series is temporarily suspended. Meanwhile the offices of the studios at 1974 Page Street are being papered and painted.

Theodore Kosloff, once premier dancer of the Opera Comique in Paris, now of the moving picture world, arrived in San Francisco last week from New York. He is making arrangements to found the northern branch of his California University of Russian Art here. This branch will be in running order by September next and will be in charge of Estelle Reed, and the sculpture, painting, dancing and music of Russia will be taught.

San Mateo has quite a moving picture colony of its own these days, as to be near the Pacific Studios, where "The Fog" is being shot, Mildred Harris, and her mother, and Cullen Landis have both taken houses, while Ethel Wales, Louise Dresser, Louise Fazenda, Edward Phillips and other members of the cast are living at the hotel or in lodgings.

FOOLISH QUESTION

How many waves of indignation does it take to wreck a friendship?

Charles Bryant, manager for Nazimova, has just sold the rights to "The World's Illusion," which the Russian star intended to make her greatest picture, to Metro. The transaction is said to have involved $100,000. Nazimova's triumphant return to the speaking stage in "Dagmar," now playing at the Selwyn Theatre, has changed her plans.

ROSA GORE

of CRIMMINS and GORE

Featuring Aggressive Roles

The following is one of the reasons why Crimmins and Gore have a household name:

(Times, Washington, D. C., Sept. 22, 1902)

Dan Crimmins, the chief comedian of the "Warm Match" company at the Empire this week, enjoys the distinction of having been the first "headline" act in a first-class vaudeville house.

Nowadays a vaudeville bill without a "headline"—that is, a principal feature to head the entertainment in popular interest, if not in merit—would not attract half a house, for most managers rely upon their "headline" to fill their houses.

In 1895, however, the headline was unknown and Mr. Crimmins had a very difficult time in persuading B. F. Keith's lieutenants, Messrs. Hodgson, Nash, and Fynes, that a short play given by well-known actors would prove a profitable innovation in the routine variety program. Mr. Crimmins secured Charles McCarthy, who played Tony Hart's roles with Edward Harrigan for a time, and in the summer of 1895, assisted by Miss Rosa Gore and six other persons, put on a sketch that ran thirty-five minutes.

The idea was quickly pounced upon by the enterprising vaudeville people, and the eight successful weeks of the Crimmins-Gore-McCarthy act were followed by Aubrey Boucicault and a small company, and the "headline" has since been a most important part of the vaudeville business.

Several years' character work in pictures. Engaged by many of the foremost directors. No end to our versatility.

wants it to be an unsurpassable place for anyone who is reasonable to live in with comfort and peace. But that class of provincials who feel so erroneously constrained to essay dictating to others as to how they shall live from day to day is not wanted by the vast majority. Hollywood is eminently a different kind of a city—it is not like any other little city as "Night Life in Hollywood" would indicate. Hollywood aspires to be and is sure to be a great amusement center as well as an amusement-producing center such as it is for the entire world at present via the film route. It does not require a great deal of vision to see Hollywood as a veritable mecca for many fine theatres and gay though lawful cafes in the very near future. Every condition is conducive to it developing into a marvelous center of diverting marvels. It could never be developed into the sleepy town some of its well-meaning defenders seek to describe mostly out of their own imaginations. No community largely populated by brilliant artists, imbued with the high spirits of achievement and true genius always vivacious in the extreme, could ever become a sleepy town. Nor is there any reason why it should. Forsooth, there is no reason why Hollywood should not soon win recognition as the liveliest mecca for seekers of wholesome pleasure in the nation. It should be the great playground of photoplayers and all who like photoplayers and their triumphs. It should be the goal of every lover of high-class amusement and every form of high-class amusement should be available here incessantly and up to the late hours of night. This is only befitting the situation created by the congregating of so many exponents of fine arts in one such section. Here's hoping the next time a film depicting "Night Life in Hollywood" is made, there will have been enough lapse of time to permit of the completion of at least a half dozen fine new theatres and an equal number of elite cafes, where dancing and gaieties de luxe prevail—that somewhere can be "shot" a high-class Mardi Gras quarter, where throngs of law-abiding people are enjoying laughter and the utmost joys of living—that everything is action, color and novelty.

Eric Mayne is living proof that there is something in a name after all. Just as one would expect of Mayne, he plays main parts in motion pictures—so much so that in most any cast of most any current screen triumph one is quite likely to find his name among the leaders. Just to prove the point it may be cited that he plays "main parts" in all of the following current or about-to-be current film features: Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack," Katherine MacDonald in "Refuge," Gloria Swanson in "Prodigal Daughters," Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" and Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife."

Lucy Beaumont, who has only recently left the stage to transfer her famous characterizations of various kinds of mothers to the screen and has moved from New York to Hollywood to accomplish this, says she has already discovered the film capitol is a much maligned place and that "it is not a fractional part as bad as painted." All of which proves that "seeing is believing" while reading some publications is a matter of becoming imbued with falsehoods galore.

No. 51

From the Editorial Observatory

They've just had another blizzard back east, if you hanker after cold facts.

Goldwyn seems to win gold this year. But there is a Warner out to beware of a Fox.

Dame Rumor generally deserves the nick-name of Dame Humor, for she is often the goddess of the ridiculous.

Now they are trying to ban jazz bands in Chicago. Can you imagine 'em ever banning anything in Chicago?

Raw film is considerably cheaper now. After the critics get through "roasting" some of the things they put on raw film, it seems cheaper than that.

So far as this week's stellar sensational news is concerned, Gloria Swanson and Bill Hart co-star with neither one seeming to be anxious to "steal the picture."

Twenty-seven companies are making twenty-seven different motion pictures out at Universal City now. The Laemmle outfit may yet match Heinz's fifty-seven varieties.

It seems eastern critics are prone to agree that "The Covered Wagon" is the best photoplay since "Robin Hood." Hence it looks like a good ride ahead for Paramount.

It is interesting to note that with the recent shake-up of officials at the William Fox West Coast Studios, there also came a shake-down of more capital to invest in the place.

If you will just take the time to stop hurrying so much, you will discover a simple way to avoid so much of this vitality-sapping worrying. Good pictures are like Rome: they can't be built in a day.

Don't lose sight of one certainty, to-wit: while anybody wastes time sneering at someone who is accomplishing things, he is losing opportunities to prove he can excel the one he "knocks" with so much gusto.

There is a veritable influx of new independent producing companies and here's hoping they all produce up to their fondest hopes. However, impractical or unfair promotions are not included in this distribution of good wishes.

Camera! welcomes constructive criticism, but not the anonymous variety. We simply won't fight unless we see who or what we are fighting. And, can you blame us? Anonymous might be even Jack Dempsey, and, man! we can't fight him.

Valentino is going to a hospital to have his nerves patched up, according to reports. But, his attitude continues to indicate that he won't go any place to have his differences with Lasky patched up. Apparently there is no patch big enough to cover this breach.

The fact that so many studios are now running full blast is enough to blast the hopes of all calamity-howlers, but we still hear an occasional howl just the same. Wonder who anybody thinks he or she is that said he or she thinks said he or she has the privilege to bore regular people with a lot of silly howling.

Paramount has "gone to it" with a renewed zeal at the local Lasky studios, a half dozen new pictures being put into production almost simultaneously. The impressive point is, Paramount does not make pictures unless business conditions throughout the country justify. Therefore, everything seems lovely and the goose hangs high.

Now that they have started the construction of the buildings for the Motion Picture Exposition and everything is progressing splendidly, Los Angeles would do well to begin grooming herself in general for the biggest event in her history. Never before was it more necessary or more justified to let civic pride have full rein in order that unrestrained triumph may reign.

The passing of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt marks the greatest loss the stage has sustained in decades. There never will be another Divine Sarah and this one will long be missed. But, she has set certain dramatic standards which will help other histrionic geniuses, perhaps yet unborn, to reach heights at least comparable to those she attained so brilliantly. If there was no assurance of such evolution, there could be no optimism arising from the ever-present debris of human tragedy. Long may we honor the great name, Bernhardt!

CAMERAMAN LOSES COIN
EN ROUTE TO FLORIDA

Abe Scholtz, prominent cameraman, has a grouch on, and there are few who can blame him for it.

Mr. Scholtz left recently for Miami, Florida, where he will film a series of adaptations from Basil King's stories for Pilgrim Pictures, Inc.

When he left here, he had more than $160 in cash in his wallet.

The wallet was under his pillow.

When he awoke Thursday morning, "somewhere in Arizona," the wallet was still under his pillow, but the cash was missing.

At Tucson he left the train long enough to wire to friends in Los Angeles for funds, and picked up the money in El Paso, when the train arrived there.

Hereafter, on trains, Mr. Scholtz wired to his friends, he will keep his money in his sock, and keep his sock on his foot when he sleeps in Pullman berths.

Katterjohn With Mayer

Monte M. Katterjohn, well known screen writer, who was engaged by Louis B. Mayer to prepare the scenario for Reginald Barker's production of "The Law-Bringers," has renewed his contract with the producer to cover the screen version of the great Robert W. Service classic, "The Trail of Ninety-Eight," it was announced this week. Mr. Katterjohn is in daily conference with Irving G. Thalberg, vice-president of the Mayer organization, on the story which will be another Reginald Barker special for Metro release.

Back From Yosemite

"The Man From Ten Strike," starring Guy Bates Post, supported by a cast of exceptional players, is rapidly nearing completion. The company has just returned from the snow lands in Yosemite Valley and the "rushes" projected in the studio following this expedition, more than assure the producers that in this James Oliver Curwood story, especially written for Post, they have a big feature. This marks the first time in his screen career that Mr. Post assumes the role of an outdoor character. Heretofore, Post's characterizations have been confined to costume plays.

Clifford Returns Here

William Clifford has returned from New York, after an absence of three years, during which time he produced several stage successes, including "Welcome, Stranger," "Ghosts," starring Henry B. Walthall, and "Taken In." He expects to present Alex Francis in the New York stage hit, "The Old Soak," next fall on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Clifford has been signed for a supporting role in Norma Talmadge's current starring vehicle, "Ashes of Vengeance."

In a Lucky 13

Fay McKenzie, the little four-year-old wonder child, who has just completed her engagement in "Storms of Judgment," has played featured parts in thirteen Chester Comedies previous to working in feature pictures. In the past week several news notes claim she worked in only one of these comedies, and this is to correct that mistake.

Famous "Cuckoo" With Barker

Do you remember Monsieur Cuckoo, the funny poulu who devotedly dogged Dorothy Gish's footsteps in Griffith's "Hearts of the World," declaring his affection at every opportunity? The creator of this wonderful role, Robert Anderson, will be seen in a similar part in the Reginald Barker production of "The Law-Bringers" now being made at the Louis B. Mayer Studio for Metro release. Playing a bewhiskered old trapper of the North, his devotion this time will be directed towards Rene Adoree, Mr. Barker's new dramatic "find."

Miller Promises "Sequels"

Carl Miller, feeling that that classic work, "How to Judge a Picture," is incomplete, is arranging a supplementary volume on "How to Judge a Screen Picture" and its companion, "How to Paint a Screen Picture," the first to be for the exhibitor and the second for the well-meaning actor. Mr. Miller, who is painting the portrait of Edna Purviance in his role of painter in "Public Opinion," which Charlie Chaplin wrote and is directing, has some decided theories on the subject, for he believes that film brush work has caused much merriment with the public.

Finishes in "The Fog"

Ethel Wales, well known character actress, has returned from San Francisco where she has been for the past five weeks enacting an important role in "The Fog," the Graf production for Metro. Miss Wales has many distinguished connections in "The Fog," being the wife of Ralph Lewis and mother of Cullen Landis and Mildred Harris. This is the second recent location trip for the actress who went to Utah with the cast in "The Covered Wagon" for Paramount.

Horne Signs With Powers

Another well known director was added this week to the rapidly growing list of stars and directors now at work at the Powers Studios. James W. Horne signed a contract to direct for one year for the Film Booking Offices of America, according to Emile Offeman, general manager of the studios. Horne has just completed "Now You See It," a comedy-drama by Wyndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman, F. B. O. scenarists. His other recent creations were "The Hottentot," for Thomas Ince and "Can a Woman Love Twice?" with Ethel Clayton.

Brice to Supervise

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home," the Gerald Beaumont story, will be started soon. At the present time they are casting. This series will be produced under the supervision of Monte Brice and will be directed by Nat Ross. The U lot will be their headquarters, but soon after starting production they will go to San Diego on location for two weeks.

It's Million-Dollar Contract

A million dollars is involved in the Holubar-Metro deal recently consummated according to details just made public concerning the newly signed contract between Allen Holubar and the Metro Pictures Corporation. The million dollar contract calls for four super-productions to be made independently by Holubar at the Metro Studios and distributed through the latter's releasing organization. The productions will be created from well-known novels and plays on a lavish scale, with all-star casts, and Holubar will not be limited as to the time spent upon them.

Adding to the Confusion

The appeal by Director Harry Beaumont for a suitable Swedish equivalent for the word "Swedish Carnival," to be used in a subtitle for "Main Street," has brought a flood of replies at the Warner Brothers studios in Los Angeles. The suggestions have been as varied as the alphabet. One letter suggested "Svenska Markna," another "Svenska Folhfest," still another "Bond Brallop." Beaumont doesn't know what any of them mean, but if these fellows can get together and reach some sort of an agreement he is willing to use the words they choose. Now let's have the mass meeting!

Weigel With Paramount

Paul Weigel, who recently co-starred with Dot Farley in a series of eight two-reel Cruely-Wed comedies for Arrow Release, is enacting the role of father to Gloria Swanson in the Lasky production, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," now in the course of filming. Mr. Weigel's plans are to appear only in dramatic productions hereafter, he having decided to abandon the comedy field.

Dorothy Manners Moves

Dorothy Manners, leading lady to Charles (Buck) Jones in the William Fox special, "Snow-drift," has completed enacting her role in this picture, and has decided to take a short vacation, during which time she will supervise the details of moving to a new apartment.

Another in "Greed"

Erich von Ritzau has been signed by Goldwyn to play the travelling dentist in Erich von Stroheim's "Greed," now being produced in San Francisco from the Frank Norris novel, "McTeague."

"DAD" CAN DEPEND ON ONE CHAMPION ALWAYS

Almost every time Noah Beery, famous screen villain, has a fight in the films, he loses.

That's what a villain's for, isn't it? Why, certainly!

All right, then.

There's one film fan in this little old world, though, who doesn't like Noah's almost habitual loss of his fist fights.

That person is Noah Beery, Jr., 8-year-old heir-apparent to his dad's histrionic talent, as well as his wordly goods.

Every time Noah the Second sees a film in which Noah the first gets a drubbing, he hurries home with the following consolation:

"Daddy, I'll bet you could have licked that man if you wanted to."

And Noah sticks his thumbs under his suspenders—oh, yes, he wears 'em, sometimes—and struts about the living room in a conceding mood.

Noah, by the way, is now playing the leading heavy role in Jesse D. Hampton's current production, "The Spoilers," an adaptation of Rex Beach's famous novel.

Movie Electrician Scalded

Robert La Fear, an electrician in the Reginald Barker production unit now enroute to Canada to film scenes for "The Law-Bringers," was badly scalded by steam escaping from a locomotive during the stop made at Sacramento, according to a telegraphic report received at the Louis B. Mayer Studio. La Fear had just alighted from the special train carrying the party and was walking along the station platform when the accident occurred, the wire stated. While he is not in any serious danger as a result of the mishap, his injuries will prevent La Fear from continuing North with the company which is bound for the Athabasca country in Alberta.

Warners Change Title

"The White Silence" will be the title of the Warner Brothers production heretofore known as "Wolf Fangs." This is the northern story which is nearing completion under Director Chester M. Franklin at Warner Brothers studio. Rintintin, the Police Dog Hero, has a featured role and in the cast are Walter McGrail, Claire Adams and Pat Hartigan.

Ralph Rules Frisco

Ralph Lewis writes from San Francisco that he feels very badly over having three of his pictures appearing simultaneously in first run theatres on Market Street there. These include "The Third Alarm," "Chicago Sal," and "The Conquering Power," the latter of which is playing a return engagement. Lewis is in the northern city taking scenes for Harry Graf's Metro production, "The Fog," and is kept broke taking friends to his various picture shows.

Who Will Be Ben Hur on the Screen?

If careful study, research, perserverance and absolutely faultless knowledge of the part will win the part, Eddie Gribbon will portray the title role in "Ben Hur" when that spectacle is produced by Goldwyn.

That's what Eddie said today, and he's devoting every minute of his time, when he's not working in pictures.

If there's a book on the subject of customs along about Ben Hur's time that Gribbon has not read, he would like to know what it is. He knows the book by heart—upside down and through the middle—from cover to cover, and every day he's training hard to keep himself in physical trim for the part.

Also, he's reciting that Coue thing—some-

HOW LOUISE MET MAN NOW IN JAIL

Louise Lorraine hasn't been in retirement at all.

She's been spending all of her time at her Hollywood home and on the lot at Universal City, where final scenes are being shot in "The Oregon Trail," in which she is co-starred with Art Acord.

Today Miss Lorraine broke her long silence, which has lasted since the arrest, about ten days ago, of "Captain" Edwin Dawson, to explain how she became acquainted with him, and now she came to sign the contract which he had in his possession when he was arrested on a charge of passing worthless checks.

About two years ago the actress received a letter from Dawson, she said, in which he told her how much he liked her work in pictures, and asked her permission to name his seam yacht after her.

She gave the permission, Miss Lorraine declared, and several months later was informed, again by mail, that Dawson had left with his ship for an exploration trop to Africa. He carried with him an airplane, he said, and since his return he has told Miss Lorraine that he was injured in the head during an accident.

"When he came to Hollywood," Miss Lorraine declared, "I received him, of course. Shortly after his arrival, he broached the matter of the contract to me and Mr. Acord. We thought he was acting in good faith, and signed the contracts. So that's all there is to it."

Miss Lorraine intimated that she thought Dawson laboring under the delusion that he possessed great wealth. He has been sentenced to serve 100 days in jail.

DO YOU REMEMBER WHEN...

Harold Lockwood and May Allison were the famous team of the screen?

Arthur Johnson was starring in Lubin productions?

Carl Gerard was starring in "Brewster's Millions" on the stage?

Robert Edeson worked with C. B. De Mille in "Where The Trail Divides?"

The Gish girls made their first picture, "An Unseen Enemy?"

President Harding will be present at the opening of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, unless unexpected official business makes it impossible to leave Washington.

Eddie Gribbon in full Roman regalia as he appeared in a recent photoplay success.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME FOR FILM FAME

Here's the answer to the question as to why nearly every girl in the country wants to get into the movies.

Irene Rich proves that it is profitable because she has just purchased a $35,000 home out in the Hollywood hills, and is playing two leading roles in feature pictures simultaneously.

Less than five years ago Miss Rich came to Los Angeles, not penniless, but with her mother and two children to make a living for. She looked over the field. A stenographer—provided she be an expert—gets an average of $120 a month. The bankers say a couple should not marry on less than $125 a month, so Irene looked elsewhere, because she had really two couples to keep.

Within a week she had registered at all the studios and was promptly engaged as an "extra" at $5 a day. She even worked for $3 a day, the very lowest salary paid the atmosphere players. But she worked hard, saved what she could for screen study, clothes, etc., and today is making a salary that calls for the payment of a surtax. She just had to make good. She did.

But that's the bright side.

thing like "day by day, etc."—and is telling the world that he's the boy for the part.

Gribbon got the idea, it seems, when Goldwyn first announced that the spectacle would be made, and asked the American public to mail suggestions as to who should play the title role.

At that time the actor's fan mail suddenly increased, being burdened with letters urging him to try hard for the part, and now he's in the scramble in earnest. Strong and muscular, with curly brown hair, and features suited to the part, he claims that he's perfectly suited to it, and just knows that he'll be the lucky choice.

All of filmland is waiting to see just which actor will be chosen for it.

DO SCREEN SETTINGS TIRE FANS?

"The sameness and lack of novelty in settings are as much to blame for disinterest on the part of movie fans as mediocre and hackneyed stories," contended Anton Grot, German-Polish art director, in a recent interview. Mr. Grot, who has just returned from Europe, expressed his thoughts in these words:

"You must admit that you frequently hear people say, 'I don't go to the movies much any more. They are all too much alike.' Stand outside of one of the Broadway picture palaces or one of the Main Street movie shows and you will hear similar criticisms. I have closely observed and analyzed these comments with a view of discovering what prompts them. In this way I believe fan criticisms may be made the basis of constructive improvements in production.

"Most of the fans who criticize the films attribute their lack of interest to the similar channels in which most of the plots seem to run. The old themes are made to do duty time and time again with a sprinkling of so-called new twists to make them appear original. So, the fans are partly right in their contention.

"But, as I reclined in a loge chair the other evening and viewed one of the current feature releases I got this impression. Is not there a monotonous sameness in settings? They are beautiful—extravagant, I shall grant. But there is a general similarity, and also a severity of straight lines in the majority of sets.

"Bearing in mind that movies are conveyed to the mind through the eyes, a sameness of settings fails to stimulate the imagination. The eyes become used to conventional settings and these make little impression on the mind. Now, if something new were developed in setting motifs the eyes would be attracted. Then, even if the story were not so very new and original the settings would so charm the spectators that they would be more sympathetically inclined to overlook the story shortcomings.

"Here and there in some recent films I have noticed one or two settings that stood out and gave a 'different' effect. In one feature pictures starring Mae Murray, I recall there was a circular stairway coming down into a studio apartment. Instead of using stereotyped stairs, the art director had contrived a novelty property which made the whole setting stand out and register to the observing eye.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Motion picture stars are known by the pets they keep.

Al. Wilson, famous Universal daredevil, has the hardest pet to handle in the motion picture industry. "Knuck" is its name. Wilson has had the pet for five years. He spends more money on it than he does on himself. "Knuck" has to have someone with him most of the time. He won't stay in an ordinary ten-room house, but is housed in a building large enough to cover a regiment of soldiers. If "Knuck" isn't properly handled he just roams all over the country on windy nights.

The Universal unit filming "The Eagle's Talons," was on location at "The Sycamores," an inn just north of Uplands, California, when one night a wind storm descended upon the place. About three o'clock in the morning, Wilson was awakened by thoughts over "Knuck."

"Knuck" is Al. Wilson's airplane on which he does all of his famous stunts in mid-air. It's the only pet he possesses, and together they have been through thousands of thrilling experiences.

"Knuck" is at home in the air, but on windy nights Wilson has to anchor him firmly to Mother Earth to curb his roaming disposition.

Esther Ralston, popular leading woman of many Universal serials, will have the leading feminine role in "Blinky," a Hoot Gibson starring vehicle, now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

This is her first appearance as the feminine lead in Universal feature attractions. Elinor Fair, who was originally cast for the role, has been assigned to another production.

Miss Ralston has just completed her work as the leading woman in "The Phantom Fortune," a William Desmond starring serial, when she was chosen to play in "Blinky." The picture will afford Miss Ralston her first feature lead since her appearance as Mary Jane in "Huckleberry Finn."

Elinor Field is "doubling in brass" by appearing in two pictures at Universal City at the same time.

She has the leading feminine role in the third series of "The Leather Pushers," the famous comedy-drama plays which have established a new pace in two-reel productions, starring Reginald Denny, and will appear as Hoot Gibson's sister in "Blinky," Gibson's latest starring vehicle, now being filmed under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

The third series of "The Leather Pushers" are being made under the direction of Erle C. Kenton, who directed "A Small Town Idol" and "Down on the Farm."

Miss Field's ability to essay the two roles at the same time is made possible by the fact that her work in the pictures is enacted on the studio sets at Universal City and that the two companies are away on location at different intervals. While the Keaton company is away she appears as a society girl in the Sedgwick company. When the company returns she shifts her role and her locale to that of the wife of a professional prize fighter on the set with Denny.

Production has just been completed at Universal City on two current feature pictures, "Crossed Wires," a Gladys Walton starring vehicle, directed by King Baggot, and "Fools and Riches," the working title of which was "Twenty Dollars," starring Herbert Rawlinson. The Rawlinson production was directed by Herbert Blache.

Rawlinson's next picture will be "Thicker Than Water," adapted from the magazine story, "Richard," by Margaret Bryant, and which is to be directed by Baggot.

Miss Walton's next production will be "Sawdust," a story of the "big tops" by Courtney Riley Cooper.

King Baggot, who directed the Universal-Jewel productions, "Human Hearts" and "The Kentucky Derby," and who has directed Gladys Walton in many of her most popular features, has been chosen by Universal to direct Herbert Rawlinson in his next starring vehicle, "Thicker than Water."

The Baggot-Rawlinson combination should present one of the strongest production teams at Universal City. Baggot graduated several years ago from the role of actor to that of director and is considered one of the most capable in his craft. Rawlinson is one of the best known and most popular of romantic screen heroes.

"Thicker than Water" was adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates from the magazine story, "Richard," by Margaret Bryant.

Production has begun at Universal City on "Burning Words," an original story of the Northwest Mounted Police by Harrison Warren Jacobs, in which Roy Stewart makes his debut as a star in Universal feature attractions. The picture is being filmed under the direction of Stuart Paton, who recently completed the direction of "Bavu," a Universal-Jewel with an all-star cast.

Stewart is a well-known star of the outdoor type and has been featured in many Universal two-reel western subjects. His latest triumph was the romantic hero in "The Radio King," a Universal chapter play. Under his new contract with Universal he will star in a special series of feature productions.

Stewart will be supported in the cast by a number of well-known screen players, including Laura La Plante, Harold Goodwin, William Welsh, Edith Yorke, Alfred Fisher, Noble Johnson, Harry Carter and George McDaniels.

Edward T. Lowe, the continuity writer who went to Europe with the Edward Laemmle unit from Universal City and found out, by comparison, what a wonderful place California is for picture-making, is demonstrating his special ability on all-star dramatic material by preparing the scenario of "The Self-Made Wife," which is to be a Universal all-star production.

"The Self-Made Wife" was a Saturday Evening Post serial and later a novel, written by Elizabeth Alexander. It presents an unique viewpoint on the marriage problem that most of the philosophers of the world today are puzzled about. Lowe's recent continuities, including "Under Two Flags," "The Prisoner" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," guarantee the carefulness of the screen transcription.

The complete cast for the first one of the new series of "The Leather Pushers," Universal special two-reelers starring Reginald Denny, has been selected by the director, Erle Kenton and Fred Datig, casting director.

Hayden Stevenson, the inimitable fighter's manager of the previous Witwer series, is again the man who guides "The Leather Pushers" through his fistic adventures, though in somewhat different circumstances. Elinor Field, heroine of the last six stories, provides the romantic interest in the new series. Gertrude Olmstead, prize beauty and popular leading woman handles a secondary feminine role. Melbourne McDowell, Ed Kennedy, Harry Lorraine, "Kid" Wagner and Jack Henderson have other supporting roles.

The Witwer epics of humor screened by Universal have been called by many critics "the highest class two-reelers ever made," and the executives at Universal City are allowing an elaborate production schedule on the new series. The unit has left for location at Big Bear, California.

Flashes from Frisco

Silvia Ashton, known to most of the movie world as Mother Ashton, arrived in San Francisco several days ago to play in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," the screen version of Frank Norris' book "McTeague."

There are busy days at the Lilliputian Studios at San Rafael, as they have two companies hard at work. The first unit is making the second of a series of two-reel comedies. Harry Losh is director, George Barnes, comedian, and Florence Baker character woman. The second company is just starting a dramatic feature.

ductions, is still in Los Angeles, and has decided to make the first picture of the company, "Youth Triumphant," at the Hollywood Studios. They expect to begin to shoot April 2d. Jack Boshell will direct, with Lillian Ducey as assistant director and Glen MacWilliams as cameraman.

The making of "The Fog" by the Graf Productions, goes merrily on at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo. Last week was the fifth week of work, and they expect to finish the actual shooting of the picture in one more week.

Craig Hutchinson, director for the Paul Gerson Studios, has returned to his home in Los Angeles.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., March 25th.—This week's addition to the rapidly growing list of San Francisco's producing corporations is the Max Miller Productions, who have already been shooting for several days on outdoor locations in and near San Francisco. Their first picture is to be "The Hellions," from a story by Peter B. MacFarland in the Saturday Evening Post. Walter Bell is director with Fallon as co-director. The cast includes Patricia Palmer and William J. Miller co-stars, Hal Stevens, Frank Hays, Harry Leland, and others. Elmer G. Dyer, whose last big picture was "The Web of the Law," is at the camera. The plans of the organization include a program of five six-reel pictures to be made this year, and released through the American Releasing Corporation.

Vegetarian Propaganda, Reversals and Wampas

By RAY H. LEEK

If you would win success on the screen—eat vegetable salads!

That the path to film preferment is strewn with tomatoes (not the mushy variety which occasionally find their way into the theater), onions and lettuce, is the discovery of Truly Shattuck, vaudeville headliner who became cafe owner here a few months ago.

And since Truly has obtained the ultimate low-down on the wants of the most successful directors, players and writers through devising the menus at the Schulberg Studio Cafe, her pronouncements are not to be lightly passed by.

"My first surprise was to learn how lightly workers for the screen, both before the camera and in the other departments of picture-making, indulge in food," said Miss Shattuck. "Vegetables, salads and airy sandwiches seem to be the favorite dishes. Singularly enough, the biggest of the screen idols seem to live on vegetable salads."

Whereupon the versatile cafe owner consented to divulge the favorite brain foods of the celebrities who pass before her capacious range as follows:

Kenneth Harlan says a diet of vegetables—preferably in salads—keeps him in the perfect trim that makes it possible for him to whip his director, Tom Forman, in their daily boxing encounters.

Orville Caldwell, whom Elinor Glyn says is the most nearly physically perfect of screen players, admits a preference for the most substantial chops and steaks Truly produces so successfully.

Ethel Shannon, tiniest of screen players, keeps her ninety-eight pounds of femininity fit on noon-day repasts of cream puffs, iced tea and the alluring soft drinks dispensed at the fountain.

Gasnier carries on directorial duties on a diet of a certain French sausage not entirely innocent of garlic.

Tom Forman, most readily pleased of Miss Shattuck's guests, announces a preference for "whatever's good."

Victor Schertzinger, director-composer, probably is the most daring of the diners at Miss Shattuck's cafe. For hot mince pie, hashes and other delectable dishes which involve a vote of confidence to the place in which they are served are his favorites.

Olga Printzlau, with the feminine preference for the lighter foods, writes her screen versions on a diet of foods well sprayed with thousand island dressing.

Eve Unsell, famous screen editor, insists that baked potatoes and cold drinks are the last word in brain foods.

The screen continues to turn the tables on the stage, which once was looked upon as the logical field from which to acquire picture favorites. A short time ago Bert Lytell was dazzling audiences with his ability as a dramatic player on the speaking stage. More recently Helen Jerome Eddy, during a brief holiday from the camera, took a flier in a dramatic playlet which proved the sensation of the day. As a result of her appearance in the sketch, from the pen of her versatile co-worker, Ray Carroll, Miss Eddy is being declared by critics as the next logical candidate for stellar honors on New York's Broadway. And, since the girl star admits yearnings for the speaking stage, it seems likely these predictions may materialize in the near future.

By the simple device of wearing ordinary, every-day, eye-glasses, the screen player can banish the ever-present fear of Kleig eyes. Karl Struss, cameraman, who is responsible for the unique photographic effects in Gasnier's productions, has made the discovery,

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

When a motion picture producer builds a picture around a story of money, marriage and ultimate happiness, he's sure to strike a note that will appeal to the great majority of film fans. That's what has been done in Harry Cohn's latest release, "Temptation," in which the audience is treated to a most decided novelty in production. The entire film is a great entertaining novelty, which ought to suit a large variety of audiences, and is especially adapted for those who like something just a little out of the ordinary of picture productions. As has already been stated, the story, which was written by Miss Lenore Coffe, treats of marriage, money and happiness, and their relation, one to the other. There are a number of twists to the marriage question, and although the moral is plainly pictured, it is done without using a sounding-board, or blare of trumpets, to achieve it. Also, there are a number of honest-to-goodness laughs in the sequences, which with the general excellence of the production, as a whole, leaves little to be desired from the standpoint of pure entertainment. Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak, with June Elvidge and Philip Smalley in the chief supporting roles, are the principals of the cast. Miss Elvidge, especially, deserves special mention for her work, although everyone "hits the ball" throughout the picture. Le Saint has done excellent work in directing the production, with nothing overdone, and with the photography and lighting effects of the finest. To say the least, it's a production that film fans should greet with acclaim.

Just at this season of the year, when lots o' folks are afflicted with that itchy-foot feeling so common in the spring, "The Law Rustlers," William Fairbanks' latest production, should be of particular interest. It has just been released. Almost in the opening scenes the star and his buddy, employed as "hired help" on a big western ranch, feel that age-old restlessness when the cottonwood buds begin to burst and the pussywillows down by the creek send out their fuzzy gray-green buds, and tell the world of their intention of going somewhere. Any particular place? No—just anywhere, to get away from the humdrum life of the ranch. They want excitement—and find it. Incidentally, the hero wins the heroine for his very, very own, as a reward for his bravery, perhaps, in cowing the bad, bad outlaws with nothing more deadly than a smoking pipe. It's logical, though—lots of pipes look something like six-guns, and lots of them, at close range, are almost as deadly. Some exceptionally good scenery shots are featured in the production—wide, rolling plains, with mountains piled up behind, and many other pictorial beauties which should appeal. Fairbanks is a pleasing hero, and although Ena Gregory is too pretty and lovable to register really convincing sadness, she does well in the principal supporting role. Lewis King directed the picture. W. C. Tuttle "authored" the story, with Ben Wilson credited with the scenario.

There is a wide divergence of opinion as to the merits and demerits of "Rupert of Hentzau." Some competent critics proclaim it a near-masterpiece while others are just as emphatic in declaring it to be a flat failure in all the vital essentials. This is one of those exceptional pictures which depends on one's mood for a decision, favorable or unfavorable. If you are capable of

The disinclination of the public to agree to the fairness of a continuance of the levying of the federal admission tax has developed a nation-wide campaign to induce the government to eliminate this aftermath of the recent World War in order that motion pictures may be viewed at a cost near the pre-war level.

A fair criterion by which to judge the popularity of American-made motion pictures in South American countries is to be gained by the recently divulged statistics which reveal that 67 per cent of the films exhibited in Brazil are from the United States.

One by one the survivors of the panicky conditions of a few months ago are returning to the land of renowned activity until now even some of the older studios, which have been out of use for several years, are being pressed into service again. So far as Filmiland is concerned, this is an era of a universal hum of industry.

Rumors to the effect that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford will soon abandon their work of starring in pictures to become captains of the industry and so branch out into other managerial fields seem to gain credence in their admission of becoming interested in a theatre-building project. However, it is certain each of these prime favorites will make quite a few more pictures, starring themselves, ere they will have reached that period called "eventually."

Litigation seems to have become a veritable fad among various film interests. Sceldom before has there been such a large number of lawsuits under way and they are of every variety with divorce suits well up in the list unfortunately. Wonder if some kind of a Peace Court within the realm of filmdom would solve any of these perplexing problems which send so many film folks pell-mell before judges?

There is a slight veering away from the course which led producers to sign up every photoplayer possible and now the directors are having an inning and they are batting high. During the last fortnight there has been a record-breaking number of directors signed to long-term contracts.

Prominent producers deny there is any plan among them to inaugurate a movie campaign to assist in booming President Harding for a second term. They seem unanimous in a determination to keep the screen free from becoming a foot-ball of politics, which is a very commendable determination.

developing the right kind of a mood, you will like it; if you are in the wrong mood, you will be all but thoroughly displeased. However, there are certain high qualities in this production and most of these have received only scant comment. For instance, the continuity is so nearly perfect, there is little difference. Some of the bigger scenes are truly wonderful, notably a wedding, a duel and a most realistic death scene. On the other hand, this is probably the most mis-cast photoplay in history. Out of the whole assemblage of players—an unusual assemblage numerically—there are only two artists who fit the characters assigned to them. These are Hobart Bosworth and Lew Cody. Few dramatic efforts have equalled Cody's death scene. Hobart is entirely at home throughout his excellent performance. Bryant Washburn and Bert Lytell struggle valiantly to live down the mistakes of whoever mis-cast them, but it is a bitterly vain battle. The direction of Al Heerman leaves much to be desired.

Film fans are wondering, all over the world, how the Velintino-Lasky embroglio finally will end. Many are upholding the cause of the actor, while others think he should go on through with the terms of his contract. Both sides of the controversy have their merits, and both their faults—but the fact remains that while Valentino is loafing and basking in the sunshine of his new wife's smile, other screen actors are rapidly usurping the spot he once held in the hearts of theatregoers. Chief among these, perhaps, is Ramon Novarro, who, under Rex Ingram, the same director that started Velintino on his way to the top, is rapidly climbing to dizzy heights in the film firmament. Novarro photographs "like a million dollars," to use a popular expression. In addition to this he has an unusually large supply of good looks and personality, and like Valentino, is of a mysteriously romantic type that appeals especially to the fair sex. In Ingram's most recent release, "Where the Pavement Ends," Novarro is cast as the hero of the story, although his part ends when he realizes that his love for the heroine, Alice Terry, is hopeless, and throws himself, with his hands bound, into the sea. Improvement is shown in the actor's work as the action progresses, and he appears at his best in the big love scenes, and the final climax of renunciation. Several scenes of exceptionally beauty add to the tense interest of the story, which is developed on the screen in a masterly way, and in addition to giving Novarro one of his greatest roles in films thus far, the entire production is one that should crowd theatres wherever it is shown.

Not only does Caesar Gravina find music an absolute requisite for emotional acting on the set, but he chooses selections for scenes in which he appears with all the care he bestows upon his costume and make-up.

"It is not enough that sad music should be played during tragic scenes," says Gravina, who is now playing in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now well into production. "There are different shades of tragedy as of all other emotions and there is some particular piece of music which fits each nuance as no other."

Gravina, who is Italian by birth, has selected a special list of compositions to be played during his scenes in the Victor Hugo picture as follows: "Canta pe me, (Sing for Me); "Guardann's Luna," (Lovely Moon); "Teresta che lucive," (The Shining Window); "Core ingrato," (Ungrateful Heart); "Unchie Celeste," (Blue Eyes); "Peché?" (Why?).

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1923

GROUND IS BROKEN FOR CONSTRUCTION OF GREAT EXPOSITION BUILDINGS

This week was epochal and vitally important in the history of the forthcoming American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition inasmuch as it marks the breaking of the first ground preparatory to the building of a tremendous magic city which for one month, starting July 2nd, will serve as the mecca for hundreds of thousands of pleasure-seekers from all over the world. This actual beginning of construction activities is notable for the reason that it will not cease until Exposition Park has been transformed into one of the most magnificent amusement centers ever created at any time at any place.

So far, the bungalows on "The Location" at the forthcoming American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition have been in great demand. Although "The Location" was one of the last sections of the Exposition City to be definitely planned, it has proved so popular that soon the most extraordinary street ever laid out will be fully occupied. Not a vacancy will be visible when the famous avenue of the Spanish-Colonial buildings is ready for occupancy.

The Christie Studios signed for Number One on "The Location." Rockett Brothers had the distinction of speaking first, but they will have a lot with a position calling for Number 7, lucky of course, and well situated as a site for the Abraham Lincoln cabin. The Universal Film Company will occupy a favorable place on "The Location" and will transfer to the exposition many rare attractions for visitors. Louis B. Mayer has pre-empted a place and will be conspicuous on the newest of Midways, while Hal Roach and Metro will be neighbors. The Pickford-Fairbanks bungalows will be distinctive in their architecture, although conforming with the others to the Spanish-Colonial type which will be so characteristic of early California. Thus the most modern development of the state's industrial interests will be housed in dwellings that revive ancient traditions.

Nothing more picturesque than "The Locations" has ever been designed for an exposition. This combination of attractions doubtless will prove the most novel and most popular of all the exposition features. There are in Los Angeles something more than sixty motion picture companies and as most of these will seek representation on the street, which is the heart of the exposition, for while the Monroe Doctrine is to be celebrated, past glories of the nation will be recalled by means of present-day artists, who give of their talents generously in providing entertainment such as will set a new mark in big fairs.

BALL KING IS BOOSTER FOR FILMLAND

Following a three-day visit with William C. Wrigley at Catalina Island, John Heydler, president of the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs and together with Judge Landis and Ban Johnson, one of the rulers of the national pastime in this country, had his first glimpse of the motion picture studios. Mr. Heydler, together with Mrs. Heydler, with whom he was taking a pleasure tour through Southern California, was the guest of P. A. Powers at the big Powers studios, where they saw Wyndham Standing, Grace Darmond and Ann Perdue enacting scenes for "Daytime Wives."

"It is my first visit to California," commented Mr. Heydler, "but it will not be my last. I am in love with California. Mrs. Heydler, in fact, is so enthusiastic about it that she is right now trying to persuade me to purchase a home here and spend the rest of my days near the sands of the Pacific.

"After consulting with Mr. Wrigley at Catalina and with a number of your leading bankers and other business men, I quite agree with those who predict that Los Angeles will be one of the great cities of the world in the years to come. Your harbor facilities are unexcelled. Your climate is superb. If it were not for my activities in baseball right now I fear I would succumb to the beauties of Hollywood and settle down among you.

Leatrice Joy, who according to reports, may break with Lasky soon.

FILM BOOM IS HERE TO STAY

With the addition of 125 names yesterday the payroll at United Studios topped the high mark of the boom times of 1919 and 1920. At no time during that record-breaking year—the last half of 1919 and the first of 1920—did the payroll at United, the largest motion picture studio in the world, have more than 813 names on the mechanical department payroll. Today there are 910 names on it, more than twice as many as there were three weeks ago.

"Every available foot of stage space on the United lot is in use," declared M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, this week. "Companies at work here now are crying for more room, for room that we can't give them. If a new production company should apply to us for accommodations we would have to ask them to wait until construction work now under way on the lot is completed. That will be in about two months.

"We are spending $800,000 in preparation for the steady volume of motion picture production which is coming. Boom days in pictures are past, but the industry, particularly the independents have coming a prosperity such as they never have known before."

MISS JOY AND LASKY TO BREAK?

Leatrice Joy, a featured Paramount player whose greatest recent success was scored in "Man-slaughter," is about to break with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to persistent rumors which seemed to be given foundation in the fact that one of the first acts of Jesse L. Lasky upon returning here from New York recently, was to call a series of conferences, the last of which he held with Billy Joy, brother and manager of Miss Joy, this week, and from which the latter emerged emphatically refusing to either deny or affirm any reports.

During the last two weeks there has been an interesting three-cornered competition staged by Goldwyn, the William Fox Corporation, and Cosmopolitan Productions to win Miss Joy over to the point of affixing her signature to the dotted line at a very large salary. This competition is said to have been a direct result of Miss Joy's frank refusal to sign the starring contract offered to her by the Paramount company just prior to her recent departure from New York.

Under the contract now in force between the Lasky organization and Miss Joy, "The Ten Commandments," Cecil B. De Mille's next picture, will be Miss Joy's last appearance as a featured player. After that, according to the terms of the agreement, Lasky has the option of her services as a star at a salary mutually satisfactory. It is a matter of common knowledge that the offer Lasky has made to her for her stellar services is entirely unsatisfactory to Miss Joy and that she has flatly refused to consider it at all.

Miss Joy has just started in the principal role in a feature entitled "The Silent Partner," being directed by Charles Maigne, and as soon as this is completed, she will start her final picture with Mr. De Mille. Whether she will become a Paramount star or the star of one of three other foremost producers is the question just now arousing wide interest.

Rare Flower Dies

A giant narcissus, the only one of its kind in America, bloomed and died while its owner, Milton Sills, was on location for scenes from "The Spoilers," the star reports.

ANTHROPOL'GIST OF NOTE IS EXPO DESIGNER

Lester G. Scherer, associate of Charles H. Kyson, architect of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, is one of the designers who contributed to the success of the sets for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now in course of production at the Universal Studios. Mr. Scherer has traveled widely and his familiarity with literature has given him a special interest in places mentioned in famous books. His work for the picture that will present stirring scenes from the great novel of Victor Hugo has been favorably recognized.

In working out the motifs of decoration and details of buildings for the exposition, Mr. Scherer has utilized knowledge gained by studios of the pueblos in Arizona and New Mexico. The buildings are to be of the Spanish-Colonial period and there will be many suggestions of the Aztec influence. The great stage to be erected in the Coliseum will be in the form of an ancient temple and certain bungalows are to be reproductions of ancient dwellings. The accuracy of all the reproductions can be vouched for, as Mr. Scherer is widely known as an anthropologist. He is president of the Alpha Epsilon Sigma, the honor society of the anthropologists.

CHICAGO'S CHAMP BEAUTY BECOMES A COMEDY QUEEN

Charlotte Stevens, who won her first opportunity to enter moving pictures by winning first honors in the Chicago Journal Beauty contest, has returned from a visit paid to her parents in the Windy City. Together with the title of Chicago's Most Beautiful Girl, Miss Stevens was offered a contract to appear in Christie Comedies with Bobby Vernon. Her performance in the first production was of such brilliancy as to afford her a bigger opportunity and she was selected to play the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Vernon in five Christie films. With her return to filmland, Miss Stevens possesses an ambition so common among comedy queens—to enter the dramatic field.

English Star Joins Abbey

M. D. Waxman, romantic actor from England, has joined the Abbey Pictures, Inc., of New York and will stage a legitimate attraction at one of the New York theatres early in May called "The Come Back" in which he will star. The same cast that appears in the stage version of the play will be utilized in the screen version which will be made in Los Angeles.

SCHENCK SPENDS $80,000 ON FURNITURE AND COSTUMES FOR NORMA'S NEW FILM

Thomas Little, director of the settings and furniture for the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, has purchased more than $20,000 worth of Sixteenth Century furniture during his recent week's visit to New York, for use in Norma Talmadge's next First National production, "Ashes of Vengeance," to be directed by Frank Lloyd, and for the furniture department at the United Studios. There will be thirty-seven interiors in "Ashes of Vengeance" requiring Louis XV and Louise XVI furnishings. Mr. Little was fortunate enough to secure three Aubusson tapestry suites while in New York from antique dealers, and also purchased furniture of the Empire period for future use. Mr. Little has made arrangements to have four Louis XV coaches built, which will be exact reproductions of the magnificent court coaches of the period. An appropriation of $5,000 has been set aside for these coaches.

Walter Israel, director of the costume department of the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, spent $60,000 for costumes, armor and labor, when in New York two weeks ago, also for "Ashes of Vengeance." This makes a total of $80,000 already spent on this picture, which did not start actual production until March 25th, exclusive of the price of the story and its preparation in continuity form.

When work began, Norma Talmadge was surrounded by the highest salaried cast she has ever had—Conway Tearle, Jack Mulhall, Wallace Beery and others.

The Unitel Studios have about $300,000 worth of furniture already stored there for rental to the various companies, and Mr. Schenck expects to increase this within a short time to a collection worth fully $500,000, taking in complete dining-room, living-room bed-room and ball-room suites of every period in history. A force of 500 carpenters are required to erect the settings when 12 companies—the capacity—are all at work at once at the United Studios. The buildings of the United stretch over a tract of 33 acres of ground. There are restaurants, manicure parlors, barber-shops and dressing-room bungalows for the convenience of the players.

Two of the largest street scenes ever erected in Hollywood, have been designed by Stephen Gooson, architectural director, for "Ashes of Vengeance," and in addition to these street scenes, and the thirty-seven interiors for this picture, there will be a large chateau now in process of erection.

HOSPITALITY WINS ANOTHER LEADER FOR FILMLAND

Friendships and acquaintances formed in years gone by were renewed and strengthened here during the recent visit of J. P. "Jack" Hoeffler, who with his wife was making a long vacation tour of the Pacific Coast's beauty spots.

Hollywood, of course, was the magnet that drew them west from Quincy, Ill., where Mr. Hoeffler is owner of the Orpheum Theatre.

For more than three weeks he stayed at the Christie Hotel, where one of his old friends in "the business," H. L. Whipple, presides over the desk.

Mr. Whipple introduced Mr. and Mrs. Hoeffler at many of the local studios, and the two spent many hours looking behind the scenes and learning just how movies are made.

Colonel William N. Selig, owner of the Selig Studios and Selig Zoo, and one of the pioneers of the film industry, was delighted to talk over old times with Mr. Hoeffler.

Herbert Brenon, now with the Lasky organization, extended the glad hand to the visitors. Walter Long was another who welcomed them to the film capitol, while Buster Keaton and Bryan Foy, who as boys played in Mr. Hoeffler's theaters in various parts of the country, also told them how glad they were to see him again.

So impressed was Mr. Hoeffler with his reception here, as well as with the apparent air of prosperity which pervades Hollywood, that he told Mr. Whipple, just before leaving, that he contemplated disposing of his interests in the east and returning here to make his home.

He Looked Locksmithy

While in a San Diego hotel Jean Hersholt of the "Red Lights" cast was having difficulty in unlocking the door to his room. A young man, who was passing in the hallway, observed Hersholt in his make-up and said, "Say, old man, when you finish that one will you come down and fix the lock in my door?"

More Anti-Drug Aid

H. L. Kirby, who has just completed an extensive tour of the United States in interests of the national anti-narcotic crusade, for which he made a detailed survey of drug conditions in various cities, has arrived in Los Angeles to co-operate with Mrs. Wallace Reid in the filming of her anti-drug picture, "Human Wreckage," formerly called "The Living Dead."

CAREY, "SNOWED IN" SENDS OUT S.O.S.

While thermometers were playing leap-frog with the tropic warmth, executives at the Powers studios this week received the following telegram from Harry Carey on location at Truckee:

"Snowed in. Send blankets and furs."

Studio manager Emile Offen immediately made arrangements to send the star and his company the extra equipment to safeguard them against the icy blasts in the snow-clad mountains where Carey is filming scenes for his next F. B. O. production, "The Miracle Baby."

Carey, together with Val Paul, director; Margaret Landis, his leading woman; Hedda Nova, Charles Le Moyne and other players, left a week ago to take snow scenes in Truckee. They found plenty of snow already on the ground, but fresh precipitation began soon after their arrival, in marked contrast to the summer warmth which obtained in Hollywood and elsewhere in this vicinity.

As this marks the first snow story Carey has ever filmed, he failed to take with him the necessary garments and fur blankets to protect himself against the biting cold.

TWO MOVIE DOGS ARE KILLED IN BLIZZARD

A blinding blizzard that almost annihilated a number of screen players was encountered in the Feather River Country, Plumas County, Cal., by the members of the "Wolf Fangs," company, according to a letter received at the Warner Brothers studios from Director Chester M. Franklin. Mr. Franklin is reported as having lost two dogs and a property man fell into a drift and was almost smothered, while a cameraman sustained frozen hands. "We'll be up here three more weeks," concludes Mr. Franklin, "if we live that long."

"Wolf Fangs" features Rint-Tin-Tin, the famous Belgian police dog and world war hero, and the supporting cast includes Claire Adams, Pat Hartigan, Walter McGrail, Ralph Yearsley and Fred Huntly.

Beery Starts in "Talisman"

Production work has begun on "The Talisman," the initial feature which is being made by Frank E. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris of the Associated Authors for release through the Allied Producers and Distributors, a subsidiary of the United Artists corporation. Wallace Beery is the star. Chester Withey is directing the production which is being filmed at the Thomas H. Ince studios.

KIRKWOOD LATEST TO JOIN LION CORRAL

Now it's James Kirkwood, star of the stage and screen, and until last week star of the New York company of "The Fool," who has been signed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to a long-time contract. A telegram from the home office in New York to the studio states that the contract had been signed before Mr. Kirkwood left New York for Los Angeles. He will play opposite Mrs. Wallace Reid in her "antidope" picture before beginning work at Goldwyn's.

Although the tremendous activity at Goldwyn, and the expansion of its stock company to include a number of the most famous stars and the best-known directors, has been the nine weeks' wonder of the film world, the news of Mr. Kirkwood's affiliation will create wide interest.

Mr. Kirkwood has been Mary Pickford's leading man and her director—he has been himself featured or starred in a number of big productions, and has been associated as player or director with most of the great producing companies since his beginning with Biograph.

On the stage, he has played under David Belasco's management, opposite such stars as Blanche Bates, Margaret Anglin, Henry Miller, etc. He has directed pictures in eastern studios and in California, among them being "Bill Apperson's Boy," with Jack Pickford. Pictures in which he played prominent roles are "The Luck of the Irish," "In the Heart of A Fool," and "The Scoffer." For Goldwyn he played in "The Branding Iron" and "The Sin Flood." He prefers to play strong character roles.

Mr. Kirkwood was born in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and started his stage career with a stock company in New York.

NOAH BEERY WORKS IN ONE FILM FOR A CHANGE

For the first time in eleven months, Noah Beery, one of the most famous of all screen villains, is working in only one picture, Rex Beach's "The Spoilers," which Lambert Hillyer is directing at the Goldwyn studios.

Mr. Beery has been the busiest actor in Hollywood for the past year, his services having been very much in demand and, even foreign producers have been after him, for this week the actor received and offer from the Berlin Films, Inc., of Berlin, to star in independent productions.

The fact that Mr. Beery is working in only one picture now, does not mean a decrease in his popularity, rather it means that he is preparing himself carefully for the screen fight in "The Spoilers," said to be the greatest ever to be filmed.

PEACE FALLS ON ARMY OFFICER, SO HE ENTERS FILMS

Just as long as bullets whizzed and sang over his head, with airplanes winging their deadly flights above him, and cannon roaring out their hymn of hate, Don Armando, soldier of fortune, was content.

But when the armistice was signed, when the boys started coming back from over there, and ploughshares were made from the metal of the silent guns—well, that wasn't so good.

Not by a large, large jugful—or maybe, canteens would be a better word.

When that happened, Don Armando started looking around. His first lieutenant in Uncle Sam's Army didn't look so good as it had during the stirring days of 1917 and 1919.

Then he went to Spain, where he became a captain of the King's Guards. But there wasn't anything to fight, except the flies which gathered about the corrals on dull, hot days.

So he moved again, this time to Mexico, where he was entertained royally for a time by various high officials of the Mexican Government, and several times broke bread with President Obregon himself.

But a colonelcy in the Mexican army didn't mean anything to him—he had been given that rank soon after his arrival in the Mexican capital. There wasn't anything to fight, nothing to do but drill, and enjoy the afternoon siesta, then parade in the late afternoon, and dance until midnight.

BEN TURPIN OFFERS A PRIZE FOR RARE DEVICE

Not to be outdone by motion picture companies offering a prize for a positive cure for "Kleig-eyes," Ben Turpin, Romeo of the Mack Sennett lot, is providing an opportunity for the inventive optician to enter the Hall of Fame.

Ben is filming his latest Mack Sennett comedy, "Where Is My Wandering Boy, This Evening?" under the direction of Chet Wallace. In his spare moments Ben likes to read the day's news. But Ben is having his troubles, and he wants someone to hand him a pair of "specs" which will enable him to read a newspaper.

"I'm having my troubles getting the exciting news straight," said Mons. Turpin. "I start reading from left to right and when I get half way down the first column my eyes refuse to behave. I find that I'm reading two different stories at one time. My left eye reads the story on the last column and my right eye swings to the first column. I have so far been unable to finish a single item. I start them but someone has to finish them for me as soon as my optic nerves drive the sight of one eye to the opposite end of the page. I'd give anything to read all the scandals from start to finish."

Don Armando as he appeared in the role of a Russian army officer in a successful Madrid production.

So Don Armando came to Hollywood. In his own native land, Spain, he was considered one of the country's most promising actors. Hardly had he stowed his grips in his apartments before he had a part, one of the principal roles in "Why Do We Live," which James Calnay is producing at Universal.

Oh, yes, the Don likes Hollywood. Of course, there isn't any war here, but the Don's an expert fencer and bull-fighter, so he ought to have a lot of excitement in pictures.

MOVIE MAGNATE ALMOST CAPTURES DANCE TROPHY

Richard Rowland, head of the First National, dancing with Colleen Moore, came within an ace of capturing the dancing contest trophy at the Hotel Ambassador's Coconut Grove last Tuesday evening.

Norma Talmadge and her husband, Joseph Schenck, were active in securing a big party of fans to boost Mr. Rowland and Miss Moore with applause, and it looked like a sure win until Lyman's orchestra suddenly swung to a waltz. Mr. Rowland was not so good at a waltz. The music went back to a fox-trot, but he became discouraged, and although he had been selected by the judges, who were Gladys Walton, Mary Newcomb, Robert Edeson and Larry Semon, as one of the best three couples, he lost heart and sat down.

The winners of the contest were Irving Stark, a guest at the Alexandria hotel, and Miss Peggy Smith, who came in first over an entry of over twenty couples, many of whom were well-known motion picture stars, including Bessie Love.

Les Bates has recovered from injuries sustained while enacting a fight scene with William Russell in a Fix special, and will be removed from the hospital this week.

BROTHER-IN-LAW DIRECTS VIOLA DANA NOW

Speculation as to who would direct Viola Dana in her new series of special Metro productions was set at rest with the signing of Harold Shaw, one of the real pioneers of the industry and a director who has had a remarkably varied and successful career. Mr. Shaw, aside from his directorial distinction, has the honor of being the husband of one of England's best known stars, Edna Flugrath, and the brother-in-law of two others, viz., Viola Dana and Shirley Mason. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw have only recently come to Hollywood from abroad, but they are so delighted with California that they have decided to remain.

"Rouged Lips," a story of the stage by Rita Weiman, has been selected as the first Viola Dana vehicle which Mr. Shaw will direct. It offers Miss Dana an unusually effective role somewhat similar to that in "A Chorus Girl's Romance," which is credited with being one of Miss Dana's most successful productions.

"Rouged Lips" will mark Miss Dana's return to the screen following her appendicitis operation. Production will begin April 15th.

Harold Shaw is a native of Tennessee. His theatrical experience dates back to the early nineties in San Francisco, and in addition to a vast amount of stock company experience, he appeared in leading roles on the stage with Anna Bingham and Thomas Jefferson.

In 1910 he was induced to join the original Edison stock company of screen players. In time he was engaged to direct pictures for Edison and later for the Imp company which, at that time, was controlled by Carl Laemmle. His success with Imp brought him the position of director general of the London Film Company of England. While in the later capacity, Mr. Shaw directed pictures starring such famous English stars as Sir Herbert Tree and Cyril Maude, in addition to many starring Edna Flugrath. He is credited with elevating the standard of English production and introduced many of the modern production methods into the British Isles. During the course of his work abroad he produced pictures in Africa, Russia and Australia.

Still Signing 'Em Up

Irene Rich is the latest acquisition to the Warner Brothers roster of stars, having just signed a long-term contract to enact stellar roles for that concern. Miss Rich's first starring vehicle will be the picturization of the Kathleen Norris novel, "Lucretia Lombard."

Yea, colonel, prosperity is becoming daily more general.

The sensation of the week: a horse—a real, live equine—was seen on Hollywood Boulevard Tuesday!

Hollywood is soon to have a Chinese cafe to be known as the Chung Chow Inn. As might be expected this inn will specialize in "chow."

It is to be expected that some scandal-monger will perpetrate a book entitled "The Heart Affairs of Bill Hart," now that the newspapers have shown such activity in trying to create a demand for such.

There have been some laughable efforts to "revolutionize" press agents lately. Meanwhile the said press agents persist in "evoluting" as a matter of preference and habit, both time-honored since the days of P. T. Barnum, and, not likely to be changed by any human force.

It is high time for the low-down on how censors can continue to stay up when fully eighty-five per cent of all the people care unalterably against censorship of motion pictures in any form. If this great industry is suffering on account of insidious politics, let's annihilate some politics without delay.

It has been ascertained that more capital to be invested in motion pictures has been brought into the Southern California field in the last six months than for any other similar period of time since the establishing of the industry here. As Al Jolson would say: "You ain't heard nothin' yet."

Plans for the building of several fine new theatres in Hollywood are advancing with reassuring rapidity. In fact, everything is moving along swiftly in that burg, and yet, it does not deserve the odium generally attached to being called a "fast" town. It's just simply speedy on the progress.

There's a magic city of great cosmopolitan delights springing into being almost without anyone in Southern California really and truly realizing it. To get the point of this, study what's going on in Hollywood right now. It is doubtful whether or not there ever was such an up-building movement in any other section of the world as is now in full sway in the film capitol. That it will be an unsurpassed city of several hundred thousand population within a few years is a foregone conclusion.

"DOPE" STORIES SWAMP

STUDIO SCENARIO ROOMS

A flood of "dope" stories has poured into the scenario departments of the various studios as a result of the recent agitation against the drug evil. To date Mrs. Wallace Reid, who is now filming "Human Wreckage" the film feature by C. Gardner Sullivan which dramatically depicts the truth about dope, has received 1134 manuscripts touching on every known phase of the narcotic subject.

Friends and critics who have volunteered to assist Mrs. Reid in the making of her film and who are reading the scripts which arrive in every mail declare that while many interesting stories have been told, very few scripts present the idea that drug addiction is a disease and not an indulgence. In her film, Mrs. Reid has taken the position that the solution of the drug evil is not to hold drug addicts up to public scorn and ridicule, but to arouse the public to demand the suppression of the wholesale traffic in habit-forming narcotics.

Tod's to Do "Faith"

Tod Browning, noted director who recently signed a long-term contract with the Goldwyn Studios, will direct "The Day of Faith" as his first picture. The picture will be based on Arthur Somers Roche's powerful story, by the same man, which was first published in Collier's magazine and latter issued as a novel.

Nigh Finishes in New York

The last foot of film on Will Nigh's second special production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North was shot last week at the Metro Studios, New York. The final scene was a fitting wind-up to the calibre of the feature. It was a huge cabaret scene including eight hundred people and occupying the entire length and breadth of the studio. It was a set which took three weeks to construct.

Keeps La Verne Busy

Ray La Verne, casting director for the Ivan Kahn Agency, located at 5540 Hollywood Boulevard, is holding "his own" in spite of the fact that he spends most of the twenty-four hours looking for new types for the Rex Ingram picture, "Scaramouche," and other big productions.

Du Crow Changes Plans

Tote Du Crow, who was recently seen as Pablo in "The Pride of Palomar," has temporarily abandoned plans to go to Mexico to appear in pictures. He states he has under consideration several local offers, and believes that due to the unsettled conditions in the southern republic at the present time, it would be better to continue work here for a time.

BARKER'S UNIT IS FILMING IN CANADA

Jasper, Alberta, Canada, is the destination of the Reginald Barker company which left Los Angeles several days ago to film scenes for the forthcoming Mayer-Metro special, "The Law-Bringers," in the snow country of the North.

After several days work in the beautiful Jasper National Park, the company will move on to Edmonton, where a base of supplies will be established to serve during the months that Mr. Barker will be "shooting" scenes in the Athabasca River and Lesser Slave Lake country.

Included in the party on this important film project are: Earle Williams, Rene Adoree, Pat O'Malley, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa of the cast, Percy Hilburn chief photographer and his battery of eight cameramen, Harry Schenck, unit manager; E. L. Gerry, script stenographer; R. E. Nauman, electrical engineer of the Mayer Studios; Ernest H. Bacon, property man and general quartermaster; a construction crew and a force of electricians and carpenters, bringing the total of the party up to fifty. A specially constructed motor generator and fifteen aeroplane motors for the storm scenes were among the three carloads of equipment shipped North.

STAR OF SILENT DRAMA WILL SING OUT LOUD

That Charles Ray, motion picture star, has an excellent singing voice is a fact that few people know.

But it is true. It became more widely known during the rehearsals for the Writer's Revue of 1923, which will take place at the Philharmonic Auditorium on the nights of April 27 and 28.

Ray plays a leading role in the production and is called upon to sing two snappy musical numbers composed especially for him. Some of those in charge expressed doubts as to his ability to sing but such doubts were quickly routed when Ray rehearsed the first evening.

Jacobs Secures Brotherton

Howard P. Brotherton, who was with Selznick for the past three years as head cutter, has just been engaged by Arthur H. Jacobs to edit the initial Frank Borzage production which is an adaptation of the magazine story, "Terwilliger," by Tristram Tupper. The Borzage story is to be released through Associated First National Pictures. It was originally published in the Metropolitan Magazine and serially in newspapers. The scenario is by Agnes Christine Johnston.

MAN WHO FILMED "NANOOK OF THE NORTH" WILL NOW INVADE FAR SOUTH ISLAND

To do for the natives of the South Seas what he did for the Eskimo in his film, "Nanook of the North," Robert J. Flaherty, F. R. G. S., will sail next month at the head of an expedition to Savaii, the westernmost of the Samoa group of Islands in the Southern Pacific, according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under whose auspices the expedition is being undertaken.

Flaherty, whose "Nanook of the North" was hailed last year as one of the most unusual films ever made, will leave New York April 12 and will sail from San Francisco on the steamship "Sonoma" April 24. He will remain in the South Seas for one year.

"This is one of the most ambitious projects of its kind ever attempted in motion pictures," said Mr. Lasky in making the announcement. "Mr. Flaherty will take with him complete technical equipment for the making of motion pictures, so that when he returns from Savaii next year his picture will be practically finished.

"He will take a completely furnished laboratory, electric light plant, printing machine, drums for the drying of his films, electric fans and all chemical and other technical apparatus needed in the development and editing of his picture. He will also take several thousand feet of color process film, as some of his pictures will be in colors.

"This Paramount-Flaherty expedition to the South Seas is the first of a series of expeditions which we plan to have him make for us. In his wonderful picture, 'Nanook of the North,' Mr. Flaherty took the finest type of Eskimo that he could find. Then around his daily life and adventures he built a picture which was one of the most dramatic and authentic pictures ever shown. He will do the same thing in his South Seas picture. He will show the finest type of Island native and show him truthfully, dramatically and entertainingly.

"Although these pictures cannot help being educational, our primary purpose is entertainment and we expect the Flaherty South Seas picture to combine education with entertainment, just as was done with 'Nanook of the North.'

"Educators, scientists and men of public affairs have assured us that this project is just as important to the people of America as any Polar expedition.

"Just as 'The Covered Wagon' is acquainting the people of today with the hardships and struggles of the pioneers of 1849, so this picture of the South Seas will show civilization the true nature of the primitive peoples of the Pacific.

"I cannot emphasize too much the importance to the public of America of this series of pictures to be made for us by Mr. Flaherty. They will introduce a new note into American pictures and they open up a vast new field for development of motion picture production. Not only are they important as a new form of entertainment, but they also have an inestimable value in promoting international understanding."

"TERWILLIGER" BECOMES "CHILDREN OF DUST"

Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of Frank Borzage Productions, has finally decided upon the release title for his initial feature which the young director is now making. It is "Children of Dust," and was selected only after a prolonged conference among heads of the film company and Richard A. Rowland, of Associated First National Pictures, who is now on the coast. "Children of Dust" is to be released by that company as a special feature, the first of the Borzage series.

The story is an adaptation of "Terwilliger," by Tristram Tupper, which was published in Metropolitan Magazine and serially in newspapers throughout the nation. Agnes Christine Johnston prepared the scenario from the original story.

An all-star cast has been selected by young Borzage to play in "Children of Dust." It is headed by Lloyd Hughes, Johnnie Walker, Pauline Garon, Frankie Lee, George Nichols, Bert Woodruff, Newton Hall and little Josephine Adair.

FINEMAN RENTS A STUDIO FOR HIS NEW UNIT

Another independent producing unit has come into active operation with the resumption in Hollywood of production by B. P. Fineman, who has rented the Principal Pictures Studios from the Lesser-Gore forces, the latter of which from now on will make their headquarters at the United Studios.

Fineman intends to make a series of features during the current year. The first will be "Don't Marry For Money," a collaboration by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton, well known authors of magazine and screen stories.

As soon as a director and cast have been engaged, Fineman will start work. Negotiations are now progressing for talent, and it is quite likely, according to Fineman, that the leading role will fall to an actor whose name is a household word.

The second picture in the Fineman series will be from one of America's most famous novels if a deal now pending for film rights is consummated.

"Don't Marry For Money," the first offering, will be six reels in length and will probably require two months to produce. It is a society drama, treating this phase of American life from a new angle.

LONG LIVE THE VILLAIN. DEMAND AUSTRALIANS

"Stop killing Noah Beery!"

This ultimatum has been received by Jesse D. Hampton from a group of indignant film fans in Australia. The Antipodean admirers of the famous villain threaten to stop attending his pictures unless he gets better treatment.

"Noah Beery for The Hero" club has been formed in Australia, according to a letter received by the actor from Faith Lauging, 10 years old, who thought the time for action had arrived when told that Beery had been cast as the villainous McNamara in the picturization of Rex Beach's novel, "The Spoilers."

If Beery doesn't stop being beaten in every picture and start spanking the slick-haired men, drastic action will be taken by the 35 members of the club, the letter declares.

Dance Finals Soon

Everybody is asking when the Dancing Contest Finals will take place at the Coconut Grove for the $500 Ambassador Cup. It is understood that this party will take place sometime in April when there will probably be more motion picture stars competing for this prize than were ever seen on a dance floor together anywhere before.

SPEAKING OF CLEVERNESS—

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Steve Norton, A. S. C., has just finished ten weeks with Ray company on special camera work.

Will M. Ritchey has been signed by cable to join Henry King. Mr. Ritchey sails from New York for Rome, Italy today.

George Fawcett has been added to the cast supporting Betty Compson and Richard Dix in Herbert Brenon's "The Woman with Four Faces."

Conway Tearle is supporting Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance," at the United studios. It will take about three months to make this production.

Mary O'Hara has been engaged by Universal to write the titles for Rupert Julian's Viennese spectacle, "The Merry-Go-Round." The film will be released next fall.

Martha Mattox finished her engagement in Goldwyn's production, "Three Wise Fools," this week and is now working in only one picture, "Penrod and Sam."

Lloyd Hughes, Pauline Garon, and Johnnie Walker are the featured players in "Children of the Dust," being made at the United studio under the direction of Frank Borzage.

Virginia Warwick, who played the part of the Spanish girl in support of Dustin Farnum in "The Grail," is rapidly establishing herself as one of filmdom's most promising delineators of feminine Latin roles.

Jack Mower, who appeared in two Cecil B. DeMille productions, "Saturday Night" and "Manslaughter," has been signed by Universal to co-star with Eileen Sedgewick in a new historical serial, "Daniel Boone," under the direction of Frank Messinger and Jay Marchant.

Bert Roach, who has been supporting Neely Edwards in a series of comedies at Universal, will be starred in a series of one-reel comedies. These pictures will be made under the direction of William Watson; the assistant will be William Holland, the cameraman, Milton Bridenbecker.

After testing half the young film players in Hollywood for the part of "Gecko" in his production of "Trilby" for First National, James Young, the director, has finally selected Francis McDonald for the part.

This is the latest addition to the large all-star cast which has been assembled for the picture.

Alf Goulding is in the final stages of Baby Peggy's "The Orphan." Charlotte Rich, a New York stage beauty, plays the part of the mother.

Newspaper waste baskets will be empty Saturday, April 21st. Hollywood's press agents will lay aside their typewriters and blue pencils for the second annual Wampas "frolic."

Frank B. Davison last week tendered his resignation as director general of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Los Angeles next July.

Walla Walla ministers have adopted resolutions protesting against the showing of Charles Chaplin's latest screen success, "The Pilgrim," declaring the film tends to ridicule the clergy.

Fred Spencer has finished "Step On It," which is his first starring vehicle for Century Comedies. Ernie Adams, Billy Egle, Glen Cavender and Fay Wray supported the new fat comedian in this picture.

"The Steel Trail," adapted from the original story by George Plympton, will serve as the vehicle for the initial serial to be filmed by William Duncan and Edith Johnson under their new Vitagraph contract.

Joe Girard is playing a heavy in "The Eagle's Talons," directed by Duke Worne, and features Ann Little and Fred Thomson. John Cossar, who is in the cast of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is also playing a part for Mr. Worne.

Archie Mayo has been chosen to direct the first of the series in which the Gorham Follies will appear for Century Comedies. Doris Eaton, the ex-Ziegfeld Follies dancer, is playing the leading role opposite Jack Cooper, the star.

Arrangements have been made by the Mack Sennett company to release all forthcoming two-reel and Ben Turpin comedies through Pathe. Strangely made-up comedians will be discarded in favor of real life characters, and more money will be spent on each production in order to present comedies of higher quality.

The natives of San Bernardino, California, gave Jack Hoxie, the Universal star, one of the greatest receptions ever given by any townspeople to a motion picture star. Jack is in San Bernardino with his director, George E. Marshall, and Tom Regan. These folks are expected back to the studio within the next week.

Carmel Myers is busily studying all the ancient Egyptian books she can purchase or borrow, to gain a further knowledge for her part as Arzia in William P. S. Earle's "King Tut-Ankh-Amen," which is in its first stages of production.

Fred Kley has resigned from his position as studio manager of the Paramount West Coast studios, where he has been employed for the last ten years. Business reasons necessitated resignation, according to a statement recently issued.

Evelyn Selbie has signed with B. P. Schulberg corporation to play Quinchita, a Mexican woman, in "The Broken Wing," under the direction of Tom Forman. Prior to this engagement Miss Selbie had just returned from Truckee with the Fox unit making "Snowdrift."

William Humphreys, one of the screen's most brilliant artists who predicts doubling of popularity of movies within two years.

According to advices from the New York offices of the Goldwyn studios, the film rights to Elinor Glyn's famous novel, "Three Weeks," have been purchased, and the story will be immediately transformed for screen purposes. It is understood Goldwyn will offer Miss Glyn an attractive contract for her services during the preparation and actual filming of her novel.

Edward S. Curtis, prominent photographer and creator of "The Vanishing Race," an art study of the American Indians, of which 250,000 copies have been sold, has joined the ranks of Cecil B. DeMille's cinematographers. He will collaborate with Bert Glennon in the filming of all forthcoming DeMille productions for Paramount.

Edmund Cobb has returned from Truckee, where he has been on location with Harry Carey. They are making "The Miracle Baby." The rest of the picture will be made at the R-C studios.

Adamae Vaughn is at the present time rehearsing her part in the Writer's Revue which will play at the Auditorium, April 25th. Charles Ray and Mabel Forrest (Mrs. Bryant Washburn) will have some original numbers to offer.

Bob McKenzie is on location with George Marshall at Victorville. Bob is playing the comedy relief in Marshall's picture which features Jack Hoxie. This is Hoxie's first feature under the Universal banner.

Richard Stanton, who has just returned to Los Angeles from Europe, where he has been actively engaged in motion picture production, has been signed by Universal to direct William Desmond in a story of the Northwest mounted police.

Ann Luther announces from the far away distance of New York that she is about to migrate to California, where she will organize her own picture company. According to the announcement, Miss Luther will star herself in five-reel features.

Harry S. Northrup is playing "Steve Stone," the head of the narcotic ring in "Human Wreckage," at the Ince studio. "Human Wreckage" is the final title selected for Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic picture which is being directed by John Griffith Wray.

Arthur Edmund Carewe, who has been cast for the part of Svengali in "Trilby," has a most difficult character to make up. Mr. Carewe has had to study the character four weeks, and at the present time it takes him four and a half hours to make up as Svengali.

Ruth Royce has completed her engagement supporting Art Acord and Louise Lorraine in the Universal serial, "Oregon Trail," and is now enacting the feminine heavy role in the historical serial, "Daniel Boone," under the direction of Frank Messinger and J. Marchant.

A baby girl, six and one-half pounds, was born to Mr. and Mrs. George Magrill, March 27th. Mr. Magrill is supporting Ann Little in the Universal serial, "The Eagle's Talons," under the direction of Duke Worne. The child will be christened Marylin.

GREEK PRODUCER RETURNS FROM GREECE

Kay De Kay has returned to Hollywood.

To many persons unfamiliar with the motion picture industry, this doesn't mean much.

To those in close touch with developments, however, it means that another active factor in the present wave of prosperity will start work soon.

It is understood that Mr. De Kay will be associated here with George Rigas, one of the best known Greek actors now in America, who is now in the east completing plans for the organization of the producing company of which he is the head.

Mr. De Kay left Hollywood about a year ago with two pictures which he made here. In Greece, where they were exhibited for more than a year, the films were so popular that the producer has decided to repeat his venture, on a greatly expanded scale.

He has conferred with Rigas, it is understood, relative to the latter's plans for reviving ancient Greek dramas, bringing them down to date, although retaining the original theme.

Mr. Rigas is expected to return immediately from New York City, where he has been in conference for several weeks with several of the wealthiest Greek-Americans of the metropolis with regard to his new film company.

EXPO TO HAVE "LITTLE CHURCH AROUND CORNER"

One of the attractions at the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition will be a "Little Church Around the Corner." This feature of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial will be a novelty, but one that is certain to win a very big patronage.

The Rev. Neal Dodd, pastor of Hollywood's famous place of worship, will be in charge of this church, which will be built on a semi-circular site, approximately 96x128 feet. A mission garden typical of early California days, will be laid out around this church. The architecture will conform to the Spanish-Colonial type which has been adopted as the official style for the exposition. The edifice will be located on the Esplanade near the Court of the Americas.

The Little Church Around the Corner will seat 200 persons. According to the present plan continuous services will be held in it by representatives of the various denominations. An organ will be installed and music al services will be a feature.

Florence Gilbert, who played in Bull Montana's "Snowed Under," is again playing with this famous "handsome" comedian in "Breaking Into Society."

PLAYER'S ASSOCIATION AIMS TO DEVELOP INTO A MUTUAL BOON

With prominent members of the film colony flocking to its banners every day, and with the membership list gradually mounting to the limit already fixed by its officers, the Motion Picture Players Association, with headquarters at 1614 Cahuenga Avenue, is rapidly rounding into form as one of the most prominent agencies for the placing of motion picture talent known in America.

Fannie Warren, widely known reader and baritone singer, and who has been connected with pictures in leading character roles, is one of the latest to join the organization.

The casting director and his assistant and studio representative, Monte West and Jack Carroll, respectively, are well known to motion picture players and producers. Both have been know here for many years, and both have excellent records.

Discussing the plans and purposes of the organization yesterday, H. C. Ellis, secretary of the association, said:

BALD-HEADED MEN WILL GET SURPRISE AT WRITERS' REVUE

Bald-headed men, beware!

Something is about to happen in your life, nor is it the thrill of seeing a new hair curl in the oasis.

The prettiest girl to be found in all Los Angeles is going to offer a grand and glad surprise to the hairless men who sit near the aisles at the Philharmonic Auditorium on the nights of April 27th and 28th, the dates of the Writers' Revue of 1923.

Rumors have it that the barbers of Hollywood are shaving many a head for men who are anticipating the secret treat in store for bald-headed gentlemen.

Monte West

"Everything possible will be done, not only for the players, but for the studios as well, to furnish to motion picture producers supporting casts and extra players who will be best fitted for the productions in which they work.

"Complete files of the players—their descriptions and photographs—are maintained for the use of directors and casting directors. Records of past achievements also are on hand, and will be given to those wishing to know more about certain players.

"In fact, we think that this organization will ultimately solve the problems which directors always have faced, of not getting exactly what they wanted for pictures; and for players who wish to rise in the profession."

The association's cashier will be on duty at headquarters from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m., and members may cash their vouchers without any kind of commission being deducted from them, it is announced.

INCE WILL PERSONALLY DIRECT MADGE BELLAMY IN "SPECIAL"

Madge Bellamy, who has just signed a three-year starring contract with Thomas H. Ince, will make her first big "special" under the personal direction of the producer, it has been announced. Production work on her first starring vehicle will begin shortly with Thomas H. Ince handling the megaphone.

The fact that the producer has agreed to assume active direction of her work promises a brilliant future for the Texas maid who recently scored a success in Ince's screen version of "The Hottentot" and in the title role of Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone."

NIBLO BRINGS BIG SHIPYARD INTO MAGIC BEING

A shipyard employing 200 carpenters, riggers, sail makers and iron workers will spring up as if by magic from the sand between Balboa and Newport this week as the first step in Fred Niblo's greatest motion picture undertaking.

The director will film "Captain Applejack" as his second independent production for Louis B. Mayer. The story requires a fleet of seven square-rigged vessels of the pirate period; four tugs for towing; three hydroplanes for couriers and three camera barges.

Because of his familiarity with boats and his knowledge of the needs of the camera, Alvin Wyckoff, supervising cameraman of Mr. Niblo's unit, has been placed in charge of arrangements at the harbor. He has selected the vessels and provided quarters for the men in Santa Ana, Balboa and Newport.

Robert Ellis, art director, will supervise the refitting of the vessels and a port captain of sailing ship days will superintend the rigging of the vessels from Ellis' drawings. A mill and machine shop will be established at Newport and equipment is already being moved from the studio.

"Captain Applejack" is to be filmed from the stage success of that title. It concerns a pirate cruise and is brilliantly contrasted with modern life. Enid Bennett, Matt Moore, Barbara La Marr, Robert McKim and Thomas Ricketts have the principal roles.

Production will start immediately at Clune's Studio, where the Niblo unit occupies space. The opening scenes will be interiors. Then, with the completion of work at the harbor the cruise will begin and it is anticipated that it will last all summer.

TWO PRODUCERS RACE TO FINISH HOLLYWOOD FILMS

Two photoplays now in the course of production, both depicting the private lives of cinema artists, and the stories of which are made in almost every respect, are being rapidly forced to a finished stage in two prominent film studios. The race, for it is a race between both producers, is prompted by the fact that the film that reaches the screen first, will no doubt have the greatest drawing power. At the Lasky studios, every effort is being exerted to complete and present "Hollywood," while at the Goldwyn studios, under the direction of Rupert Hughes, "Sold for Sale," is understood to be almost ready.

FRENCH STAR IS "WINNER" A JAIL TERM

Ten days in jail

Isn't that a sweet welcome for a prominent French actor to get, when he comes to America to work in pictures?

Maurice Canonge is the recipient of this unusual reception, at the hands of Judge Cox, Santa Ana's world-renowned antidote for speeding.

Mr. Canonge was tried in Santa Ana, before Judge Cox, on Wednesday.

The judge explained the charge against him—he was going 53 miles an hour on one of Orange County's highways, was he not?

He was not, the actor told the judge—he was making 56 miles an hour!

But didn't he know that it was illegal to drive that fast in Orange County?

One of the actor's French shrugs greeted the question.

He was an aviator during the war, he replied, and was accustomed to making 150 and 175 miles an hour in his "avion," he called it, without any speed cops to interfere.

"Well, this isn't France, and the war's over, so you'll have to shake off ten days in the Orange County jail," the judge told him. Not in those words, perhaps, but that's what he meant.

However, he was lenient enough to suspend sentence until Mr. Canonge has finished work in the Richard Walton Tully film version of "Tribby," now being produced at the United Studio, in which the actor has one of the principal roles.

Fire Threatens Studios

Flames from a fire started in the yards of the American Lumber Company, on Santa Monica Boulevard, threatened the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios and the studios of the Principal Pictures Corporation last Tuesday morning. The studios and lumber yard are on opposite sides of the street, and a stronger wind would have meant destruction to the former. The fire was fought by the studio emergency fire department, the vicinity in which the fire took place being out of the Hollywood limits.

Peggy to Move

Immediately upon completion of her current Century comedy, "The Orphan," which is being directed by Harry Edwards, Baby Peggy will move all her belongings and small furniture to the Universal, where she will work when starting on the series of her big feature productions. The Jitney Juliet's fond papa, J. Travers Montgomery, will continue to direct Peg in her individual scenes in the big league offerings.

Elaine Signs New Contract

Elaine Hammerstein has signed a two-year contract to appear in stellar roles for the Edward Dillon Productions, which will be released through Truart, a subsidiary distributing company of Tiffany Productions. Miss Hammerstein will make four pictures under her new arrangements. Two films will be produced at the Goldwyn Studios, and the other two will be filmed in New York.

"WANTERS" PROVE WHAT STAHL WANTS

"The Wanters," a sparkling comedy-drama of New York society life, has been selected by John M. Stahl as the vehicle for his next production, according to announcement by Louis B. Mayer. Written by the noted fictionist, Leila Burton Wells, the story will be filmed with an all-star cast and will be released through Associated First National.

"The Wanters" will be Stahl's first picture since "The Dangerous Age," a dramatic masterpiece which has brought the attention of the entire film industry to focus on this director's work. Rumors naming other stories for picturization by him have been circulated recently, but the choice of "The Wanters" is definite. Mr. Mayer's announcement states, and preparations for its transfer to the screen are now under way.

J. G. Hawks, managing editor at the Mayer Studios, and Paul Bern, well-known free lance writer for the screen, are in daily conference with Stahl on the adaptation of the story and it is expected that the finished script will be ready for "shooting" within a week or ten days.

Music For Luncheon

Upon the requests of numerous cinema stars who patronize the Montmartre Cafe, Eddie Brandstatter, manager, has arranged with Jackie Taylor and Vincent Rose to have their orchestra entertain during the lunch hour. Therefore, screen stars will have dance and music with their noon-day meals, starting Monday, April 2nd.

Grassby to Play "Tut"

Bertram Thomas Grassby has been engaged for the title role in the William P. S. Earle production, "Tutankhamen," which is now being made at the Hollywood studios. The selection of Grassby for the role of the celebrated Pharaoh, was made by Mr. Earle only after the director had interviewed practically every available actor in the film colony who might possibly act and look the part of the distinguished ruler of the Nile.

Another New Unit Here

Preparations for the initial production to be filmed by the Achievement Films, Inc., are being made at the Goldwyn Studios. The Balzac novel, "The Magic Skin," is now being scenarized by Charles Whittaker, who has just arrived from New York. George D. Baker, prominent director, accompanied Mr. Whittaker from Gotham and will guide the destinies of the first picture for this new company.

LILLIPUTIAN FILM PLANT STARTS BIG THINGS

A big production program for the season has just been announced by Director-General A. T. Bond, of the Lilliputian Studios at San Rafael, Calif. Camera work has already begun on "Mistaken," a five-reel feature picture starring Beth Rudisill, who has returned from England where she starred in several productions. Director Bond, who is guiding the production, has also recently returned from England, where he directed features. Curtis Sill is leading man.

Harry Losh is directing a second comedy featuring George Barnes, noted stage and screen comedian and character actor. A special preview of Barnes' first comedy was held recently upon the visit of Dr. Albert Mallett, president of the organization, to the studios.

Many well-known Los Angeles picture people are attached to the staff of the Lilliputian Studios, and a series of both comedies and big feature pictures will be filmed.

Cancels Tour For Job

According to an announcement just made Robert E. Hewes, whose resignation from the publicity staff at Universal City was coincident with that of Malcolm Stuart Boylan's as director of publicity, has been persuaded by A. T. Bond, director general of the Lilliputian Studios at San Rafael, to cancel steamer reservations for Shanghai and accept the office of director of publicity of the company. He contemplated a journalistic mission to the Orient. Hewes was attached to "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" company at Universal and is widely known in Los Angeles for two years work here. According to the announcement he will have charge of all local and national publicity at the Lilliputian Studios.

Christie Signs Two Comedians

James Harrison and Lincoln Plumer, featured comedians, have been signed to one-year contracts by Christie. Harrison has just arrived from New York, where he supported Constance Talmadge in two pictures. Both comedians have worked under the Christie banner in featured roles.

FURTHMAN IS NEW ASSOCIATE OF U SCRIPT HEAD

Charles Furthman has been promoted to the position of associate editor of the scenario department at the Universal Studios, where he is now working with Raymond L. Schrock.

Mr. Furthman's elevation to the position formerly held by Paul Bern, who resigned some time ago to join the Mayer-Schulberg organization, marks the end of a first year's work at the big "U" plant.

The new associate editor's career, before entering motion picture work, was a varied and interesting one.

He was for eight years assistant state's attorney of Cook County, Illinois. In addition, he formerly served several years as a newspaper writer and he is the author of numerous original stories.

During the war Mr. Furthman was a first lieutenant of infantry, and serving in the department of military intelligence, and for a year after the war was employed by that department in Chicago, under the personal direction of General Leonard Wood, investigating wartime contracts.

Among Mr. Furthman's most recent original stories for the screen, all of which have been produced, are "Velvet Fingers," "Stolen Sweets," "Lotus Blossoms" and "Purple Stripes."

He has already assumed the duties of his new position.

Small Opens Office Here

The Edward Small Company has opened its California office at the Conlon Building, 6047½ Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, with Hugh Jeffrey in charge. This office was opened in response to numerous requests from artists used to doing business with the Edward Small office in the East desiring the same representation in the West. The Los Angeles office is working in co-operation with a number of producers, who had joined in inviting this company to operate on the Pacific Coast.

Rudy Has New Woe

The second marriage of Rodolph Valentino and Winifred Hudnut, which took place at Crown Point, Indiana, is not considered valid, according to Mrs. Edward White, deputy attorney general. Deputy White declares the Sheikh's latest trip to the altar is illegal in view of the fact the bride and bride-groom were non-residents of Lake county, where the marriage was performed. State authorities, however, will take no action, further than voicing their opinion.

Marion Nixon, who has been with Charles Ray for twelve weeks in "Miles Standish," has completed her engagement.

which already has been indorsed as sound by directors and players alike.

Struss explains that the menace of the Kleig is found in the ultra-violet rays of the lamp, invisible to the naked eye. Any glass, crystal or tinted, says he, will deflect the rays and render them harmless.

The offer of a reward recently made by the Goldwyn Studio for a cure for Kleig eyes has served to direct attention to the Struss discovery to such an extent that it is being widely adopted. Members of the cast of Gasnier's "Daughters of the Rich," wore glasses throughout their period of work, except when actually before the camera.

Interest of the screen colony today is centered in the announcement of the Wampus—Western Motion Pictures Advertisers, or publicists, for short—that the annual frolic of the organization again will serve as a fitting opportunity to introduce a baker's dozen and one of starlets to the world. Following the custom established a year ago the press agents are naming their selections for the highest stellar honors during the coming twelve months. The fortunate girls will be presented to the film colony, or as much of it as can crowd into Warner Brothers' mammoth inclosed stage, on the evening of April 21st.

Word reaches us that Marshall Neilan will use the castle of President Obregon, of Mexico, and possibly the President himself in his new picture, "The Eternal Three." Neilan and his entire company have gone to the Mexican capital for all the exterior scenes of the picture, which promises to reveal some new side lights on the always fascinating city.

It is reported that Robert Eddy, director, is enroute to San Francisco, and that the new series of Plum Center Comedies will be made here and not in the South as first suggested.

Louise Dresser, of "The Fog" cast, has finished her part in the picture and returned to Los Angeles. Ethel Wales, also of the same cast, will leave for the South in a day or two.

A. H. Sebastian, of the Belasco Productions, returned from the South a few days ago. He will go back to Los Angeles on Wednesday and complete at once the plans for the production of the company's next picture.

Eric Von Stroheim has been quite ill and confined to his apartments at the Fairmont Hotel for several days, with the result that work on "Greed," the screen version of "McTeague," has been halted. Von Stroheim is so far recovered that work was resumed today. The first week of actual shooting on the picture the company worked from eighteen to twenty-four hours a day.

The first big appointment to be made by Eugene H. Roth, personal representative of Carl Laemmle, is that of C. Edward Thorne, a San Francisco man, as supervisor of interior decorations of productions of the Universal Film Company.

Monte Blue visited San Francisco a few days ago. He is having a bit of a vacation between productions, and giving the exchanges of the Warner Brothers the once over at the same time.

Kathlyn Williams sailed from here last week on the Pacific Mail liner, President Wilson, bound for Shanghai, China, on a visit to her sister-in-law. Her husband, Charles Eyton, general manager of the Famous Players Lasky Studio, accompanied her from the South to San Francisco.

The Kenmat Productions, a San Francisco organization, have finished their first picture, "Scarlet Shadows," at Universal City, and the film is being titled and cut. Their future production will be made at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo.

News from New York

Seena Owen is recovering from a fracture of the knee, an injury sustained in riding on skis while being towed by a swiftly moving aeroplane. The accident occurred during the filming of a thrill for Cosmopolitan's forthcoming release, "Snow-Blind."

Raymond McKee and Marguerite Courtot will be married April 4th, in New York City, in the Little Church around the Corner. All Hollywood is invited!

Glen Hunter, star of "Merton of the Movies," this week signed a five-year contract with Jesse L. Lasky, to star in Paramount Pictures. Mr. Hunter will make four pictures a year and will have a voice in selecting his director and cast.

Mary Astor this week signed a five-year contract to support Glen Hunter. The engagement follows a search of several months for her type. Miss Astor's first picture will be "This Side of Paradise."

"The Covered Wagon" had a triumphant opening at the Criterion Theatre, March 16th. It really deserves to be called a big picture. While simple in theme, it is of epic simplicity and has the breadth and sweep of human nature in the rough with a background of material nature in all its relentless grandeur. A breathing thing and a faithful reproduction of life of the hardy 49-ers. "The Covered Wagon" is dedicated to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt. He would have loved the picture.

Jim Cruze is working at the Paramount Studios with his "all-star" cast of extras, filming "Hollywood." He was present at the premiere of his picture "The Covered Wagon."

Pauline Frederick opened March 20th in "The Guilty One," a drama at the Selwyn Theatre.

Alice Brady is another star who will "speak for herself," on the stage, after the movies. She will come out as a Charles Frohman star in "Zander the Great."

The Motion Picture Directors Association has sent a wire from L. A. asking F. Ray Comstock for permission to produce "Polly Preferred," out there with a cast of movie stars and let Hollywood have a view of this comedy of the film colony in order to get the inside dope about itself on the stage. We understand the cast will include "Doug" and Mary, Charlie and Pola, Norma, and Tommy Meighan.

Agnes Ayres came all the way from Hollywood to work and was hit by the "flu." She is doing nicely although still under the care of doctors.

New Yorkers are laughing themselves sick at Charlie Chaplin's "The Pilgrim." Still the censor of Pennsylvania comes forward and makes themselves foolish in the eyes of the world by saying the film cannot be shown in their state. That is a greater laugh than the picture. A body of New York City ministers voted "The Pilgrim" nothing but a pure laugh-getter without vulgarity.

Miss Lois Wilson has been nominated as the candidate of the motion picture industry for New York's good will delegation to France. This delegation will be sent to France by Miss Anne Morgan's American Committee for Devastated France.

Everything in New York is Egyptian, the influence being exerted on civilization by the discovery of King Tut-ankh-amen's tomb. Leading theatrical producers are planning Egyptian shows, designers are making dresses that look like the bottom of the Nile and which give our slim citizens an opportunity to look more like a meridian of longitude, or Cleopatra's needle, and of course Theda Bara, Cleo's twin, is looking for a play wherein she may dress as they did 3000 years ago.

"Humoresque," the Fanny Hurst play, is at the Vanderbilt Theatre. Laurette Taylor plays the mother and copes with the situation nicely. She has a penetrating sense of humor and wears a make-up that gives her the appearance of nine years older than Adam's wife. The stars acting is one of the unique performances of the age, as far as could be imagined from Peg. Miss Hurst has contrived an excellent first act, and the rest of the play reeks of mostly atmospheric touches, including a dog who takes the place of Peg's Michael.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" is causing a sensation at the Cameo Theatre. It is in its fifth week at that theatre and there is no let-up in sight. Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee are the featured players.

These are hectic days for Charlie Murray and Raymond McKee. This week they returned from their second trip within the month to Florida, and now they are on their way to Bermuda, their second trip there this winter, on account of the New York snows, 56 inches so far.

—Raymond McKee.

The chief excitement of the cast now playing in "The Fog" is the fact that Cullen Landis, leading man, has been driven from the house that he had rented in San Mateo by a ghost. It's not a publicity ghost either, but the real thing, and a nice rough ghost, who not only kept the nights noisy, but awakened Cullen with cold fingers, and as a last insult slapped his face. As Cullen didn't relish the role of "He Who Gets Slapped," at least by a ghost, he moved out of the house, and back to the calm of the Plaza Hotel.

As production proceeds on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," starring Lon Chaney, talk is rife in the film city concerning "The Acquittal," the Rita Weiman play which Universal has purchased and which will be cast from the topmost ranks of stars. It will be a production of superlative style.

Thomas Edison, in a newspaper interview on his 76th birthday, declared that Tom Mix was his favorite movie actor.

"Do you read anything?" an interviewer asked Richard Dix at the Goldwyn studio the other day. "Anything," replied Dix.

A View or Two Without Undue Ado

We have just heard of a plan to launch an Actors' Club which aims to pay salaries to its members during periods of need such as oftentimes arise "between pictures." It sounds mighty promising—if it does not make the error of promising too much.

It is quite fitting that John M. Stahl should be one of the directors who advocates strongly against "stalling" in favor of unbroken progress and that, incidentally, he should be one of the most active of the active when there are any activities on the schedule.

Charles R. Seeling, the rising producer who is starring "Big Boy" Williams, is almost frantic over the dearth of good western stories and announces he will pay "spot cash" for any and all "originals" he accepts. Hey! boys with prolific pens, here's a cash customer!

Mary Pickford has the replica of an old-time Spanish village on a hill built on the roof of her studio and it is a piece of very realistic construction although far from the elaborate. But, it did cost quite a bit, and, whatever it cost, it's both literally and figuratively one on the house!

There need be no alarm over the report that Henry Ford is working on a plan to found a "flivver factory" in Los Angeles, because even though he does, he will not have an undisputed clear field. Producers, who have come and gone, and, who continue to come and go, keep the "flivver" field fairly well crowded.

We have just learned of still another great amusement enterprise which is planned for Hollywood in the early future. It is not possible to divulge details as yet. But, we hereby assure the world it is O. K. to anticipate it with pleasure. Moreover, we once more reiterate our supreme confidence in Hollywood springing some of the most talked-about national sensations of the current year and they won't be of the unsavory sort.

Southern California has been enjoying some million-dollar showers this week. Farmers are jubilant. They'll be able to keep the old feed-bag filled to the brim at good profits. In fact, about the only tremendously important thing the rain doesn't help to grow is film for outdoor scenes. Forsooth, many "shooting" schedules have been "shot" during the six days just gone. However, there remains the old feed-bag to remember by way of consolation.

When the Wampas does finish its task of presenting those thirteen baby stars it has honored and the fair ones are thus well started on their way to full maturity a la stellar, the motion picture industry will still be in its infancy, according to every speaker on the subject who ever arises to announce how unaccustomed to public speaking he is in reality, etc. In view of the fact that said industry is now in its twentieth year and big and husky, it does not seem to fit the baby-clothes idea any longer.

Bonanza days approach for photoplay-producers, according to the latest survey of business conditions throughout the nation. This survey shows that the most prosperous enterprises in practically every city of consequence are the motion picture theatres and it is perfectly logical to assume there has been a return of general prosperity when movie patronage begins to show a highly noticeable increase. So, now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party by working with renewed zeal to make every picture of the highest quality so all parties, new and old, will continue to crowd cinema emporiums.

San Francisco seems to be all excited over Eric Von Stroheim's filming of "McTeague" there. One over-enthusiastic newspaper writer of that city has written an article in which he predicts that Von's choice of the "location" indicated the start of the locating of most of the film industry there. However, the fact remains that Frisco is still confronted with the task of producing weather conditions comparable to Southern California before she can hope to cope with Los Angeles as a competitor in the film-making game. And, how in the deuce are they going to manage the weather? Not to be unkind, but just to impress the point—when Max Graf got ready to film "The Fog," he selected the vicinity of Frisco as the best place to do it!

What do the fans want in the way of photoplays now? If there was only some unfailing means to ascertain this at will, the thorns would be removed from the pathways of the producers of our screen fare of today. There are certain tangible indication of the public desire. In fact, there are more such indications now than at any other time in the history of cinema. It is unmistakably obvious to even the stupid that tragedy is not wanted, and even when a great artist essays it there is a lack of enthusiasm in the reception he or she receives. Undoubtedly straightaway comedy dramas, romantic dramas and frank farces constitute the preference of the vast majority of the patrons of the picture theatres. CAMERA! would like to determine whether or not it is correct in making this assertion. Will YOU write the editor and inform him as to what kind of photoplays you want most nowadays? We in turn will communicate YOUR desires to the producers.

Womens' Wear, Stellar Ware and in Frisco Where----

By RAY H. LEEK

Behold the one dollar gown!

A Paris creation for the price of a sirloin steak. An entire wardrobe of five dresses—the number required by the correctly gowned woman to encircle the clock—for a five-dollar bill.

This cheering bit of news for a harrassed male population is given to the world by no less a personage than Olga Printzlau, screen write, who has assisted by the correctly gowned woman to encircle the clock—for a five-dollar bill.

Miss Printzlau not only showed Director Gasnier how it could be done for his production of "Daughters of the Rich," but aided him in filming a scene in which her plan is reduced to celluloid for any woman who cares to copy her idea. There are a few clips of the scissors, a ripping off of material, ten minutes with a needle and, presto! the gown is complete.

"The gowns are so simple that the least experienced women can make them," said Miss Printzlau. "They may be made of any material from calico to the most costly of silks for evening wear. I have planned five that may be used for every occasion, from kitchen duty to the most formal of evening entertainments."

Miriam Cooper, who plays a leading feminine role in the production, has acquired the complete wardrobe of dollar gowns, all of which she says she will wear in her next picture.

To whom shall we look for brilliant screen performances a year hence? Will the beauties of today continue to shine for us indefinitely?

Press agents who make up the membership of the Wampas have had the temerity to list thirteen beautiful and capable players whom they classify as "the most promising girls on the screen—the stars of tomorrow."

Read the names of next year's screen luminaries, as picked by the publicists:

|-----------------------|-----------------|
| Eleanor Boardman | Evelyn Brent |
| Ethel Shanno | Dorothy Devore |
| Virginia Browne Faire | Betty Francisco |
| Pauline Garon | Kathleen Key |
| Laura La Plante | Margaret Leahy |
| Helen Lynch | Anne Purdue |

Jobina Ralston

The girls will be presented to a waiting world at the annual frolic of the Wampas on the evening of April 21, on the great stage now under construction at Warner Brothers' studio.

When B. P. Schulberg recently announced that he was in the market for picture titles at prices ranging up to $10,000 a word, he little realized what unplumbed depths of potential literary talent would be reached. Literally thousands of titles have been contributed from every quarter of the United States. A force of office girls now are classifying the words and preparing them for final consideration of a board of studio experts headed by the producer himself.

The outstanding feature of the contributions thus far reached is optimism. The happy ending, judging from these titles, continues to be the most popular. Religion, sex and adventure—the latter with the love element uppermost—seem to predominate in the minds of the title writers.

Real bullets may be desirable in the filming of realistic battles, but Tom Forman favors the less tangible props usually available for such purposes when he stages a fight scene.

The director and company he used in the filming of battle scenes for "The Broken Wing," badly battered and much the worse for wear, have returned from Albuquerque, New Mexico, near which they met an ad-

San Francisco, Cal., April 4th.—Herbert Brenon, director for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Harold Swartz, assistant director, and a company including Betty Compson, Richard Dix, Theodore van Eltz, Guy Oliver, and eleven others, arrived in San Francisco this week for location work on "The Woman With Four Faces."

Robert Warwick, long a favorite of the sliver screen, arrived in San Francisco a few days ago, to fulfill a starring engagement at the Liberty Theatre in Oakland.

The company now engaged in making "The Fog" for the Graf productions at the Pacific studios at San Mateo, spent several days at Santa Cruz last week, staging the big train wreck which is one of the dramatic moments in the picture. The actual shooting of "The Fog" will be completed within the next few days.

Milton D. Gardner, director of production for Goldwyn, came to San Francisco on Sunday on business connected with Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed."

The filming of "The Hellions" by Max Miller productions goes merrily on. The company has been working on location here and in Oakland the past week, but will go to the Pacific studios this week for their studio work.

Holbrook Blinn has completed his engagement as guest star at the Alcazar Theatre, and is leaving for Los Angeles, where he will appear in "The Bad Man" and play in Mary Pickford's new picture at the same time.

The Northern California Photo-Plays, seem to have folded their tents like the Arabs, and silently stolen away. At least their offices are deserted and Harry H. Harvey, their manager, is said with two associates, to be starting one more school to try to teach moving picture acting. The real question, however, is what is going to become of the picture-making outfit they had sent to the interior of South America? It is to be hoped they get safely home again, and are not reduced to eating the trained bull which is part of the company.

Max Graf, production director of the Graf Productions, as soon as "The Fog" is completed will begin preparations for the filming of "The Grain of Dust" by David Graham Phillips, which will be the next picture to be made by the company. Mildred Harris, who has been placed under a long-term contract by Graf, will have the leading role.

Elsie Ferguson is in San Francisco this week in person for the first time in seven years. She will appear for two weeks at the Columbia Theatre in "The Wheel of Life," a drama by James Bernard Fagan.

Jack Dewey, of the Golden Gate Productions, is in Los Angeles getting the continuity written for three stories. They are "The Undercurrent" by Viola Wakefield, "Bloodhounds" by Fred William Cox, and a third as yet untitled. Work on all three will begin by the company in the very near future. They expect to do their studio work at the Pacific studios, San Mateo, with locations here and near Sacramento.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Some people think that when a cast is hired, a director and his staff engaged and the set built, there is no further expense in the shooting of a big picture.

Although Universal City is the most completely equipped studio center in the world, fifty thousand dollars worth of new electrical equipment had to be purchased and additional equipment, valued at three thousand dollars, leased by the month, in order to provide enough lighting to shoot "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Lon Chaney's forthcoming spectacular starring vehicle, in the way it should be photographed.

That is an item of expense that very few people, even many professionals, would ever think about. It is just one of a score of unthought-of expenses connected with the making of what is prophesied to be the world's greatest moving picture.

When the Wampus (Western Motion Picture Advertisers) chose Laura La Plante as one of their thirteen "stars of tomorrow" to be presented at the mammoth Wampas Frolic and Ball at the Warner Brothers' studio on April 21, they were echoing the opinion of Universal executives who regard Miss La Plante as one of the most promising young girls in pictures and one logically certain to be a "star of tomorrow."

Miss La Plante started her film career in comedies three years ago, went into two-reel westerns two years ago and into serials a year ago. She played in some of the biggest Universal historical chapter plays and then three months ago was drawn into the feature field for two leading roles opposite Hoot Gibson. She is now playing opposite Roy Stewart under Stuart Paton's direction and is considered a leading woman of more than average adaptability.

A troop of United States cavalry, borrowed from Camp Hearn, near San Diego, will be used in Hoot Gibson's latest picture, "Blinky," production on which has begun at Universal City under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

The Sedgwick company is now working at Imperial Beach, near San Diego, where all of the exterior shots will be taken. The picture is built around the life of a young cavalry officer, and Hoot will ride the border for a week with about 100 lads who do the job regularly without any camera recording their action.

Besides the "Blinky" cast Sedgwick was accompanied by a production staff of twenty-five persons. The company will remain on location about a week and then return to Universal City to complete the interior work on the picture.

Supporting Gibson in the play are Esther Ralston, DeWitt Jennings, Elinor Field, Matilde Brundage, Charles French, Donald Hattwell and William E. Lawrence.

Milton Sills, hero of numerous successful screen productions and himself a star, has been engaged by Universal to play the leading male role in "A Lady of Quality," a forthcoming Hobart Henley-Universal-Jewel production, starring Virginia Valli.

The Virginia Valli-Milton Sills combination should present one of the strongest dramatic teams in the industry. Miss Valli is one of the best known and most popular actresses in pictures. Sills is one of the most sought after leading men of the screen and has appeared as the romantic hero of many strong plays.

Sills, who was at one time a college professor, is a veteran of both the legitimate stage and the screen, and the deep sincerity of his work has made him a favorite with the motion picture public. His most recent appearance was in the role of Adam in "Adam's Rib."

One of the most successful young character actors that have been at Universal City in several years is Hayden Stevenson, the manager, who is such a "man of the world" in "The Leather Pushers." In the first two series of the famous Universal-Witwer humor classics in which Reginald Denny starred, Stevenson received remarkable praise from the critics of the country. His role was that of a "pal" as well as the manager of the fighter in the stories.

When the second series was finished Stevenson was cast in the same type of role

How the Hum of Industry is Humming Now

More motion pictures are being produced in Hollywood today than at any time since the beginning of the World War.

More actresses and studio workers are employed than at any time, perhaps, in the history of the film industry.

Many studios, with their demands for increased studio room growing greater daily, are making substantial improvements and additions to their plants.

And more money is changing hands every week as a result of this activity, it is estimated, than the average man could spend in a lifetime of continuous celebration.

Greater activity, and of a greater variety, perhaps, may be seen at United studios than on any other lot in the local film colony. Joseph Schenck's trio of stars—Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton—are in new productions. Frank Borzage is well under way with his "Terwilliger," in which Johnnie Walker and Lloyd Hughes have the leading male roles. James Young has shot the final scenes of his "Wandering Daughters," and is now at work on "Trilby," which he is directing for Richard Walton Tully. Edwin Carewe's "Girl of the Golden West," is in its final stages, and Maurice Tourneur is "shooting" his "Brass Bottle." UJack White has two comedy companies working, while Lloyd Hamilton's company of laughmakers also is busy.

Production pulses are quickening out at Universal City, where Carl Laemmle announced last week that three of his former feature players had been elevated to stardom, and that the program of five-reel star features would be materially increased. Huge crowds of extras have been used during the week on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley is now bringing close to the end of the third month of unceasing work. Three big features are completed, "The Phantom Fortune," "The Eagle's Talons," with Ann Little and Fred Thompson co-starring, and "The Oregon Trail." Several five-reel features are in the making, including those starring Herb Rawlinson, Hoot Gibson and Gladys Walton, while Edgar Lewis has just finished the cutting of "The Right of the Strongest," with an all-star cast headed by Helen Ferguson.

Production, just at the moment, is speeding up at the Lasky studio, with several big features 'being made. "Hollywood," "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," "The Cheat," and "Only 38" are well advanced. Cecil De Mille is preparing to start work, though, on "The Ten Commandments," and Herbert Brenon is directing Betty Compson's new vehicle.

Seven companies are working at the Hollywood studios, all independent organizations. Among the films being made are "Penrod and Sam," and a second Richard Thomas production.

More than a dozen independent companies are working day and night on the Fine Arts lot, where several additions are being made to care for the increased demand for studio space. Five features are being screened at Fox's as well as five comedies. And in every other studio in Hollywood, Los Angeles, Culver City and way points, red rings are being drawn practically every date on the calendar signifying the starting day of a new production.

What's the use of trying to tell all about what is going on? It would take far, far more space than there is in Camera! to tell every little detail; and a person would have to be twins, triplets or quadruplets, with as many pairs of eyes, in order to read it all before next week's production resume is written and the figures change all over again.

However, there's this much to say: There is more work being done in filmland, today, than there has been at any time since the beginning of the World War. Bigger and better productions are being made than ever before. More money is being spent in every department of the industry, and the actor or extra, studio carpenter or electrician, laboratory worker or costume maker who hasn't all the work he can do, at good pay, has nothing but his own lack of initiative to blame for his unemployment.

And the Man Doth Sayeth unto Woman—

If the ambition of Modern Young Women is success in business or love where else could she obtain better advice on this all-important topic than from a man?

Moreover, who else is better qualified to give such guidance than Warner Baxter, noted star of the screen and stage, long regarded one of the most famous matinee idols of the theatre and over whose distinguished manhood and personal charm hundreds of feminine hearts have been palpitating these several years!

Warner Baxter, as a former member of the Morosco Stock Company, of Los Angeles, has played probably all the great lover roles of theatrical literature. He has watched from his position behind the footlights the reactions of young women to the big emotional scenes of his plays. He has studied at close hand the problems of young men and women in business and romance.

"Be modest," Mr. Baxter advises, "be quiet and unaffected. Be modest in both your conduct and attire. Never overdress because men—bear in this in mind—make mental note of your apparel. A jewel or trinket out of place may cool the ardor of a man who may otherwise have loved you.

"Don't use cosmetics unless you absolutely have to. Rouge is unsightly unless used expertly. Rouge that becomes merely a red smear is the biggest handicap a girl can have. Real men flee from it as from a plague. Girls who plaster their faces with rouge and powder are sealing their doom.

"Be careful in your use of English. Don't use slang too freely. Current slang is permissible under certain circumstances, but use it sparingly. The girl who is slangy invariably forfeits the respect of men who would otherwise admire her.

"Above all things be neat. Men are most particular about this—especially men of good breeding.

STAR IS ILL

Barbara Bedford, who has been so seriously ill that she has had to withdraw temporarily from the cast of "The Spoilers," production of which is delayed as a result.

"When you speak, don't ever be boisterous. Use modulated tones in conversation. Don't be opinionated. Let the men indulge their egos all they want, but don't you make the mistake of knowing it all.

"If one were to ask me the easiest and quickest way to a man's heart and to his everlasting affection I would recommend 'modesty.' When you have that you have the gift of the gods."

Mr. Baxter is now at work on his first starring vehicle for F. B. O., "Blow Your Own Horn," now being filmed at the Powers' studios.

MR. WEBSTER IS MISLEADING

When you read the name Charlotte Mineau, pronounced Minnow, don't look up your Webster. His latest supreme and self-pronouncing dictionary is misleading. Charlotte Mineau, character actress on the Mack Sennett lot, is anything but the interpretation, which describes "minnow" as a fresh water fish of very small size.

Though comparisons in the matter of family names are oftentimes odious; as a matter of fact history tells that such names as Cook, Smith, Butcher, Miller, Baker, etc., were brought down through middle ages because it was the habit to name each family after the trade the master of the house pursued; Miss Mineau is emphatic in disclaiming the Websterian research of her family name.

She is anything but small in size. She is not a fresh water enthusiast, she is not a swimmer. As a matter of fact Mother Nature was cruel enough to make her afraid of ocean travel. She is a Junoesque type, the tallest actress on the Mack Sennett lot presently, in the supporting cast of Phyllis Haver's initial starring picture, "The Extra Girl," on which the new Sennett star is now working under the direction of William A. Seiter.

Carl Laemmle, Universal chieftain, and Eugene H. Roth, his personal representative, spent most of last week in San Francisco, transacting important business. They went on from here to Portland.

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

"The Little Girl Next Door," a picture of the spiritualistic order, and, made to order in Chicago, is as far from being great as it is from being really bad. The story is fair and is chiefly distinguishable from "the hoi polloi" because it offers an insight on the "dope" angle without showing a dope-fiend or a "hop-joint." Luckily, the producer has succeeded in interpolating enough elements of the thrilling to keep the average audience rather excited and for this reason this film should bring a big financial return. The outstanding high-light of merit in "The Girl Next Door" is the highly excellent dramatic work of a trio of players in the cast. It is a toss-up as to whether Pauline Starke as the heroine or Carmel Myers as the "heavy" wins "the edge" on top honors, or, whether or not James Morrison is after all the real star. All three of these brilliantly talented photoplayers take advantage of every opportunity offered them and each seems bent on creating additional opportunities with the result that there is an up-on-your-toes three-cornered performance such as is seen seldom. While we do not regard this release as a Class A attraction for the Class A house, it will undoubtedly make money for all concerned even as a Class B attraction in a Class A, B, C, or D house. In short, this is one of those pictures which is liable to "clean up" anywhere.

"West Bound Limited" is another feature which seems destined to earn oodles of the coin of the realm without rating as a top-notch photoplay. It is likely that a former picturization of this same story causes one to expect too much from this one, but it is patent the producer has "slipped up" for once after making a number of highly meritorious productions. The principal fault is the direction, which is both overdone and careless. The photography is fairly good and the cast is quite good with the exception of Ella Hall, who is mis-cast. Ralph Lewis shares high honors with Johnnie Harron, the latter of whom is managing to keep up to a certain high individual standard which is sure to bring him up to a place of high position on the screen if he will be careful. Fortunately for "West Bound Limited," it can be saved from classification in the category of unsatisfactory films by the processes of re-cutting and re-titling. At least one full reel can be taken out of the picture and somehow the big anti-climax, which so nearly ruins the picture, can be eliminated or minimized. It is not far-fetched to predict a truly important future for this photoplay if the re-cutting and re-titling is done with a deft enough hand and an ingenious enough brain.

Here's proof that they don't always spoil good stories in adapting them to the screen. "Alice Adams" as a motion picture will not disappoint the most enthusiastic admirer of Booth Tarkington's novel by that title. This is screen fare of the variety which makes censors "crawl away back and sit down," and, therefore, it serves a fine purpose for the cinema as a great fine art. Primarily, this is wholesome entertainment in the superlative—it is a picture which just naturally makes a fellow's evening a joy. Best of all, it is Booth Tarkington at his best and unimpaired or unimpeded by directorial folly, for Rowland V. Lee has grasped the creation of a distinguished

The strong undercurrent of dissatisfaction over New York continuing to be the foremost film-distributing center of the United States is becoming stronger. Up to now Los Angeles, the center of the motion picture industry, has been favored unanimously as the one place for distribution headquarters. But now Chicago comes forward with some claims on the grounds of it being so centrally located as to be the ideal place from the standpoint of accessibility to all parts of the country. Martin J. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald, heads the movement to win consideration for the Windy City. One thing seems certain, judging from the present apparent tendencies—New York is going to lose a large part of its monopoly on film distribution ere very long.

Present-day trends are all in the direction of an almost staggering inflow of money in new investments in the motion picture industry of Southern California. One group of independents plans an outlay of seven millions of dollars, $800,000 of which is now going towards the expansion and improvement of the United Studios. Another group of independents is preparing to expend a $5,000,000 appropriation of new money, all to go directly into production activities. Verily, 'tis a right merrie day in old Filmland.

Old-timers are coming back—old-timers in most all departments. Maurice Costello is representative of the return of earlier screen favorites and J. Stuart Blackton's resumption of executive activities in the Vitagraph organization is an outstanding example. Meantime simultaneous with this "come-back movement" comes a consequent revival of energy. For instance, Vitagraph plans building a new studio and everything.

The search for an efficacious cure for "Klieg eyes" has developed into a rather universal fad. As a mere matter of suggestion, permit us to ask, why not attempt to discover a preventive rather than a cure?

"The Covered Wagon" is emerging from every critical analysis all covered with glory. It looks like one of the epoch-marking films destined to survive by smashing some records.

There has been some worry over the rapid increase in moving picture production, the fear being that there might be an over-production which would eventuate in financial ruin to many. However, most recent events prove there is no immediate danger of any such over-production since the demand exceeds the supply by a comfortable margin. The loss in European business due to political unrest abroad is being covered by the increased demand from Mexico, Central and South American countries.

author with intelligent fidelity to the spirit instilled in the work originally. Oh, if this could be or would be done in more instances! If only there was a more general elimination of so many directors having the idea that they can improve any story by tearing it all apart so whimsically and putting it back together again so stupidly! It would be an excellent idea for many directors to read Mr. Tarkington's novel carefully and then go to watch this film version of it with equal care, because they will learn the full value of sticking more frequently to a fiction master's ideas rather than this persistent essaying to be "the whole works" by altering plots and situations without regard to rules or reason. This picture is blessed with a cast replete with ideal selections. Florence Vidor in the title role deserves to be featured, for she is at her delightful best. Claude Gillingwater adds to his brilliant record by offering another cameo-like characterization which cannot be forgotten. Vernon Steel is right up to the mark while Margaret Landis, Harold Goodwin, Thomas Ricketts, Margaret McCade and Gertrude Astor do justice to their respective roles.

Tom Mix simply won't mix his brands. He always makes his starring vehicles right up to a certain standard and never varies a fraction of an iota. "Three Jumps Ahead," his latest William Fox production, is simply another corking good western picture filled with thrills and a continuance of action such as permits of no let-up in a constantly growing interest which reached a top crest right at the finish. As usual Mix does just enough stunts to keep up to his average in living fully up to expectations. If there is any phase of this new Mix feature which excels its predecessors, it's the direction and the answer to this is, Jack Ford was behind the megaphone. And, Jack Ford is, in our opinion, one of the very best directors in the business barring none. The only reason why he is not up among the half dozen kings supreme is, he has not been assigned that one big vital story indispensable to the scoring of exceptional triumph. The supporting cast is only average with Alma Bennett leading in prettiness and the Todds—Harry and his wife, Margaret Joslin—showing the most real histrionic ability.

Johnnie Walker is making a sensational clean-up in the reviews on "The Fourth Musketeer" in which he is the star. Critics throughout the New York district are all but raving over his performance in this one and it is freely predicted it will go a long way towards making him one of the four or five biggest names in all filmdom. The film trade papers join in heaping praise on the brilliant young Walker and one of them says "his step is swift and sure in the direction of the very top of the cinema ladder." According to the consensus of opinion Eileen Percy and Eddie Gribbon share the second honors in this picture. Miss Percy's "blonde loveliness" is much commented on while Gribbon's consummate skill in a legitimate creation of laugh-provoking comedy is widely heralded as an eye-opener. The direction of William Kerrigan Howard is also being given laudatory attention and it seems here is a picture entertainment approaching the one hundred percent in all departments.

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1923

EAST IS AROUSED OVER EXPOSITION; ADVERTISING TRAIN TO AROUSE MORE

Washington and New York City are interested in the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, if inquiries from correspondents of newspapers in both cities indicate anything. Writers of every sort, including contributors to leading magazines, have signified their intention of coming to California for the Premiere, which promises to be the biggest publicity stunt ever carried out in the west. While the primary object of the Revue and Exposition is to celebrate the Monroe Doctrine Centennial in the most modern manner possible, since by means of the motion picture industry heroes of the past and scenes in their lives are to be brought to the people of the present, the fact that the press of the whole country is to explicit it is at least encouraging.

Collectors in all parts of the world are ordering the special coins that the United States Government is to put out in honor of the Monroe Centennial. These half-dollars are now in process of minting under the supervision of the California sculptor, Chester Beach, who made the designs for them. The designs are of rare effectiveness and for that reason the coin is in great demand. A letter from Charles Moore, chairman of the National Commission of Fine Arts, received at Exposition headquarters says: "I do not know of a memorial coin which, for sheer beauty, equals this."

The regular Momus special train on the Southern Pacific this year will go east carrying the Monroe Doctrine Centennial banners and at every stop will advertise the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. It leaves tomorrow with an enthusiastic crowd of passengers who will see that the trans-continental trip is not overlooked by any city on the route. The train will carry plenty of literature setting forth the attractions of the coming exposition, and, with Garrett Graham in charge of publicity, there will be plenty of incidental newspaper notice.

California is a magic word in the east, certain sections of which find the motion picture industry the state's chief attraction. That the "special" will be assured of crowds at every station eager to learn all about the Exposition is certain and equally certain is the conclusion that it will encourage hundreds to make the trip west in July.

MAKERS OF LAW VISIT FILM MAKERS

Forty celebrated Congressmen from Washington, comprising the Irrigation Committee on the Colorado irrigation plan, were the guests of M. C. Levee, President at the United studios, where the distinguished party became acquainted with many First National and other stars, and had their first experience in a motion picture studio.

Headed by Representative Addison T. Smith, of Idaho, chairman of the Irrigation Committee, the Congressmen and their wives and friends were accorded a rousing reception on their arrival at the United studios, where Mr. Levee officially welcomed them to filmland and introduced them to Maurice Tourneur, Richard Walton Tully, Harry Myers, Ernest Torrence, Bert Lytell, Sol Lesser, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Buster Keaton, Richard Rowland and John McCormick, representing First National, Blanche Sweet, Helen Lynch, Bryant Washburn, Edwin Carew, Arthur Jacobs and other notables working on the lot.

The Congressmen were invited to appear in mob scenes in Maurice Tourneur's, "The Brass Bottle" and Lesser's, "The Meanest Man in Town," after which they visited various stages and "sets" and viewed the various directors and stars at work, and took part in a number of stunts especially arranged for their benefit.

One of the features of the afternoon was an address by Richard Walton Tully, who spoke eloquently in behalf of Hollywood and drove home an effective message to the visiting lawmakers.

The United studio was the only picture plant honored with a visit by the Congressmen and an elaborate program of entertainment and education was in charge of Mr. Levee.

Among those comprising the Congressional party were: Representative A. T. Smith, of Idaho, chairman, Representative Louis C. Shreve, of Pennsylvania; Representative Charles R. Davis, of Minnesota; Representative Louis C. Crampton, of Michigan, chairman of the Appropriations Committee; Representative Philip D. Swing, of California, Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, and Representative Nicholas J. Sinnot, of Oregon, chairman of the Public Lands Committee.

LEVEE, IN SICK-BED, RUNS STUDIO VIA TELEPHONE

With a telephone on a stand at his bedside and a stenographer within call, M. C. Levee is running affairs of the United Studios from a sickbed at his home, this week.

He has had his tonsile removed and will be held to his home for a week or more. With the studio construction program in full swing this week, Mr. Levee's personal attention is needed for a score of decisions every day.

Workmen are all over the United lot, digging trenches, laying foundations for new buildings, running concrete mixers, laying out the right-of-way for new roads, moving old buildings, changing fence lines, hastening the construction program to completion. Three shifts keep the work under way twenty-four hours a day.

More stage space is needed by production companies already at work on the lot and there is an unsatisfied demand for accommodations from independent producers who would like room there. It is estimated that construction work on the lot will be completed within 60 days and there will be space for everyone.

MAN WHO SAW LINCOLN KILLED IN PEGGY FILM

Baby Peggy will be supported by quite a well-known personage in "The Orphan," now being directed by Alf Goulding at the Century studios. He is none other than Lieut. Harry Clifford of Indianapolis, Indiana, who was at Ford's theatre in Washington, D. C., the night President Lincoln was assassinated, and was one of the first persons to reach the side of the martyred president.

Lieut. Clifford was an orphan, having lost his parents at the age of six, and states that he has quite a feeling of sympathy for Jinney Juliet in her role of the orphan. Lieut. Clifford is a lifelong friend of J. Graham Montgomery.

WAMPAS FROLIC TO BE A RIOT

Colorful bits of action from screen successes past and present will be reviewed at the "Wampas Frolic and Ball," to be staged April 21st at the Warner Brothers studio, when the thirteen "stars of today," selected by the film publicists at last year's entertainment, will appear in an original screen revue costumed in the various characters they portrayed in their greatest "hits" during the past twelve months.

In this manner each of the thirteen stars will be presented to an anticipated record-breaking crowd on the largest studio stage in the world at the second annual jollification of the cinema press agents.

Types, representative of most of the foreign countries and varying in feminine character from "rags to riches," will be visualized by the bevy of screen beauties who will appear in favorite roles they have enacted for the silversheet during the past year.

There will be country girls, debutantes, Spanish types and vampires, one and all costumed as they appeared in their individual film triumphs, and "fans" will have no trouble in identifying their favorites as they pass in review.

The film celebrities who will appear in the pageant were first formally introduced as potential stars at the 1922 "Wampas Frolic and Ball" and it is the purpose of the "Star Revue of 1923" to show the progress made by these artists since their cinema debut last year. Those who will have a part in the pageant are: Lois Wilson, Marjory Aye, Jacqueline Logan, Bessie Love, Louise Lorraine, Lila Lee, Colleen Moore, Mary Philbin, Kathryn McGuire, Claire Windsor, Patsy Ruth Miller, Helen Ferguson and Pauline Starke.

The recently selected "stars of tomorrow" who will be sponsored by the "Wampas" during the ensuing year, will also be present at the frolic next month in a most novel manner. However, the studio publicists are not prepared as yet to reveal the mode of introduction they have planned for the "junior stars." Included in this group are Eleanor Boardman, Evelyn Brent, Dorothy Devore, Virginia Brown Faire, Betty Francisco, Pauline Garon, Kathleen Key, Laura La Plante, Margaret Leahy, Helen Lynch, Derelys Perdue, Jobyna Ralston and Ethel Shannon.

KIRKWOOD IS SUDDENLY FAVORED FOR "BEN HUR"

Another strong contender in popular favor for the role of Ben Hus. In the last weekly tabulation of votes pouring in upon Robert B. McIntyre, Goldwyn casting director, James Kirkwood steps right up beside Valentino, with 16,418 votes to "The Sheik's" 17,593.

An odd coincidence is that Mr. Kirkwood has just been signed under long-term contract to appear in Goldwyn pictures. He has just made a phenomenal success on Broadway, New York, in the title role of Channing Pollock's unusual play, "The Fool," the cast of which he left to go to Los Angeles.

As for the popularity contest, letters are coming from everywhere that California-made pictures are shown, with a plurality favoring Valentino, and strong supporting factions favoring Forrest Stanley, George Walsh, Frank Mayo and Antonio Moreno.

PIONEER EXHIBITOR IS ACTING IN FILM NOW

Bert "Daddy" Woodruff, one of the oldest character actors on the screen, who plays an important role in "Children of Dust," Frank Borzage's new picture, holds the unique record of having opened and operated the first motion picture theatre in Venice, California. That was many years ago, when pictures were showing in vacant store rooms, and when Tally of Los Angeles had just opened his "palatial" house, which seated only a few hundred persons.

Mr. Woodruff, then fresh from the show business, saw the tremendous opportunities of the screen theatre, and put a lot of money into decorating his theatre, with the result that it did a big business and other motion picture men came from miles around to inspect his "Palace of Photoplays."

Gathering of Clans

Prominent exhibitors from widely separated regions were visitors at the Christie studios while Al Christie was filming his first blackface comedy "Roll Along." They included J. A. Partington, who operates the Granada, California, Imperial and Portola theatres in San Francisco; John H. Kunsy who has the four most prominent theatres in Detroit, and A. D. Saenger of the Saenger Amusement Company, in New Orleans.

Bern Writing For Stahl

Paul Bern has joined the John M. Stahl unit at the Louis B. Mayer Studio to prepare the continuity for Mr. Stahl's next First National attraction, a society drama based on Lee Hutty's play, "Climbing," and supply an original story for future production by the director.

Mayer on the Move

Elaborate plans are being formed at the Louis B. Mayer Studios. According to a recent statement from Mr. Mayer, three prominent directors and many screen celebrities will soon be added to their roster and a number of well-known novels and stage successes will be purchased for filming in the near future. Mr. Mayer plans to devote his time solely to the production end, giving his distribution problem to other sources. Some of the stories recently purchased by Mr. Mayer for immediate use are: "Cape Cod Folks," "The Valley of Content," "The Volunteer Organist," "The Span of Life," "The Middle Man," "Danger," "Why Men Leave Home," "Daughters of the Rich," "Climbing," "The Law Bringers," "The Trail of Ninety Eight" and "Capt. Applejack."

Dwan Cautions Writers

One of the country's best known directors, Allan Dwan, who directed "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," recently addressed the student body of Columbia University on the subject of photoplay writing. Mr. Dwan pointed out to the students that getting the director's viewpoint was fully as important to the writer as the matter of plot and counterplot. "Don't forget," he cautioned them, "that, after all, the director gives the final decision on your script, and that he is the man who makes it into a picture." Mr. Dwan has just completed "Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton, for Famous Players.

Fatty Gets Measles

Thomas (Fatty) Hicks, the six-year-old child who balances the scales at 109 pounds and whose ambition it is to gain at least a pound a day, has proved that he is not infallible to children's ailments, although he has a man's weight. While on location at Truckee with the J. K. McDonald company filming "Penrod and Sam," he was taken ill with a fever of a hundred and three. He was rushed home to Hollywood, where it was discovered he had a severe case of measles. He is now well past the danger point and trying to scramble out of bed "to do some more acting."

In Calnay Picture

Jimmy Thompson was engaged as the comedy relief character in West Coast Productions Co., special feature, "Why Do We Live?" Norbert Miles is directing the picture under Lewis King's supervision. James Calnay is author-producer of all West Coast Productions pictures.

The buildings in Exposition Park will be of the Spanish American type and will cover nearly 800,000 square feet of space.

Writers' Star Rising?

H. H. Van Loan, famous author, gave courage to the legion of scenario writers in the film world last week when he announced that the day of glory for stars and directors was at a close and that the originators of cinema successes are in line for their share of the public's praise. "At the birth of motion pictures," Mr. Van Loan says, "the producers' names were constantly flashed before the theatergoers' eyes. However, the public was interested in personalities, so the stars' names were brought before them. But, it was soon discovered that even a star could sink if there were no brains behind him, and then it was conceded that the director was the brains of a successful production. However, companies, stars and directors alone cannot make a picture. There must be a story first, and that is where the writer comes in."

First Palmer Play Finished

Camera work upon "Judgment of the Storm," formerly called "Out of the Night," the first Palmer Photoplay Corporation screen production, which has been in the process of filming at Ince Studios, has been completed. The story was written by Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton of Pittsburg, one of the screen authors trained by the Palmer organization. Lloyd Hughes heads the cast which includes Lucille Rickson, George Hackathorne, Myrtle Stedman, Philo McCullough, Claire McDowell, Bruce Gordon, Frankie Darro and Fay MacKenzie form the cast released by the completion of the picture. Del Andrews directed, assisted by Frank Geraghty, and Max Du Pont had charge of the photography.

This Player Craves Teeth

The fund of excuses for avoiding work have not been exhausted. An actress on the Schulberg lot, now playing in the Gasnier production "Mother-in-Law," has asked a day off for teething. Although her nerves remain unruffled by Kleigs or jazz, Callista Riddle, five months of age, has succumbed to the insistence of her molars. Gasnier chose Callista from among 300 babies and has signed her up for six weeks, teething days excepted.

Von Stroheim Recovers

Production work on "Greed," has been started again with the recovery of Erich von Stroheim, director, who is filming Frank Norris' famous novel of San Francisco, "McTeague."

The director was confined to his bed for several days due to too strenuous efforts on the adaptation of his first Goldwyn picture. Virtually all of the scenes in the picture will be made in San Francisco, the locale of Norris' story.

Two towers 150 feet high will rise from the Court of the Americas, which will have in its center an Aztec fountain.

DOUG, NOW SCOUT MASTER, PLANS FILM TO AID BOYS

Douglas Fairbanks is today a Scout Master in the Boy Scouts of America. He was appointed to this position by James E. West, national Boy Scout Executive, during the recent visit of Mr. West to Los Angeles.

It all came about at a luncheon given to Mr. Fairbanks at which Mr. West and William Gibbs McAdoo were guests. Mr. McAdoo is also an officer in the Boy Scouts organization.

Doug's great enthusiasm for American boydom made him an easy victim for Mr. West, and he was only too glad to accept the national chief's suggestion that he join.

In addition to having a troop all his own, Doug intends to make a propaganda film for the scouts in which he will "sell" the idea of clean living, the value of play and exercise of the right sort. This film, it is predicted, will be one of the greatest agencies for improved American manhood that could possibly be devised.

JACKIE AND "OLIVER" BAT CLOSE TO 100 MARK

It is an epoch-marking event in the motion picture art; at least it is thus that Sol Lesser's presentation of Jackie Coogan in Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" has been described.

In all the elements of the story, star, principals, director and production, it is asserted to be the long-looked-for 100 per cent photoplay.

The presence of Jackie Coogan in any picture assures the presence of a multitude of youngsters in any theatre where the gifted boy appears; the unparalleled supporting cast headed by Lon Chaney as Fagin, Gladys Brockwell as Nancy Sykes, George Siegmann as Bill Sykes, and Lionel Belmore as Mr. Brownlow is still another guarantee of success, while the world-wide celebrity of Charles Dickens, whose books are read in every language and in nearly every home and the particularly general appeal of "Oliver Twist" as Dickens' masterpiece all assure a success unprecedented in the film art and industry.

In short, it is claimed that nobody can resist the appeal of "Oliver Twist," as pictured on the screen with little Jackie as the star and with the advance interest that must be aroused in any civilized land by mention of the words, "Charles Dickens' 'Oliver Twist.'"

A Tennis Quartette

A famous foursome may be seen wielding tennis racquets on the Hollywood Hotel courts any afternoon. When Krauford Kent finishes a day's scenes in "Mothers-in-Law" under Gasnier's direction, he hies west from the Schulberg lot and joins Conway Tearle, Bert Lytell and Lionel Belmore, where the quartet indulge in a few sets before curfew.

ROMAINE FIELDING MAKES FILM IN MISSOURI

"The Toll," written by Judge Willis Brown, author of "The Girl Who Won," "The Fifth Boy," "Bud's Recruit," and the series of film stories for youth called "The Judge Brown Stories," is now being produced for the screen by Romaine Fielding, director of the General Film Manufacturing Company, University City, Mo.

The picture will be released by the Producers Co-operative Syndicate, headed by C. S. Barrett, President of the Farmers National Union, Union City, Ga., and is the first of a series of feature films that will be used by the 10,000,000 farmers of the country in bringing home to the country at large the justness of the ruralists efforts to eliminate all middlemen in the selling of their farm products.

Judge Brown has been styled the "Mark Twain of the Screen with the O. Henry punch," and in his characteristic vigorous style he drives home the tragedy of the farmers of the country and exposes the confidence game of the "System of Business" that holds down the returns of the farmers to less than cost of production, while apples sell in the big towns for 10 and 15 cents each.

The story woven by Judge Brown is intensely human and would prove popular without the added incentive of its purpose.

In one scene in the picture more than 35,000 persons participate.

CHINESE EXTRAS, FEARING RAID, GO ON A STRIKE

Apparently fearing some kind of a trap or repetition of the federal opium raid made last week in Chinatown, several hundred Chinamen who had been engaged by Mrs. Wallace Reid to appear as extras in a scene for "Human Wreckage," her film on the drug evil, refused pointblank to work in the picture when they learned that the scenes were to be shot in Chinatown.

Through a spokesman, the Orientals asserted their willingness to work on a set at the Ince studios where the Reid picture is being made but registered keenest disapproval of the plans to make scenes in the Chinese quarters.

Mexicans and half-breeds were hastily rounded up by the casting director to take the place of the striking Chinamen who hung around with surly faces and threatening gestures until the cameramen set up their machines as if they were getting ready for action. The crowd disappeared in record time and the scenes were made without interference.

SEAY WILL BE BIG SCREEN NAME, THEY SAY

One would scarcely believe this winsome little curly-haired blonde to be Dorothy Seay, the brunette beauty prize-winner with the lustrous brown eyes that rightly belong to an emotional actress which career is predicted for Dorothy. This little actress has been only eight months in the picture game, and since her entrance she has played parts in nine pictures, the latest being "Daytime Wives" in which she played under the direction of Emile Chautard at the R-C studio. Dorothy first began her professional career in the Chicago Grand Opera company with which she played in "Faust," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Othello" and many other operas. She next came before the public as the first prize winner of the Chicago Beauty Contest. This brought many alluring opportunities from studios. So Mr. and Mrs. Seay brought little Dorothy to Hollywood to see how she liked picture acting, and she has made such rapid strides that there is small chance of the directors allowing her to trot back home to Chicago!

ITALIAN RANCH EMPLOYE "SPOTS" CASINO PLAYER

"Whatsa matta—no more at da Casino?"

This was the surprising exclamation that greeted Jack Wise, well known musical comedy player this week when he stepped out of a motor car at a Marin County ranch, where he had gone on location with the Lilliputian Studios company filming "Mistaken," the feature starring Beth Rudisill.

"Wherever an actor goes," sighed Wise, "they know him!"

Wise was for many years with the Will King company and is one of the well-known players Director-General A. T. Bond of the Lilliputian Studios has signed to support the winsome Miss Rudisill. Wise has played in many Los Angeles features. Curtis Sill is leading man.

M. H. McCarty has expressed his camera up from Hollywood and is now shooting "Mistaken."

Holt Starting Again

"A Gentleman of Leisure," described as a very delightful comedy by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse, will serve as a stellar vehicle for Jack Holt, Paramount star and will be started some time in April. Joseph Henabery will direct and a full cast will be announced in the near future. The story concerns the adventures of a young man who, on a wager, disguises as a burglar and getting a real burglar to help him, starts out on a career of crime of a more or less farcical nature. The romance is said to be especially delightful.

Taylor Graves is playing opposite May McAvoy in "Only 38," which William De Mille is directing at the Lasky studio.

GOLDWYN TO FILM ELINOR GLYN'S "THREE WEEKS"

Film rights to Elinor Glyn's most popular novel, "Three Weeks," have been purchased by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, according to a wire received at the studios.

The deal was completed in London by the famous woman novelist and Goldwyn representatives, and arrangements have been made for Miss Glyn to come to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City to assist in the production of the picture.

Goldwyn officials believe the purchase of rights to "Three Weeks" due to the tremendous popularity of the book, one of the most important motion picture buys in recent years.

A company directed by Charles Brabin at the Goldwyn studios is now at work on "Six Days," an original photoplay in which Corinne Griffith and Frank Mayo have the leading roles.

Cloninger Supports Farnum

Ralph Cloninger, who so convincingly interpreted the role of Thad Parker in Reginald Barker's "Heart's Affaire," has been engaged for an important part in support of Dustin Farnum in his current production at the Fox studios. This will afford Cloninger further opportunities to display his unusual histrionic abilities, and he declares it is the biggest thing he has attempted to date. The role is of a very sympathetic nature, and calls for his close association with Farnum throughout the picture.

John Ralesco and Charlotte Rich have finished their parts in "The Orphan." It is now undergoing editing and titling.

SPREADING TRUTH ABOUT FILM COLONY

Entering wholeheartedly into the motion picture industry's campaign to tell the world the truth about Hollywood, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce is sending telegrams to every important chamber of commerce in the United States.

This action was determined upon after the board of directors of the local chamber had attended a preview of "Souls for Sale," a story of movie life, written and directed by Rupert Hughes.

"This body recognizes the great importance of the motion picture business to the growth and prestige of Los Angeles," said Frank Wiggins, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

"We are anxious to do our part to correct the unfortunate and distorted idea about the motion picture community that persisted and spread regardless of the facts.

"Hollywood is a home-loving community, and the motion-picture people form a good share of the home lovers. There is no greater percentage of the film profession who receive undesirable notoriety than of any other profession.

"Major Hughes' picture will do much to put Hollywood and the film folk in a sane and accurate light."

The telegrams sent by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to brother bodies throughout the country read as follows:

"A true picture of life in Hollywood and motion picture colony is given in Rupert Hughes' new photoplay, "Souls for Sale," previewed by Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce today. This film does not attempt at propaganda but dramatic portrayal showing picture making in big, dignified way, faithfully depicting dangers, hardships and stress which players undergo in their life work of weaving romance for world.

"(Signed) LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE."

They Killed Otto Off

Otto Matiesen has finished playing the part of Philippe de Vilmorin in "Scaramouche" which Rex Ingram is making at the Metro studios. Philippe de Vilmorin is a French scholar of the period preceding the Revolution, who is killed in a sword duel in the early part of the story. His death forms the basis of the subsequent adventures of Scaramouche, who is his dearest friend. Matiesen also played the part of Napoleon Bonaparte in Hugo Ballin's soon-to-be-released "Vanity Fair," which was filmed at the Goldwyn studios. One can easily gather from this that Mr. Matiesen is an adept delineator of historical characters.

EXHAUSTS

By Al Martin

On the editorial page of CAMERA last week I read about myself. It said that romance had entered my life. Seems funny, but it's true. However, it's all over now, folks, the girl gave up her job.

Now that the theatre craze has hit Hollywood, it will give some people additional reasons for having ideas and propositions.

A well-known woman star has a well-known husband who advertises himself as her manager. Ain't that funny? Did you ever try to manage your own wife?

Monty Banks has gone on location and says he will make two two-reel comedies in two weeks. However, Monty didn't say what he would do in his spare time.

Even with actors coming from France, Italy, Germany, England, and San Francisco to join our film colony, the studios demand that English be spoken.

—Youth of Ages—

I am a youth.
I am free and pitiless.
I walk fearlessly among my brothers
And smile when they sob.
I drink their laughter and sputter

At their merriment.
They speak of wondrous deeds;
And I wonder.
Theirs are weak beside by own.
I tolerate old age—
It is youth's duty.
Love is my toy; and soon it is broken.

But there is another.
I move boulders by day;
I loil drowsily at night before a fire,
But I am chilled,
For I have spoken hot words and flamed

With adoration—and kissed!
Tomorrow I shall move new boulders and forget.
I am a youth!

Perhaps you can make better progress in your ambitions if you practice up a little on the art of simply getting along.

Don't expect to conquer the world with a cap-pistol of ignorance. You need an automatic, rapid-firing rifle of intelligence to do such a big job. And, the beauty of it is, intelligence can be acquired if it has not been inherited.

DRAMA DIRECTOR IS CHOSEN FOR COMEDIES

Mack Sennett, in line with his extensive production policy since the signing of a contract with the Pathe Exchange for the distribution of over twenty Sennett all-star and Ben Turpin comedies is daily adding to his forces and has just signed Bertram Bracken, noted director and recently, independent producer. The signing of Bracken to produce comedy features on the Sennett lot is significant in view of the statement of Mack Sennett to the effect that he believes the director of dramatic features to be eminently adapted for the filming of comedy productions. "In the past," said Sennett, "the director of comedies has graduated to the fold of dramatic producers. I want to demonstrate the advantage of dramatic construction knowledge in the field of comedy production and for that reason believe Bertram Bracken to be slated for considerable renown in his new line."

Among the most noted pictures which Bracken has produced are, Anita Stewart's "Harriett and the Piper," Jane Novak in James Oliver Curwood's "Kazan," Wallace Beery and Lewis Stone in "The Northern Trail;" and several short features with all-star casts, to-wit: "White Mouse;" "The Ne'er To Return Road;" and "The Policeman and the Baby." Most recently Bracken went into the independent production game, having completed "Over Here," shortly to be released. He will begin filming a new comedy feature on the Sennett lot immediately.

FLYNN'S FIRST GOLDWYN FILM TO HAVE BIG CAST

More than fifteen principal characters will be included in "In the Palace of the King," the first picture Emmett Flynn is to direct under his contract, with the Goldwyn studios.

In adapting the F. Marion Crawford story to the screen, action and situations were taken both from the novel and from the play which was written from the book.

The rapidly moving plot of the novel, which was one of the most popular of its day, will be kept virtually as it was in the original. A number of scenes will be interpolated, however, to add color and power to the screen version of the story.

Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre and Mr. Flynn now are working on the task of selecting players for "In the Palace of the King."

Work will be started on the picture within the next two weeks, it is expected.

BARBARA LE MARR JOINS NIBLO'S HALL OF FAME

The Louis B. Mayer Studio becomes a hall of fame as Fred Niblo assembles his all-star cast for "Captain Applejack."

Barbara La Marr has just been engaged for the production and finds herself in the excellent company of Matt Moore, who will play the title role, Miss Enid Bennett, Robert McKim and Thomas Ricketts.

"Captain Applejack" will be the seventh big picture in which Miss La Marr has appeared since she found herself famous as the radiant but relentless lady-in-waiting in "The Three Musketeers."

Her colorful personality and rare beauty have recently been broadcasted in "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Trifling Women," "The Hero," "Poor Men's Wives," "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and "Souls for Sale," yet to be released.

In "Captain Applejack" she will appear as the spectacular Russian adventuress, a dancing girl for whom a mild young Britisher goes scuttling down to the sea in a pirate ship.

Precedent has been established for the role for Mary Nash made it the outstanding part of the stage production in its New York engagement.

There is good cheer at the Louis B. Mayer studios over the cast so far selected. Matt Moore is admirably suited to the title role by appearance and ability. Miss Enid Bennett might have been the original of "Poppy," the demure little English beauty. Robert McKim has the elegance in villainy necessary for the Russian terrorist of the piece and it is a stroke of fortune that Thomas Ricketts was available for "Lush," the prehistoric butler.

FRENCH ACTOR DECLARES CALIFORNIA SURPASSES

ALPHONSE MARTELL

"The more I see of Hollywood the more I like it," reflected Alphonse Martell, who recently arrived from France, and who admits that although he has visited most of the beautiful spots of Europe, he has never seen a place that he likes more than California. He is fully justified in this reflection, for it was only a matter of several days after his arrival that he began work on a part in Louis J. Gasnier's "Daughters of the Rich," which is being made at the Mayer studios.

Mr. Martell is a native of Alsace-Lorraine, and is a member of one of the oldest families there. He is well known for his dramatic and character work on stage and screen, and is determined to become a worthy silver sheet representative of his famous country, which for centuries has figured so prominently in diplomatic circles.

Kathryn McGuire has been signed for a long term by Richard Thomas.

WANTS TO SCREEN OUR GREATEST LOVER

The problem of selecting a character to portray the leading role in "Hollywood's Greatest Lover" is causing Director Fred Caldwell to burn a lot of midnight oil.

Rodolph Valentino has been suggested, also Ben Turpin, "Bull" Montana, Bill Rogers and several other prominent names, but none of these exactly hit the spot, or else are unobtainable.

"Hollywood's Greatest Lover" is the fourth of a series of Hollywood stories being filmed by Fred Caldwell Productions. The first was "Night Life in Hollywood" in which Mr. Caldwell introduced Theodore Roberts, Bryant Washburn, William Desmond, J. Warren Kerrigan and many other notable stars. This feature will be running soon at the Symphony Theatre on Broadway.

The second one was "Bishop of Hollywood," which was a widely published story in the Story World, and the third was "The Sheik of Hollywood" in which Victor Potel, of Slippery Slim fame, disported himself in the role of the Sheik, most ably abetted by Gale Henry as the Sheikess, whatever that is. Director Caldwell and staff are racing with schedule on a series of twelve of these stories being filmed at the Fine Arts studio.

STILL ANOTHER COMEDY STAR LENGTHENS HIS FILMS

Requests from the majority of the state-right buyers of the Joe Rock two-reel comedies may lead the independent comedian to lengthen his output from two to three reels on his next series. Sam Grand, J. L. Friedman and Bobby North, three of the largest exchangemen in the group, claim that Rock's two-reelers are proving so popular that there is a demand for more. Inasmuch as Rock is contracting to produce twelve comedies of two-reel length only this season, the comedian figures on meeting the demand by lengthening his productions an extra reel. This follows the custom of several of the leading film comedians today of increasing the length of their output. Rock already has enough scripts to fill three reels and is giving careful attention to his next year's product. The subjects are expected to be funnier and even more spectacular than this year's releases.

James Cruze has returned to the coast after making scenes for "Hollywood," his new Paramount production, in New York, and is now engaged on a number of important sequences for this interesting picture which was adapted by Thomas J. Geraghty from Frank Condon's story.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Francis McDonald has been added to the cast which will appear in Richard Walton Tully's forthcoming production, "Trilby."

The American Society of Cinematographers made merry at a banquet held last Wednesday night at the Ship Cafe, Venice.

Emily Fitzroy, who played the mother role in "Driven," has arrived from the East and will join the cast to appear in "Captain Applejack."

Milla Davenport is playing the role of companion to Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy." This company is expected to leave for Yosemite Valley immediately.

Charles Ray has been assigned the leading role in the Writers' Revue stage production of "Hollywood," to be held at the Philharmonic Auditorium, April 27 and 28.

Norval MacGregor, one of the deans of the local directorial fraternity, is assisting Richard Thomas in the staging of "Scarlet Shadows" at the Hollywood studios.

Fred Spencer is playing his second rural comedy for Century in "Hay! Hay!" Harry Edwards is directing it from a story by Spencer himself. Lois Boyd is in support.

Valerie and Geraldine Waggle, baby artists, will be seen in the all-star cast appearing in the Halperin production, "Tea With a Kick." Geraldine impersonating the bad little girl, provides a humorous scene by losing her pantaloons while dancing.

Charles Maigne has started his production for Paramount "The Silent Partner," with Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore featured and a fine supporting cast. This Saturday Evening Post serial is by Maxmillian Foster and the adaptation is by Sada Cowan.

Hugh Fay, one of the leading comedy directors, has been specially engaged to direct Lloyd Hamilton's next comedy for Educational release. Fay was responsible for the direction of two of Hamilton's previous successes, "The Speeder," and "No Luck."

According to an announcement, Charlie Chaplin will receive a beautiful painting of Pola Negri as her birthday gift to him on April 16th. The portrait was done by Tade Styka, famous Hungarian artist, while the Polish actress was in Europe.

Omar Whitehead, who just finished a long engagement in a Ruth Roland serial, has been assigned the role of Bishop, in Mary Pickford's new production, as yet untitled.

Walter Heirs is now at the little suburban city of Pleasanton, in California, for opening scenes in his new Paramount picture, "Fair Week," directed by Rob Wagner.

Jack Fuqua, who photographed Richard Thomas' "The Silent Accuser," has a contract for a series of twelve six-reelers, to be produced during the next two years by Mr. Thomas.

Louise Loftus, a new member of the film colony, was given her first part recently opposite Edward Burns in a new feature which Tom Mills is directing for Choice Productions.

Don Franklin, fourteen-year-old actor, will play the role of Bobby Thorpe, Jackie Coogan's American chum, in the little star's initial effort for Metro, "Long Live the King."

Victor Seastrom, the Swedish director, recently added to the Goldwyn directorial staff, will film Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," as his initial offering under his new contract.

A bevy of beauties will be seen in Clyde Cook's latest Fox comedy, which was directed by Slim Summerville. Vera Kaye Webb, Margaret Cloud, Pat Ostrander, Lillian Hackett, Elsie Tarron and Lillian Cushman are all included in Cook's supporting cast.

A request that an obsolete battleship be placed at Venice for filming purposes was received by the Venice City Council last week from officials of the Morse studios. The request, now under consideration, will be communicated to President Harding, if sanctioned by the Public Welfare Committee.

"Big Boy" Williams, who is being featured in a series of westerns by Charles R. Seeling, is running around on crutches as the result of "bulldogging" a steer when on location filming the latest Seeling production. He is satisfied, however, for the camera got all of the action.

Paul Panzer, who played the villain in Pearl White's serial, "The Perils of Pauline," has returned to the screen after an absence of five years, having been assigned an important role in "Snomblind," an Arthur Stringer story, to be directed by E. H. Griffith for Cosmopolitan.

Carmel Myers plays the olive-skinned Azria in William P. S. Earle's "King Tut-Ankn-Amen," which is now in the middle of completion. The part of Azria is the leading one in the story based on the ancient Pharaoh's life.

Another engagement rumor fell flat last week when Constance Talmadge and Irving Thalberg, youthful Louis B. Mayer official, denied their intentions of having the marriage ceremony performed in the near future.

Gaspard Renault, a little homeless crippled newsboy of Vancouver, B. C., won the police dog that Francis McDonald was giving away to the party who suggested the best name for his Malamute dog which was a gift from a fan.

Rollin Sturgeon, director, has just announced his intention of commencing immediate work on a series of productions to be adapted from well-known stories and stage successes to be released under the title of "Sturgeon Specials."

The Denco Film company is preparing to start work on their feature production, "After the Ball," an adaptation from the story taken from Charles K. Harris' famous song. An all-star cast will be headed by Kenneth Harlan, Marian Cooper and Edna Murphy.

Homer Scott, who photographed Mabel Normand's "Suzanna" for Mack Sennett, has been promoted to the position of head cameraman for the Sennett organization, and will have complete supervision over all equipment and details in his department, as well as personally photographing all feature productions.

Baby Peggy has completed the filming of her last two-reel comedy, under the direction of Alf Goulding at the Century studios. Her next work will be done in the first of a series of six-reel feature vehicles, to be produced as Universal-Jewels under the direct supervision of Julius and Abe Stern, the producers who first "found" the starlet.

Florence Gilbert, the blonde ingenue, has finished her part with Bull Montana in his "Breaking Into Society," and has been engaged by Hunt Stromberg, producer of Montana comedies, to appear in the next comedy opposite "handsome Bool." This will make her third one with this organization, the other one being "Snowed Under."

Sanford D. Barnes, technical director of the Mack Sennett studios, has had an opportunity during the past two weeks to display his versatility in building practical interiors as well as those for the "make-belief." Barnes, in addition to his regular duties, has supervised the construction of a new bungalow to house the publicity department and the rebuilding and redecorating of the new offices for the supervising director.

When Creighton Hale, now truly one of the big names of both the stage and screen, was a boy of fourteen years, he used to be one of the steady patrons of the Lyceum Theatre in London and his favorite actor at that famous playhouse was Eric Mayne, then in the heyday of his triumphs as a matinee idol. This week, fifteen years later, Mr. Hale and Mr. Mayne are appearing in the same play, "Just Suppose," at the Mason Opera House nor had they met in all the interim since those Lyceum days until about two months ago.

"All Over Twist" Is Finished

"The Bus Boys" will be known as "All Over Twist," and under this exceptionally clever title it will be released as Buddy Messinger's fourth starring vehicle for Century Comedies. The change is directly responsible to Abe Stern, vice-president, who returned to the studio two days before its completion. In line with his, and his brother Julius' idea to use the best titles for exploitation aids, the change was made.

Tickets For Revue

Tickets for the Writers' Revue of 1923, to be presented at the Philharmonic Auditorium on the nights of April 27th and 28th, may now be reserved or purchased at the Auditorium, according to announcement made today by Treasurer George Foster Platt. It was found necessary to open sales early at the Philharmonic when requests for tickets flooded the Writers' Club, where the sale began several days ago.

Fred Spencer to Star

Fred Spencer, who was recently placed under contract by Julius and Abe Stern, officials of Century Comedies, will step into stardom when he makes his appearance in a comedy now being directed by Archie Mayo. Spencer, until now, has been appearing as the "heavy" in pictures with Buddy Messinger, Baby Peggy, Brownie, and Jack Cooper. His opportunity to head a company for the Century organization came after Stern Brothers watched his work carefully since they signed him, and even while he worked not under contract.

SCREEN CAPTURES ANOTHER VODE HEADLINER

Another vaudeville headliner has listened to the lure of the silent art—and has fallen.

Harry Langdon, the famous comedian whose golf and auto stunts, as he presents them in the two-a-day theatres, have placed him on the top rung of vaudeville fame, has just signed a long-term contract with Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation.

Langdon will star in a series of feature comedies, which will be prepared especially for his unusual comedy traits and tactics. He will complete his Orpheum circuit tour and will immediately return to Los Angeles to don the grease paint for the clicking cameras.

It is interesting to learn the circumstances surrounding Langdon's entry into the silent art fold. The Orpheum artists on the bill with Langdon came across Canada and down the Pacific Coast intact. As they neared the land of moviedom, speculation was rife as to who on the bill would be "captured" by the movie magnates. Interest was doubly keen when, in San Francisco, Bert Lytell joined the bill for a two-weeks' period and came to Los Angeles with the players in his sketch, "The Valiant."

Lytell had taken a few weeks off from his camera work prior to starting in Principal Pictures, "The Meanest Man in the World." Sol Lesser, who arranged Lytell's vaudeville splash, gave a theatre party the opening night of Bert's local engagement. The movie magnate witnessed Langdon's offering and was deeply impressed with his possibilities before the camera. A "test" followed and then a contract.

Langdon possesses unusual camera possibilities, according to Lesser. He has an uncanny knack for comedy situations for the screen and "puts them over." That Langdon will be one of the screen's foremost comics is the prediction of Lesser and those associated with him in the production channel of the picture industry.

Romayne is Exonerated

Harry Y. Romayne, president of the film company bearing his name, was exonerated last week of charges of grand larceny and embezzlement which resulted from a disagreement among officials of the Cinema Distributing Company regarding the alleged sale of a picture to that concern by Romayne's organization. Justice of the Peace Robert H. Scott, who tried the case, declared there had been no crime committed, and that prosecuting attorneys failed to provide sufficient evidence.

SEELING MAKES SUCCESS OF MAKING COWBOY A STAR

Charles R. Seeling, prominent independent producer, is producing a series of six-reel westerns, featuring "Big Boy" Williams. Seeling has shot two, and the other four must be completed by the end of July.

"Big Boy" Williams was found by Seeling five years ago when he took him, a plainsman fresh from the wilds of Texas, and put him in a five-reel western. It did not take the boy long to get camera-wise and his acting is very natural in all respects. At the present time Seeling is contemplating the purchase of a famous western novel that has delighted thousands of readers and making from it a screen play that will go down in cinema history as the perfect interpretation of the spirit of the "wide open spaces."

CHAS. R. SEELING

HEAT WAVE AND LAZINESS FOLLOW PEPPEY BLIZZARD

Where a howling New England blizzard raged on the Christie stages ten days ago, now stands a cotton field and a dock along the Mississippi river, with care-free "darkies" holding the center of the stage. This is because Al Christie is now engaged in making a black-face comedy featuring Jimmie Adams and Babe London, said to be a decided innovation for motion pictures.

The new comedy will be called "Roll Along" and includes scenes of a steamboat race which were taken last week along the Sacramento river. The reason for the sudden transformation of the stages is the fact that Christies have just finished their snowy picture, "Winter Has Come," in which Dorothy Devore is starring.

The new black-face comedy has a cast including Adams, Babe London, Natalie Johnson, William Irving, Earl Rodney, Ward Caulfield, Gus Leonard, and teams of buck and wing dancers, banjo players and cotton pickers recruited from the ranks of vaudeville for specialty numbers which will be included in the film.

"Salomy Jane" Being Filmed

George Melford has started his new Paramount production, "Salomy Jane," in which are featured Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn. Waldemar Young adapted this picture. It was originally a story by Bret Harte and was dramatized by Paul Armstrong. In the cast, in addition to those mentioned, will appear William Davidson, Charles Ogle, William Quirk, Raymond Nye, Louise Dresser, James Neill, Tom Carlin, Clarence Burton, Barbara Brower and Jack Padgen. It will be fascinating to see the famous Bret Harte characters, such as Yuba Bill, Col. Starbottle and others, stalking across the screen.

MARY O'HARA TITLES U'S "MERRY-GO-ROUND"

Rupert Julian, Universal super-jewel director, has engaged Mary O'Hara to write the titles for "Merry-Go-Round," the gigantic Viennese spectacle which he recently completed as a Universal special production.

Miss O'Hara was formerly title writer for Rex Ingram and titled most of that producer's leading productions.

Julian is sparing no effort in either time or money and the work of Miss O'Hara is expected to add further glory to the film, which has already been declared by Universal to be its greatest production made to date.

Miss O'Hara has been at work for several days and will be on the picture another two weeks.

Mickey and French

It was during the filming of "Daytime Wives" at the R-C studios, Emile Chautard, the director, Lucien Andriot, the cameraman, and several others, all French, were standing together joking in French. Suddenly one of them espied little Mickey McBan, who plays the child role in the picture, and called to him. He strolled over to where they stood, and they asked him if he thought Mr. Chautard was a good director. Yes, he did! All right, they would teach him how to express that opinion in French. And patiently they repeated to the starlet the words; "Vous etes un bon directeur, Monsieur Chautard." After hearing the phrase several times Mickey piped up with, "Vooz et a bum directeur, Messy Chautard." No need to state that young Mr. McBan has abandoned French lessons for the time being. The laughs that followed his brave attempt would confuse anyone.

Carmelita Geraghty, daughter of Tom Geraghty, well-known writer and director, enacted a role in Rupert Hughes' "Souls For Sale."

DOING ONE PART WELL WINS ANOTHER

Charlotte Merriam, who plays the part of Angie the hard-boiled department store clerk who goes into the chorus in "The N'th Commandment," the Cosmopolitan production showing at Grauman's Metropolitan this week, earned something more than her salary when she played in that picture. She earned a part in Maurice Tournour's forthcoming production for First National "The Brass Bottle," a much bigger part, and more important, than that of Angie. Mr. Tournour saw her work in "The N'th Commandment" in a preview and was so impressed with her possibilities that he gave her the part of Sylvia Futvey in "The Brass Bottle."

Sylvia Futvey is the girl whom Horace Ventimore, portrayed by Harry Myers, wants to marry. The story of "The Brass Bottle" is wound around the difficulties Ventimore encounters when Ernest Torrence escapes from a brass bottle, Ventimore, a young architect, purchases for his sweetheart's father, played by Tully Marshall.

Miss Merriam attempted her first dramatic role with Angie. Previous to that she had played leads in scores of short comedies. The daughter of a regular army man, Col. Henry Clay Merriam, she came to Los Angeles to complete vocal studies she had begun in San Francisco and drifted into pictures through her friendship with Carmel Myers.

Baby Bruce Signs

It isn't every youngster of three and a half years who can sign his name to a long-term contract to "play" in the movies. But Bruce Guerin had that pleasant experience this week—rather, the kiddie's mother signed a contract with Warner Bros. for his services for several years, while Bruce looked on and signified his approval.

King With O'Hara

Charles L. King, who will be seen in the Universal production, "The Merry-Go-Round," is supporting George O'Hara in the Fighting Blood series now being produced at the Robertson-Cole Studios. King recently finished a long-term engagement with Carter De Haven, enacting roles in eight pictures for that producer.

Oil's Oil For Jackie

Thousands of dollars will be added to the already over-flowing coffers of Jackie Coogan, as a result of "the coming-in" of his Jackie Coogan No. 2 oil well, located at Huntington Beach. This enterprise, situated close to the successful Jackie Coogan No. 1, is expected to produce approximately 5000 barrels of oil a day.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

"Hollywood" At Writer's Revue

"Hollywood," Frank Condon's original story of studio life, and the exploits of a beautiful girl who migrates to Filmland in quest of screen honors, is being adapted for stage presentation and will be introduced for the first time April 27th and 28th as the main feature for the Writers' Revue of 1923, to be held at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Mr. Condon is collaborating with Tom Geraghty in the adapting and Alfred Hustwick will write the lyrics for Aubrey Stauffer's music. Mr. Stauffer will also act as stage director in charge of preparations for the revue, and Jefferson Moffett will supervise the casting.

Tourneur and "Trilby"

Maurice Tourneur is watching with considerable interest the production of "Trilby" which Richard Walton Tully is staging at the United studios, for away back in 1915, when Picture Palaces were Nickleodeons, the French director produced "Trilby" with Clara Kimball Young. "You can do so much now that was unthought of eight years ago!" Tourneur exclaimed, during a discussion with Mr. Tully of the possibilities of the story. Tourneur is working on "The Brass Bottle," the second of a series to be released by First National.

Critics Laud Baby Dana

Baby Muriel Frances Dana has scored a marvelous success in "Can a Woman Love Twice?" Ethel Clayton's F. B. O. vehicle in which Baby Muriel played one of the leading roles. Eastern critics pick Baby Muriel as the most promising child actress on the screen today. Baby Muriel has appeared in many Ince productions, and her latest release was the leading role in "The Forgotten Law," a Graf Production, released by Metro.

Carey Returns From Snows

Harry Carey, the famous Western star, has just returned from Truckee, where his company under the direction of Val Paul shot the snow exteriors for his latest film play, "The Miracle Baby," a story by Frank Pierce. The cast supporting Carey in this production includes Margaret Landis, as leading woman, Hedda Nova, as the "heavy," and Charles J. Le Moyne, Edward Hearn, Edmund Cobb, Alfred Allen and Bert Sprotte.

Humphrey in "Scaramouche"

William Humphrey is well started in the enacting of his heavy role in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," now being filmed at the Metro Studios. He will portray the character of Chevalier de Chabbrilain, the consort of the Marquis, which is said to be one of the most difficult roles in the cast. Humphrey won distinction for his performances in "The Stranger's Banquet," and "Vanity Fair."

He Bursts Into Song

Already songs are being written about "The Extra Girl," naturally one would expect the first batch to come from Phyllis Haver's associates on the Mack Sennett lot, where she is now busily filming her initial starring vehicle. The first entry in the handicap is Mervyn LeRoy, erstwhile member of the vaudeville team of LeRoy and Cooper. Mervyn is working under William A. Seiter, directing the Phyllis Haver story. His song is as popular on the Sennett lot as the star to whom it is dedicated.

Addenda No. 15,683

When informed last week that his name had been prominently mentioned in discussion anent the actor who was to play the title role of "Ben Hur," Monsieur Ben Turpin, famous lover of the screen, star buffoon of Mack Sennett comedies, indignantly replied that he would never allow himself to advertise so prosaic an object as coffee. (No advertisement.)

Tired of Doing Nothing

Priscilla Bonner, who plays the country lass in Mack Sennett all-star comedy "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" featuring Ben Turpin as the prodigal one, says she got tired of doing nothing after her schooling and went on the stage. She was the original Shannon in "April Showers," and later, when her family moved to the coast from Washington, entered motion pictures. She has appeared in various Ince, Goldwyn, Neilan, Metro, Vitagraph, and independent productions.

Lewis "Set" For Years

Ralph Lewis has just moved his trunks, suit cases, golf clubs and several big cartons of cigarettes into his new star dressing room suite at the R-C studios. The studio's technical staff has engraved a big gilt star on trusty Ralph's dressing room door, guaranteed not to rub off for at least three years, the term of Lewis' new R-C starring contract, and the well-known veteran of the screen is taking it easy waiting for his starring vehicle to be prepared for shooting.

Veteran Horne Signed

Emile Offeman, general manager of the Powers studios, announced this week that he had signed James W. Horne to direct for Film Booking Offices for the period of one year. Mr. Horne is one of the pioneer directors of the motion picture industry and has to his credit many noteworthy successes including "The Hottentot," "The Forgotten Law" and "Can a Woman Love Twice," in which Ethel Clayton is now appearing. Horne also directed motion pictures for Kalem, Universal, Pathe and Ince. His wife is known professionally as Cleo Ridgely.

6 Years Old and a Pioneer

Robert De Vilbiss has been chosen by Charles Brabin to play Frank Mayo at the age of 6 in "Six Days," the Elinor Glyn story Brabin is producing for Goldwyn. De Vilbiss is 7 himself, but a movie veteran. He began his career under Allen Holubar in "Hearts of Humanity"—much as did Erich von Stroheim. But while von Stroheim went on as a director, little Robert acted—a little girl in "Dangerous Curves Ahead," a naughty little boy in "The Old West," with parts since then in "Poor Relations," and a series of Lloyd Hamilton comedies.

Lasky Starts Jazz Film

Monday, April 2nd, was another Red Letter Day in activities at the Paramount West Coast Studio. On that day Jerome Storm started "Children of Jazz," from a play by Harold Brighouse adapted by Beulah Marie Dix. The cast is exceptionally strong and includes Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy, Estelle Taylor and Robert Cain. An island location near the Southern California coast will probably be sought for many of the scenes and the story is said to be exceptionally brilliant and up to date.

Recovers From Illness

Rowland V. Lee has recovered sufficiently from his attack of influenza, which confined him to his home in Hollywood for the greater part of the past month, to go to Catalina Island, Calif., where he will remain for several days to recuperate. At the time of the death of Louis Burston for whom he had been directing "Desire," a feature production for Metro release, Lee, still confined to his room, had resumed, against the advice of his physician, the cutting and titling of the film, a portable projection machine and screen having been transported to his home for the purpose.

Linder is Hurt Again

While filming one of the exciting scenes of his next starring comedy feature, now being produced at Nice, France, Max Linder, the famous French comedian, was thrown from an automobile and sustained severe injuries which will keep him inactive for several days. Linder was scheduled to return to Hollywood some months ago to resume his picture activities here, but was persuaded by public demand to produce at least one film in his native country.

Old Studio "Comes Back"

The old Bronx studio might be more appropriately called "The Hummer." Two months ago it was still deserted and about ready to die the death of stagnation. Then Kenneth J. Bishop, general manager of the H & B Film Company, decided to add a producing unit to his distributing business. The services of Cliff Smith were secured to direct and play male lead. Eugene A. Vogt wrote a story and off they went, with Eileen Sedgwick as feminine lead. The first picture was finished about two weeks ago and so well was it received by the New York branch of the H & B that haste was made to start the second. Cliff Smith again directs and plays the lead with Josie Sedgwick opposite. Beside this unit three others are now either working or preparing at the Bronx, all of them with the H & B release.

A very small girl was visiting the Goldwyn studio with her mother.

Raymond Griffith, while waiting between scenes in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," took it upon himself to amuse the youngster. Much to his surprise, she said right off the bat—"Kiss me!" He did. "Oh, mother!" she called gleefully, "come here quick and get a screen kiss."

Precious Wares For De Mille

Five cases of rare Oriental draperies, silks and jewels, are en route to Hollywood, from Bangkok, Siam, consigned to Cecil B. De Mille, who will use the valuable treasures in his next production, "The Ten Commandments." The precious articles were purchased by Mrs. Florence Meehan, globe-trotter, who is gathering authentic information and material for Mr. De Mille's picture.

Meyers Joins Tourneur

Harry Meyers has been signed to play the stellar role in the new Maurice Tourneur production, "The Brass Bottle," an adaptation from the story by F. Anstey. Among those who will support Mr. Meyers are Ford Sterling, Ernest Torrence, Charlotte Marriam and Aggie Her- ring.

venture as thrilling as any reproduced before the camera.

Among the twenty-five hundred odd males, collected from the hills and plains of the vicinity for the picture, were several bands of Mexicans who later disclosed the fact that they were nursing grievances against one another. And, when the arms were served out, they immediately began to make use of them.

As a result of the efforts of director and principals in the interests of peace, Forman was cut on the arm, Kenneth Harlan was badly bruised and the women members of the company, including Miriam Cooper and Miss Dupont, admitted acute stage fright.

Portions of the old San Francisco are being re-created, to relieve their adventurous careers, for a brief period on the screen, according to reports from that city. Von Stroheim, filming Frank Norris' story, "McTeague," under the title "Greed," has found many of the same locations for phases of the stories to be pictured there, has caused buildings to be reconstructed and numerous almost forgotten relics of the pre-fire days, unearthed and brought into use again.

Ethel Shannon, filmdom's tiniest starlet, is immersed in a document called "Care and Feeding of Autos." The happy possessor of her first car, Miss Shannon has discovered that it does not respond to kind treatment as she had been informed it should. Parking it in a shady spot on one of the steep hillside that abound in Los Angeles, she left it to its own devices. Two minutes later it had set out for a trial canter on its own account, had negotiated the hill in something close to nothing, had disputed the right of way with a street car and come to a violent stop before a telephone pole. Now it is minus a certain of its vital organs, without which all its shiny new paint becomes but a hollow mockery.

in "The Abysmal Brute," Jack London's famous novel of the prize ring in which Universal starred Denny in a special length version. Now Denny and his whimsical manager are back into the short reel epics again at the demand of exhibitors who say that "The Leather Pushers" are the best two reelers ever made. Stevenson is again the manager.

Between "The Abysmal Brute" and the current series of "Leather Pushers," Stevenson gave a strong dramatic performance in one of the leading roles of "Your Good Name," a Universal-Jewel special directed by Harry A. Pollard.

The lads in San Bernardino are strong for Jack Hoxie, the famous screen buckaroo and trick rider now appearing in the title role of "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," a Universal feature attraction of the western plains.

When Hoxie arrived with his company in San Bernardino, California, where he is now on location for the exterior shots of the play, he was given a reception by the townspeople that rivaled a frolic of olden days "when the cowboys came to town."

He was given an ovation so typically western that even some of the most blase members of the production staff were appalled by the noise. The affair was a riot. The spectacle furnished by the crowd that swarmed into the lobby of the hotel where he was staying bore resemblance to the first night of a national political convention.

Somebody mentioned that the cowboy hero was fond of oranges and Hoxie was literally "orange crushed" by the gifts of his admirers. The whole town turned out for a party on "Jack Hoxie Night," which was the caption of the evening's hilarity by the leaders of the reception committee.

"Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," is being produced under the direction of George Marshall, assisted by Thomas Regan.

Reginald Denny is now of the landed gentry. The popular young star with the highly educated fists purchased himself a personal mountain on the outskirts of Hollywood and is there between rounds of "The Leather Pushers," living the life of an English country gentleman.

The Denny menage is situated on one of the foothills that rim Hollywood and consists of a typical English country home and a wide expanse of acreage. At the rear of the house is an embryo sunken garden where Reggie daily does his stuff with a spade and the other usual implements of garden warfare, when he is not engaged in putting someone to sleep in the squared circle of "The Leather Pushers."

Gertrude Olmsted, the prize winning beauty whom Universal has trained for screen fame with a variety of roles, is playing a "near-heavy" in "The Leather Pushers," the inimitable Universal-Jewel two reel classic of the squared circle in which Reginald Denny is starring.

It's the first time the pretty Chicago beauty has shown any "badness" on the screen. But the naughtiness of the character she has to portray is offset by the fact that the role gives her a good opportunity for what blase "old-timers" refer to as "real acting."

Erle Kenton is directing the third series of "The Leather Pushers," with Hayden Stevenson, Elinor Field, Miss Olmsted and other players in support.

In assuming responsibility for the success of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, more tersely referred to as the "Monroe Doctrine Centennial," the Motion Picture Industry has taken an important step towards becoming definitely and permanently identified with the civic destiny of Los Angeles. The people of this city have implicit confidence that the Industry will stage one of the most entertaining and spectacular expositions ever held in America. The entire city of Los Angeles has assumed, as a matter of course, that the Exposition will be an unqualified success if the Motion Picture Industry is back of it. This is a compliment to the Industry which should not be taken lightly by those who are at the head of affairs in Filmdom.

All great expositions are predicated upon some momentous event in history; and this one is no exception. Hence the name, "Monroe Doctrine Centennial." When President Monroe promulgated his famous doctrine Los Angeles was a sleepy little Spanish settlement completely foreign to the sturdy American republic then heroically struggling to hold aloft the banner of Liberty and Territorial Independence in the Western Hemisphere. No one living in that age, on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast, dreamed of the wonderful transformation the little City of the Angels was to undergo during the hundred years to come. And now, at the ending of the greatest century in all history, Los Angeles, grown into a world metropolis, is selected to be hostess on the momentous occasion of celebrating the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. And immediately Los Angeles proves her confidence and faith in the Motion Picture Industry by intrusting to its leaders the full management of this historic function.

It is not necessary to add that this faith is not misplaced. The Motion Picture Industry will prove to be more than equal to the task.
